On Sun, Feb 1, 2015 at 5:27 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:

When we tested deck is stacked against "average Americans, with too many breaks for those at the top" vs. Gov regs and rules hurging biz and stopping them from creating jobs – by 49-41 among all voters and 56-33 with our MOR (middle of the road voters) . I think it's how they see themselves in this environment, which remains their big pain point that she is fighting to fix.

For the moment it also creates a slight language difference with POTUS – not a big deal but a nuance.

Joel

From: Cheryl Mills [mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com]
Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 5:22 PM

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

To: Nick Merrill
Cc: Joel Benenson; Mandy Grunwald; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake

Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

Looks good. I think you can take out average and still communicate you mean folks in middle with "hardworking" (who likes to be average?)

if average is important I might use everyday.

cdm

On Sun, Feb 1, 2015 at 4:36 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com > wrote:

Great, thank you.

Robby to your point about letting her speak for herself, I¹ve been reminding people that they should be careful to acknowledge that this is part of a process. She laid out challenges that we face in the midterms, and now she¹s thinking through how we would address them should she run. Will reinforce that when I circle back with these guys today.

Here¹s the quote again incorporating peoples¹ thoughts. John Anzalone, I think Joel addressed what you were trying to get at so I left his edits as is, but let me know if you think we¹re missing anything. Otherwise will push this in the next little while. Thanks all.

"Expanding opportunities for average hardworking Americans so that they and their families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote."

On 2/1/15, 4:05 PM, "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:

>Yes.
>
>-----Original Message-----
>From: Mandy Grunwald [mailto:gruncom@aol.com]
>Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 4:05 PM
>To: Robby Mook
>Cc: Joel Benenson; Nick Merrill; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe
>Reines; Cheryl Mills; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John
>Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake
>Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories
>
>I like it too.
>
>There's a word missing toward the end. I assume it should say "...she >will present SOLUTIONS to our toughest challenges..."
>
>Thx
>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

>Mandy Grunwald
>Grunwald Communications
>202 973-9400
>
>
>> On Feb 1, 2015, at 3:39 PM, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com > wrote:
>>
>> Adding Jenn and Kristina
>> Joel I agree w your edits. In particular I want to avoid any >>expectations around how big or bold her ideas will be.
>> Nick I'm sure you're already doing this but I also would push hard on >>background that we can't judge a candidate who has yet to announce--give >>her a chance to speak for herself. I know that's impossible but worth >>trying to get them to acknowledge that she's not a candidate and this is >>all speculation.
>>
>>
>>> On Feb 1, 2015, at 3:14 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:
>>>
>>> Thanks Nick.
>>>
>>> Going for a little more conversational here with this:
>>>
>>> "Expanding opportunities for average hardworking Americans so that >>>they and their families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has >>>waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when >>>she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly >>>laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes >>>gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on >>>a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, >>>but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present to our toughest >>>challenges and she will take nothing for granted and she will fight >>>for every vote."
>>>
>>> -----Original Message-----
>>> From: Nick Merrill [mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com]
>>> Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 2:46 PM
>>> To: John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Robby Mook; Cheryl
>>>Mills; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Mandy
>>>Grunwald; Cheryl Mills; Joel Benenson
>>> Subject: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories
>>>
>>> As I mentioned on our call on Thursday, both the WSJ and the NYT are >>>working on stories about how HRC might approach economic policy issues >>>as a candidate. Both will have a dose of personnel name-gaming, and >>>I've spoken to both to steer them towards progressive names, which they >>>seem to both have on their own.
>>>
>>> I want to give both stories something on the record that addresses the >>>core of the story, but also speaks some of the things we all felt >>>needed a little proactive addressing, like inevitability and timing.
>>>
>>> On the inevitability question, John I tried to stick to the language >>>you suggested, though I did take the liberty of striking the word
>>>"idiot."
>>>
>>> "Increasing access to opportunity and fighting for upward mobility has >>>been an uninterrupted pursuit of hers in every job she's held. You >>>heard it from her on the campaign trail last fall, where she laid out >>>the challenges we face. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide >>>range of people on a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a >>>calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will take >>>nothing for granted, she'll present bold ideas, and she will fight for >>>every vote."
>>>
>>> Feedback welcome, but I'd like to ship this later today.
>>>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

>>> Nick

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "David Binder" <David@db-research.com>
To: "Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Jim Margolis" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
"Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
"Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
"John Anzalone" <john@algpolling.com>
"Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com>
"Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>
"Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 4/23/2015 11:33:34 AM
Subject: RE: Stories for tomorrow 4.24

One thing I think we need to push, that was effective in our groups, is to remind people of the wonderful things that the Clinton Foundation has done around the globe. In the midst of all this incoming stuff, can we remind the world what has been accomplished? In addition to confronting the accusations, do we also have an opportunity to insert the message below that was an effective response in our vulnerability research:

Hillary Clinton's opponents are trying to start a controversy where none exists. The Clinton Foundation is a totally non-political charity whose work saves and improves lives at home and around the world. Because of charitable contributions to the Foundation and its programs, 8 million people have benefited from lifesaving HIV/AIDS medications, 6,000 American schools are providing kids with healthy food choices in an effort to fight childhood obesity; 28,000 African farmers have improved their crops; and 248 million tons of greenhouse gas emissions are being reduced in cities worldwide. The Clinton Global Initiative brings together people from business, labor, government, and the non-profit world to solve problems without politics or gridlock. Republican opponents want to confuse voters about the Clinton Foundation and its donors because all this good work is proof that what Hillary cares about most is helping hard-working people and families build better lives.

From: Jennifer Palmieri [mailto:jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Thursday, April 23, 2015 8:56 PM
To: John Podesta; Jim Margolis; Joel Benenson; Mandy Grunwald; John Anzalone; David Binder; Robby Mook; Jake Sullivan; Dan Schwerin
Subject: Fwd: Stories for tomorrow 4.24

For our eight am call tomorrow

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

> From: Rebecca Chalif <rchalif@hillaryclinton.com >
> Date: April 23, 2015 at 8:53:05 PM EDT
> To: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >, Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >, Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >, Jesse Ferguson <jferguson@hillaryclinton.com >, Christina Reynolds <creynolds@gpg.com>, Josh Schwerin <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >, Jesse Lehrich <jlehrich@hillaryclinton.com >, Ian Sams <isams@hillaryclinton.com > > Subject: Stories for tomorrow 4.24
>
> Stories for tomorrow:
>
> - Washington Post - Ros, Hamburger - Giustra profile
> - New York Times, weekender - Tony Rodham
> - ABC Brian Ross- Giustra, Canadian
> - Ruth Marcus- no quid pro quo, but this is a problem for the Clintons, typical, they blur lines all the time
> - WSJ- Cheryl holding up FOIAs for political reasons (next week)
> - Bloomberg- tbd story, has Giustra on the record (tbd time)
> - Bloomberg- Laureate
> - NY Daily News- did we tell the NY Times whether or not HRC was briefed
>
> Story Lines:
>
> 1. Nervous Dems
> 2. Playing by their own rules, fatigue

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

3. WJC isolated/wealth, foundation as a continuing drag on the campaign

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Washington Post" <email@e.washingtonpost.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 6/26/2015 12:24:44 AM
Subject: The Daily 202: House GOP leadership bad at retribution

View The Daily 202 on the Web

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share on Twitter Share on Facebook

Interns run across the plaza of the Supreme Court yesterday to hand the decided opinions to television correspondents, an event sometimes referred to as “the running of the interns.” Friday is another big decision day at SCOTUS. (AP Photo/ Jacquelyn Martin)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

— Mark Meadows getting his gavel back highlights weakness of and division within House GOP leadership: It fell under the radar yesterday because of the Supreme Court's health care decision, but a North Carolina congressman regained control of his subcommittee after losing it one week ago as punishment for crossing party leaders on a procedural vote related to trade. Under pressure from conservative members and outside groups, Oversight committee chairman Jason Chaffetz (R-Utah) announced that Meadows will again lead the panel on government operations. John Boehner had defended the choice to remove Meadows at a private conference meeting just one day earlier.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- The drama highlights ideological divisions within leadership that no one has fully reported out yet. "Boehner allies, including Republican Conference Chairman Cathy McMorris Rodgers (R-Wash.), were seen confronting Chaffetz during floor votes Thursday morning, a sign to observers that the desire to reinstate Meadows was not unanimous in leadership circles," Elise Viebeck reports. Chaffetz and Majority Whip Steve Scalise have trouble cracking down sometimes because they were once the Meadows of the conference, in one way or another. McCarthy, the Majority Leader, is a pal to many of the most ideologically pure conservatives. He texts with them and sympathizes with the pressure they're under from the base back home.
- No matter what the full backstory is, the botched retribution will only embolden outside groups and up-and-coming back benchers to buck leadership. This will make it harder for Boehner to help advance the portions of President Obama's agenda he agrees with in the final 18 months. "As the Speaker has said, there is a family conversation ongoing, and that conversation will continue," emailed Boehner spokesman Kevin Smith.

— John Roberts will never get credit for this, but the Chief Justice helped Republicans avoid a Category 5 mess with his King vs. Burwell decision. Top operatives had been panicking that Republicans would be like the dog that caught up with the truck if they "won" in King vs. Burwell. Now they can publicly decry the decision but not need to worry about finding a way to get subsidies for more than 6 million people. One of the biggest winners might be Scott Walker; the Wisconsin governor would have been under immense pressure to help 166,000 of his citizens get coverage. "It is a nearly ideal course of events for Walker," as University of Wisconsin-Madison political science professor Barry Burden told a columnist for the Madison paper. "He can continue to complain about the law without suffering much in the way of effects." Watch to see how Roberts votes in the gay marriage case, likely dropping today or Monday. It's possible he could join Anthony Kennedy in another 6-3 decision. But he could also be on the losing side of a 5-4 decision.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— Internal poll shows Perry rising in Iowa, Walker the clear favorite of GOP caucus-goers: Glen Bolger, a leading Republican pollster, recently conducted a survey of Iowa Republicans for Opportunity and Freedom PAC, a super PAC allied with former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, to gauge the response to the group's television ads, which went up this month in the Des Moines and Cedar Rapids markets. It's conclusion: Perry, still rebuilding his image with voters after his rocky 2012 White House run, remains in the middle of the GOP pack, but he has strikingly high favorability (70%), comparable to the current Iowa front-runner, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker (74%). The poll also shows movement for Perry in overall standing, in particular in comparison to his rivals on the right. While lagging behind bigger names, he's slowly catching up to former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee and retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson, who have strong followings in Iowa and among conservatives nationally. You can read Bolger's 2-page memo here . — Scoop via Robert Costa

— The State Department is trying to lower expectations of getting a final Iran deal before June 30. John Kerry and Ernie Moniz are en route to Vienna to try locking down specifics. Unnamed senior U.S. administration officials told reporters yesterday that negotiators are going to be "close" to an agreement by a deadline next Tuesday, but that they may "miss it by a short bit" to get a good deal — if they "can get there at all." Talks were described as "extremely tough," including the pace of sanctions relief for Iran and "details about access and transparency," per a Voice of America report. The chief of Iran's Atomic Energy Organization, meanwhile, is skipping the sessions because of health issues, which could also add another layer of complexity.

- First in 202: A national poll conducted for Secure America Now, a hawkish 501(c)(4) nonprofit, finds pervasive, bipartisan concerns about Iran getting nuclear weapons. The joint survey of 2016 likely general election voters, run by Democrat Pat Caddell and Republican John McLaughlin from Thursday through Tuesday, offers a handy rundown of what the most effective messaging will be domestically against any deal. Among the top-lines: 68 percent believe that if Iran attains nuclear weapons they would arm terrorists who would use them to attack at the United States. 70 percent believe that if Iran attains nuclear weapons, they would use these weapons against the United States and its forces in the Middle East. 80 percent believe that, if Iran is allowed to. It's worth caveating here that the Obama administration says this deal will stop Iran from getting the bomb. Read the poll's findings here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- D.C. foreign policy elites express concern that the U.S. is about to make too many concessions. "Five former members of President Obama's inner circle of Iran advisers have written an open letter expressing concern that a pending accord to stem Iran's nuclear program 'may fall short of meeting the administration's own standard of a 'good' agreement' and laying out a series of minimum requirements that Iran must agree to in coming days for them to support a final deal," the New York Times reported yesterday.
- Who signed the letter? Dennis B. Ross, who oversaw Iran policy at the White House during the first Obama term; David H. Petraeus, the former C.I.A. director; Robert Einhorn, a longtime State Department proliferation expert who helped devise and enforce the sanctions against Iran; Gary Samore, Obama's former chief adviser on nuclear policy; and Gen. James E. Cartwright, a former vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Stephen J. Hadley, George W. Bush's second-term national security adviser, also signed.
- On the Hill, this could give fodder to Iran hardliners pushing to extend sanctions ahead of the deadline. Sens. Mark Kirk (R-Ill.) and Robert Menendez (D-N.J.) stepped up their calls for a 10-year extension of the Iran Sanctions Act, currently set to expire at the end of 2016.
- A pro-Marco Rubio outside group is about to spend more than $1 million on ads highlighting his opposition to the Iran deal. The ad campaign will include cable TV, radio and online components. "President Obama is negotiating a bad deal with Iran. Senator Marco Rubio is fighting to stop it," a narrator says. The effort is from the Conservative Solutions Project, a nonprofit organization established by J. Warren Tompkins, who is also running the pro-Rubio super PAC. Watch the 60-second spot , first reported by Sean Sullivan.

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost 's morning newsletter. Sign up to receive the newsletter .

With contributions by Elise Viebeck .

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

— There was an apparent terror attack in southeastern France: "French authorities have opened a terrorism investigation after an attack and explosion at a gas factory that left one person decapitated and several wounded," per the AP . "Banners with Arabic inscriptions were found near the body, an official said … Details of the attack were sketchy but two French officials said it began mid-morning in the Isere region when two men crashed a car into the entrance of the factory and into gas canisters, touching off the explosion. One attacker was arrested, they said."

— Caving to violent protests, the French government shut down Uber's non-luxury service: The interior minister ordered a ban on the low-cost car-sharing service after a day of nationwide protests by taxi drivers, the BBC reports. "Bernard Cazeneuve said the service was 'illegal' and ordered police and prosecutors to enforce its closure." The wire is full of images like these from the anti-Uber protests:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Striking taxi drivers burn tires in Marseille. (REUTERS/Jean-Paul Pelissier)

French riot police push an overturned car as striking French taxi drivers demonstrate at the Porte Maillot to block the traffic on the Paris ring road during the anti-Uber protest.REUTERS/Charles Platiau

— "The Israeli army says it has shot a Palestinian after he opened fire at Israeli soldiers at a military checkpoint in the West Bank," per the AP.

— Nine people on an Alaska cruise died when their sightseeing float plane crashed into a granite rock face. "The bodies of the nine dead remained at the crash site overnight as rain and wind battered the remote and gloomy expanse of rock … Officials have not identified the aircraft's pilot and eight passengers, all tourists on a week-long Holland America cruise that left Seattle on Saturday."

GET SMART FAST:

1. Hillary Clinton leads Bernie Sanders by just 8 points , 43-35, in a WMUR/CNN poll of New Hampshire. [The sample is only 360 likely Democratic

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

voters.]

2. The State Department cannot find in its records all or part of 15 work-related emails from Clinton's private server that were released this week by the House panel investigating Benghazi. (AP)
3. Hillary canceled a Philadelphia fundraiser so she can attend the Charleston memorial service today.
4. Chris Christie will formally announce that he's running next Tuesday, per WNYC .
5. Marco Rubio's campaign reserved at least $4.3 million in choice TV advertising time for the early states, starting November 24 in Iowa, sources tracking the air war tell The Daily 202. This will put pressure on other campaigns to start making advance reservations so that they can get the most desirable times.
6. A warning by Queen Elizabeth II against 'division' in Europe as Prime Minister David Cameron plans a referendum on Britain's EU membership was interpreted by some … as a political statement." (AFP)

POWER PLAYERS IN THE NEWS:

1. Bristol Palin, 24, is pregnant again.
2. The National Republican Senatorial Committee will run internal polls to test how Larry Kudlow would perform in hypothetical match-ups against New York Sen. Chuck Schumer and Connecticut Sen. Richard Blumenthal as part of a far-fetched recruiting play to expand the 2016 map. The conservative commentator owns homes in both states. (National Review)
3. Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) "gave tentative approval to a slimmed-down version of the Purple Line, setting aside his own long-standing skepticism of costly transit projects to support a 16-mile light-rail line that backers say will rejuvenate inner-suburban neighborhoods in Montgomery and Prince George's counties."
4. Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe (D) seized on the King v. Burwell decision to announce that he's going to try to expand Medicaid again next legislative session. His effort to do so during his first year failed disastrously.
5. Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) officially retired from the Air Force Reserve with a ceremony at the National Guard Memorial Museum in D.C. Graham retired as a Colonel after 33 years of service.
6. Bob Beckel, a longtime co-host of "The Five," has departed Fox News. He's been off the air since February, reportedly related to back surgery, but the cable channel's public statement yesterday suggested an acrimonious break-up. "We tried to work with Bob for months, but we couldn't hold The Five hostage to one man's personal issues," Bill Shine, head of programming, told TVNewser in a statement. "Juan Williams and Geraldo Rivera will be among those rotating on the show for the near future."
7. Maine Gov. Paul LePage (R) said he'd like to shoot the cartoonist for the Bangor Daily News, according to the Huffington Post , "a joke that fell flat in light of the January shooting that killed five Charlie Hebdo cartoonists in France."
8. Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) told Glenn Kessler last night that she's going to now have every statistic in her speeches footnoted as a result of a recent fact check he wrote.
9. Scott Brown is now promoting dietary supplements on his Facebook page, drawing widespread mockery among his former Senate colleagues.

WAPO HIGHLIGHTS:

— "As eulogizer in chief, Obama invokes the nation's 'common creed,'" by Steven Mufson: "On Friday, President Obama will use his presidency as a pulpit in a more conventional and solemn sense, delivering a eulogy for at least the 15th time while in office, this time for South Carolina state Sen. Clementa Pinckney…Yet unlike a conventional pastor…Obama has used these different occasions…to preach the American gospel, the secular catechism of beliefs that he thinks tie the nation together." That gets a little harder with each of these moments.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

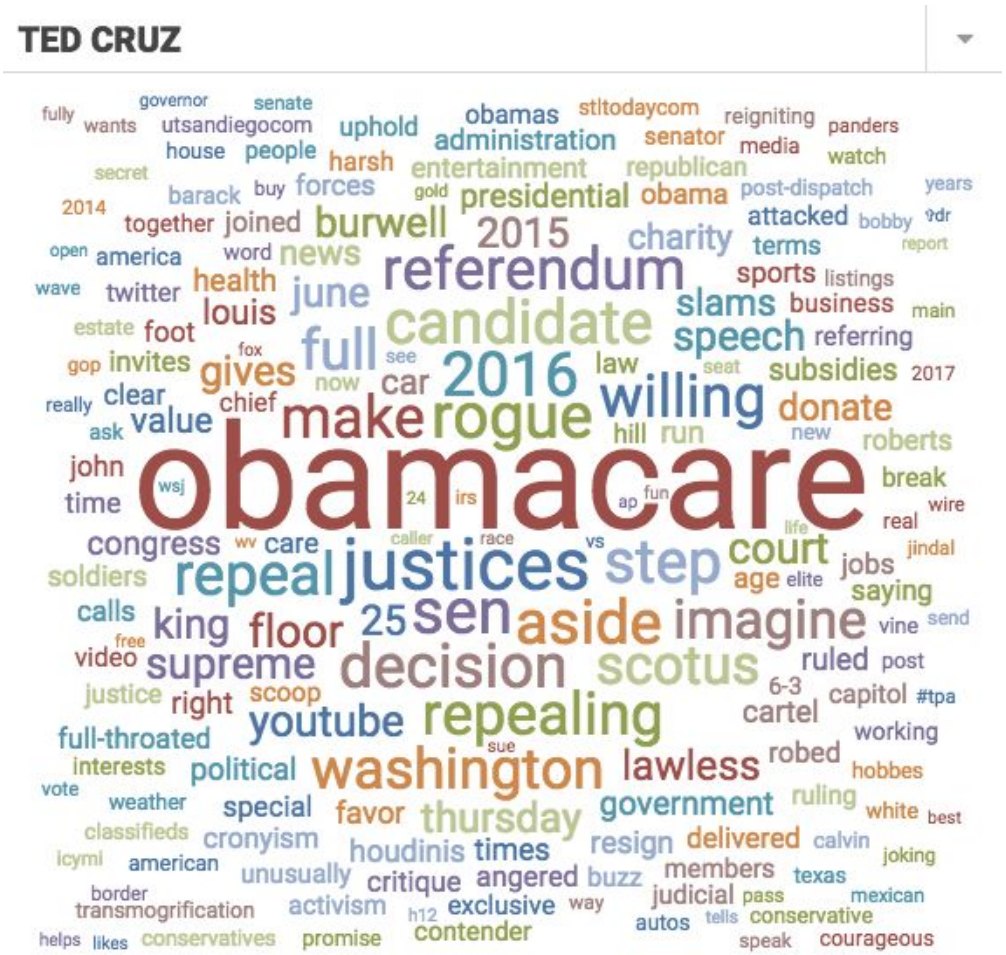
— "Lone wolf extremists like Dylann Roof are easy to develop but hard to track," by Marc Fisher: "The rise of the self-taught extremist has put investigators in a bind: White racist groups are less capable of producing organized violence, but the attacks that do develop come mainly from solo actors whose paths to violence are far more difficult to track."

— "OPM director survives congressional inquisition, for now," by Joe Davidson: In a series of scathing hearings about the cyber-theft of data belonging to 4 million current and former federal employees "Archuleta also told senators about 'new steps' she is taking, including the hiring of a cybersecurity adviser who will work with the agency's chief information officer (CIO) to manage the current crisis, mitigate future incidents and ensure the security of OPM's information technology."

— " Democratic civil war ends, for now, as House approves final trade measures," by Paul Kane: "Clinton was dragged into the debate while campaigning in Iowa. She sounded as though she was supporting Pelosi, but on the actual vote at hand, she declined to take a position, and Sanders pounced. How did Clinton comport herself? 'Not well,' said Rep. Marcy Kaptur (D-Ohio), a fierce opponent of trade. Kaptur attended a Monday meeting of northern Ohio party activists. 'I was never asked about her once,' she said of Clinton. 'You know who people asked me about? Bernie Sanders.'"

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

— ZIGNAL VISUAL — Ted Cruz is (by far) the 2016 candidate most mentioned in conversations about King v. Burwell. On a day when the Supreme Court dominated the political headlines with its 6-3 decision, health care filtered into the presidential discussion as well. But some stats from Zignal Labs, our campaign analytics partner, illustrate how questions about the future of Obamacare are more closely associated with some candidates than others.



Ted Cruz was most outspoken yesterday in his criticism of the court decision. He employed some memorable rhetoric, including this paragraph: "For the second time in just a few years, a handful of unelected judges has rewritten the text of Obamacare in order to impose this failed law on millions of Americans. The first time, the Court ignored federal law and magically transformed a statutory 'penalty' into a 'tax.' Today, these robed Houdinis transmogrified a 'federal exchange' into an exchange 'established by the State.'"

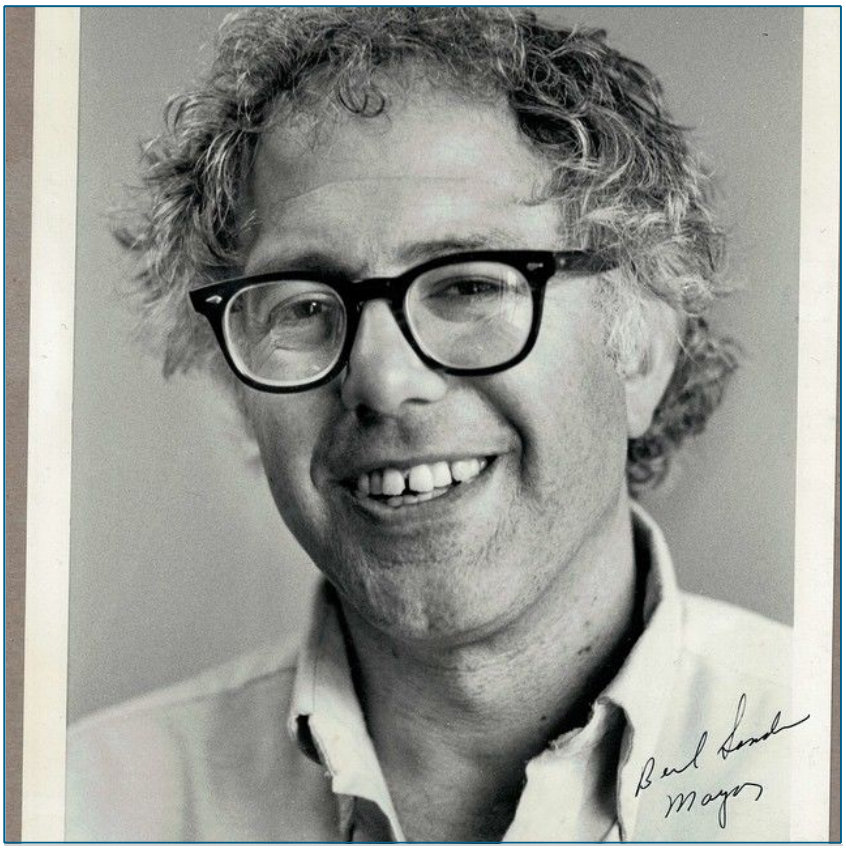
This sort of rhetoric helped ensure that one of every three media mentions of Cruz also mentioned the decision. Those numbers were about one in five for Marco Rubio, who has also been an outspoken critic. But other candidates, including Jeb, Walker and Hillary Clinton showed that they were less impacted or connected to the decision. Here's an illustration of this point. This is Clinton's word cloud for Thursday:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This is Cruz's:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

–WHAT EVERYONE IS TALKING ABOUT:



Picture of the day:

A shot of the Washington Monument from Cory Booker:

The moon at The Washington Monument. (corybooker)

And a Throwback Thursday picture from the Bernie Sanders campaign:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thick-rimmed black glasses on Mayor Sanders in the 1980's.
Classic. #tbt (berniesanders)

Tweets of the day:

Rep. Jim Himes (D-Conn.) had some fun with people on Twitter who confused his Twitter account with that of an NBA draftee:

> Some people think @jahimes , not @JahlilOkafor , is going to the 76ers. That's why he's called the Basketball Congressman. #CT04 #NBADraft
>
> — Miles Halpine (@MilesHalpine) June 26, 2015

> @jahimes getting picked next #NBADraft
>
> — colby jones (@JColby97) June 25, 2015

> Nope. Still staying in CT. Still have 18 months left on my two year contract. https://t.co/lNgeKpcoPR
>
> — Jim Himes (@jahimes) June 26, 2015

> @jahimes welcome to the @Sixers — Isaac (@ikegeez3) June 25, 2015

> Really?!? But I'm even worse at hoops than the average tight white guy! https://t.co/FiJUA0GV0S — Jim Himes (@jahimes) June 26, 2015

Instagrams of the day:

Jason Chaffetz shared an X-ray:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

10 years ago I fell and broke my heel bone in six pieces. I still have 14 screws in my foot. Amazing medicine so I can still walk somewhat properly, although it feels like I have a permanent sprained ankle. This x-ray is looking up from the bottom of my foot. I'm pretty sure I got the screws at Home Depot. #tbt (jasoninthehouse)

Jay Nixon found a fan:

Man in corn suit excited about Missouri Gov Jay Nixon's comments on the Renewable Fuel Standard. (ryangop)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And Mike Huckabee shared his love of boots while campaigning in Iowa:

Who can name this type of exotic skin boot? Found at Long Creek Outfitters – Leon, Iowa. (govmikehuckabee)

GOOD READS FROM ELSEWHERE:

— The State, "Was accused SC racial church killer Roof planning bigger death spree?": "A Columbia police officer reported March 13 that he found part of an AR-15 assault rifle and six 40-bullet banana-style ammo clips in Roof's car during a routine encounter in a downtown Columbia park. Roof told the officer he wanted to buy an AR-15 … An AR-15 is the semi-automatic civilian version of the U.S. military's M16 fully automatic assault rifle. Such a weapon, loaded with a 40-bullet ammo clip, could allow someone to shoot several dozen people without reloading and from a greater distance than the .45 Glock handgun Roof is accused of using in the June 17 church killings."

— Los Angeles Times, "California Assembly approves one of the toughest mandatory vaccination laws in the nation," by Patrick McGreevey and Rong-Gong Lin II: The legislature moved on Thursday "to end exemptions from state immunization laws based on religious or other personal beliefs. It "would require more children who enter day care and school to be vaccinated against diseases including measles and whooping cough…It is unclear whether Gov. Jerry Brown will sign the measure, which grew out of concern about low vaccination rates in some communities and an outbreak of measles at Disneyland that ultimately infected more than 150 people."

— The Wrap, "Trump Dumped! Univision Drops Miss USA Pageant over Mexican Immigrant Remarks," by Tony Maglio: "The broadcaster 'will not be … working on any other projects tied to the Trump Organization,' the entertainment group continued — that includes no longer airing the July 12 Miss USA pageant as planned."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— Page Six, "Monica Lewinsky Gets Standing Ovation at Cannes," by Liz Smith: "Lewinsky won a standing ovation from the creative elite at Cannes Lion after telling them in emotional speech to join her mission to ensure 'public shaming as a blood sport must stop.' Said Lewinsky: 'Like me, at 22, a few of you may also have taken wrong turns and fallen in love with the wrong person, maybe even your boss … Unlike me, though, your boss probably wasn't the president of the United States of America."

— Military Times, "Military is okay with Confederate flag – for now," by Oriana Pawlyk and Andrew deGrandpre: Following a wave of decisions by retailers and politicians to remove the Confederate flag from stores and official buildings, "The Defense Department, which enforces strict policies prohibiting hate speech, inappropriate tattoos and the display of offensive material, is making no such gestures, a spokesman told Military Times."

BUZZING AT THE CAPITOL:

— The Hill, "Dems accuse GOP of playing race card in contentious hearing," by Kevin Cirilli: "House Democrats accused Republicans of using race discrimination allegations to weaken a government agency during a contentious House Financial Services subcommittee hearing Thursday. The panel's Oversight and Investigations Subcommittee, chaired by Rep. Sean Duffy (R-Wis.), has had four hearings looking into reports of racism, sexism and ageism at the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB)."

HOT ON THE LEFT

Hillary's newest consultant was a major Keystone lobbyist. From Huffington Post: "The newest hire for Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign is a longtime strategist who played a key role in her 2008 primary defeat while working for then-Sen. Barack Obama. He's also a Washington lobbyist who lobbied the State Department — led, at the time, by Secretary of State Hillary Clinton — on behalf of the company seeking to build the controversial Keystone XL pipeline. Clinton's new consultant, Jeff Berman, has followed, in many respects, a well-worn path for those in Washington D.C."

HOT ON THE RIGHT

More minority children than whites, census finds. From Breitbart : "New population estimates released Thursday reveal a striking shift in the composition of America's population as racial and ethnic minority births are also outpacing minority deaths … Non-Hispanic whites are experiencing negative population growth, seeing 61,841 more deaths than births between 2013 and 2014."

DAYBOOK:

–What's happening today on the campaign trail: Seven GOP presidential hopefuls will be in Denver for the Western Conservative Summit, including Ben

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Carson, Rick Perry and Rick Santorum. Ted Cruz will make a series of stops in Iowa. Hillary Clinton will attend the Charleston, S.C. funeral for Rev. Clementa Pinckney and speak at the Virginia Jefferson Jackson Dinner in Northern Virginia. Martin O'Malley delivers a foreign policy speech in the District.

–At the White House: President Obama and Vice President Biden will travel to Charleston, S.C., for the funeral of Rev. Clementa Pinckney. Obama will deliver the eulogy.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "I think the media is giving Bernie a pass right now. I very rarely read in any coverage of Bernie that he's a socialist … Bernie is too liberal to gather enough votes in this country to become president … It's not unusual for someone who has an extreme message to have a following." — Sen. Claire McCaskill (D-Mo.) on MSNBC

NEWS YOU CAN USE IF YOU LIVE IN D.C.:

— "Any showers today, probably few and far between most of the time, will look tame compared to tomorrow's potential downpours and even severe weather," says the Capital Weather Gang . "We can probably eke by some of our outdoor plans today. But you may consider rescheduling Saturday activities to either be indoors or move them to Sunday."

— The Nationals swept the Braves, winning 7-0 last night.

— "Nearly 30 people have been killed inside The District since May 1, double the number during the same period last year, and 14 have been killed in the past 17 days. This year's homicide count stands at 64, compared with 53 at this time last year."

VIDEO OF THE DAY:

A pro-Hillary group trying to create the "Obama Girl" of 2016 parodies the 2003 song "Stacy's Mom" from Fountains of Wayne:

"Chelsea's Mom" (Well-Strung)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

You received this e-mail because you are registered on washingtonpost.com . We respect your privacy . If you believe that this e-mail has been sent to you in error, or you no longer wish to receive this newsletter, click here . Contact us for help.

©2015 The Washington Post | 1150 15th St NW, Washington, DC 20071

The Washington Post

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Angel Urena" <Angel@presidentclinton.com>
To: "Laura Rosenberger" <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 1/7/2016 5:38:38 AM
Subject: Re: Iowa

Thank you very much.

On Jan 7, 2016, at 7:38 AM, Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Here's a Q and A we did on her record; looks like you have her statement but pasting below as well for convenience:

Didn't North Korea increase its nuclear arsenal on your watch? Hasn't the Obama Administration neglected this problem?

This is North Korea's fourth nuclear test, if it is verified. North Korea's nuclear breakout and its first nuclear test happened under George W. Bush's administration, which was putting almost all of its energy into Iraq. When I became Secretary, I saw the need to up our game in Asia - to build stronger alliances - and to improve our military posture.

We also worked with our allies to test whether North Korea would take concrete steps to denuclearize. Unfortunately, North Korea quickly made clear that it had no interest in abiding by commitments it made. And we made clear that we would not be blackmailed or settle for Pyongyang's terms.

So we built a global coalition to expand sanctions on North Korea. We also worked with our allies to block numerous attempts by North Korea to proliferate. We cut off some of North Korea's key arms clients. And we enhanced our defense posture in the region to deal with the evolving threat.

It's also important to remember that when I became Secretary, our relations with the ROK and Japan were frayed. I worked to restore those ties and to ensure that we put our allies first – and to make clear that we would not cut a deal at their expense. And we took important steps – including to deepen cooperation on missile defense.

Now North Korea has continued its defiance. So we need to be resolute in response, increasing pressure and sending Pyongyang an unmistakable message that its nuclear brinksmanship won't succeed. We need to make clear that we will take whatever steps are necessary to defend our allies in the region. And we need to press the Chinese government, which wields influence with the North Koreans, to be more assertive in deterring the North's irresponsible actions. It should take actions to halt prohibited activities transpiring across its borders or its firms that participate in illicit trade or proliferation will have to face sanctions.

Statement From Hillary Clinton on North Korea's Apparent Nuclear Test

Hillary Clinton released the following statement Wednesday about North Korea's apparent nuclear test:

"I strongly condemn North Korea's apparent nuclear test. If verified, this is a provocative and dangerous act, and North Korea must have no doubt that we will take whatever steps are necessary to defend ourselves and our treaty allies, South Korea and Japan. North Korea's goal is to blackmail the world into easing the pressure on its rogue regime. We can't give in to or in any way encourage this kind of bullying. Instead, we should increase pressure and send Pyongyang an unmistakable message that its nuclear brinksmanship won't succeed.

"The United States and our partners, including the UN Security Council, need to immediately impose additional sanctions against North Korea. The Chinese government, which wields influence with the North Koreans, must be more assertive in deterring the North's irresponsible actions, and it should take actions to halt prohibited activities transpiring across its borders or its firms that participate in illicit trade or proliferation will have to face sanctions. We should also work with our allies to strengthen our missile defenses.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"As Secretary I championed the United States' pivot to the Asia Pacific - including shifting additional military assets to the theater – in part to confront threats like North Korea and to support our allies. I worked to get not just our allies but also Russia and China on board for the strongest sanctions yet.

"North Korea's nuclear and missile tests, its human rights record, the cyber hack of Sony this past December -- highlight the continuing threat that North Korea poses.

"And threats like this are yet another reminder of what's at stake in this election. We cannot afford reckless, imprudent publicity stunts that risk war. We need a Commander-in-Chief with the experience and judgement to deal with a dangerous North Korea on Day One."

###

On Thu, Jan 7, 2016 at 7:31 AM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Laura can send you our statement.
>
> On Jan 7, 2016, at 5:07 AM, Angel Urena <Angel@presidentclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > Any guidance (beyond the statement you issued) on NK?
> >
> > On Jan 6, 2016, at 7:20 PM, Tina Flournoy <Tina@presidentclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > Got it and thanks. We can print it in the am before we leave
> > >
> > > On Jan 6, 2016, at 7:16 PM, Michael Shapiro <mshapiro@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > >
> > > > On tax fairness - we're still developing exactly what our policy is going to look like and how to frame it; we're planning to put a memo into her book tonight - so my thought was we should send that across once it's fully formed. We won't be public with the policy until next Monday at the earliest.
> > > >
> > > > On Wed, Jan 6, 2016 at 6:14 PM, Mike Schmidt <mschmidt@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > > > > Hi Tina:
> > > > >
> > > > > I'm attaching a memo we just sent in to HRC on Bernie's Wall Street speech, which also includes Q&A.
> > > > >
> > > > > Thanks,
> > > > >
> > > > > Mike
> > > > >
> > > > > On Tue, Jan 5, 2016 at 4:46 PM, Tina Flournoy <Tina@presidentclinton.com >

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

wrote:

Great. Thank you

> On Jan 5, 2016, at 4:42 PM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> + Schmidt and Shapiro. We will send him a note on Bernie's Wall Street > speech today and HRC's forthcoming tax proposals
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Tina Flournoy [mailto:Tina@presidentclinton.com]
> Sent: Tuesday, January 5, 2016 2:55 PM
> To: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta
> <john.podesta@gmail.com >
> Cc: Angel Urena <Angel@presidentclinton.com >; Jon Davidson
> <Jon@presidentclinton.com >
> Subject: Iowa
>
> Thank you both for everything you did to get WJC ready for NH. Any updates > we need for Iowa?
>
> Thanks

--
Michael Shapiro
Hillary for America
Policy
860-306-5849

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 8/26/2014 7:40:39 AM
Subject: MUST READ: Time: “Pro-Clinton Group Touts Her Record on Women”

Today, Jay Newton-Small published a piece detailing Correct The Record's most recent analysis of Secretary Clinton's record on women. See the piece below, and CTR's corresponding record analysis below that.

Time: “Pro-Clinton Group Touts Her Record on Women”

By Jay Newton-Small

August 26, 2014, 1:23 p.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] Hillary Clinton’s shadow campaign emphasizes her empowerment of women

A group dedicated to defending and promoting Hillary Clinton’s record ahead of a possible 2016 presidential bid used Women’s Equality Day to tout her record of promoting women Tuesday.

The group Correct the Record released a two-page document entitled “Breaking Glass: Women’s Economic Empowerment.” The document, given exclusively to TIME, looks at Clinton’s work to promote women’s and girls’ issues as Secretary of State. The issue was Clinton’s top policy priority. The push came after her failed 2008 presidential bid, during which she didn’t highlight the historic nature of her candidacy until the end of the campaign, famously saying only in her concession speech that her bid to be the first female president represented “18 million cracks in the glass ceiling” for the 18 million votes she’d received in the primaries.

Many Clinton advisers who’d worked on the campaign have said in retrospect that they wished they’d emphasized the historic opportunity she had to be the first female president earlier. Clinton lost the women’s vote in 16 state and territorial primaries to Barack Obama. Already this time, Ready for Hillary, another arm of Clinton’s shadow campaign, has focused on outreach to female voters as a priority.

Correct the Record’s promotion of Clinton’s record also speaks to that push, highlighting the work that she’s done to further women and children globally. The group notes that Clinton created the office of Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women’s Issues and raised women’s issues at all international economic forums. She launched the Equal Futures Partnership to advance women in politics and the private sector. Along with Asian Partners she pushed through the San Francisco Declaration, an agreement to realize women’s economic potential. With help from Middle Eastern countries she launched the Strategic Dialogue with Civil Society, which brought together and empowered activists in the region to work on women’s economic and political. In Latin America and the Caribbean she launched WEAmericas to help women grow small businesses. In Africa, she created the African Women’s Entrepreneurship Program to help train women qualify for the African Growth and Opportunity Act, a trade agreement that gives privileged trade status to certain African countries and businesses. And she directed the Invest for the Future program in Southern and Eastern Europe and Eurasia to focus on women’s entrepreneurship.

“Hillary Clinton championed such unprecedented and impassioned work at the State Department to advance women’s entrepreneurship and empowerment that it would take an entire book to fully chronicle her efforts,” said Adrienne Watson, a spokeswoman for the group. “Correct The Record put together this ‘Breaking Glass’ record analysis to highlight Clinton’s many successes, including several multilateral partnerships and programs which raised the profile of women’s issues and resulted in greater economic engagement of women around the world.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BREAKING GLASS: WOMEN'S ECONOMIC EMPOWERMENT

Sec. Clinton championed women's empowerment, entrepreneurship, and investment in women's economic potential. As Hillary Clinton states in Hard Choices, creating opportunity for women and girls throughout the world "directly supports everyone's security and prosperity, and should be part of our diplomacy and development work." As Secretary of State, she followed through on a lifetime of championing women's causes by expanding women's economic prospects, initiating programs dedicated to entrepreneurship around the world. Through international partnerships, Sec. Clinton elevated women's political and economic prospects and raised women's issues "at all international economic forums."

ELEVATED POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC EMPOWERMENT FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

Sec. Clinton worked "to raise women's issues at all international economic forums." According to an op-ed by former Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues Melanne Verveer in the Christian Science Monitor, "Clinton worked to raise women's issues at all international economic forums – from APEC (Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation) to the G20 to the OECD (Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development). She launched regional networking and training programs for women entrepreneurs and formed many robust public-private partnerships to promote women's economic empowerment." [Melanne Verveer, Christian Science Monitor, 3/8/13]

Sec. Clinton told delegates of the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation Women and the Economy Summit that empowering women meant a stronger, more stable world economy. According to San Jose Mercury News, "Empowering women means a stronger, more stable world economy, U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton said Friday to the largest diplomatic gathering in the Bay Area since the United Nations charter was signed here in 1945. And although the past half-century has seen tremendous progress, there's still much to be done to ensure women have the opportunity, information, resources and legal rights they need for economic success, Clinton told delegates to the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation Women and the Economy Summit." [San Jose Mercury News, 9/16/11]

Sec. Clinton: "The United States is committed to advancing opportunities for women as entrepreneurs and business leaders." According to video remarks at an event for the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, Sec. Clinton said, "Businesses owned by women make considerable contributions to national economies. But too often, their growth is limited by unfair barriers. The United States is committed to advancing opportunities for women as entrepreneurs and business leaders. We view it as both a moral and strategic imperative for the 21st century. That's why we are helping women entrepreneurs with business training and mentoring; and support policies that improve women's access to finance, technology, and networks." [Remarks at OECD Event on Women's Entrepreneurship, state.gov , 11/1/11]

CREATED PROGRAMS TO ACHIEVE GREATER EMPOWERMENT FOR WOMEN

Sec. Clinton launched the Equal Futures Partnership to fight for women's political and economic empowerment.According to a White House fact sheet on the Equal Futures Partnership, "A growing body of evidence shows that women's political and economic empowerment are critical to fostering international peace and security, growing vibrant market economies, and supporting open and accountable governance. Recognizing that no country can realize its potential if half its population cannot reach theirs, President Obama issued a challenge before the United Nations General Assembly in September 2011 to break down barriers to women's political and economic empowerment. [...] In response to this challenge, on September 24, 2012, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton launched the Equal Futures Partnership on behalf of the United States along with 12 other founding members (Australia, Benin, Bangladesh, Denmark, Finland, Indonesia, Jordan, the Netherlands, Peru, Senegal, and Tunisia; as well as the European Union)." ["Fact Sheet: The Equal Futures Partnership to Expand Women's Political and Economic Participation," whitehouse.gov , 9/24/12]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Under Sec. Clinton, the Asian-Pacific partners of APEC agreed to the "San Francisco Declaration," an agreement to take concrete actions to realize the full economic potential of women. In 2011, Secretary Clinton brought together representatives from APEC (Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation) nations to agree to the "San Francisco Declaration." The Declaration stated, "We, APEC ministers and senior government officials, along with private sector leaders, met in San Francisco, California, September 16, 2011 for the High Level Policy Dialogue on Women and the Economy, under the Chairmanship of U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton. [...] In 2011 and beyond, APEC economies will take concrete actions to realize the full potential of women, integrate them more fully into APEC economies, harness their talents, remove barriers that restrict women's full economic participation, and maximize their contributions towards economic growth." In 2012, Sec. Clinton traveled to St. Petersburg, Russia, where she "led the U.S. Delegation to the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation's Women and the Economy Forum (WEF). During this event, participants focused on leadership and skills and capacity building, two main areas of the San Francisco Declaration on decreasing barriers to women's economic participation, as they relate to innovation, STEM, entrepreneurship, and healthy lifestyles." [APEC.org, 9/16/11; state.gov , 6/30/12]

Sec. Clinton's Strategic Dialogue with Civil Society project brought activists in the Middle East and North Africa together to discuss "how to further women's political and economic engagement." According to a press release from the U.S. Embassy in Amman, Jordan, "Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues Melanne Verveer arrived on a four-day visit to Jordan today. While in Amman, Ambassador Verveer will host a regional convening of the Working Group on Women's Empowerment. Under Secretary Clinton's Strategic Dialogue with Civil Society, the Working Group brings together activists from across the Middle East and North Africa to discuss how to further women's political and economic engagement in the region." [U.S. Embassy Jordan, 6/24/12]

PROMOTED WOMEN'S ENTREPRENEURSHIP AROUND THE WORLD

Sec. Clinton launched WEAmericas to help women in Latin America and the Caribbean start and grow small businesses. According to a State Department fact sheet on WEAmericas, "Recognizing that investing in women is not only the right thing, but also the smart thing, President Obama announced and Secretary Clinton launched the Women's Entrepreneurship in the Americas (WEAmericas) initiative at the Summit of the Americas in April 2012. WEAmericas leverages public-private partnerships to increase women's economic participation in Latin America and the Caribbean by reducing barriers women often confront in starting and growing SMEs: access to training and networks, access to markets, and access to finance." ["Women's Entrepreneurship in the Americas (WEAmericas)," state.gov , 10/12/12]

Sec. Clinton's State Department created the African Women's Entrepreneurship Program to "provide women with the tools and skills" to implement the African Growth and Opportunity Act. According to a State Department report on women's and girls' issues, "In conjunction with the 2010 AGOA Ministerial (African Growth and Opportunity Act), the Department created the African Women's Entrepreneurship Program to provide women with the tools and skills they need to more successfully implement AGOA and its benefits for building businesses and markets. The Department secured $200,000 from Exxon-Mobil to fund follow-up entrepreneurship training to support building businesses." ["Sidebar on Women's and Girls' Issues," state.gov , 11/15/10]

Under Sec. Clinton's leadership, the Invest for the Future program focused on improving women's entrepreneurship and economic situations across Southern and Eastern Europe and Eurasia. According to the Invest for the Future website, "The Invest for the Future program was initiated by the US Department of State under the leadership of Secretary of State, [Hillary] Clinton and Global Ambassador-at-large for Global Women's Issues, Melanne Verveer. IFTF was conceptualized to focus on improving the economic situation for women across Southern and Eastern Europe and Eurasia. Through a series of events it brought together women entrepreneurs, educators, policy-makers, and civil society leaders to foster development and overcome barriers to fully realize the promise of gender equality and 'smart economics', as investing in women profits all of society." [Invest for the Future, accessed2/4/14]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sec. Clinton founded the U.S.-Pakistan Women's Council with American University and the Organization of Pakistani Entrepreneurs of North America "to promote economic opportunities for women in Pakistan." In her remarks at the Equal Futures Partnership launch, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said, "I'm pleased to announce that the State Department and American University, along with the Organization of Pakistani Entrepreneurs of North America and our counterparts in Pakistan, are founding the U.S.-Pakistan Women's Council to promote economic opportunities for women in Pakistan. The Council will connect businesses, universities, and individual donors in both the United States and Pakistan. And I'm very pleased that Pakistan's Ambassador to the United States is here with us today." [Remarks at the Equal Futures Partnership Launch, state.gov , 9/24/12]

Sec. Clinton held a conference for women entrepreneurs through the Pathways to Prosperity program. According to her remarks at the Pathways to Prosperity Women Entrepreneurs Conference, Sec. Clinton said, "Part of what we are trying to do here in the State Department with all of you is to make the case that empowering women is a key to progress and prosperity and peace. Bringing together the mentors and the entrepreneurs is one way of creating even more support for all of you in business to be able to spread the benefits of women taking leadership roles. I've heard about some of the work that you are doing in your own lives, and I am very touched by the courage and the commitment that so many of you have already shown." [Remarks at the Pathways to Prosperity Women Entrepreneurs Conference, state.gov , 10/9/09]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	VoteVets.org <info@votevets.org>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	2/9/2016 6:28:47 PM
Subject:	We are the best bet to beat Trump

John -

Donald Trump just won the New Hampshire primary.

The man who refuses to rule out dropping nuclear weapons on ISIS and called Ted Cruz a coward* for refusing to back waterboarding, is one step closer to the Republican nomination, and the presidency.

Donald Trump as our Commander in Chief? Well, there's only one organization out there with the ability to stand up to him on national security issues: and that's the 400,000 veterans, military family members, and VoteVets supporters who are part of our organization.

Contribute $3 tonight to help us elevate the voices of progressive veterans in the campaign to keep Donald Trump out of the White House.

New Hampshire was one place Republicans could win to stop Trump's momentum in its tracks. But if they won't do it, we will.

All my best,

Jon Soltz
Iraq War Veteran and Chairman
VoteVets

Contribute

* He didn't exactly use the word "coward" -- it was a bit more vulgar than that.

PAID FOR BY VOTEVETS POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEE

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, click here . Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe. We try to send only the most important information and opportunities to participate via email. To sustain VoteVets with a contribution click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "GMF Europe Program" <EuropeProgram@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 12/16/2015 7:53:21 AM
Subject: New GMF Policy Brief on Why Energy Geopolitics are Back in Europe

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here.

Addressing the Russian Energy Challenge: Why Regulation Trumps Geopolitics

Europe's dependence on Russian gas has raised security concerns, especially in response to Russia's aggression against Ukraine. The heightened security concerns have led many to suggest a "muscular" energy policy toward Russian gas that looks to replace Russian gas with alternate sources, including liquefied natural gas.

However, as Andreas Goldthau argues in his new GMF Europe Policy Brief, such plans are unrealistic and ignore Europe's advantages. In "Addressing the Russian Energy Challenge: Why Regulation Trumps Geopolitics," Goldthau contends that instead of looking to replace Russian energy in Europe, the EU needs to use its regulatory power to turn the tables. If the EU makes the right kind of progress on the common energy market, then it will dictate the rules to Russia.

Andreas Goldthau. "Addressing the Russian Energy Challenge: Why Regulation Trumps Geopolitics." GMF Europe Policy Brief. December 11, 2015.

The German Marshall Fund of the United States (GMF) strengthens transatlantic cooperation on regional, national, and global challenges and opportunities in the spirit of the Marshall Plan.

GMF contributes research and analysis and convenes leaders on transatlantic issues relevant to policymakers. GMF offers rising leaders opportunities to develop their skills and networks through transatlantic exchange, and supports civil society in the Balkans and Black Sea regions by fostering democratic initiatives, rule of law, and regional cooperation.

Founded in 1972 as a non-partisan, non-profit organization through a gift from Germany as a permanent memorial to Marshall Plan assistance, GMF maintains a strong presence on both sides of the Atlantic. In addition to its headquarters in Washington, DC, GMF has offices in Berlin, Paris, Brussels, Belgrade, Ankara, Bucharest, and Warsaw. GMF also has smaller representations in Bratislava, Turin, and Stockholm.

The views expressed in GMF publications and commentary are the views of the author alone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Margolis, Jim" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
"Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
"John Anzalone" <john@algpolling.com>
Date: 11/19/2015 2:06:22 AM
Subject: RE: Remarks on ISIS

We now have a John Anzalone memorial paragraph in the speech.

From: Margolis, Jim [mailto:Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com]
Sent: Thursday, November 19, 2015 9:05 AM
To: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >; John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >
Cc: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >; Speech Drafts <speechdrafts@hillaryclinton.com >; Speech Book <speechbook@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Re: Remarks on ISIS

I'm glad you're bumping that up a bit. You cover regional responsibility, but this is a big flash point for voters.

From: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Thursday, November 19, 2015 at 8:14 AM
To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >
Cc: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >, Speech Drafts <speechdrafts@hillaryclinton.com >, Speech Book <speechbook@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: RE: Remarks on ISIS

We can throw some more shade at the Arabs, though. Dan and I have an idea.

From:speechdrafts@hillaryclinton.com [mailto:speechdrafts@hillaryclinton.com] On Behalf Of Joel Benenson
Sent: Thursday, November 19, 2015 8:00 AM
To: John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com >
Cc: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >; Speech Drafts <speechdrafts@hillaryclinton.com >; Speech Book <speechbook@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Re: Remarks on ISIS

I thought there is a fair amount in the fist of her three action points focused on what other countries have to do. And there is a sound bite on it in that section as well

Sent from my iPhone

On Nov 19, 2015, at 1:42 PM, John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com > wrote:

> I am clearly not a ISIS policy guy so take my comments with a grain of salt but what I thought was missing from a layman's perspective was a strong call for Middle Eastern countries to join the fight with an immediate commitment of money and ground troops (all I saw was Jordan mentioned). We have "work with our Arab partners" but I think this speech should lay out a list of countries that should be supplying troops, planes, equipment, training, intelligence and money. Call them out and call them out big. That is where the American people are. They are frustrated that this is a Middle Eastern problem being fought by America and Europe. We spent $500 million training Syrian rebels and got nothing and we defended Iraq for a decade and trained their army to see them all defect. Re-asserting the need for just training and the Suni's to rejoin the fight is not enough. She needs to outline exactly who in the Middle East should be on the battlefield with us. That is missing. She needs to call them out.
>
> The speech mentions new "no fly zones" in Syria. How does that square with Russia's current bombing campaign? Shouldn't she call out the Russians for making the situation worse? They would make her appear strong. Take on Putin here. There is language about "ending Assad's rule" which seems to defy political reality. Why go there? It is not going to happen in the algebra of defeating ISIS so why don't we stick to the task at hand.
>
> On Syrian refugees, is it enough to call just for vigilant screening? Shouldn't we call for a thorough review of how we screen to make sure the procedures are actually up to snuff? I think both the CIA/FBI heads have testified and acknowledged that our screening may not deter terrorists. And I don't think the american people feel like the screening process is adequate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

All in all I worry that if we don't really call out specifically by name the Middle Eastern countries that need to join the fight in a significant way that there will not seem like much new here. This seems ore like a review of the diagnosis, a stroll down memory lane and a call for more bombing and intelligence gathering.

John Anzalone
Partner
Anzalone Liszt Grove Research
(o) 334.387.3121
Website | Twitter | LinkedIn | Facebook

From: <speechdrafts@hillaryclinton.com > on behalf of Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Thursday, November 19, 2015 at 2:53 AM
To: Speech Drafts <speechdrafts@hillaryclinton.com >, Speech Book <speechbook@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Remarks on ISIS

I wanted to be sure everyone got this latest draft of our ISIS speech. I think HRC will make edits in the morning, but this is where we stand now. Please let me know by 9am if you have any major concerns.
Thanks
Dan

This email is intended only for the named addressee. It may contain information that is confidential/private, legally privileged, or copyright-protected, and you should handle it accordingly. If you are not the intended recipient, you do not have legal rights to retain, copy, or distribute this email or its contents, and should promptly delete the email and all electronic copies in your system; do not retain copies in any media. If you have received this email in error, please notify the sender promptly. Thank you.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Terry Sheridan" <tsheridan@clintonfoundation.org>
Date: 11/20/2011 8:39:44 AM
Subject: Re: CGSGI CEO Executive Search

Terry,
I need to be in DC on those days, but could probably participate in a number of the interviews by phone from DC. Let's discuss tomorrow.
John

On Thu, Nov 17, 2011 at 12:04 PM, Terry Sheridan <tsheridan@clintonfoundation.org> wrote:
> John:
>
>
>
> I hope your trip is going well.
>
>
>
> I wanted to follow up with you on a major project we are working on - the > executive search for the CEO of CGSGI. We have retained Russell Reynolds > for the search, and we are working with Annie Simonds from their Washington > DC office. They have identified a number of viable candidates and we are > scheduled to conduct in-person interviews in NY on December 7th and > 8th, with follow up interviews on December 19th and 20th.
>
>
>
> Bruce is on the search committee but obviously hasn't been able to > participate these past few weeks. In addition to myself and Annie Simonds, > the other members are Christy Louth, Executive Director of CGSGI Canada, and > Eric Nonacs, a member of the CGSGI Steering Committee and of the CGSGI > Canada Board of Directors, whom you may know. Christy will particpate in > the December 7th & 8th interviews, but is not available for the follow up > interviews, and Eric is unfortunately not available for either. We were > counting on Bruce to add an important management perspective, but I am not > sure if he will be able to participate. If he is not able, would you be > able to help, particularly for the first round on December 7th and 8th? It > will be important to have good representation on our end not only to > evaluate the candidates but also to attract them to the position. I know > you have a very full plate, but if your schedule would be able to > accommodate this, the search firm would of course brief you on the candidate > slate, and will be preparing a summary of specific questions and areas we > will want to explore in our interviews with candidates. There will be a > total of 8 candidates to speak to on 12/7 & 12/8, with the objective of > narrowing the field to 4 candidates for the 2nd round later that month.
>
>
>
> Another alternative could be to reschedule the interviews for January, but > the objective has been to move this along at an aggressive pace as Frank > Giustra is very eager to fill this position (it has been vacant since > mid-year). Once we agree on the second-round candidates, we could also fly > the candidates out to San Francisco where Eric is based.
>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

>
>
> I would appreciate your bringing this up with Bruce when you next speak, and > your thoughts on the possible alternatives if he is not available. Thanks > and safe travels.
>
>
>
> Terry

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	NYTimes.com <nytdirect@nytimes.com>
To:	john.podesta@gmail.com
Date:	9/3/2015 12:13:51 AM
Subject:	First Draft on Politics: A Pledge for Republican Togetherness Is Framed on Trump's Terms

? View First Draft on the web | Add nytdirect@nytimes.com to your address book?

9/3/2015 nytimes.com/firstdraft »

The New York Times
FirstDraft
What You Need to Know Today in Politics

A Pledge for Republican Togetherness Is Framed on Trump's Terms

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Donald J. Trump made a campaign stop at the Pinkerton Academy in Derry , N.H., last month. Mary Schwalm/Associated Press

By Maggie Haberman

Good Thursday morning. While President Obama celebrates the success of his strategy to secure enough votes to put the Iran nuclear agreement in place, the head of the Republican National Committee was seemingly engaging in some strategy of his own, calling for all 17 candidates to make a promise meant to ease concerns about one candidate's intentions.

At 2 p.m. Thursday, the Trump show will resume its regularly scheduled programming, with a special guest star, Reince Priebus, the Republican National Committee chairman, at Trump Tower in Manhattan.

According to Donald J. Trump's official schedule, he is holding a news conference at that time. The advisory makes no mention of Mr. Priebus, but a spokesman for Mr. Trump confirmed that a meeting between them is scheduled for Thursday.

All of this togetherness, on Mr. Trump's terms, at his office tower, with his name on the front in gold, comes after Mr. Priebus abruptly asked all 17 presidential candidates in the Republican nominating contest to sign a loyalty pledge against running as a third-party candidate.

The pledge seems to be aimed directly at Mr. Trump, since no other candidate has left open, at least in previous comments, the possibility of such a run. And that threat, by a rich candidate, has sent a jolt of fear through the Republican establishment over splitting votes and potentially tipping the election to Democrats. Mr. Priebus has been under enormous pressure to try to rein in Mr. Trump.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But reining him in is more easy in theory than in fact. And the fact that whatever announcement will take place on Thursday is being done on Mr. Trump's turf merely emphasizes how much he is dictating the terms of the primary.

ADVERTISEMENT

Stay tuned throughout the day: Follow us on Twitter @NYTpolitics and on Facebook for First Draft updates .

What We're Watching

- Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr., who is on a trip to Florida that further raises speculation about a potential presidential run, will meet with Jewish community leaders on Thursday to discuss the Iran nuclear deal. He will return to Washington and then fly to Atlanta where he will speak to other Jewish groups.

- On the campaign trail, Senator Ted Cruz will make appearances in his home state of Texas; New Hampshire will host several candidates, including Jeb Bush, Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey and Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina; and Gov. Bobby Jindal of Louisiana and Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont, a Democrat, will be in Iowa.

After Losing Fight for Votes, Opponents of Iran Deal Press for More

Mr. Obama has secured enough votes to make sure he can put the Iran nuclear deal in place, but opponents of the agreement are not about to stop trying to run up the vote count against it.

The American Israel Public Affairs Committee, a leader of the drive against the deal, is hosting an event in New Jersey on Thursday evening to urge Senator Cory Booker, one of about 10 remaining undeclared Democrats, to oppose the deal. It will feature former Senator Joseph I. Lieberman, the onetime Connecticut

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Democrat turned independent who now leads United Against Nuclear Iran, and other Jewish community leaders.

While a veto of the deal cannot be overridden if the current support holds, opponents of the agreement are eager to enlarge any majority against it. And the addition of a Democrat like Mr. Booker would also give more credibility to the portrayal of the opposition as bipartisan. Critics of the deal would still like to force a final vote in the Senate, and they need at least four more Democrats to join them to have sufficient support to break a filibuster.

"We are in this until the end," said Patrick Dorton, who has been overseeing a $20 million media campaign against the deal for Citizens for a Nuclear Free Iran. "We think that every vote matters," he said. "Our view is that proponents of the deal should support an up-or-down vote and not hide behind a filibuster."

– Carl Hulse

Former Clinton Aide to Testify at House Benghazi Committee

One of Hillary Rodham Clinton's longtime advisers is scheduled to appear on Thursday before the House committee investigating the Benghazi attacks for an interview under oath.

The adviser, Cheryl Mills, was Mrs. Clinton's chief of staff at the State Department and one of the lawyers who led the defense of President Bill Clinton during his impeachment trial. The Republican-led panel wants to question Ms. Mills about the personal email account Mrs. Clinton used when she was secretary of state and how the administration responded to the 2012 attacks in Benghazi, Libya.

It's not clear that Ms. Mills will be able to answer all the questions. Some of the issues the committee wants to ask about relate to classified materials, and Ms. Mills does not have a security clearance.

Ms. Mills played a significant role in providing legal advice to Mrs. Clinton regarding the release of her emails to the State Department last year. In response to questions about that process, Ms. Mills could exert attorney-client privilege. Ms. Mills's lawyer had asked the committee to have the interview in public in an apparent effort to prevent Republicans from selectively leaking her testimony.

The committee declined. None of the transcribed interviews the panel has conducted have occurred in public.

The appearance comes after news that a former Clinton aide who helped set up the server that housed Mrs. Clinton's private email account plans to invoke his Fifth Amendment right in response to congressional questions about the email practices.

– Michael S. Schmidt

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Our Favorites From The Times

- Often in her political career, Mrs. Clinton has found cover amid some of her stumbles in Republicans who have troubles of their own.

- A once-sunny Mr. Bush seems irked to be in Mr. Trump 's shadow and stuck in a race that embodies what he likes least about politics.

  Perhaps as a case in point, on Wednesday Mr. Trump suggested that Mr. Bush was setting a bad example by speaking Spanish, and Mr. Bush criticized Mr. Trump for, among other things, being "a germaphobe."

- In a speech aimed at raising her national profile amid talk of a potential vice-presidential pick, Gov. Nikki R. Haley of South Carolina sharply criticized the Black Lives Matter movement, saying it was imperiling black lives and property.

- And on the third day of his visit to Alaska, Mr. Obama delivered promises of new aid for Arctic communities whose shorelines and infrastructure are crumbling because of rising temperatures.

Bulletins: Rubio on Clerk; Clinton's Drug Plan; Sanders Nears Deal

- Senator Marco Rubio of Florida said the government should respect the beliefs of the Kentucky county clerk who has denied marriage licenses to same-sex couples, saying society needs to accommodate public officials who object to carrying out duties they say violate their religious beliefs.

- Mrs. Clinton proposed a $10 billion plan to combat the escalating drug epidemic in rural America.

- And Mr. Sanders is on the verge of signing a joint fund-raising agreement with the Democratic National Committee, his aides said, a week after Mrs. Clinton entered such an arrangement.

Warren Offers a Glimpse Into Her Lunch With Biden

Senator Elizabeth Warren touched on some of her signature issues — like student loans, big banks and the Affordable Care Act — Wednesday evening in an appearance with a Boston Globe reporter at Suffolk University.

But it was her potential role in next year's presidential election, including her meeting late last month with Mr. Biden, that drew the evening's most eager attention.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Actually, he called me twice," Ms. Warren said, explaining how the lunch meeting was set up.

Ms. Warren and Mr. Biden met over some sort of chopped salad — "I wasn't entirely sure what it was," she said — for a "good, long, rambling policy conversation," Ms. Warren said.

The reporter, Joshua Miller, asked if the two had discussed the idea of a joint ticket, even jokingly.

Ms. Warren paused.

"It was a long conversation," she said.

Ms. Warren then sidestepped Mr. Miller's repeated questions about whether she intended to serve out her six-year Senate term, which began in 2013.

"I love my job," Ms. Warren said, emphasizing each word. "It's all I'm thinking about."

Mr. Miller reminded Ms. Warren that, in 2013, she had pledged to serve out the term.

"There's nothing that has changed my thinking on this," Ms. Warren said. "I'm working hard."

Ms. Warren also said that she expected to endorse a Democratic presidential candidate, but that she was not ready to do so.

– Jess Bidgood

What We're Reading Elsewhere

- Newsweek composed a poem made of lines from emails sent by Mrs. Clinton.

- Martin O'Malley, the former Maryland governor who has harshly criticized the Democratic National Committee for scheduling six debates, a number he sees as too few and as benefiting Mrs. Clinton, has called for protests at the committee's headquarters, The Hill writes.

- And, The New Yorker writes , "In contemporary campaigns, which rely so much on artifice and the huge gobs of money that manufacture more artifice, it's often hard to figure out who these striving people are apart from who they say they are."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Politico reports that the Clinton campaign is looking to make a push in New Hampshire in an effort to keep pace with Mr. Sanders, who has been drawing big crowds there and is polling well in the state.

ADVERTISEMENT

Travels That Excite the Curiosity and Challenge the Mind

- 27 departures
- Small group tours
- Specialty cruises

VIEW OUR ONLINE BROCHURE

Times JOURNEYS

Correction

The newsletter on Wednesday misidentified, in some references, the country that is the focus of the nuclear deal. As the newsletter correctly noted elsewhere, it is Iran, not Iraq.

First Draft is sent weekdays before 7 a.m. and is updated throughout the day at nytimes.com/firstdraft . Check back throughout the day for continuing updates.

And please, tell us how we're doing. Like it, hate it, or have some advice, email us at FirstDraft@NYTimes.com .

Follow us on Twitter: @NYTPolitics

ABOUT THIS EMAIL

You received this message because you signed up for NYTimes.com's First Draft newsletter.

As a member of the TRUSTe privacy program, we are committed to protecting your privacy.

Unsubscribe | Change Your Email | Privacy Policy | Contact | Advertise

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Bruce Lindsey" <blindsey@clintonfoundation.org>
To: "Maura Pally" <mpally@clintonfoundation.org>
Date: 4/8/2015 8:02:24 AM
Subject: Re: RE: Re:

The Foundation should not announce what CHAI will do. We could change the beginning to say the "the Foundation and the Clinton Health Access Initiative will adjust their policies during the period of Secretary Clinton's run for office as follows:"

Sent from my iPad

On Apr 8, 2015, at 10:53 AM, Maura Pally <mpally@clintonfoundation.org > wrote:

> We could say this:
> foreign governments who have funded or are funding the work of the Clinton Health Access Initiative and the Clinton Foundation programs Clinton Climate Initiative, Clinton Development Initiative, and Clinton Giustra Enterprise Partnership.
> Instead of what is currently written:
> foreign governments who have funded or are funding the work of the Clinton Climate Initiative, Clinton Development Initiative, Clinton Giustra Enterprise Partnership, and Clinton Health Access Initiative.
> Revised option attached.
>
> From: Bruce Lindsey
> Sent: Wednesday, April 08, 2015 10:22 AM
> To: John Podesta
> Cc: Tina Flournoy; Cheryl Mills Contact; Bari Lurie contact; Maura Pally > Subject: Re:
>
> Yes CHAI should be separate.
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
> On Apr 8, 2015, at 10:05 AM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com > wrote:
>
> > I'm having a hard time seeing what the back and forth is on my phone. Do we have to adjust foreign contributions section to reflect two organizations CF and CHAI. Currently reads as though CHAI is a program of CF.
> >
> > On Apr 8, 2015 9:55 AM, "Tina Flournoy" <Tina@presidentclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > thanks. On the last point - I get the point but think we can delete the "who have funded" - but don't feel strongly about it
> > >
> > > On Apr 8, 2015, at 9:44 AM, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com > wrote:
> > >
> > > > responses to Tina's comments
> > > >
> > > > On Wed, Apr 8, 2015 at 9:25 AM, Tina Flournoy <Tina@presidentclinton.com > wrote:
> > > >
> > > > > some comments here
> > > > >
> > > > > Begin forwarded message:
> > > > >
> > > > > From: Hartina Flournoy <tflournoy11@gmail.com >

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Date: April 8, 2015 at 9:25:43 AM EDT
To: Tina Flournoy <tina@presidentclinton.com >

<2015-04-08 Foundation Policy Adjustments - DRAFT (2) - answers for Tina.docx>

<2015-04-08 Foundation Policy Adjustments - DRAFT (2) - answers for TinaMP.docx>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 11/17/2014 2:06:28 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Monday November 17, 2014 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Monday November 17, 2014 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

The Hill: "Will the Obama coalition survive?"

"The coalition of voters that twice elected President Obama to the White House might not be there for the Democratic nominee in 2016, party strategists are warning."

Wall Street Journal blog: Washington Wire: "Will Hillary Clinton Be More Accessible to Voters in 2016?"

"Yet if she does run, some Democrats and friends of Mrs. Clinton say they'd like to see her escape from the bubble a bit more, perhaps reveal more of her character and personality than the public ordinarily gets to see."

Talking Points Memo: "Why Hillary 2016 Thinks She Can Expand Obama's Electoral Map"

"The top minds in the proto-Hillary Clinton 2016 campaign infrastructure are already gaming out Electoral College scenarios."

San Francisco Chronicle: "New political generation on hold as elder Democrats hang on"

"Even on the national stage, the Democratic leadership has a distinctly gray tinge. The party's leading presidential hopeful is Hillary Rodham Clinton, 67, in contrast to a Republican field that could include Sens. Rand Paul, 51, and Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio, both 43."

National Journal: "Obama's Immigration Order Has 2016 Perils for Both Parties"

"If Obama fails to achieve a small recovery, even a well-known and relatively popular politician like Hillary Clinton will struggle to convince voters they shouldn't back the other party's choice for the White House—a situation not unlike the one that befell John McCain's campaign to replace George W. Bush in 2008."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Politico: "Obama makes legacy play on trade"

"A race to the finish line on TPP in the coming months could also be tricky for Hillary Clinton, who's seeking to court many of those same critics as she prepares a potential bid for the White House."

New York Post: "NY GOP Chair: de Blasio will take 2016 nomination over Hillary"

"Mayor de Blasio — not Hillary Rodham Clinton — will be the Democratic nominee for president in 2016. That's the jaw-dropping prediction being made by New York's top Republican, state GOP Chairman Ed Cox, who, as son-in-law to former President Richard Nixon, knows a thing or two about national politics."

Articles:

The Hill: "Will the Obama coalition survive?"

By Justin and Amie Parnes

November 17, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EST

The coalition of voters that twice elected President Obama to the White House might not be there for the Democratic nominee in 2016, party strategists are warning.

Following their disastrous showing at the polls this month, many Democrats have consoled themselves with talk of how the groups that fueled Obama's resounding victories — namely minorities and young people — will make up a bigger slice of the electorate in two years' time.

But some fear the party is placing far too much trust in demographics, while ignoring the unique circumstances that led to Obama's rise.

"I don't think the Democratic Party should take anyone for granted, or should just assume that these voters are just going to back our nominee, and more importantly, going to turn out for the same level as President Obama," said Democratic strategist Doug Thornell.

"They're going to need a reason and they're going to need a message."

Obama won the Electoral College handily in 2008 and 2012, vanquishing the GOP with a coalition of millennials, minorities and women in swing states such as Ohio, Iowa and Colorado.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The wave of support gave Obama the former GOP strongholds of Virginia (in both elections) and North Carolina (in 2008), stirring anxious chatter among Republicans about being locked out of the White House for years to come. Obama's victories, combined with the rising Latino population, have convinced many Democrats that the presidential map is skewing decidedly in their favor.

Yet some question whether the supposed advantages will materialize when the name at the top of the ballot isn't Barack Obama.

A former Democratic campaign official stressed that the eventual nominee, whether Hillary Clinton or not, will need to find "new ways to energize our folks."

That need seems particularly acute after the drubbing the party took in the midterms — dismal results due, in part, to overall turnout sliding to its lowest level since 1942.

"The messaging we put out there hasn't been translating," a senior Democratic operative said. "I don't want to sugarcoat it. It has been an issue for us."

"We need to try and communicate what's at stake," the operative added.

Not only did Democrats lose seats in red and purple states this year, they also failed to win the governor's mansion in deep-blue Illinois, Massachusetts and Maryland, where exit polls showed black and young voters found other things to do on Election Day.

"People just stayed home because the candidate didn't motivate them and didn't manage to convince them to go to the polls," Thornell said.

But anxious Democrats think there could be more to the problem than that.

They note that even when Obama got involved in encouraging his base to vote for the candidates of his choosing, the results were tepid at best.

Obama focused intently on turning out the black vote, conducting a series of urban radio interviews and taping commercials for black networks. Despite that, Democrats received a lower percentage of the black vote, and fewer blacks turned out at the polls than in either of Obama's presidential contests.

"The magic of 2008 will be hard to reproduce," Southern Methodist University professor Cal Jillson said, pointing out that the Democratic advantage among blacks had gone from "10-to-1 to 19-to-1" under Obama.

Grover Norquist, the anti-tax advocate known for stringing together political coalitions at the other end of the political spectrum, said Democrats face two major problems.

The first: Many of the party's structural advantages — from volunteer lists to technology infrastructure — were built by Obama's campaign team, not by the party.

The second, he said, is that demographics are not destiny.

Norquist said anyone looking at the electorate through the prism of race, gender and ethnicity would miss the rise of "issue voters," including the swelling numbers of gun-permit holders, homeschoolers or school-voucher recipients in swing states.

"The electorate is different today than when Obama got elected — people now have freedoms and rights they didn't before," Norquist said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Any Democratic nominee expecting Obama's supporters to fall into his or her lap will be in for a rude awakening, he said.

"They're not transferable, you can't hand people off like they are serfs or something," he said.

The 2008 Obama campaign had an additional advantage: the then-senator could clothe himself in the garb of the outsider running against the status quo, all while seeking to make history as the nation's first black president.

Now, the Democratic candidate will be running as the de facto incumbent, associated with Obama's checkered record to a greater or lesser degree.

Polls indicate that a still-lagging economy and the lack of progress on key issues such as immigration reform have wounded the party — and the president — among groups that once offered stalwart support.

A Washington Post/ ABC News poll released Nov. 2 showed Obama's favorability among Hispanics had dropped a staggering 19 points since January. His standing had declined 9 points with blacks and 6 points with independents.

The numbers bear a striking resemblance to the pre-Obama world, when the electoral map was less friendly to Democrats.

Warnings about the crackup of the Obama coalition have come from none other than David Plouffe, the operational mastermind behind the president's two White House victories.

"We shouldn't just assume that the Obama voters will automatically come out for Democratic presidential candidates," Plouffe told The New York Times after the Democrats' midterm losses.

Democrats insist Obama can remedy that situation during his final two years in office and ensure that his coalition endures.

Aggressive moves on net neutrality and global warming have already reinvigorated liberals, and expansive action on immigration reform could help bring Latinos back into the fold, they say.

There's also hope among Democrats that the historic nature of a Clinton campaign could lead to a different, but still vibrant, electorate.

Strategists say a potential Clinton bid would likely generate outsized enthusiasm among young and single female voters, which could offset drops in other parts of the electorate.

"Hillary is going to have to build that excitement in the base the way the president did in 2008. Voters are going to have to truly believe in her path and her vision and get excited by what she stands for," a former Obama campaign official said.

Clinton will have to avoid the notion that she's the inevitable candidate, the former official added, but can build excitement by emphasizing her place in history as potentially the first woman president.

"Done right, I think that can really help her," the former official said. "Women will love it, and so will other groups, including young voters."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Wall Street Journal blog: Washington Wire: "Will Hillary Clinton Be More Accessible to Voters in 2016?"

By Peter Nicholas

November 17, 2014, 6:39 a.m. EST

Not long ago Sen. Bernie Sanders, a Vermont independent, invited a political reporter to ride in the backseat of an old Volvo as he made a few stops around Keene State College in New Hampshire.

"Don't run over the students," he cautioned the aide who was driving, when a few kids crossed in front of the car.

Mr. Sanders might run for president in the next campaign. Because he'd be a long shot, he can afford to take a few risks and let the press – and by extension, voters – see him in an unscripted setting.

Candidates with a better shot at the brass ring would never chance it. Fearing consequences of an incautious comment, they rely on teleprompters and aides, advance staff and security to minimize the sort of spontaneous interactions that can derail a campaign.

This brings us to Hillary Clinton.

Mrs. Clinton also is contemplating a presidential run, and she stands a far better chance of winning the White House than Mr. Sanders. Don't count on her opening up her SUV to the national press corps.

Yet if she does run, some Democrats and friends of Mrs. Clinton say they'd like to see her escape from the bubble a bit more, perhaps reveal more of her character and personality than the public ordinarily gets to see.

Speaking of her last presidential bid, Alan Kessler, a longtime Democratic fundraiser, spoke of "this perception that there was a wall around her."

"Unless you were a hugely important elected official or a major donor, there was no way to touch her," he said. "It's this whole aura around her. That's what doomed her in 2008 and they're going to have to find a way in this campaign to do away with that."

Susie Tompkins Buell is a longtime friend of Mrs. Clinton. She described an occasion over the summer where she and the former secretary of state were visiting in a home in the Hamptons. Ms. Buell cut her foot and Mrs. Clinton quickly began rummaging through a medicine cabinet looking for a Band-Aid, refusing to give up the search even after Ms. Buell told her it wasn't necessary.

There's nothing remarkable about the story. It's what people do for each other. It stands out only because it's so seldom one hears anything about Mrs. Clinton that isn't tethered to the world of policy and politics.

There's no question there's a flesh-and-blood person lurking beneath the earnest policy wonk who on Saturday at a panel discussion in Little Rock, Ark., celebrated the value of "data" and spoke of the need for an "evidence-based" discussion of the economy.

Last week, the University of Virginia made public a series of interviews conducted as part of a Clinton administration history project. Many of the former Clinton-era officials spoke candidly about Mrs. Clinton, who as first lady exerted huge influence in her husband's administration. Some of the depictions showed admiration; others did not. Yet the interviews leave the reader with a richer understanding of Mrs. Clinton than is possible to glean from her past campaigns.

Roger Altman, a former Treasury official, said Mrs. Clinton inspired more staff loyalty than her husband commanded and doesn't "look at the world solely and only politically."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Leon Panetta, a former chief of staff in the Clinton White House, told of how a staff member came out of one meeting with Mrs. Clinton looking shaken up.

“What’s the matter?” Mr. Panetta asked.

“The first lady just tore everybody a new ass—-,” the aide replied.

Shaping Mrs. Clinton’s image was a running project in the Clinton White House. A cache of nearly 4,000 papers released in March by the Clinton Presidential Library shows the significant thought aides gave to making Mrs. Clinton appealing to the public. And when she started on her U.S. Senate race in 1999, an aide warned that the media would test her. Be chatty, she was counseled, and “don’t be defensive.”

Mrs. Clinton likely will run one last campaign. Will voters see a more accessible face than she has typically been willing to show?

Talking Points Memo: “Why Hillary 2016 Thinks She Can Expand Obama's Electoral Map”

By Dylan Scott

November 17, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EST

The top minds in the proto-Hillary Clinton 2016 campaign infrastructure are already gaming out Electoral College scenarios. What they think they have is a candidate who could compete in a handful of traditionally red states, putting Republicans on the defensive and increasing her chances of winning the White House.

Mitch Stewart, Obama's 2012 battleground state director who is now an independent consultant advising the grassroots group Ready for Hillary, laid out the electoral math to TPM in a recent interview. Clinton will start with Obama's map, he said, and can build from there.

There are two buckets of states potentially in play. Arkansas, Indiana and Missouri comprise one bucket. The first is a somewhat unique case, given Clinton's history there, while the other two were razor-thin in 2008, but the principle is the same: Clinton has a record of appealing to white working-class voters -- especially women -- and they could be enough when paired with the Obama coalition to pull out a win.

"Where I think Secretary Clinton has more appeal than any other Democrat looking at running is that with white working-class voters, she does have a connection," Stewart said. "I think she's best positioned to open those states."

Stewart pointed to Clinton's sizable 2008 primary wins in Pennsylvania and Ohio, along with the enthusiastic support for her from former Indiana governor and senator Evan Byah, as evidence of her potential competitiveness with that population and therefore in those states.

Those white working-class voters in those states could be "the difference between winning and losing, assuming that we maximize turnout, we maximize voter registration in St. Louis, Indianapolis and northwest Indiana," he said. "Assuming we do all those things, the fact that would push her over the top is her appeal to white working-class voters."

The second bucket consists of Arizona and Georgia, two states that Democrats believe are demographically trending toward them, a process that could accelerate with the voter turnout that usually occurs in presidential elections. As Stewart put it, they are "structurally on the precipice of becoming purple states and a presidential campaign can be the catalyzing factor to move those states forward."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Georgia combines an increasing African-American electorate, Clinton's appeal to the white working class and northern voters who are moving into the state. Stewart compared the trend to North Carolina, now an established battleground. Arizona can turn blue, Democrats believe, if they mobilize the growing Hispanic population.

None of these states are likely to be the key 270th electoral vote, Stewart emphasized. The electoral tipping point is still likely to be the traditional battleground states: Iowa, New Hampshire, Virginia, Ohio, Colorado and Nevada. But if Democrats can make these other states competitive, it gives them more room for error and forces Republicans to expend resources in places that have traditionally been marked down as wins for them before the campaign even starts.

"If Republicans have to spend resources in Arizona and George to make sure that they win it, that means that they're spending less resources elsewhere," Stewart said. "The further we can play into their field, the more money they're going to have to spend playing defense in places they've normally taken for granted."

Stewart's outlook is a common one in the Hillary 2016 universe. The New York Times' Amy Chozick reported earlier this month that Clinton supporters have a term for it -- the "New Clinton Map," which combines white working-class women with the Obama coalition to expand the electoral playing field.

Other top Democratic strategists, not as immediately involved in Clintonland, agree that they might be onto something.

"I think Hillary Clinton can be a temporary salve to Democrats' fading chances with white voters, primarily because she will attract women," Carter Eskew, a top adviser to Al Gore's 2000 campaign, told TPM. "If she supplements her gender appeal with a real contrast on the economy, then all the better."

That will be key, Stewart agreed. Clinton has already been testing a 2016 message that heavily emphasizes wage growth and expanding the middle class. That's how she'll attract those voters that could bring these additional states into reach.

"For whatever reason, Democrats have not been able to articulate a message that resonates even though our economic values align with that working-class family's economic values," Stewart said. "It's something that we have to figure out."

It is not a universally shared opinion, however. Mother Jones's Kevin Drum outlined why Democratic struggles with the white working class have become so ingrained in recent years. Larry Sabato, director of the University of Virginia's Center for Politics, sounded skeptical when asked by TPM about Clinton's ability to break through with that population.

"It's possible, but I'll believe it when I see it," he said in an email. "The hardening of party lines during the Bush and Obama years make switches more difficult unless they are propelled purely by demographic shifts."

Others within the Democratic Party cautioned, though, that no matter who the 2016 nominee is, working-class whites shouldn't be viewed as an electoral elixir. The base Obama coalition is still the foundation for national wins.

"As you put together the coalition, it still is an important part. What's important is that a Democrat gets a certain respectable showing there," Kenneth Baer, a former Obama administration official and founder of Democracy: A Journal Of Ideas, told TPM. "It is necessary to win a part of the white working-class vote, but it is not sufficient by any means to win a presidential election as a Democrat. And so you really, really need to perform strongly in those other categories as well."

San Francisco Chronicle: "New political generation on hold as elder Democrats hang on"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Carla Marinucci

November 16, 2014, 7:52 p.m. EST

When Rep. Mike Honda celebrated his hard-fought re-election win in Silicon Valley over fellow Democrat Ro Khanna, his victory speech crystallized one of his party's biggest challenges in California as it looks toward the future.

"There's no reason to retire," the 73-year-old Honda exulted when his narrow victory over Khanna, 38, was assured. "I'm going to live until 103. ... I'm not going anywhere."

While Honda's grit and enthusiasm is a boon to his progressive and labor backers, his stated determination to hang on to his House seat for years to come underscores the fears of some Democrats that they head into the 2016 elections in danger of losing ground to Republicans with critical Millennial voters.

Some political observers suggest that a "gerontocracy" dilemma looms for Democrats, who fired up millions of young voters with a fresh face named Barack Obama in 2008, but who now face the dominance of the party's older officeholders and the difficulty of its younger generation in moving up the ladder.

In what he called a post-election "wake-up call," Simon Rosenberg, who heads NDN, a Democratic think tank in Washington, warned his party last week that the Democratic National Committee must take the lead in "recruiting and training a new generation of candidates and operatives needed to beat a new generation of Republicans."

'Children of Reagan'

"Part of what we are witnessing is the coming to power of the children of Reagan — fortysomething Gen Xers who came of age during the Reagan era," Rosenberg said. "This generation of politicians is young, gaining in experience, and will be a force to be reckoned with in institutional and state politics for generations to come."

In California, Democratic leadership is dominated by older warriors — from Gov. Jerry Brown, 76, to state party Chairman John Burton and Sen. Dianne Feinstein, both 81, to House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi and Sen. Barbara Boxer, both 74.

Most members of the Bay Area's House delegation — all of them Democrats — are in their 60s and 70s. The lone exceptions are Reps. Jared Huffman of San Rafael, 50, and Eric Swalwell, 33, of Dublin — who, like Khanna, bucked the Democratic Party establishment and the White House when he took on a long-term incumbent. Unlike Khanna, Swalwell won his race, defeating 20-term Rep. Pete Stark in 2012.

A recent USC Dornsife/Los Angeles Times poll showed that although Boxer and Feinstein are still popular with voters, nearly 60 percent of respondents said they wanted fresh faces to take their jobs.

Patience running out

With Republicans about to seize control of the U.S. Senate and speculation growing that Boxer won't run for re-election in 2016, the political gossip mill is churning about the patience — or lack thereof — of younger Democrats who have been biding their time for several years.

"I don't think talent is going to wait," said Republican strategist Rob Stutzman, citing a Democratic bench that includes Lt. Gov. Gavin Newsom, Attorney General Kamala Harris, Controller John Chiang and a host of House members.

If Boxer "doesn't retire, I don't know why she wouldn't be challenged from within her party," Stutzman said. "And it will almost certainly happen to Feinstein," who will be 85 when she comes up for re-election in 2018, he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Even on the national stage, the Democratic leadership has a distinctly gray tinge. The party's leading presidential hopeful is Hillary Rodham Clinton, 67, in contrast to a Republican field that could include Sens. Rand Paul, 51, and Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio, both 43.

"Wisdom comes from experience — but a lot of these people have a little too much," said political commentator Patrick Dorinson. "When you've been in power a little too long, with little opposition, you get entrenched. And the more they do that, the more they allow the Republicans to develop the new talent."

GOP consultant Kevin Spillane says Democrats hoping to attract Millennials "will have to change, or Republicans are going to win."

Key East Bay race

He points to new faces like Catharine Baker of Pleasanton, 42, an attorney and mother of two school-age children. The moderate Republican won her East Bay Assembly race despite a well-funded challenge from Democrat Tim Sbranti, who had the backing of the California Teachers Association and Democratic establishment figures including Brown.

Baker, the first Republican to win election to state office from the Bay Area since 2006, said her victory was the product of an effort by state GOP leaders to cultivate younger candidates at every level.

She stressed education and jobs, not social issues. Her appeal to crossover and younger voters came because "I was an outsider, not an elected official," she said.

Being pitted against big unions, a prime source of Democratic campaign funding, helped rather than hurt her in the suburban district that stretches from Livermore to Orinda, Baker said.

"That's another big component in change," she said. "I had a lot of people tell me I was the first Republican they've ever voted for."

Republicans also fielded a crowd of fortysomething candidates for statewide office in the general election. GOP officials acknowledge it could take another election cycle — or more — to overcome the Democrats' 15-point voter registration advantage. But in this election, Fresno Mayor Ashley Swearengin, who ran for controller, and secretary of state candidate Pete Peterson both won endorsements from major newspapers and gained a platform for future runs.

Younger Republicans such as Swearengin, Baker and Neel Kashkari, the party's 41-year-old candidate in the gubernatorial election, have one advantage their junior Democratic counterparts lack — the GOPhas been out of power so long, there's no old guard to block the way up.

Former San Leandro Mayor Anthony Santos, who ran for re-election in 2010 at 78 — and lost — says he advises his fellow Democrats not to stay too long in the job.

"There are too many Democrats who are well over 70 and have no idea what it is like to be young — and what the younger people are thinking and what their needs are," Santos said.

Excellent example

Democratic observers said the House race between Honda and Khanna was a prime example of the party's dilemma.

Honda has the advantages in Washington of seniority and seven terms of experience, which he said helped in securing such benefits for his district as funding to extend BART toward San Jose.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Khanna, however, would have attracted rising-star buzz on Capitol Hill, as an Indian American and favorite of the tech crowd — no small consideration for a party reliant on Silicon Valley fundraising.

Honda did nothing to endear himself to those donors — or the valley's young tech innovators — in his victory speech when he said the election "could not be bought" by "millionaires and billionaires."

With few incumbents to protect, Republicans are concentrating on rebuilding the party through programs such as Trailblazers, which targets promising young GOP candidates, and GROW Elect, which encourages Latino Republican up-and-comers at the local level, said party strategist Aaron McLear.

Republican diversity

In the state Legislature, still overwhelmingly Democratic, Assembly GOP leader Kristin Olsen of Modesto noted that there will be more women among Republicans than Democrats in the next session.

Among the GOP newcomers are three Asian American women from Orange County — Ling-Ling Chang and Young Kim, who won Assembly races, and Janet Nguyen, a former refugee from Vietnam who won her state Senate race in a landslide.

Political consultant Rich Schlackman said Democrats have their own rising stars, pointing to Newsom, Harris, Secretary of State-elect Alex Padilla and Treasurer-elect Betty Yee.

And at the local level, Oakland Mayor-elect Libby Schaaf could be someone to watch, Democratic observers suggest. Even Khanna may be heard from again, if he can find a clear path, they say.

Larry Gerston, a political science professor at San Jose State University, said the next few years will be a turning point for the Democratic Party in California — with the very real possibility that the "big three" of Brown, Feinstein and Boxer will leave office by 2018.

Then, he said, "you'll see a flurry of people trying to move up."

National Journal: "Obama's Immigration Order Has 2016 Perils for Both Parties"

By Alex Roarty

November 16, 2014

It didn't take long for the 2016 election to reach its first major crossroads. As early as this week, President Obama is expected to ignore the wishes of congressional Republicans and announce that he will unilaterally defer deportations for millions of undocumented immigrants.

When he does, Republicans and Democrats alike should worry he just made life harder for their next presidential nominees. Few decisions, even from the president, influence elections more than 23 months away, but Obama's immigration maneuver accomplishes the rare feat of exposing both parties to what should be their biggest cause for concern in the 2016 election.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At stake for Democrats is whether Obama's decision to take executive action prevents him from a broad political rehabilitation during the last two years of his presidency. If Obama fails to achieve a small recovery, even a well-known and relatively popular politician like Hillary Clinton will struggle to convince voters they shouldn't back the other party's choice for the White House—a situation not unlike the one that befell John McCain's campaign to replace George W. Bush in 2008.

But to the White House, the chance to reengage and reenergize the immigrant-heavy Latino community ahead of 2016 plainly outweighs the risk that doing so will alienate the broader electorate. And therein lies the danger for Republicans, whose leaders two years ago stated emphatically that the party needed to grow its appeal among Hispanic voters if it wanted to succeed in national elections. Broadly speaking, the executive order might be politically complicated, but within the Latino community, it is a guaranteed winner.

Democrats could use a winner with Hispanic voters after the 2014 election and the administration's failure, at least until the president's executive order, to stop the deportations of many members of their community. The party won 62 percent of the Latino vote in 2014, according to exit polls, but some immigration advocates say the energy and passion many of them showed for Obama's party—especially in 2012 after he ordered a stop to deportations for the children of illegal immigrations—was missing this election.

They cite Sen. Mark Udall's defeat in Colorado, one of the few states in play in 2014 with a large Hispanic vote, as evidence of what happens to Democrats when they don't advocate for immigration reform. It's something that would happen to the party's next presidential candidate, said Frank Shary, executive director of America's Voice.

"If the president's record ended up being little more than 2 million deportations and a lot of unkept promises, it's not so much that it would drive a lot of Latinos into the hands of Republicans, it would probably lead to a lot of them to stay home on Election Day," he said.

Complicating matters on the Republican side is the party's prospective presidential candidates, most of whom are positioning themselves to draw conservative support ahead of a competitive primary. Their reaction will receive disproportionate attention, and the eventual GOPnominee will have trouble repositioning an immigration agenda for the general election. It could be a repeat of what happened in 2012 to Mitt Romney, whose call during primary season for undocumented immigrants to "self-deport" helped Obama win Hispanic voters by a better than 2-to-1 ratio.

Even if Republicans avoid the harsh rhetoric that has marked the previous responses to immigration policy—something Republican strategists acknowledge is no guarantee—their explanation that their objections are based on overuse of executive power might not resonate with the Hispanic community.

"That won't matter," said one immigration policy strategist who works with both parties. "If they start filing lawsuits, making noise about impeaching the president over this, Republicans will have completely lost Latino and Asian voters. It will be seen not as a direct attack on president, but a direct attack on the community."

Whether the support Obama gains from Hispanics is enough to overcome the potential broader damage to his popularity remains to be seen. As Obama explained in his post-election press conference, voters are upset with Washington gridlock and dysfunction—two things he vowed to work to correct in his last two years in office.

Republicans have warned the president that any executive action, coming just weeks after his party's Election Day drubbing, will poison the well with Congress for the new session and make any new legislative deal-making much more difficult.

"It looks like a revenge move," said Ron Bonjean, a former top GOP congressional aide. "He's poking a stick in their eye.… Using his authority in that way shows he doesn't want to work with Congress. It further strengthens the Republican argument [that] if legislation lands on his doorstep, all he wants to do is … pretend he's a dictator. He doesn't want to work with Congress."

Even Republicans who have argued for the necessity of the party broadening its appeal with racial minorities are now saying that, in this case, the president's own move will backfire.

"There's always a danger for undisciplined politicians to overreact, and their overreaction always backfires," said Whit Ayres, a GOP pollster and frequent critic of the party's immigration policy. "But if Republican elected officials watch their tone and don't overreact, this move contemplated by the president will backfire."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Politico: "Obama makes legacy play on trade"

By Josh Gerstein

November 16, 2014, 12:55 p.m. EST

BRISBANE, Australia — After years of populist rhetoric against banks and Wall Street, repeated calls for raising the minimum wage and withering campaign-trail criticism of corporate America for shipping jobs overseas and dodging taxes, President Barack Obama could leave office with a foreign policy legacy whose most concrete achievement is a huge free trade deal with Pacific Rim countries.

On a trip through Asia and Australia over the past week, Obama and his aides have been pushing hard to finalize the Trans-Pacific Partnership, pressing foreign leaders from 11 countries to hash out their differences and get the pact done in the coming months.

The trade deal would deliver a tangible achievement that a GOP-controlled Senate is highly likely to endorse and demonstrate that Obama has the diplomatic chops to pull off a complex, multilateral deal akin to playing three-dimensional chess.

But his history of bashing prior trade pacts also sets him up for renewed trouble with a political base frustrated with him after heavy election losses and a faltering agenda. Their ire could also hit presumptive Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, who economic policies are already under attack from liberals and whose tenure at the State Department coincided with the TPP negotiations.

U.S. officials said they were surprised at how forcefully Obama pressed the free-trade message both in public and private during summit meetings in Beijing on Monday and Tuesday. And his sustained focus on the issue was refreshing after numerous other international meetings have been sidetracked by various crises, the American officials said.

To some degree, Obama's new emphasis on trade may be making a virtue out of necessity, since few other major accomplishments seem to be looming on the foreign policy front and his efforts to improve ties with Russia, broker an Israeli-Palestinian peace deal and oversee a peaceful withdrawal from Iraq have all foundered.

"This has the potential for being a historic achievement," Obama said at a meeting of TPP leaders in Beijing, making clear that completing the pact would be a big legacy item. "What we are seeing is momentum building around a Trans-Pacific Partnership that can spur greater economic growth, spur greater jobs growth, set high standards for trade and investment throughout the Asia Pacific."

These words stand in contrast to some of the rhetoric he once used to criticize trade deals like the North American Free Trade Agreement. During the 2008 campaign, Obama painted deals like NAFTA as job-killers in America.

"I think it has been devastating, because our trade agreements did not have labor standards and environmental standards that would assure that workers in the U.S. were getting a square deal," he said during a January 2008 debate.

Even though Obama's views on trade pacts seem to have warmed since then, his political brand has never been identified with free trade the way Republicans' or even President Bill Clinton's have been. From the time Bill Clinton arrived on the national political scene, he made a point of departing from the protectionist orthodoxy of labor unions and the Democratic Party. Obama, by contrast, came to prominence criticizing free trade, not embracing it.

"It'll be a great irony if his main foreign policy success is a trade deal," said the Hoover Institution's Kori Schake, foreign policy adviser to Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) during the 2008 presidential campaign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Now Obama has to convince the very workers whose fate he decried that the TPP is in their interest.

A senior administration official traveling with Obama said the president believes he can successfully make the case that well-negotiated free-trade deals can be good for this constituency. The official pointed to a trip Obama took to Detroit in 2011 with South Korean President Lee Myung-Bak.

Autoworkers cheered the pair because the trade deal they cut was seen as promoting jobs on both sides of the Pacific, the official noted. U.S. officials also say key beneficiaries of a trade deal will be small- and medium-size businesses and software makers, not simply big multinational corporations.

Yet there are ways in which pushing for a TPP deal is politically convenient. With a Republican takeover of the Senate looming as a result of the trouncing Democrats took in the midterm elections, Obama is casting about for areas where he and the GOP can work together. Trade is one of the highest-profile areas of possible bipartisan cooperation, something Obama says voters are demanding.

Republicans are “interested in promoting trade that will create jobs and opportunity for U.S. workers and U.S. businesses,” Obama said Friday during a news conference in Burma, adding that he’s “all over it.”

“We believe in open markets and trade that is fair and free — a level playing field where economies play by the same rules,” the president declared Saturday in a speech in Australia.

Obama aides insist that his support for new trade deals being hashed out with Asia and Europe is not inconsistent with the sharp criticism he offered of NAFTA. The president argued Saturday that the Asia deal would be a “high-standards” agreement that makes it hard for countries to undercut each other by damaging the environment or having lax labor or safety rules.

“We are pushing new standards in this trade agreement, requiring countries that participate to protect their workers better and to protect the environment better, and protect intellectual property that unleashes innovation, and baseline standards to ensure transparency and rule of law,” the president said.

While Obama and his team see distinctions, critics see more of the same. While the GOP may get on board with an Asian trade deal, many members of Obama’s own party are skeptical or downright hostile to the idea.

“Our country has already lost more than 5 million manufacturing jobs since NAFTA and the World Trade Organization went into effect,” Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-Conn.) said. “What does TPP do? It further exacerbates the economically unsustainable trajectory of our society.”

She concluded, “We should not blindly enorse any more NAFTA-style deals.”

Some administration officials are clearly frustrated with those who focus on Obama’s past criticism of trade deals rather than his current enthusiasm for them.

“From the start of this administration, we have made clear that we need to understand the history of trade policy and learn the lessons of that history,” U.S. Trade Representative Michael Froman said earlier this year. “However, some of the criticisms I hear of our agenda don’t seem to recognize that this is 2014, not 1994.”

Of course, some critics say Obama’s populist tone on trade deals, corporate America and Wall Street has always been mainly rhetorical. They note how he gave top jobs to Clinton Administration officials who were architects of many of the free trade and financial deregulation policies he criticized. Many on the left also argue that efforts to punish those responsible for the 2008 financial meltdown have been notably lackluster.

A race to the finish line on TPPin the coming months could also be tricky for Hillary Clinton, who’s seeking to court many of those same critics as she prepares a potential bid for the White House. She’s identified with her husband’s penchant for free trade deals and could find it difficult to distance herself from agreements that were being negotiated during much of her tenure in Obama’s Cabinet.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Some Democratic lawmakers and labor unions are already pressing her to take a more skeptical tack on trade, opposing deals that could make it easier for companies in low-wage countries like Vietnam to compete with firms which depend on American workers.

It's also possible the TPP deal will never get done, or at least not on Obama's watch. Administration officials say they're increasingly confident that it will be completed. Some experts close to the administration believe the deal could be wrapped up within six months. However, timelines for completing the deal have repeatedly slipped.

In June, Obama suggested that the agreement could be ready to be unveiled during his current trip to Asia. But a few weeks ago, administration officials began lowering expectations by declaring that the negotiations would not be finished in time for the president to announce an agreement while abroad.

"I'm skeptical … that he'll be able to get TPP if he didn't deliver it on the Asia trip," Schake said. "The complaint I'm hearing from the Japanese and others is that they don't think the president is actually interested enough to put political heft behind the negotiations."

The TPP is also a central part of the so-called pivot to Asia — the president's best known strategic shift in U.S. foreign policy — and therefore critical to Obama's legacy. Like other aspects of the pivot, now termed a "rebalance," the TPPputs China in an awkward spot and reaffirms U.S. leadership in the region.

Publicly, Chinese leaders said they welcome trade deals like the TPP pact under discussion and are working on a related proposal for a regional free-trade area that would include China as well. Privately, Chinese officials are nervous about the TPP. In fact, the meeting of leaders of TPP countries in Beijing was staged at the U.S. Embassy — a strange venue for such a gathering — in part because China made it difficult to assemble the group anywhere else.

At the session, Obama was adamant that the TPP would be a major accomplishment, and one he was committed to pressing forward on despite the difficulties.

"To ensure that TPP is a success, we also have to make sure that all of our people back home understand the benefits for them — that it means more trade, more good jobs, and higher incomes for people throughout the region, including the United States," Obama said. "That's the case that I'll continue to make to Congress and the American people."

New York Post: "NY GOP Chair: de Blasio will take 2016 nomination over Hillary"

By Fredric U. Dicker

November 17, 2014, 2:07 a.m. EST

Mayor de Blasio — not Hillary Rodham Clinton — will be the Democratic nominee for president in 2016.

That's the jaw-dropping prediction being made by New York's top Republican, state GOP Chairman Ed Cox, who, as son-in-law to former President Richard Nixon, knows a thing or two about national politics.

Cox, citing information provided by a prominent "Democratic lobbyist," told friends and associates in recent days that freshman Mayor de Blasio's effort to promote himself as the leader of the "urban progressive centers of the nation" is part of a well-oiled plan to prepare for a presidential run.

"It's like Barack Obama; he was a brand-new freshman senator, and he ran for president and won. I think de Blasio is going to do it," Cox said at a recent gathering, a source told The Post.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cox also cited de Blasio's remarkably close but dicey ties to the controversial, and racially divisive, Rev. Al Sharpton, an Obama friend and one-time Democratic presidential hopeful who has a vast national political network, as evidence that the mayor sees his political future as somewhere beyond New York City, the source said.

"Cox has been pointing out that Sharpton is back and forth to the White House and serves as an emissary for de Blasio,'' said the source, who pointed out that former top Sharpton aide Rachel Noerdlinger continues to serve as chief of staff to de Blasio's wife, even as Noerdlinger has become a political liability.

Cox also found backing for his prediction last week in a provocative Huffington Post column in which the mayor — sounding like a national spokesman for left-of-center "progressive'' Democrats — blamed the sweeping Republican election victories earlier this month on the failure of Democrats to be progressive enough.

"This year, too many Democratic candidates lost sight of those core principles — opting instead to clip their progressive wings in deference to a conventional wisdom that says bold ideas aren't politically practical,'' de Blasio wrote.

Cox told associates that the "small blue dots'' on the national electoral map containing the nation's biggest cities will dominate the 2016 Democratic primary and that de Blasio, "the leader of the urban Democratic Party who holds the second-most important job in America,'' would strongly appeal to voters there.

As for Clinton, Cox, a Manhattan lawyer whose life has been steeped in politics ever since he married then-President Nixon's daughter in 1971, contends the former secretary of state is out of step with party progressives and doesn't have the political skills of her husband.

"The national Democratic Party is going hard left. It's Obama's party, and that's why [freshman Mass. Sen.] Elizabeth Warren gets them excited,'' Cox said recently. "But Hillary voted for the Iraq war and then doubled-down by saying we should have gotten more involved in Syria and talked about businesses not creating jobs. She's trying to ride in as a moderate when the party's gone hard left,'' he continued.

Cox wouldn't directly respond to questions about his remarks, but he told The Post, "De Blasio is a man with huge national ambitions, and for those ambitions, New York City is just a stepping stone.

Meanwhile, some Democrats are yelling "hypocrite'' at de Blasio over his Huffington Post essay.

The Democratic critics charge that de Blasio didn't exactly stick to his "core principles'' with his own endorsement of Gov. Cuomo, who has been widely criticized by party "progressives'' for failing to support state Senate Democrats.

"People thought it was incredibly hypocritical for the mayor to go around lecturing progressive Democrats across the country in the Huffington Post about how they need to have a backbone, when he bent over backwards to help people like Cuomo,'' said a prominent Democratic activist with ties to de Blasio.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- November 19 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton is honored by the National Breast Cancer Coalition (Breast Cancer Deadline)
- November 21 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton presides over meeting of the Global Alliance for Clean Cookstoves (Bloomberg)
- November 21 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton is honored by the New York Historical Society (Bloomberg)
- December 1 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton keynotes a League of Conservation Voters dinner (Politico)
- December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)
- December 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton honored by Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights (Politico)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Sandler, Herbert" <hms@sandlerfoundation.org>
To:	"Sandler, Susan" <ses@sandlerfoundation.org>
	"Daetz, Steve" <sdaetz@sandlerfoundation.org>
	"Sandler, Jim" <james@sandlerfoundation.org>
	"Knaebel, Sergio" <SKnaebel@sandlerfoundation.org>
Date:	1/16/2015 4:08:34 PM
Subject:	FW: Europe vs. Russia

This new partnership of the New York Review of Books and Vice seems to be quite interesting. The film accompanying George's readings clearly provide color and context to the reading. It's not required listening, but having read George's remarks earlier, I found it worthwhile. Clearly, something new.

From: George Soros [mailto:info@georgesoros.com]
Sent: Friday, January 16, 2015 6:02 AM
To: Sandler, Herbert
Subject: Europe vs. Russia

Dear Friends and Colleagues:

Vice News just released this 15 minute documentary based on George's recent essays about Ukraine. It's part of their new partnership with the New York Review of Books called "Talking Heads". It is worth taking a look.

All best,

Michael Vachon

https://news.vice.com/video/talking-heads-the-european-union-vs-russia

Please do not hit "reply" to this message. This email was generated automatically and responses are not monitored.

© 2015 GeorgeSoros.com | All rights reserved | Unsubscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Ryan Duncan" <ryan@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Big Campaign" <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com>
Date: 8/10/2008 6:26:18 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Sunday 08/10/08

Main Topics: Olympic coverage, Edward's Affair, Russia/Georgia Conflict

Summary of Shift: No major surrogates speaking on Sunday shows from either party. McCain discussion limited to comments he has made concerning Russia, his energy plan, and his status and portrayal in the media as opposed to Obama and his "celebrity" like status, as touted by the McCain campaign.

Other network coverage was dominated by Olympic fever and medal watches, the continuing melodrama over the Edwards affair confession, and Russia's invasion and increased attacks on Georgia. Currently, Russia has refused to back down from military fighting and any talks of a cease-fire.

Highlights:

1. CBS: Karl Rove: McCain is Responding to the Third Term of Bush Question Badly
2. CBS: Bob Schieffer Defends "Old White Haired Dudes" on Face the Nation
3. ABC: Jindal and Richardson on McCain's Foreign Policy Stance With Russia/Georgia
4. CNN: McCain Highlighted As Wanting to Kick Russia Out Of G-8, Other Senator's Disagree With Comments As Reckless.
5. CBS: John McCain's Biker Beauty Contest Comment Worries NOW

Highlights, no clips:

1. CNN - JOAN WALSH: "[…] I think some of the poll numbers about too little about John McCain, especially when Democrats say that, is that they feel that there is not enough attention being given to his economic policies, to his war policies, that he's treated as this known quantity, who has in fact flip flopped, and really changed from the John McCain of 2000. So, some of it really is the media not doing its job in terms of delving into the McCain story. "

2. CNN - AMY HOLMES: "[…] And I think all we need to do is look at the New York Times, and I mean they put it on their front page, innuendo, insinuation, anonymous sources, that John McCain might have been having an improper relationship with a lobbyist. So you didn't see the same sort of reticence being applied to John McCain that is being applied to John Edwards."

3. FNC – GEORGE WALLACE: "[…] I think both of them feel that this is really a close race, and I think the Republicans are a little relieved that it's a close race, that they were worried with such a negative climate that so much public disapproval of President Bush, the handling of the economy, that maybe McCain would not be competitive at this point. He's within the margin of error, so I get the sense from Rick Davis […] they're very happy where they are right now."

Clips:

Highlight #1

Karl Rove: McCain is Responding to the Third Term of Bush Question Badly (CBS 08/10/08 10:53am)

BOB SCHIEFFER: Does [McCain] need to separate himself from your old boss, George Bush?

KARL ROVE: He needs to recognize that every election is about the future. And he needs to describe who he is. If he, if Senator Obama has wisely attacked him saying third term of George Bush, then Senator McCain has responded badly to that. Other than saying here's who I am and here's what I am about, he's responded by saying no I'm not, which is the wrong answer. If the question is who is not George Bush than Barack Obama is the answer. If the question is who are you and do you have a vision for the future, the answer can be Senator McCain. In fact, again I would suggest that a weakness of Obama is by harping so much about no third term for Bush, people have said, you know John McCain is not George Bush, he ran against him in 2000. To the degree that McCain supplies more about who he is and ignores the question of third term, says here who I am and here's what my vision is, the more he'll prosper and the worst Senator Obama will be."

Highlight #2

Bob Schieffer Defends "Old White Haired Dudes" on Face the Nation (CBS 08/10/08 10:56)

BOB SCHIEFFER: "Finally today, we all had our fun at Paris Hilton's expense, but I laughed out loud when she did that spoof commercial pushing back at John McCain."

[Paris Ad]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SCHIEFFER: "My guess is that John McCain laughed too, but politics aside, I am compelled now to stand up for old white haired dudes, and point out that we have several advantages over others. For example, if forced we can drink coffee straight from a mug. We don't need to sip it through a little hole in a plastic top on a cardboard container to make it taste good. Since we grew up when telephones had cords and phone booths had doors, we know how to keep phone conversations private. We were lucky enough to grow up when it was safe enough for kids to walk to school and we learned the lessons that came from having to organize our own after school games. It was pretty nice actually not having to suffer adults trying to relive their own childhood sports fantasies. We can even remember when you didn't have to drink water from a bottle, it tasted just fine from the faucet. I know there is a lot of wondrous stuff going on lately, but those were some pretty good days too. So being an old white haired dude is not such a bad thing because we got in on some really good things, even though our memory sometimes fails us and we have a hard time remembering what they were."

Highlight #3
Jindal and Richardson on McCain's Foreign Policy Stance With Russia/Georgia (ABC 08/10/08 10:15am)
[…]

RIGHARDSON: … This has been one of the failures of the Bush administration, failing to build a strong relationship, a mutually beneficial relationship with Russia, so we'd have to kind of influence to persuade them to stop some of these very, very dangerous efforts within their territory.

TAPPER: … well he says that Russia has no business being in the G8, because it does not share the same values as those western nations. Does this incursion not verify that Senator McCain's assessment of Russia is correct?

RICHARDSON: … I believe what senator McCain is proposing is totally, totally wrong; keeping them out of the G8, Russia's a major superpower… What Senator McCain wants to do is continue the Bush policies of trying to isolate Russia, you know, build this missile system there; find ways to be aggressive against Russia; it's not working, and Russia doesn't respect our efforts to try to restrain them… Senator McCain wants to isolate Russia further- that's not gonna work. That'll make Russia more detrimental in the relationship with the United States.

[…]

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, Governor Richardson, the McCain campaign put out a very forceful statement calling the situation in Georgia dire, and blaming Russia. Here's the Obama campaign's response; quote: "John McCain's top foreign policy adviser lobbied for, and has a vested interest in, the Republic of Georgia, and McCain has mirrored the position advocated by the government." Now Georgia is a strong U.S. allie. Is that really an appropriate response to such a serious international crisis, to blame the McCain campaign's position on one of the advisers?

RICHARDSON: […] His campaign is run by lobbyists that represent Georgia and other countries. His campaign is negative. He changes positions, he takes huge amounts of money from oil companies that are profiting in the Soviet Union and many parts of the world….

[…]

RICHARDSON: Two million that have gone in since Senator McCain switched his position on offshore oil. You know, this is a campaign run by lobbyists. We have a Washington celebrity campaign going on. And it's negative…

[…]

TAPPER: Ok, and now joining us from Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Governer Bobby Jindal…

[…]

TAPPER: Now, you heard me mention to Governer Richardson the Obama campaign attack against Senator McCain, uh, when it comes to the Russia-Georgia crisis. I want to now read you comments from this McCain campaign against Senator Obama. Quote: "The Obama campaign has offered nothing more than cheap and petty political attacks that echoed only by the Kremlin. The reaction of the Obama campaign to this crisis, so at odds with our democratic allies and yet so bizarrely in sync with Moscow, doesn't merely raise questions about Senator Obama's judgment—it answers them." … Is that really an appropriate response to a crisis this severe?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

JINDAL: Well, you know, Senator McCain first went to Georgia back in 1997. He… said that Russia should withdraw it's forces, observe a ceasefire, suggested that there need to be true international peacekeepers there. I think this is another example during these uncertain times where we need experienced leadership. We need someone like Senator McCain who will take a stronger view, a more experienced view when it comes to international security and protecting America's interest. I think during these kinds of uncertain times you want someone with Senator McCain's record of bringing real leadership, real reform to Washington. As an example, even fighting his own administration, his own party, he stood for surge in Iraq when it wasn't popular to do so… so when it comes to the Georgia crisis, I think that this is another good reason why the American voters are going to choose Senator McCain's leadership…

[…]

JINDAL: I think it was wrong for Senator Obama to try to focus on a McCain advisor, rather that listen to what McCain had to say about the policy, rather than recognizing McCain's years and years of experience when it comes to international affairs. This is a very serious international crisis. I think the administration has correctly sent word to Moscow, this is not acceptable. Georgia is a stalwart ally of ours… their an example of Senator McCain's push to spread democracy, and that part of the world is a very advance of America's interests, as well as being good for international stability.

Highlight #4
John McCain Highlighted As Wanting to Kick Russia Out Of G-8, Other Senator's Disagree With Comments As Reckless (CNN 08/10/08 11:14am)
WOLF BLITZER: Do you agree with Senator McCain, Senator Cornyn, that Russia should be kicked out of the g-8?

SEN. JOHN CORNYN: Well, I think, you know, we're not at that point yet. I think certainly not over this incident, but I think we do need to recognize Russia for what it is, and, of course, it was the Soviet Union that invaded Afghanistan back in the late '70s that has created so much hardship for the Afghan people, so much lack of stability in that area so I think, you know, Russia is a superpower. They have responsibilities of a superpower and they cannot claim that they are on any kind of equal basis or really legitimately threatened by Georgia from a military standpoint, but we do need to resolution here and unless this thing spin out of control.

BLITZER: Senator Levin, very quickly, do you believe with Senator McCain that Russia should be kicked out of the g-8?

SEN. LEVIN: I think it's a reckless proposal on his part. I think it escalates our difference with Russia which are already real. Even President Bush, I think doesn't agree that Russia should be kicked out of the g-8. It's kind of a comment which actually could lead to some very, very misleading and dangerous consequences on the part of Senator McCain, and I would hope he would withdraw that idea. There's no support for that idea among the allies in the g-8 and even among the Bush administration folks.

Highlight #5
John McCain's Biker Beauty Contest Comment Worries NOW (CBS 08/10/08 11:48am)
JOHN MCLAUGHLIN: Issue two, Buffalo Gals.

[McCain Sturgis Clip]

JOHN MCCAIN: "I encouraged Cindy to compete. I told her with a little luck she could be the only woman ever to serve as both the first lady and Ms. Buffalo Chip."

MCLAUGHLIN: The 68 annual Buffalo Chip Motorcyclist Rally this week in Sturgis South Dakota was a campaign stop for Senator John McCain. Bikers showed their support by revving their engines. Then there's Miss. Buffalo Chip, a beauty contest to crown the 2008 Chip. Not everyone thinks that John McCain's […] suggestion that his wife become the new titleholder was a good political move. Notably Kim Gandy President of NOW, the National Organization for Women, who said this about McCain: 'Maybe he figures that the frat-boy routine worked for George Bush, so he's trying the same thing, but I'm not sure this is going to play very well with the audience he's courting.' ESPN adds this to the description of the Buffalo Chip beauty contest: 'Essentially a topless beauty pageant. And occasionally bottomless, too.' Question, by campaigning in Sturgis did John McCain strike a populous cord?

MICHELLE BERNARD: I think John McCain was just having fun. I think all of the reports I have read show that he was not there very long. It was a very quick stop and he kept on going.

You head up the Independents Women's what? Association.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BERNARD: Independent Women's Forum

MCLAUGHLIN: And NOW, you heard what NOW had to say. […]

BERNARD: […] I think anyone that takes a look at that clip realizes that he was just having fun and the closest we will ever see Cindy McCain coming to going in a topless or bottomless beauty pageant was the denim blue t-shirt we just saw her wearing and her black jeans. He was having fun, and what was more interesting than anything else was the rousing applause he got from the crowd. He was the celebrity this week […].

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Bulletin News Network" <Clinton-Editors@BulletinNews.com>
To:	bulletin@hillaryclinton.com clips@hillaryclinton.com HCclips34174921@hillaryclinton.com
Date:	5/15/2008 11:29:49 PM
Subject:	Hillary For President News Briefing for Friday, May 16, 2008
Attachments:	ClintonNewsBriefing080516.doc

HILLARY FOR PRESIDENT NEWS BRIEFING (Executive Version)
Full version is attached and available online at http://www.bulletinnews.com/clinton

TO: CLINTON CAMPAIGN

DATE: FRIDAY, MAY 16, 2008 6:30 AM EDT

TODAY'S TABLE OF CONTENTS

SEN. CLINTON'S CAMPAIGN:
+ Clinton Criticizes McCain's Opposition To Farm Bill.
+ Clinton Campaigns In South Dakota.
+ Pro-Clinton Group To Work Against Obama.
+ Clinton Dismisses Edwards' Endorsement.
+ Clinton Said To Be Off Base In Claiming Popular Vote Lead.
+ New Republic Runs Clinton Post-Mortem.
+ Democrats Furious Over Bush's Remarks To Knesset.
+ McCain Predicts Most US Troops Will Leave Iraq Victorious By 2013.

Sen. Clinton's Campaign:

CLINTON CRITICIZES MCCAIN'S OPPOSITION TO FARM BILL. The AP (5/15, Kugler) reports "Hillary Rodham Clinton scolded John McCain Thursday for opposing the farm bill, attempting to maintain the sense that she is already competing against the certain Republican presidential nominee even as her chances for winning the Democratic nomination dim." Clinton "noted that...Bush has said he will veto the farm bill, which Congress passed Thursday. McCain also has said he would veto the bill if he were president. 'They're like two sides of the same coin, and it doesn't amount to much change, does it?' the New York senator said. 'I believe saying no to the farm bill is saying no to rural America.'"

In an editorial, the Washington Post (5/16, A18, 723K) writes, "While none of the presidential candidates left the campaign trail to vote on the bill, one -- Republican Sen. John McCain -- unequivocally opposed it. It may not be terribly surprising that Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.) hailed the bill's passage during a campaign swing through South Dakota. It's a bit more disappointing to hear Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.), running on a promise to oppose politics as usual, say he applauded the bill. ... On this issue, Mr. McCain, not his likely Democratic opponent, was the apostle of change."

CLINTON CAMPAIGNS IN SOUTH DAKOTA. The Rapid City Journal (5/16, Woster) reports Sen. Hillary Clinton "pledged Thursday to fight any future efforts to close Ellsworth Air Force Base, much as her husband did while he was president more than a decade ago. 'I'm proud that the Clinton administration helped to keep the base open in 1994, when it was on the BRAC closing list, and my husband had it removed,' Clinton told the Journal in an interview after a brief campaign stop in Rapid City. 'Not only is the base vital to South Dakota's economic success, it's also vital to national security.'

The Rapid City Journal (5/16, Woster) reports, "The New York senator was more appropriately dressed and sedately behaved than the rowdy lead singer for the Rolling Stones. But in a place where brown sugar isn't just a song, she still stirred the spirits of an audience of 70 or so. Arriving from the Rapid City Regional Airport about 2:10 p.m., the New York senator stepped out of a black Suburban and strolled into Jerry's between the stern faces of U.S. Secret Service agents. Inside, she mingled with a mellower crowd, signed autographs, posed for pictures and impressed even a supporter of Barack Obama, the clear front-runner in an entertaining race for the Democratic nomination."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

PRO-CLINTON GROUP TO WORK AGAINST OBAMA. The Politico (5/16, Smith) reports there are "grumblings from the almost-half of the" Democratic Party, "disproportionately women, whose candidate is losing. An Ohio-based group of Democratic Hillary Clinton supporters say they'll work actively against Sen. Barack Obama if he becomes the nominee, arguing that Clinton has been the subject of 'intense sexism' by party leaders and the media." Led by "Boomer-aged women, the group, Clinton Supporters Count Too, is holding a press conference in Columbus at noon to release this statement."

Clinton Said To Be Stereotyped As "Poor Hillary." The Washington Post (5/16, C1, Copeland, 723K) reports that at "some point along the way, Hillary Clinton became 'poor Hillary' and it stuck." Clinton "went up against a charmer who once made an audience cheer just by blowing his nose (poor Hillary), and she lost states and delegates and she bet on a filly that died (poor Hillary), and nobody cares that she won West Virginia because it's over, except she can't see it because she's...'Poor Hillary,' write the op-ed writers and the bloggers and the newspaper letter-writers." "Poor Hillary" "speaks volumes about an old truth: Clinton's wounds have always defined her. The haters are always on the lookout for her comeuppance, and the lovers love her more for what she has endured."

Clinton Said To Be "No Fun." The Wall Street Journal (5/16, A13, Queenan, 2.06M) reports, "Journalists, and especially humorists, need to come clean and admit that none of us ever really wanted to see Hillary Clinton in the White House. No, it isn't her hair or her know-it-all attitude or her inexplicable marriage or her pitiful attempts to portray herself as a tribune of the working class or the fact that she went to Wellesley that puts us off. She's just no fun, and politicians who are no fun are hard to write about."

Strauss Says Democrats Need To Focus On Unity Now. In a Washington Post (5/16, A19, 723K) op-ed, former Democratic National Committee Chairman Robert S. Strauss says, "Democrats should rally around our nominee as soon as possible so the general election campaign can begin and the contrast between John McCain and the Democratic Party can be drawn for the American people. Having put our party back together after the 1972 convention, I know that every week of delay tempts a hardening of irreconcilable differences. If we are to win for America, the Democratic Party has to unite now."

CLINTON DISMISSES EDWARDS' ENDORSEMENT. The AP (5/16, Ohlemacher) reports that Hillary Clinton, campaigning in Rapid City, South Dakota, "spoke for the first time about Edwards' endorsement. 'I have a great deal of respect for Senator Edwards,' she said in response to reporters' questions. 'He and I have a lot in common ... I imagine that Senator Edwards' endorsement will be of some help to Senator Obama in Kentucky, but I think that what matters are the people who actually vote.' Clinton said she had not spoken with Edwards but had spoken with his wife, Elizabeth, about the endorsement. Clinton declined to discuss their conversation."

The AP (5/16) reports, "Hillary Clinton won't say what was discussed, but she's talked with Elizabeth Edwards about her husband's endorsement of rival Barack Obama." Speaking in South Dakota, Clinton "said she has a great deal of respect for Elizabeth Edwards, and that they have a lot in common." She also acknowledged that John Edwards' "backing will help Obama a bit in next week's Kentucky primary," adding that it's about "the people who actually vote."

CLINTON SAID TO BE OFF BASE IN CLAIMING POPULAR VOTE LEAD. The AP (5/16, Woodward, Pace) examines Sen. Hillary Clinton's claim that she leads Sen. Barack Obama in the popular vote count, calling it "a stretch, at best." The AP said Clinton "is using such claims to shore up supporters and help justify why she's still in the Democratic presidential race despite trailing Obama in the number of convention delegates earned in primaries and caucuses. The argument is supported only by using dubious math on two fronts: by excluding several caucus states won by Obama and by including Florida and Michigan primary results that the Democratic Party, to date, is rejecting."

NEW REPUBLIC RUNS CLINTON POST-MORTEM. The New Republic (5/16, Cottle) runs an extensive analysis of the Clinton campaign today called "What Went Wrong?" which it describes as "The exclusive story of Hillary's fall, as told by the high-level advisors, staffers, fundraisers, and on-the-ground organizers who lived it." It includes (unnamed) contributors blaming various campaign officials, including Mark Penn and Patti Solis Doyle, and other saying Clinton wasn't "hungry enough."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DEMOCRATS FURIOUS OVER BUSH'S REMARKS TO KNESSET. President Bush's speech before the Knesset appears to have been well received in Israel. McClatchy (5/16, Nissenbaum, Lightman) notes his remarks "marked the high point" of his second visit" there "as president," and "Israeli leaders cheered the staunch support from the US president." However, his remarks have ignited a political firestorm that has landed Bush's Mideast visit right in the middle of the US presidential campaign. And according to some media commentators, that is exactly what the White House intended. NBC Nightly News (5/15, lead story, 3:10, Williams, 9.87M), which led with the story, noted that in his speech Bush devoted "one particular paragraph" to invoke "the fight against the horrors of Nazi Germany, and it was clear to those listening that it was in part to make a point about Barack Obama back home." It was, said NBC, "today's political shot heard around the world. The concussion was instantaneous. Upon hearing the news, one Democratic senator used a word we cannot use on this broadcast." Joseph Biden was later identified as the senator who "characterized the President's words with a word we can't use."

ABC World News (5/15, story 3, 2:05, Wright, 8.78M) said that Bush, addressing Israel's parliament, made a "statement almost guaranteed to provoke a firestorm of reaction." Bush was shown saying, "Some seem to believe we should negotiate with the terrorists and radicals. ... We've heard this foolish delusion before. As Nazi tanks crossed into Poland in 1939, an American senator declared, 'Lord, if I could only have talked to Hitler, all of this might have been avoided.'" NBC noted "White House officials denied that the President was taking a swipe solely at...Obama, who has vowed he would negotiate Iran's Mahmoud Ahmadinejad and other rogue leaders that the Bush Administration has shunned." But "the Obama campaign wasted no time accusing...Bush of mounting 'a false political attack. George Bush knows I have never supported engagement with terrorists,' the statement said." But "Obama's Republican rival begs to differ." Sen. John McCain was shown saying, He wants to sit down across the table from an individual who leads a country that said and says that Israel is a stinking corpse. That is dedicated to the extinction of the state of Israel. My question, is what does he want to talk about."

The CBS Evening News (5/15, story 2, 2:10, Couric, 7.66M) also reported on a "two-pronged Republican attack today on...Obama." CBS (Reid) added, "The Republican barrage began in Jerusalem," and while "a White House spokesman denied that Obama was the target," when McCain "jumped into the fray, there was no doubt where he was aiming." McCain was shown saying, "Why does Barack Obama, Senator Obama, want to sit down with a state-sponsor of terrorism? It is a serious error on the part of Senator Obama. It shows naiveté and inexperience." CBS added, "Obama, who has said he would meet with leaders of Iran, Syria, and Cuba noted that presidents Kennedy, Nixon, and even Reagan also negotiated directly with America's enemies. Even Hillary Clinton came to his defense." Clinton was shown saying, "President Bush's comparison of any Democrat to Nazi appeasers is both offensive and outrageous." USA Today (5/16, 2.28M), however, notes "Obama has said in the past he would meet with heads of state in places like Cuba, Iran and North Korea," and that Clinton has said "those meetings could be used for propaganda and her first response would be outreach through other diplomatic channels."

MCCAIN PREDICTS MOST US TROOPS WILL LEAVE IRAQ VICTORIOUS BY 2013. In a speech in Ohio, Sen. John McCain yesterday predicted that, as president, he would oversee a US victory in Iraq that would allow most American troops to leave that country by 2013. McCain's remarks are being cast as somewhat of a reversal because, as the New York Times (5/16, Bumiller, 1.18M) put it, they were "a striking departure from Mr. McCain's refusal so far to set a date for an American withdrawal." The speech "offered no proposals for how Mr. McCain would achieve that vision," and were "an attempt by the presumptive Republican nominee to define himself and the rationale of his candidacy to voters before he has a single Democratic rival who will try to do it for him." Likewise, the Wall Street Journal (5/16, Meckler, 2.06M) says McCain offered "his first date for withdrawal" while "refuting Democratic charges he would keep the US mired" in Iraq "indefinitely." The Journal notes McCain "said that by the end of his first term, there would be only 'spasmodic' violence in Iraq and a small contingent of US forces would remain in a noncombat role. Until now, he had repeatedly refused to attach any sort of date for the end to combat operations."

The Los Angeles Times (5/16, Neuman, Reston, 833K) reports "the prediction marks a major departure for McCain, who railed against rival Mitt Romney shortly before the Florida primary for his remark in April 2007 that he thought President Bush and Iraqi leaders should privately discuss a timetable for withdrawing troops from Iraq." Back then, "McCain suggested that the comment would embolden America's foes in Iraq. The Arizona senator leveled the same criticism at Democratic Sens. Barack Obama and Hillary Rodham Clinton, stating that their advocacy for withdrawing troops from Iraq amounted to setting a date for surrender.'" NBC Nightly News (5/15, story 2, 2:20, Williams, 9.87M) said McCain "has been tagged as you may know with that comment he once made about US troops staying in Iraq for 100 years if need be. Today he revised that number way down." ABC (O'Donnell) added that "when other candidates of both parties have talked about a date or timetable for getting out of Iraq, McCain has accused them of surrender. Today he argued that with his plan there is a difference." McCain was shown saying, "I'm saying the troops will come home when we achieve victory. That's my goal. I did not in any way set a date for withdrawal." NBC went on report, "McCain's biggest challenge may that be he has to beat two opponents, the Democrat and the trouble surrounding his own party." The CBS Evening News (5/15, story 2, 2:10, Reid noted "Democrats say McCain's crystal ball must be clouded. Their crystal ball, they say, not surprisingly, shows a Democrat in the White House for the next four years, and the troops home from Iraq long before 2013."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton Dismisses Speech. Sen. Clinton's response to McCain "Victory" Comment was covered by Judy Woodruff on the PBS Newshour with Jim Lehrer. Woodruff reported, "Democrat Hillary Clinton dismissed the pledge of victory in Iraq. Instead, she said, '(McCain) promises more of the same Bush policies that have weakened our military...and our standing in the world."

FNC's Hannity And Colmes (5/15, Colmes, Hannity) touched on Hillary Clinton's response to Bush's comments at Israel's 60th Anniversary, running a clip of her saying "This is the kind of statement that has no place in any presidential address and certainly to use an important moment like the 60th anniversary celebration of Israel to make a political point seems terribly misplaced." No analysis of her remarks was given.

On MSNBC's Hardball (5/15), Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Joe Biden defended Clinton's "obliterate" comment, saying, "In fairness to her, she said, if they attack Israel, we would respond...I think a better word could have been chosen, but she stated a rational policy." Iran, he said, "should understand that if they use a nuclear weapon against any other power they run the risk of being obliterated."

Copyright 2008 by the Bulletin News Network, Inc. Reproduction without permission prohibited. Editorial content is drawn from thousands of newspapers, national magazines, national and local television programs, and radio broadcasts. The Hillary For President News Briefing is published five days a week by BulletinNews, which creates custom news briefings for government and corporate leaders. We can be found on the Web at BulletinNews.com, or called at (703) 483-6100.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To:	"Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	4/23/2015 8:57:32 AM
Subject:	Fwd: FW: Quick roundup of media tweets about the Medium post

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Tony Carrk <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Thu, Apr 23, 2015 at 3:50 PM
Subject: FW: Quick roundup of media tweets about the Medium post
To: hrcrapid <HRCrapid@googlegroups.com >

H/t Jesse L for compiling

Gabriel Debenedetti, POLITICO @gdebenedetti

Team Clinton's aggressive response, in 3 @brianefallon notes:

1. http://politi.co/1zK4vyk

2. http://politi.co/1l0F1nk

3. http://bit.ly/1l0EYrH

Dan Merica, CNN @danmericaCNN

Brian Fallon, the Clinton campaign's spokesman, uses @Medium to push back against today's NYT/Clinton Cash story. https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Alex Seitz-Wald, MSNBC @aseitzwald

Clinton spox @brianefallon gives lengthy rebuttal to NYT uranium story on @Medium. https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Liz Kreutz, ABC News @ABCLiz

Clinton team fights back on NYT story & "Clinton Cash" (on Medium)

[Retweeted Brian Fallon]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Zeke Miller, TIME @ZekeJMiller

.@brianefallon takes to Medium to challenge NYT reporting on anti-Clinton book https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Emily Schultheis, National Journal @emilyrs

Clinton camp responds to NYT story, via spokesman @brianefallon on Medium: https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Mark Murray, NBC News @mmurraypolitics

Clinton campaign issues rebuttal to NYT article, arguing there was no quid-pro-quo in Russia uranium deal https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Jose DelReal, Washington Post @jdelreal

Summary of Clinton statement on NYT story:

1) HRC wasn't direclty involved in review

2) one donor actually had no stake in the company 1/3

...

Jose DelReal, Washington Post @jdelreal

3) another key donor says he didn't speak to the clintons about it,

4) the state dept was just 1 of 9 agencies involved in review (2/3)

...

Jose DelReal, Washington Post @jdelreal

5) and Clinton was no longer sec state when the deal was finalized (3/3) https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Katherine Miller, BuzzFeed @katherinemiller

Brian Fallon push back on NYT

https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Phil Mattingly, Bloomberg @Phil_Mattingly

.@brianefallon gets into the @Medium game, launches Clinton campaign pushback on Foundation story https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Paul Lewis, The Guardian @PaulLewis

Hillary Clinton's spokesman's five-punch retaliation against the New York Times over its foundation reporting: https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

Justin Sink, The Hill @justinsink

Clinton campaign spox @brianefallon is pulling a @danpfeiffer and using @Medium to push back on NYT story https://medium.com/@brianefallon/clinton-cash-nyt-fail-to-prove-connection-between-clinton-russian-purchase-of-uranium-assets-797a71cb40b0

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
Date: 3/22/2015 2:56:40 PM
Subject: Re: DRAFT Questions for HRC Media Prepare

Shouldn't we attack the book or get Brock to attack the book as a Murdoch special. From the folks who brought you Fox News...

JP
--Sent from my iPad--
john.podesta@gmail.com
For scheduling: eryn.sepp@gmail.com

On Mar 22, 2015, at 7:23 PM, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com > wrote:

> Do we know which correspondent? Which producer?
>
> Mandy Grunwald
> Grunwald Communications
> 202 973-9400
>
> On Mar 23, 2015, at 12:12 AM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com > wrote:
>
> > Unclear exactly what 60 is doing, but Craig has had an initial meeting with them to see if we can finesse this from starting off in such a ridiculous place as to have its premise be that book. Let's also remember that the last time 60 went hard on a book that tried to scandalize something related to us it was the Benghazi telling by the former British commando, and the outcome was Lara Logan's suspension and the publisher having to pull the book off the shelves.
> >
> > So the hope is that before we start having to push back on the story we have at least some hope of combatting the premise as ridiculous.
> >
> > And of course, having the book would help that.
> >
> > I'll keep everyone posted.
> >
> > On Mar 22, 2015, at 6:33 PM, Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com > wrote:
> >
> > Yes, the foundation team heard that 60 minutes was looking into it. That's one of the reasons we desperately want to get the book ahead of time.
> >
> > On Sun, Mar 22, 2015 at 6:27 PM, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com > wrote:
> > I heard the same. I think from nick or josh
> >
> > On Mar 22, 2015, at 6:24 PM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com > wrote:
> >
> > +nick and john

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I'm hearing rumors 60 minutes may be working on a Clinton cash story.
Not sure how reliable info is.

Jim Margolis
Sent from my iPhone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>
To:	jbenenson@bsgco.com "Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com>
Date:	2/6/2015 5:00:32 PM
Subject:	Re: NYT | Econ Story

Looks like the NYT is getting close to closing their story. After our conversation yesterday, I think it makes the most sense to just repurpose what we have the Journal a week ago. I think it makes sense for us to be in this story, but no need to mix it up or complicate things. Same message, different paper.

I'd like to send this this evening, let us know if disagree on approach.

Looks like the NYT story is now on for the weekend, so

"Expanding opportunities for hardworking Americans so that families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a wide range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote."

On Feb 6, 2015, at 12:18 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com> wrote:

I'm passing along a document that came from one of our friends, written for and sent directly to Amy Chozick for this NYT piece she's working on. Gives you a sense of what we're all up against!

From: "jbenenson@bsgco.com<mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com>"
<jbenenson@bsgco.com<mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com>>
Date: Monday, February 2, 2015 at 10:27 AM
To: Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com<mailto:robbymook2015@gmail.com>>
Cc: Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com<mailto:gruncom@aol.com>>, NSM
<nmerrill@hrcoffice.com<mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>>, Cheryl Mills
<cheryl.mills@gmail.com<mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com>>, John Podesta
<john.podesta@gmail.com<mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com>>, Jacob Sullivan
<Jake.sullivan@gmail.com<mailto:Jake.sullivan@gmail.com>>, Philippe Reines
<pir@hrcoffice.com<mailto:pir@hrcoffice.com>>, Huma Abedin
<huma@hrcoffice.com<mailto:huma@hrcoffice.com>>, Dan Schwerin
<dschwerin@hrcoffice.com<mailto:dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>>, Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com<mailto:Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>>,
"john@algpolling.com<mailto:john@algpolling.com>" <john@algpolling.com<mailto:john@algpolling.com>>,
"cmills@cdmillsgroup.com<mailto:cmills@cdmillsgroup.com>"
<cmills@cdmillsgroup.com<mailto:cmills@cdmillsgroup.com>>, Jennifer Palmieri
<jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com<mailto:jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com>>, Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com<mailto:kristinakschake@gmail.com>>
Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

Mandy is right. We keep emphasizing that the most significant pain point for people is that the belief the decked is stacked against them in favor of this at the top. And they're not wrong.

Sent from my iPhone

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Feb 2, 2015, at 10:07 AM, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com<mailto:robbymook2015@gmail.com>> wrote:

Agree

On Feb 2, 2015, at 9:41 AM, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com<mailto:gruncom@aol.com>> wrote:

I think this piece turned out well.

But when we define our goals, we have to be clear that we are concerned with helping people who are getting crushed by rising costs and stagnant incomes, not that we're worried about offending high income groups (our donors). My guess is that this sentence will cause us some problems on the left.
One of Mrs. Clinton's broader goals is to develop ways to address economic anxiety without sounding like a combative populist or demonizing high-income groups, said a person familiar with her thinking.

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com<mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>>
To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com<mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com>>; Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com<mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com>>
Cc: Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com<mailto:gruncom@aol.com>>; Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com<mailto:robbymook2015@gmail.com>>; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com<mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com>>; Jake Sullivan <jake.sullivan@gmail.com<mailto:jake.sullivan@gmail.com>>; Philippe Reines <pir@hrcoffice.com<mailto:pir@hrcoffice.com>>; Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com<mailto:huma@hrcoffice.com>>; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com<mailto:dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>>; Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com<mailto:Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>>; John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com<mailto:john@algpolling.com>>; Cheryl Mills <cmills@cdmillsgroup.com<mailto:cmills@cdmillsgroup.com>>; Jennifer Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com<mailto:jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com>>; Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com<mailto:kristinakschake@gmail.com>>
Sent: Sun, Feb 1, 2015 11:38 pm
Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

http://www.wsj.com/articles/clinton-consults-experts-to-define-economic-pitch-1422837490

Clinton Consults to Define Economic Pitch
By Peter Nicholas
Hillary Clinton <http://topics.wsj.com/person/C/Hillary-Clinton/6344> has been consulting with an array of economists and academics—including liberal Joseph Stiglitz, former Fed chairman Paul Volcker and new faces outside the traditional orbit of Democratic policy experts—as she prepares for a likely presidential campaign that would make sluggish wage growth and middle-class prosperity a central focus.
One of Mrs. Clinton's broader goals is to develop ways to address economic anxiety without sounding like a combative populist or demonizing high-income groups, said a person familiar with her thinking. It isn't clear whether that particular question has come up in the meetings she has been having with various policy experts. She has been using the meetings to prepare herself for a possible campaign, ground herself in the issues and tease out fresh approaches to stubborn domestic and foreign policy problems, people familiar with the matter said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As the former secretary of state keeps a low public profile ahead of announcing her near-certain candidacy, the meetings offer clues to which issues she believes merit attention and whose advice she values. Many, but not all, participants served in Bill Clinton 's administration; others are distinguished primarily by expertise in subjects that are certain to be front-and-center in the 2016 presidential race.

Some of the meetings had the feeling of a high-octane faculty symposium and lasted for hours, say people familiar with the sessions. Pen and pad in hand, Mrs. Clinton typically has gone around the room to ask for ideas, offering comments now and then and inviting participants to make suggestions down the road.

In December, Mrs. Clinton presided over a meeting at a midtown Manhattan hotel that focused on middle-class Americans feeling pinched by slow wage growth.

Among those attending: Mr. Volcker, the architect of the "Volcker Rule," a regulatory measure barring banks from making risky bets with their own money; Jonathan Cowan, co-founder of the centrist think tank Third Way, which has been critical of some of the populist rhetoric coming from the Democrats' liberal wing; and Alan Blinder <http://topics.wsj.com/person/B/Alan-Blinder/4> , a Princeton professor and former Fed vice chairman and economics adviser to Mr. Clinton.

Also at the meeting, according to people familiar with it, were Robert Hormats, who worked in the State Department during Mrs. Clinton's tenure and was a former vice chairman of Goldman Sachs; Richard Ravitch <http://topics.wsj.com/person/R/Richard-Ravitch/5985> , a former Democratic lieutenant governor in New York, who helped New York City avert bankruptcy during a fiscal crisis in the 1970s; and Teresa Ghilarducci, a labor economist and proponent of ideas to shore up Americans' retirement savings. The Clinton team has asked her to help evaluate various policy ideas.

The participants examined a range of ideas to boost economic security, such as tax cuts for the middle class, expanded access to prekindergarten education and new ways to pay for improvements to roads and tunnels, said people familiar with the session.

"One major focus of the meeting was the miserable recent performance of wages in general and middle-class wages in particular, and what if anything the government can do about that," said Mr. Blinder.

Bernard Schwartz, a longtime Democratic donor and contributor to the Clinton Foundation, was among those who helped arrange the meeting, said people familiar with the session. Mr. Schwartz is a former chairman of Loral Space & Communications Ltd. Mrs. Clinton also has consulted with Mr. Stiglitz, a former economic adviser to Bill Clinton and author of a book about the perils of economic inequality.

The policy interests of some participants point to the issues Mrs. Clinton is likely to prioritize, notably the financial pressures faced by middle-class families. Prospective Republican presidential candidates also are talking about shoring up the middle class and, in some cases, narrowing the wage gap in America—a sign that those topics will be flashpoints in the general election.

Mrs. Clinton is the overwhelming front-runner for the Democratic nomination, but some liberals would like to see her challenged by U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren <http://topics.wsj.com/person/W/Elizabeth-Warren/8131> (D., Mass.), a populist firebrand who has described the American economic system as "rigged" in favor of the wealthy. Ms. Warren has said she won't run. In targeting income inequality, Mrs. Clinton would address a substantive issue facing the country while also making inroads with Ms. Warren's liberal followers.

Mrs. Clinton also has held foreign policy meetings in New York and Washington. A New York meeting in the summer was a "tour" of global hot spots, among them the war in Syria and Russia's incursions into Ukraine, according to people familiar with what took place.

Mrs. Clinton asked for a diagnosis of the problem and a "strategic" view of how the U.S. should act, one person familiar with the meeting said.

Those who attended included Richard Haass, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, who worked under both Republican presidents George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush; David Rothkopf, author of a new book on foreign policy-making in the George W. Bush and Obama <http://topics.wsj.com/person/O/Obama/4328> administrations; and Dennis Ross, a diplomat with many years of experience in the Middle East peace negotiations.

More informally, Mrs. Clinton has also spoken to trusted Democratic confidants about appointments to high-level positions in her campaign, should she decide to run.

A campaign apparatus is already taking shape. John Podesta, a senior adviser to President Barack Obama, is likely to become a senior adviser to the campaign, while two Obama campaign veterans, pollster Joel Benenson and media adviser Jim Margolis, are expected to take top positions on Mrs. Clinton's campaign team, people familiar with the matter said.

"She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a wide range of specific topics" said Nick Merrill, a spokesman for Mrs. Clinton. "Make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Feb 1, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Nick Merrill < nmerrill@hrcoffice.com<mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>> wrote:

Ran the quote past HRC and she asked (with no prompting) that “average” come out. So here’s what I shipped off to Peter Nicholas at the Journal. AS for the NYT, looks like it won’t run for a few days if not next Sunday, so will circle back on that as it develops.

Thanks again to all for the feedback.

Go Seahawks!

"Expanding opportunities for hardworking Americans so that families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes gains. She’s casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a wide range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote. ”

From: Joel Benenson < jbenenson@bsgco.com<mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com>>
Date: Sunday, February 1, 2015 at 5:39 PM
To: Cheryl Mills < cheryl.mills@gmail.com<mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com>>
Cc: NSM < nmerrill@hrcoffice.com<mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>>, Mandy Grunwald < gruncom@aol.com<mailto:gruncom@aol.com>>, Robby Mook < robbymook2015@gmail.com<mailto:robbymook2015@gmail.com>>, John Podesta < john.podesta@gmail.com<mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com>>, Jacob Sullivan < Jake.sullivan@gmail.com<mailto:Jake.sullivan@gmail.com>>, Philippe Reines < pir@hrcoffice.com<mailto:pir@hrcoffice.com>>, Huma Abedin < huma@hrcoffice.com<mailto:huma@hrcoffice.com>>, Dan Schwerin < dschwerin@hrcoffice.com<mailto:dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>>, Jim Margolis < Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com<mailto:Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>>, John Anzalone < john@algpolling.com<mailto:john@algpolling.com>>, Cheryl Mills < cmills@cdmillsgroup.com<mailto:cmills@cdmillsgroup.com>>, Jennifer Palmieri < jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com<mailto:jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com>>, Kristina Schake < kristinakschake@gmail.com<mailto:kristinakschake@gmail.com>>
Subject: RE: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

Definitely

From: Cheryl Mills [mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com]
Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 5:35 PM
To: Joel Benenson
Cc: Nick Merrill; Mandy Grunwald; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake
Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

can we test every day americans next time?

On Sun, Feb 1, 2015 at 5:27 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com<mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com>> wrote:
When we tested deck is stacked against “average Americans, with too many breaks for those at the top” vs. Gov regs and rules hurging biz and stopping them from creating jobs – by 49-41 among all voters and 56-33 with our MOR (middle of the road voters) . I think it’s how they see themselves in this environment, which remains their big pain point that she is fighting to fix.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For the moment it also creates a slight language difference with POTUS – not a big deal but a nuance.
Joel

From: Cheryl Mills [mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com<mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com>]
Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 5:22 PM
To: Nick Merrill
Cc: Joel Benenson; Mandy Grunwald; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake

Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

Looks good. I think you can take out average and still communicate you mean folks in middle with "hardworking" (who likes to be average?)

if average is important I might use everyday.

cdm

On Sun, Feb 1, 2015 at 4:36 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com<mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>> wrote:
Great, thank you.

Robby to your point about letting her speak for herself, I¹ve been reminding people that they should be careful to acknowledge that this is part of a process. She laid out challenges that we face in the midterms, and now she¹s thinking through how we would address them should she run. Will reinforce that when I circle back with these guys today.

Here¹s the quote again incorporating peoples¹ thoughts. John Anzalone, I think Joel addressed what you were trying to get at so I left his edits as is, but let me know if you think we¹re missing anything. Otherwise will push this in the next little while. Thanks all.

"Expanding opportunities for average hardworking Americans so that they and their families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote."

> On 2/1/15, 4:05 PM, "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com<mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com>> wrote:
>
> Yes.
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Mandy Grunwald [mailto:gruncom@aol.com<mailto:gruncom@aol.com>]
> Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 4:05 PM
> To: Robby Mook
> Cc: Joel Benenson; Nick Merrill; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

> Reines; Cheryl Mills; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John
> Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake
> Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories
>
> I like it too.
>
> There's a word missing toward the end. I assume it should say "...she > will present SOLUTIONS to our toughest challenges..."
>
> Thx
>
> Mandy Grunwald
> Grunwald Communications
> 202 973-9400<tel:202%20973-9400>
>
>
>> On Feb 1, 2015, at 3:39 PM, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com<mailto:robbymook2015@gmail.com>> wrote:
>>
>> Adding Jenn and Kristina
>> Joel I agree w your edits. In particular I want to avoid any >> expectations around how big or bold her ideas will be.
>> Nick I'm sure you're already doing this but I also would push hard on >> background that we can't judge a candidate who has yet to announce--give >> her a chance to speak for herself. I know that's impossible but worth >> trying to get them to acknowledge that she's not a candidate and this is >> all speculation.
>>
>>
>>> On Feb 1, 2015, at 3:14 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com<mailto:jbenenson@bsgco.com>> wrote:
>>>
>>> Thanks Nick.
>>>
>>> Going for a little more conversational here with this:
>>>
>>> "Expanding opportunities for average hardworking Americans so that >>> they and their families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has >>> waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when >>> she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly >>> laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes >>> gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on >>> a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, >>> but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present to our toughest >>> challenges and she will take nothing for granted and she will fight >>> for every vote."
>>>
>>> -----Original Message-----
>>> From: Nick Merrill [mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com<mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>]
>>> Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 2:46 PM
>>> To: John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Robby Mook; Cheryl
>>> Mills; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Mandy
>>> Grunwald; Cheryl Mills; Joel Benenson
>>> Subject: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories
>>>
>>> As I mentioned on our call on Thursday, both the WSJ and the NYT are >>> working on stories about how HRC might approach economic policy issues

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

>>> as a candidate. Both will have a dose of personnel name-gaming, and >>> I've spoken to both to steer them towards progressive names, which they >>> seem to both have on their own.
>>>
>>> I want to give both stories something on the record that addresses the >>> core of the story, but also speaks some of the things we all felt >>> needed a little proactive addressing, like inevitability and timing.
>>>
>>> On the inevitability question, John I tried to stick to the language >>> you suggested, though I did take the liberty of striking the word
>>> "idiot."
>>>
>>> "Increasing access to opportunity and fighting for upward mobility has >>> been an uninterrupted pursuit of hers in every job she's held. You >>> heard it from her on the campaign trail last fall, where she laid out >>> the challenges we face. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide >>> range of people on a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a >>> calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will take >>> nothing for granted, she'll present bold ideas, and she will fight for >>> every vote."
>>>
>>> Feedback welcome, but I'd like to ship this later today.
>>>
>>> Nick

<Rothschild Econ Doc for Chozick.pdf>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Gregory Rosalsky" <grosalsky@progressivemediausa.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/9/2008 4:06:16 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 06/09/08

Main Topics: McCain Interviews on NBC and Fox News, 'Jimmy Carter's Second Term', McCan't Rally Evangelicals, McBush Economics

Summary of Shift: Barack Obama gave his first general election speech today, which blasted McCain and Bush for a souring economy. Obama is doing an economic tour for the next two weeks. The McCain campaign criticized Obama for the appointment of Jim Johnson to his VP selection committee, who is accused of getting favors from the mortgage lender Countrywide. Fox News covered this story extensively. The Obama campaign shot back by pointing to John Green, a top aide to McCain who lobbied for Ameriquest, one of the nation's largest subprime lenders.
In other news, Scott McClellan will be testifying to Congress June 20 about revelations within his book. President Bush is in Europe for a summit. Mike Huckabee is being called a "hero" for performing the Heimlich maneuver on the GOP candidate for Lt. Governor of North Carolina. Defense Secretary Gates said he's going to halt planned cuts in the size of the Air Force. The FBI is backlogged in doing security checks on immigrants. Gas prices continue their record-breaking streak. Tomatoes were pulled from restaurants in 16 states due to a salmonella outbreak and Apple announced it will release another iPhone.

Highlights:
1) McCain interview on NBC Nightly News: "Senator Obama says that I'm running for Bush's third term. It seems to me he's running for Jimmy Carter's second."
2) In Fox News interview, McCain fires back at Obama on the economy
3) McCain's continued troubles rallying the GOP Base
a. MSNBC does segment on McCain's inability to rally evangelicals
b. CNN paints Obama as competitive for evangelical voters, Tony Perkins says McCain's indecisiveness on Pastor Hagee's endorsement hurt him with group
c. McCain camp rejects report that it is refusing to meet with Billy Graham; Fox News' Brit Hume says McCain's inability to energize evangelicals is a problem in swing states
4) McCain and the floundering economy
a. CNN's Election Center discredits McCain's gas tax holiday proposal; Velshi: the holiday is "a complete Red Herring"
b. Cafferty paints McCain as out of touch, asks viewers "Is John McCain right when he says 'the fundamentals of our economy are very strong'?"
c. Bernard Whitman links McCain to Bush on bad economics
5) George Will: McCain is no maverick on abortion, reminds viewers of McCain's Iran stance
6) Dana Bash covers the "ominous reality" of an anti-GOP electoral climate facing the McCain campaign, airs comments of Rick Davis saying climate is "worst in modern history for Republicans"
7) Jonathon Alter: McCain has trouble acclimating to YouTube era politics
8) MSNBC Panel examines Rick Davis' Power Point on McCain's advantages against Obama
9) Keith Olbermann named Fox News' Neil Cavuto "worst person in the world" for conflicting remarks about McCain's temper (no clip)
10) In round table, Matthews reminds viewers that Bush admin is in bed with oil interests and Phil Brunstein invokes McCain's economic ineptitude (no clip)
11) Jonathan Prince, on Race for the White House says that McCain has 'disposed of his inner maverick and brought to life his inner McBush' (no clip)
12) Scott McClellan was interviewed by Keith Olbermann about what he plans to discuss in front of Congress on June 20, includes talk about Valerie Plame's outing and the faulty path to the Iraq war (no clip)
13) Laura Bush was interviewed on ABC World News and defended Michelle Obama from criticisms that she's unpatriotic (no clip)

Highlight #1
Brian Williams Interviews John McCain, McCain Calls Obama "Jimmy Carter's Second" Term (NBC 06/09/08 7:14pm)
BRIAN WILLIAMS: […] is it going to be tough to run with an incumbent party for the White House given this economic backdrop?

JOHN MCCAIN: I think it's tough, but I think the American people didn't get to know me yesterday. They know me. They know that I've fought for restrained spending, which Senator Obama has been a big part of with earmark and pork-barrel projects. They know that I have been a strong fiscal conservative and they know I understand the challenges that they face, that they need a little break from their gasoline taxes and they know that we've got to get spending under control and we've got to become independent of foreign oil.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Senator Obama says that I'm running for Bush's third term. It seems to me he's running for Jimmy Carter's second [laughs].

WILLIAMS: Why do you say that?

MCCAIN: Because spend, spend, tax, spend. He's got [a] proposal that would raise taxes by $1.4 trillion over five years or raise spending—excuse me, raise spending by $1.4 trillion over five years and no way to pay for his programs. That would put us further in debt. I have a plan to balance the budget. I have a plan to get us energy independence and get America goin' again and that's what I can do and that's my record and I'll stand on it.

I have a reputation and a deserved one of reaching across the aisle and working with democrats. Senator Obama has none of that. He has the most liberal voting record in the senate.

WILLIAMS: So what do you tell Americans who are gonna have to get in the car tomorrow and the next day, four dollar-a-gallon gasoline […]. Is it in your mind tied to climate change? I know you've spoken before about energy dependence.

MCCAIN: Well, I'm sayin' it's an economic issue. It is an environmental issue and it's a national security issue. It's an economic issue for obvious reasons. People on fixed income are hurting. Hurting terribly now.

It's [an] environmental issue because of climate change is real in my view [sic] and I'll continue to debate it but we've got to reduce and eliminate greenhouse gas emissions and, of course, we've got to eliminate our dependence on foreign oil. We've got to do that. I have a plan to do it. We can develop alternate energy sources.

WILLIAMS: It's been said that a la the Apollo program, the Marshall plan, that something that large of that scale will be required for that effort. Are you prepared to label it that?

MCCAIN: I am and I'm prepared to emphasize that we need to exercise every bit of innovation, every bit of technology which is out there and we've gotta devote all our energies—[chuckles] all our efforts to solving this energy crisis. The American people deserve the kind of leadership and inspiration that will put us on the path to energy independence.

We can fix the problem. We can become energy independent and give our kids a cleaner planet. I've been involved in the climate change issue for many years. Senator Obama has never been involved in it except maybe to co-sponsor a bill.

[Williams asks McCain whether Hillary supporters will go for him in November.]

MCCAIN: Well, I certainly hope they are. We are getting some communications with people obviously and I also want to repeat my respect and admiration for Senator Clinton [and] the campaign she ran. I also have respect and admiration for Senator Obama [and] for the campaign he ran but I believe that she inspired women all over the world including in this country and I respect her. We'd obviously love to have the support and are getting some of that support because I think this campaign is gonna be won by not only republicans voting but independents and finding the old and new Reagan democrats and I'm confident I can do that.

Highlight #2

In Fox News Interview, McCain Fires Back at Obama on the Economy, Says "He Has Been the Most Liberal Doctrinaire Democrat" (FNC 06/09/08 5:15pm)

MEGYN KELLY: McCain coming under fire again today from Barack Obama. Obama, who launched his own two-week economic tour in North Carolina today, calling the Republican candidate's economic policies "outrageous" and "very much like those of President Bush." McCain firing right back, telling Fox News just moments ago an Obama presidency "would be very much like a Carter 2nd term." [...]

CARL CAMERON: Senator McCain has long argued that Barack Obama is what he again today said is a 'doctrinaire liberal.' He argues that while Obama compares him to President Bush, Barack Obama is Jimmy Carter. And if you look back to that era it was rising interest rates, rising inflation, rising unemployment, and Senator McCain argues that Barack Obama's opposition to renewing the Bush tax cuts, a pro-growth economic agenda, will ultimately make things worse [...]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MCCAIN: I've noticed that he has been the most liberal doctrinaire Democrat, claiming that he is some kind of a reformer or centrist, but look, I think it's important that we compare people's records. His has been as one of the most liberal Democrats, the most according to the National Journal, but the point is we got to review records, we also got to articulate our vision for the future. And I know that I can do that in the form of defending this nation's security, the three issues: reform, prosperity, peace. I think those are the major issues. I can win on every one of them.
[...]

Highlight #3
McCain's Lack of Evangelical Support (MSNBC 06/09/08 5:34pm)
TONY PERKINS: [McCain] has a lot of ground to cover. […] There's no intensity in the base. You compare 2004 to 2008. 2004 as I was traveling the country people were saying, 'What are we gonna do? What are we gonna do to get George Bush re-elected?' Today the question is, 'What are we gonna do?' and it's a big difference.
[…]
DAVID QUO: At the end of the day John McCain's issues may be in line with what evangelical voters believe. Obama sounds like an evangelical.

PERKINS: That is true. It sounds as if the Democrats have gotten religion and the Republicans have become agnostic and run off with the church organist. […] I think that people, in order to get strong support, the intensity that [McCain] needs he's got to stand on one side or the other [of the choice issue]. He does have that record. He has a pro-life voting record.

The only difference that he has right now with pro-lifers is the embryonic stem cell research issue but he doesn't talk about it. It's like he doesn't want people to know where he stands on that issue.

McCain Camp Rejects Report That it is Refusing to Meet with Billy Graham; Brit Hume says McCain's Inability to Energize Evangelicals is a Problem in Swing States (FNC 06/09/08 5:45pm)
MEGYN KELLY: Well John McCain's camp rejecting a report today that it is refusing to meet with evangelical leader Billy Graham. The campaign calls those reports "Bogus" and "totally untrue." Instead, McCain campaign aides say they are directly in touch with Graham's office and have been "for months now." [...] There is some letter showing that someone attempted to reach out to the McCain camp and have them have John McCain meet with Billy Graham and that was rejected. So what happened here?

BRIT HUME: Well the McCain camp says, and there's no reason to doubt it they're dealing directly with Billy Graham and his people [...] And it comes at a little bit of an awkward time for the McCain campaign because he is trying to mend fences, if you will, with people on the religious right, conservatives, evangelical Christians, who were so important to George W Bush's reelection, in particular, back in 2004. A group who's energies will be, would be very useful to John McCain .

MEGYN KELLY: He is struggling in that effort Brit. There was an article in the New York Times today quoting the Family Research Council's Tony Perkins, who said "For John McCain to be competitive he has to connect with the base to the point that they're intense enough about him that they're contagious." He continues, "Right now, they're not even coughing."

BRIT HUME: Well I think that's something he has to worry about because look at the state of Ohio in 2004. It was people from these religious, communities, evangelical Christians in large numbers, volunteers, who turned out not only to vote for George W Bush, but to get others to the polls so they could vote for him [...] So obviously if McCain doesn't have their full support, he will be needing to make that up from some other energized group and it is not easy immediately to identify who that might be [...]

CNN Paints Obama as Competitive For Evangelical Voters, Tony Perkins Says McCain's Rejection of Pastor Hagee's Endorsement Hurt Him Amongst Group (CNN 06/09/08 5:20pm)
WOLF BLITZER They're a cornerstone of teh Republican party but this election year, some evangelicals may be up for grabs [...]

CAROL COSTELLO: Now this sounds strange, Barack Obama going after Evangelical voters? But if you look at the numbers, you'll think maybe he has a chance. Take a look, in the Iowa caucus, only 10% of evangelical voters supported McCain [Lists other states where McCain didn't do well with evangelicals]. Why you ask? Well some say he isn't talking the talk [...] Election 2008 is different in so many ways, it's also the year many conservatives say the Democratic party found god. And the Republican party? Forgot about him.

TONY PERKINS: Clearly in this election cycle, it appears that the Democrats have gotten religion, while the Republicans have turned agnostic in a run off with the church organism. I mean they don't really have anything to do with religion in this election cycle.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

COSTELLO: Perkins says evangelical voters see no passion in John McCain for the issues they care about. And wonder whether they should switch to Obama who seems to speak their language [...] McCain's camp is wooing evangelicals too sending email messages to conservative voters, reaching out to evangelical preachers, although Perkins says he shouldn't expect many endorsements, not after he accepted then rejected Pastor John Hagee's endorsement because of a sermon where Hagee said Nazism was god's will [...] That only reminded conservative voters what he said about Pat Robertson and Jerry Falwell back in 2000 [...]

Highlight #4

George Will: McCain is No Maverick on Abortion, Reminds Viewers of McCain's Iran Stance (MSNBC 06/09/08 5:17pm)

GEORGE F WILL: I suspect, Chris that ¾ of the country, at this point, does not know that John McCain is pro-life. They think because he's a maverick and 'maverick' means disagreeing with your party, he probably disagrees with the party on that. They're wrong.

I think once the democrats make that known, as surely they will—these people will come scampering back to the Democratic Party in droves.

[…]

WILL: […] it will be Barack Obama's challenge to say that change and caution—risk and caution are the same thing this time because the risk is to continue with a—what he will say are the Bush economic policies and he will say the danger of a war with Iran from a man who has said as John McCain has: that bad as a war with Iran would be it is not as bad as their getting nuclear weapons and since there seems to be no other way other than war to stop them.

Highlight #5

CNN's "Election Center" Discredits McCain's Gas Tax Holiday Proposal; Velshi: The Holiday Is "A Complete Red Herring" (CNN 06/09/08 8:30pm)

CAMPBELL BROWN: McCain is still pounding away at this idea of a gas tax holiday, even though Obama has trashed it as a political stunt. And frankly a lot of economists agree with that assessment [...]

ALI VELSHI: This 18 cents gas tax holiday doesn't make any sense. Now there are some things that John McCain has said economically in this campaign that do make more sense than Barack Obama. And there are some things that Barack Obama has that make sense. This Gas Tax Holiday is a complete red herring. It doesn't make sense [...]

Cafferty Asks Viewers the Question "Is John McCain Right When He Says 'the Fundamentals of Our Economy Are Very Strong?", Respondents Blast McCain for Being Out of Touch (CNN 06/09/08 7:30pm)

JACK CAFFERTY: The question this hour is John McCain right when he says "the fundamentals of our economy are very strong"? [...] Nancy writes, Does John McCain live in the same United States of America that the rest of us do? [...] Beverly in New York writes, Mr. McCain resides in a bubble, happily insulated by his wife's money [...]

Bernard Whitman Enumerates McBush Plans for Economy (MSNBC 06/09/08 4:15pm)

BERNARD WHITMAN: […] John McCain would like nothing more than to continue the failed Bush economic policies, which basically come in three varieties. […] Number one is to bury your head in the sand and hope the problem goes away. Number two is help your rich friends and number three, my favorite is blame the victim.

[…]

WHITMAN: I'm suggesting that George Bush has been M.I.A. with respect to the economy in general and with respect to this housing crisis, and John McCain's strategy for an awfully long time was to blame the victim. He's reluctantly agreed to give some assistance here […].

Highlight #6

Dana Bash Covers the "Ominous Reality" of an anti-GOP electoral climate Facing the McCain Campaign (CNN 06/09/08 4:15pm)

WOLF BLITZER: They're under no illusions are they Dana about the challenge that Senator McCain faces on this issue.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DANA BASH: They certainly aren't, not at all. On fundamental issues like the economy Wolf McCain is gonna run a classic Republican campaign. 'Barack Obama will raise your taxes, I won't.' What will be very different from recent GOP campaigns is the kind of voter the McCain campaign targets, it has to be in order to win.

[Video of McCain]

BASH: On his website McCain's campaign manager their strategy against Barack Obama, starting with this ominous reality.

[audio recording]

RICK DAVIS: I wanna talk a little bit about today's political environment, it 's among the worst in modern history for Republicans.

BASH: McCain advisers say their best shot at beating Obama is with independent voters on issues from taxes to the environment.

[Video of McCain]

MCCAIN: Senator Obama has no record of being involved on this issue that I know of. I will stick by my record and my commitment of many years to reducing greenhouse gas emissions [...]

BASH: The latest CNN poll shows a McCain/Obama dead heat among independents. McCain advisers also say he must win a number of so-called "disaffected Democrats", Hillary Clinton voters in swing states like Ohio and Pennsylvania, who told pollsters they would not vote for Obama. But strategists in both parties say luring them will be tough.

PETER HART: He's a Republican. He happens to believe we stay in Iraq as long as we can and he's voted with George Bush 89% of the time.

BASH: For months Republican operatives have been expressing concern to CNN about how the McCain campaign is executing it's strategy.

[Video of McCain]

MCCAIN: And that's not change we can believe in.

BASH: GOP fears that spilled into the open about flat visuals and a negative message in last week's prime time speech, just before Obama's. Republican strategist Bill Kristol wrote in the New York Times, Almost every Republican I've talked to is alarmed that the McCain campaign doesn't seem up to the task of electing John McCain." McCain advisers are well aware that there are plenty of Republicans worried about how prepared they really are for a fight against Obama but a spokeswomen responded by saying they have risen above doubts of pundits before and will do it again [...]

Highlight #7
Johnaton Alter: McCain's Has Trouble Acclimating to YouTube Era Politics (MSNBC 06/09/08 8:31pm)
[As the segment opens the McBush image hangs over Olbermann's shoulder.]

KEITH OLBERMANN: There exists the distinct possibility that John McCain has three greater challengers to face in the general election than just he presumptive democratic nominee: McCain versus himself, McCain versus videotape of himself and McCain versus the truth. [Olberman summarizes Newsweek interview lie while footage airs of McCain at his green screen rally with a supporter holding an 'HONOR' sign is in the foreground.]

JONATHAN ALTER: Strangled by the videotape. […] It's a time-warp thing. When [McCain] last ran for president in 2000 you could deny having said something and the chances of you being caught […] were minimal because nobody had access to the tapes. […] It's only been retrievable for like two years. […]

OLBERMANN: So you go down the line of he is not aware of the new political reality as opposed to he is not remembering what he just said?

ALTER: I do. I don't think he's senile. I think that he is caught in […] old politics where politicians just said, 'Black is white and white is black and blue is grey.' […] So McCain just can't get away with this kind of thing anymore in the new era, in the YouTube era and it's a learning curve for him to get up to speed to recognize he's living with new rules.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

OLBERMANN: […] In denying this he's come up with an entire rationale for why he wouldn't have said that. […]

ALTER: […] He's been trying to do that to make a play for [former Hillary Clinton supporters] but when confronted on it by my Newsweek colleagues he realized that it didn't really look too smart and he tried to deny having said it.

OLBERMANN: Why is [McCain] saying, 'Screw you and your benefit of the doubt [to the press]'?

ALTER: This is a game the Republicans have been playing for a long time. […] This is what politicians do. They try to work the refs, push back and the thing that's silly about it is it doesn't usually work. […]

Highlight #8
Panel Examines Rick Davis' Power Point on McCain's Advantages Against Obama (MSNBC 06/09/08 6:32pm)
[On McCain's favorability rating…]
JONATHAN PRINCE: […] it's an advantage that's built up on this brand of John McCain's as a real maverick because there was a period of time, particularly when he started running for president in 2000 through two years or so ago when he started running for president again when he really was but now in the kind of pursuit of his presidential ambition he's abandoned so many of those positions. Whether it's on global warming where he's now for a $4 billion tax giveaway to the top five oil companies or his health care plan, which is—talk about a radical health care plan. His health care plan is: just throw every man, woman and child into the marketplace and let them fend for themselves.

When folks find out that he's kind of abandoned all those positions and that 'the maverick' has really become a toe-the-line, hardcore republican I think those advantages are gonna drop like a rock.

JON HARWOOD: […] The democratic brand is flying pretty high and George Bush is a big, fat target. Even though John McCain, I think is an authentic maverick, Barack Obama's gonna make some mileage out of tying Bush to McCain.

[…]

PRINCE: […] the facts that exist dispute the brand of maverick that he's built up […].

--
Gregory E. Rosalsky
Progressive Media USA
202-609-7691 (office)
707-484-3796 (cell)
GRosalsky@progressivemediausa.org
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com>
To:	"Margolis, Jim" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
Date:	3/22/2015 11:27:26 AM
Subject:	Re: DRAFT Questions for HRC Media Prepare

I heard the same. I think from nick or josh

On Mar 22, 2015, at 6:24 PM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com > wrote:

> +nick and john
>
> I'm hearing rumors 60 minutes may be working on a Clinton cash story.
> Not sure how reliable info is.
>
> Jim Margolis
> Sent from my iPhone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/26/2014 9:16:51 AM
Subject: LA Police Refuse to Release Information on In-Custody Deaths, Community Pushes Back

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Tuesday, 26 August 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

You may know that truly independent media like Truthout can make all the difference in empowering people to build a better world. But did you know Truthout depends on you? Eighty percent of our budget comes from readers, and none of it comes from corporate advertising. We must raise almost $26,000 more by the end of tomorrow - can you help?

DONATE NOW!

Click here to donate.

(Truthout is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit. EIN: 20-0031641)

You can also donate by check, made payable to:
Truthout, P.O. Box 276414, Sacramento, CA 95827
(Please include your email address on your check.)

Or call in your donation:
213.489.1971

LA Police Refuse to Release Information on In-Custody Deaths, Community Pushes Back

Bethania Palma Markus, Truthout: Many questions remain as the Los Angeles Police Department refuses to release autopsy reports and the names of officers involved in the shooting death of unarmed black man Ezell Ford, and the beating death of Omar Abrego in South Central. Frustration grows in a community already mistrustful of police.

Read the Article

The Banality of Police Militarization: How Champaign-Urbana Acquired Its MRAP

BuzzFlash

Burger King's Big Whopper: It Will Incorporate in Canada to Evade US Taxes

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: People in the United States can still make personal choices to resist corporate betrayal. One option is to become vegetarian: It's a healthier lifestyle, and has the added advantage of teaching corporations who use the United States for profits - but flee it for lower taxes - a lesson.

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

Thyroid Cancer in Young People Surges in Fukushima

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Brian Dolinar, Truthout: How did a small college town in central Illinois get a massive mine-resistant armor-protected truck from the federal government? Internal communications show how one local law enforcement agency, like many across the country, acquired hand-me-down military equipment from the Department of Defense.

Read the Article

Colonization by Bankruptcy: The High-Stakes Chess Match for Argentina

Ellen Brown, The Web of Debt Blog: Argentina is playing hardball with the vulture funds, which have been trying to force it into an involuntary bankruptcy. The vultures are demanding what amounts to a 600 percent return on bonds bought for pennies on the dollar.

Read the Article

Education, Inc.

Tim Scott and Deborah Keisch, Truthout: "Reform" mechanisms are a huge success for the profiteers who are responsible for designing and implementing them. These profit-driven education policies are systematically undermining democratic control of our schools.

Read the Article

About 620,000 Military Families Rely on Food Pantries to Meet Basic Needs

Michelle Chen, The Nation: This month, a new report found that the nation's food pantries serve 620,000 families with a member in the military - another troubling indication that service members battling against poverty must often rely on the generosity of our charities.

Read the Article

A Carbon Tax Is Absolutely Essential

The Daily Take Team, The Thom Hartmann Program: Putting a price on carbon encourages less fossil fuel extraction and a rapid move to clean energy. With even a modest carbon tax - that doesn't even end the subsidies to big oil, coal and gas - fossil fuels instantly become more expensive than renewables.

Read the Article

If Liberal Zionism Were Dead, What Actions Would That Imply?

Robert Naiman, Truthout: Liberal Zionists have been unwilling to fight politically for their stated beliefs - a two-state solution for Israel and Palestine - or use nonviolent political pressure tactics to force the changes in Israeli government policy that they want.

Read the Article

Food Fights: The Contested Terrain of the American Dinner Plate

Ben Agger, Truthout: The United States cannot afford food capitalism, given the interaction between health care costs and the Western diet. Nearly half a century ago, feminists put bodies on the political agenda. There they remain, as we struggle over what to have for dinner.

Read the Article

Since Nuclear Meltdown
Read the Article at BuzzFlash

There Are No Angels - What The New York Times Won't Tell You About the Ferguson Shooting
Read the Article at The Boston Globe

Eugene Robinson | For Black Youth in the US, No "Mistakes" Allowed
Read the Article at BuzzFlash

Attorney: New Audio Reveals Pause in Gunfire When Michael Brown Was Shot
Read the Article at CNN

In Defiant Action, Pipeline Protesters Lock Themselves to Trucks
Read the Article at Common Dreams

Is This Ebola's Tipping Point?
Read the Article at The Daily Beast

When Journalists Go Missing
Read the Article at The New Yorker

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Amy Goodman | Blowback: Vijay Prashad on How Islamic State Grew Out of US Invasion of Iraq

Amy Goodman, Democracy Now!: Militants from Islamic State stormed an air base in northeast Syria on Sunday, capturing it from government forces. Fighters from Islamic State have seized three Syrian military bases in the area in recent weeks. This comes as the Pentagon considers expanding its airstrikes to include targets inside Syria.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

On the News With Thom Hartmann: Tens of Millions of Americans Struggle With Hunger, and More

In today's On the News segment: In the richest nation on earth, tens of millions of Americans are struggling to find enough to eat; should our government have a "kill switch" to turn off cell phone communication?; billionaires in the United States are fine with exploiting workers, but Mexican billionaire Carlos Slim wants to strengthen the Latino middle class; and more.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

General Honoré, Enviro Groups Call for Strengthening EPA's Proposed Refinery Pollution Standards

Julie Dermansky, DeSmogBlog: Former General Russel Honoré - founder of the Green Army, a coalition of environmental groups - became an advocate for clean air and water after being invited to Bayou Corne, Louisiana. He visited the community as the first anniversary of its sinkhole disaster approached.

Read the Article

Paul Krugman | Bad Decisions Yield Grim Results in Europe

Paul Krugman, Krugman & Co.: Just a few months ago, Europe's austerians were busy congratulating themselves, declaring that a modest upturn in southern Europe vindicated all their actions. But now the news is looking grim, with industrial production stalling out and good reason to fear yet another slide into recession.

Read the Article

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 5/1/2015 3:25:27 AM
Subject: TWEETS 5/1

Note: my new goal is to send a second round of Tweets in the PM to respond to campaign developments throughout the day.

TWEETS 5/1

New study: ice-loss in Antarctica increased 6 bil tons/year each year from 2003 to 2014. Cap melting faster than ever. tp://bit.ly/1JegM3y (140)

If you can't keep track of Schweizer's fabrications, distortions in "Clinton Cash" @MediaMatters can help: http://bit.ly/1GCbj3A (137)

RETWEETS 5/1

Suggestion from KLC:

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
To:	nmerrill@hrcoffice.com jbenenson@bsgco.com cheryl.mills@gmail.com
Date:	2/2/2015 2:41:18 AM
Subject:	Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

I think this piece turned out well.

But when we define our goals, we have to be clear that we are concerned with helping people who are getting crushed by rising costs and stagnant incomes, not that we're worried about offending high income groups (our donors). My guess is that this sentence will cause us some problems on the left.

> One of Mrs. Clinton's broader goals is to develop ways to address economic anxiety without sounding like a combative populist or demonizing high-income groups, said a person familiar with her thinking.

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>
To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com>; Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com>
Cc: Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com>; Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com>; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com>; Jake Sullivan <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>; Philippe Reines <pir@hrcoffice.com>; Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com>; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>; Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>; John Anzalone <john@algpolling.com>; Cheryl Mills <cmills@cdmillsgroup.com>; Jennifer Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com>; Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com>
Sent: Sun, Feb 1, 2015 11:38 pm
Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

http://www.wsj.com/articles/clinton-consults-experts-to-define-economic-pitch-1422837490

Clinton Consults to Define Economic Pitch

By Peter Nicholas

Hillary Clinton has been consulting with an array of economists and academics—including liberal Joseph Stiglitz, former Fed chairman Paul Volcker and new faces outside the traditional orbit of Democratic policy experts—as she prepares for a likely presidential campaign that would make sluggish wage growth and middle-class prosperity a central focus.

One of Mrs. Clinton's broader goals is to develop ways to address economic anxiety without sounding like a combative populist or demonizing high-income groups, said a person familiar with her thinking. It isn't clear whether that particular question has come up in the meetings she has been having with various policy experts.

She has been using the meetings to prepare herself for a possible campaign, ground herself in the issues and tease out fresh approaches to stubborn domestic and foreign policy problems, people familiar with the matter said.

As the former secretary of state keeps a low public profile ahead of announcing her near-certain candidacy, the meetings offer clues to which issues she believes merit attention and whose advice she values. Many, but not all, participants served in Bill Clinton 's administration; others are distinguished primarily by expertise in subjects that are certain to be front-and-center in the 2016 presidential race.

Some of the meetings had the feeling of a high-octane faculty symposium and lasted for hours, say people familiar with the sessions. Pen and pad in hand, Mrs. Clinton typically has gone around the room to ask for ideas, offering comments now and then and inviting participants to make suggestions down the road.

In December, Mrs. Clinton presided over a meeting at a midtown Manhattan hotel that focused on middle-class Americans feeling pinched by slow wage growth.

Among those attending: Mr. Volcker, the architect of the "Volcker Rule," a regulatory measure barring banks from making risky bets with their own money; Jonathan Cowan, co-founder of the centrist think tank Third Way, which has been critical of some of the populist rhetoric coming from the Democrats' liberal wing; and Alan Blinder , a Princeton professor and former Fed vice chairman and economics adviser to Mr. Clinton.

Also at the meeting, according to people familiar with it, were Robert Hormats, who worked in the State Department during Mrs. Clinton's tenure and was a former vice chairman of Goldman Sachs; Richard Ravitch , a former Democratic lieutenant governor in New York, who helped New York City avert bankruptcy during a fiscal crisis in the 1970s; and Teresa Ghilarducci, a labor economist and proponent of ideas to shore up Americans' retirement savings. The Clinton team has asked her to help evaluate various policy ideas.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The participants examined a range of ideas to boost economic security, such as tax cuts for the middle class, expanded access to prekindergarten education and new ways to pay for improvements to roads and tunnels, said people familiar with the session.

"One major focus of the meeting was the miserable recent performance of wages in general and middle-class wages in particular, and what if anything the government can do about that," said Mr. Blinder.

Bernard Schwartz, a longtime Democratic donor and contributor to the Clinton Foundation, was among those who helped arrange the meeting, said people familiar with the session. Mr. Schwartz is a former chairman of Loral Space & Communications Ltd. Mrs. Clinton also has consulted with Mr. Stiglitz, a former economic adviser to Bill Clinton and author of a book about the perils of economic inequality.

The policy interests of some participants point to the issues Mrs. Clinton is likely to prioritize, notably the financial pressures faced by middle-class families. Prospective Republican presidential candidates also are talking about shoring up the middle class and, in some cases, narrowing the wage gap in America—a sign that those topics will be flashpoints in the general election.

Mrs. Clinton is the overwhelming front-runner for the Democratic nomination, but some liberals would like to see her challenged by U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D., Mass.), a populist firebrand who has described the American economic system as "rigged" in favor of the wealthy. Ms. Warren has said she won't run. In targeting income inequality, Mrs. Clinton would address a substantive issue facing the country while also making inroads with Ms. Warren's liberal followers.

Mrs. Clinton also has held foreign policy meetings in New York and Washington. A New York meeting in the summer was a "tour" of global hot spots, among them the war in Syria and Russia's incursions into Ukraine, according to people familiar with what took place.

Mrs. Clinton asked for a diagnosis of the problem and a "strategic" view of how the U.S. should act, one person familiar with the meeting said.

Those who attended included Richard Haass, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, who worked under both Republican presidents George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush; David Rothkopf, author of a new book on foreign policy-making in the George W. Bush and Obama administrations; and Dennis Ross, a diplomat with many years of experience in the Middle East peace negotiations.

More informally, Mrs. Clinton has also spoken to trusted Democratic confidants about appointments to high-level positions in her campaign, should she decide to run.

A campaign apparatus is already taking shape. John Podesta, a senior adviser to President Barack Obama, is likely to become a senior adviser to the campaign, while two Obama campaign veterans, pollster Joel Benenson and media adviser Jim Margolis, are expected to take top positions on Mrs. Clinton's campaign team, people familiar with the matter said.

"She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a wide range of specific topics" said Nick Merrill, a spokesman for Mrs. Clinton. "Make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote."

On Feb 1, 2015, at 6:54 PM, Nick Merrill < nmerrill@hrcoffice.com > wrote:

Ran the quote past HRC and she asked (with no prompting) that "average" come out. So here's what I shipped off to Peter Nicholas at the Journal. AS for the NYT, looks like it won't run for a few days if not next Sunday, so will circle back on that as it develops.

Thanks again to all for the feedback.

Go Seahawks!

"Expanding opportunities for hardworking Americans so that families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a wide range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote. ''

From: Joel Benenson < jbenenson@bsgco.com >
Date: Sunday, February 1, 2015 at 5:39 PM
To: Cheryl Mills < cheryl.mills@gmail.com >
Cc: NSM < nmerrill@hrcoffice.com >, Mandy Grunwald < gruncom@aol.com >, Robby Mook < robbymook2015@gmail.com >, John Podesta < john.podesta@gmail.com >, Jacob Sullivan < Jake.sullivan@gmail.com >, Philippe Reines < pir@hrcoffice.com >, Huma Abedin < huma@hrcoffice.com >, Dan Schwerin < dschwerin@hrcoffice.com >, Jim Margolis < Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >, John Anzalone < john@algpolling.com >, Cheryl Mills < cmills@cdmillsgroup.com >, Jennifer Palmieri < jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com >, Kristina Schake < kristinakschake@gmail.com >
Subject: RE: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Definitely

From: Cheryl Mills [mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com]
Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 5:35 PM
To: Joel Benenson
Cc: Nick Merrill; Mandy Grunwald; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake
Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

can we test every day americans next time?

On Sun, Feb 1, 2015 at 5:27 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:
When we tested deck is stacked against "average Americans, with too many breaks for those at the top" vs. Gov regs and rules hurging biz and stopping them from creating jobs – by 49-41 among all voters and 56-33 with our MOR (middle of the road voters) . I think it's how they see themselves in this environment, which remains their big pain point that she is fighting to fix.

For the moment it also creates a slight language difference with POTUS – not a big deal but a nuance.
Joel

From: Cheryl Mills [mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com]
Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 5:22 PM
To: Nick Merrill
Cc: Joel Benenson; Mandy Grunwald; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake

Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories

Looks good. I think you can take out average and still communicate you mean folks in middle with "hardworking" (who likes to be average?)

if average is important I might use everyday.

cdm

On Sun, Feb 1, 2015 at 4:36 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com > wrote:
Great, thank you.

Robby to your point about letting her speak for herself, I¹ve been reminding people that they should be careful to acknowledge that this is part of a process. She laid out challenges that we face in the midterms, and now she¹s thinking through how we would address them should she run. Will reinforce that when I circle back with these guys today.

Here¹s the quote again incorporating peoples¹ thoughts. John Anzalone, I think Joel addressed what you were trying to get at so I left his edits as is, but let me know if you think we¹re missing anything. Otherwise will push this in the next little while. Thanks all.

"Expanding opportunities for average hardworking Americans so that they and their families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges, she will take nothing for granted, and she will fight for every vote."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On 2/1/15, 4:05 PM, "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:

>Yes.
>
>-----Original Message-----
>From: Mandy Grunwald [mailto:gruncom@aol.com]
>Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 4:05 PM
>To: Robby Mook
>Cc: Joel Benenson; Nick Merrill; John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe
>Reines; Cheryl Mills; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John
>Anzalone; Cheryl Mills; Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake
>Subject: Re: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories
>
>I like it too.
>
>There's a word missing toward the end. I assume it should say "...she >will present SOLUTIONS to our toughest challenges..."
>
>Thx
>
>Mandy Grunwald
>Grunwald Communications
>202 973-9400
>
>
>> On Feb 1, 2015, at 3:39 PM, Robby Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com > wrote:
>>
>> Adding Jenn and Kristina
>> Joel I agree w your edits. In particular I want to avoid any >>expectations around how big or bold her ideas will be.
>> Nick I'm sure you're already doing this but I also would push hard on >>background that we can't judge a candidate who has yet to announce--give >>her a chance to speak for herself. I know that's impossible but worth >>trying to get them to acknowledge that she's not a candidate and this is >>all speculation.
>>
>>
>>> On Feb 1, 2015, at 3:14 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:
>>>
>>> Thanks Nick.
>>>
>>> Going for a little more conversational here with this:
>>>
>>> "Expanding opportunities for average hardworking Americans so that >>>they and their families can get ahead has been a constant fight she has >>>waged in every job she's held. You heard it from her last fall when >>>she was campaigning for Democrats all over the country and repeatedly >>>laid out the challenges many Americans still face as our economy makes >>>gains. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide range of people on >>>a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, >>>but make no mistake, if she runs, she will present to our toughest >>>challenges and she will take nothing for granted and she will fight >>>for every vote."
>>>
>>> -----Original Message-----

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

>>> From: Nick Merrill [mailto:nmerrill@hrcoffice.com]
>>> Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 2:46 PM
>>> To: John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Philippe Reines; Robby Mook; Cheryl
>>>Mills; Huma Abedin; Dan Schwerin; Jim Margolis; John Anzalone; Mandy
>>>Grunwald; Cheryl Mills; Joel Benenson
>>> Subject: NYT & WSJ | Econ Stories
>>>
>>> As I mentioned on our call on Thursday, both the WSJ and the NYT are >>>working on stories about how HRC might approach economic policy issues >>>as a candidate. Both will have a dose of personnel name-gaming, and >>>I've spoken to both to steer them towards progressive names, which they >>>seem to both have on their own.
>>>
>>> I want to give both stories something on the record that addresses the >>>core of the story, but also speaks some of the things we all felt >>>needed a little proactive addressing, like inevitability and timing.
>>>
>>> On the inevitability question, John I tried to stick to the language >>>you suggested, though I did take the liberty of striking the word
>>>"idiot."
>>>
>>> "Increasing access to opportunity and fighting for upward mobility has >>>been an uninterrupted pursuit of hers in every job she's held. You >>>heard it from her on the campaign trail last fall, where she laid out >>>the challenges we face. She's casting a wide net, talking to a wide >>>range of people on a range of specific topics. There's no red X on a >>>calendar somewhere, but make no mistake, if she runs, she will take >>>nothing for granted, she'll present bold ideas, and she will fight for >>>every vote."
>>>
>>> Feedback welcome, but I'd like to ship this later today.
>>>
>>> Nick

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	11/14/2014 6:50:48 AM
Subject:	11.14.14 CTR Weekend TPs
Attachments:	11.14.14 Weekend Package.docx

Hi all,

Please find Correct The Record's weekend talking points package both attached and below. Thanks and stay warm!

11.14.14 Weekend Package

1. 2016 Emerging Themes
2. Women Voters in 2014
3. Eleven Things You Should Know About Hillary

TALKING POINTS: 2016 EMERGING THEMES

BACKGROUND: Even though the 2014 midterm elections were just a few days ago, political pundits have already directed their attention to the 2016 presidential election. While Hillary Clinton has not decided yet whether to run, the exit polls from the midterm elections suggest that she would be extremely well positioned if she does.

TALKING POINTS:

- Exit polls from the recent midterm elections provide interesting insight into the 2016 presidential race – primarily that Hillary Clinton, and her policies, are boding well with the American people.
- 83% of Democrats think Hillary Clinton would make a good president, according to a CNN exit poll.
- More than 40% of midterm voters, both Democrat and Republican, agreed that Hillary Clinton would make a good president – higher than any of the other potential contenders, including Jeb Bush, Chris Christie, Rand Paul, and Rick Perry.
- While campaigning for Democratic candidates all over the country, Hillary Clinton consistently articulated her vision for the future of this country – advancing opportunity and prosperity for all Americans and for generations to come.
- As recent exit polls show, Hillary's vision addresses the primary concern of Americans today: Americans are worried about the future. When asked what they thought life would be like for future generations in America, 48% said it would be worse, 27% said it would be about the same, and only 22% said it would be better.
- Throughout Hillary's many appearances where she has expanded on her vision for the future of this country, several themes have emerged:
  - Advancing Middle Class Families
  - Growing Economy & Jobs
  - Advancing Women & Children
  - Supporting Democrats, Progressive Values
  - Holding Republicans, Washington Accountable
  - Strengthening Education
  - Relating Her Personal Narrative & Values
  - Supporting Our Support Our Military & Veterans

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Asserting America's Place in The World – Foreign Affairs

TALKING POINTS: WOMEN VOTERS IN 2014

BACKGROUND: As Hillary Clinton campaigned for Democrats all over the country this fall, her message of advancing middle-class families, women, and children resonated with female voters, whose support for Democratic candidates increased from 2010 in states Hillary visited on the campaign trail.

TALKING POINTS:

- Hillary Clinton campaigned for Democrats all over the country this election cycle with a message focused on advancing middle-class families, women, and children.
- As evidenced by polling data, Hillary's message on the campaign trail resonated with women voters and translated to their increased support for candidates backed by Hillary.
- In the states Hillary visited on the campaign trail this year, turnout among women was the same as it was in 2010, but women's support for Democratic candidates in those states increased.
- Furthermore, in many instances, the increase in women's support for Democratic candidates occurred after Hillary Clinton campaigned for those candidates. Here are a few examples:
  - In Colorado, before Hillary campaigned for John Hickenlooper on October 21, polls showed women supporting him 4.8% more than the general electorate. Exit polls showed that the gap nearly tripled after Clinton's visit, with 12% more women supporting Hickenlooper, helping him win the election.
  - In New Hampshire, Maggie Hassan won 60% of the women vote, 8% higher than before Hillary visited the Granite state.
  - In Pennsylvania, Tom Wolf received 16% more of the women vote than his opponent. In 2010, the women vote was split 50/50 between the Republican and the Democratic candidates. Clinton's message of economic opportunity and a "fresh start" for the middle class resonated with all voters – especially women, who resoundingly voted to oust Corbett.
- Hillary Clinton's message of advancing middle-class families, women, and children is empowering women to take action and stand up for policies that work for them.

ELEVEN THINGS YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT HILLARY

Secretary Clinton helped restore America's leadership and standing in the world during a time of global challenges and changes. Secretary Clinton worked tirelessly to revitalize American diplomacy and strengthen alliances by traveling nearly a million miles for hundreds of meetings with foreign leaders in 112 countries. As America's lead diplomat, Secretary Clinton understood the importance of engaging the public and took diplomacy directly to people around the world. Just as she was as a senator, Secretary Clinton was a workhorse, often taking on difficult challenges and addressing them directly around the world.

Secretary Clinton built and maintained a coalition to enact the toughest sanctions in Iran's history. Secretary Clinton helped impose the toughest sanctions in Iran's history by getting Russia and China on board. Even the Wall Street Journal editorial board noted that, "Clinton surely pulled out every stop to get Russia and particularly China…on board." And as Howard Dean recently told CNN, "Hillary Clinton cranked up the sanctions for the first time under President Obama that actually made the Iranians come to the table."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Secretary Clinton played an integral role in the New START Treaty with Russia. Secretary Clinton played an active role in reaching a missile reduction agreement with Russia, working to push it through the Senate and securing more than the necessary two-thirds majority. She entered the treaty into force in Munich with her Russian counterpart. As a result of the treaty's passage, there will be fewer nuclear missile launchers. Simply put, the world is safer.

Secretary Clinton supported the raid that brought Osama bin Laden to justice. As NBC's Brian Williams reported on his website, "Secretary of Defense Robert Gates recommended an air strike with no forces on the ground. CIA Director Panetta supported a raid by Special Forces and so did Secretary of State Clinton."

Secretary Clinton helped avert all-out war in Gaza by negotiating a cease-fire between Israelis and Palestinians. In November 2012, after eight days of violence, Secretary Clinton negotiated a Gaza cease-fire with Egyptian president Mohamed Morsi. In an article titled "Hillary Clinton scores Gaza cease fire success," Politico noted that, "Secretary of State Hillary Clinton got a Gaza cease-fire right at the moment hope seemed dead for a rapid end to the violence…"

Secretary Clinton played a role in bringing one war to an end and planning for the end of another. Working closely with Department of Defense colleagues and as part of the President's national security team, Secretary Clinton played a role in the end of war in Iraq and in beginning a transition in Afghanistan, with all NATO allies having agreed to stand-up a post withdrawal support plan. As President Obama told 60 Minutes, it was "all a consequence of the great work that Hillary did and her team did and the State Department did in conjunction with our national security team."

Secretary Clinton was critical in America's "pivot to Asia" strategy. As Martin Indyk of the Brookings Institute wrote in Foreign Policy, "The 'pivot' to East Asia will probably be Obama's most lasting strategic achievement… [but] it is Clinton's too. She laid the groundwork, built the relationships, and developed the complex architecture of the new strategy — and she turned up at that pivotal moment in Vietnam in July 2010 to declare the U.S. commitment to the region." Secretary Clinton earned praise for her work in opening up Burma, a place that had not been visited by a Secretary of State in 50 years.

Secretary Clinton worked to build the coalition to oust Qadhafi and stop massacres in Libya. As the Washington Post reported upon the end of NATO operations in Libya, "U.S. officials and key allies are offering a detailed new defense of the approach and Clinton's pivotal role – both within a divided Cabinet and a fragile, assembled-on-the-fly international alliance. What emerges from these accounts is a picture of Clinton using her mixture of political pragmatism and tenacity to referee spats among NATO partners, secure crucial backing from Arab countries and tutor rebels on the fine points of message management."

Secretary Clinton engaged in economic statecraft. Secretary Clinton's focus on economic engagement resulted in increased investment through three new free trade agreements (Colombia, Panama and South Korea) and 15 Open Skies agreements including with Japan, Brazil, Saudi Arabia and Israel.

Secretary Clinton brought the State Department into the 21st Century. Secretary Clinton helped the State Department adapt to emerging issues such as cyber security by creating the Center for Strategic Counterterrorism Communications to combat Al-Qaeda's growing influence online. She recognized the important role of energy in U.S. foreign policy and helped create the Bureau of Energy Resources to protect our energy infrastructure and influence how nations move to cleaner fuel.

Secretary Clinton elevated the cause of women's rights to new heights. Secretary Clinton recognized women's rights as a major foreign policy issue. It is, according to Newsweek, the area of "hardships faced by women and girls across the world–that her impact has been most profound." Hillary convinced the White House to allow her to create a new position at the State Department: Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues. Newsweek continued, "Across the world, in diverse and deeply reactionary cultures, Clinton and [Ambassador-at-Large] Verveer have spoken and fought to liberalize attitudes on women's role in the economy, girls' schooling, women's health, domestic violence, issues arising from war and conflict, and myriad other concerns."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Kelli Farr" <kelli@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Kelli Farr" <kelli@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 8/27/2008 2:13:40 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 08/27/08

Main Topics: Barack Obama Nominated, Hillary Clinton

Summary of Shift: Hillary Clinton stole the show tonight when she stopped the role call vote in order to unanimously nominate Barack Obama. The remainder of tonight's news cycle was dominated by the importance of the nomination of the first African American candidate for President. Hillary received much praise for her dedication to a unified party. The very minimal McCain coverage focused on the falsehoods in his recent attack ads and surrogates Rudy Giuliani and Tom Ridge made the rounds touting McCain's experience.

In other news, hurricane Gustav hit Haiti and continues to worry Gulf Coast residents. 2007 Census numbers were released but experts say they paint a better picture than the current economic state of most American families.

Highlights:
1. CBS: McCain's Iran ad "a stretch" and Clinton delegate turned McCain supporter thought he was pro-choice
2. MSNBC: Rudy Giuliani touts McCain's experience with the "Global World"
3. FNC: Tom Ridge explains McCain's foreign policy

Highlights, No Clips:
1. MSNBC: Mike Murphy gave the Bush presidency a "C" grade

Clips:

Highlight #1
McCain's Iran Ad "A Stretch" and Clinton Delegate Turned McCain Supporter Thought He was Pro-Choice (CBS 08/27/08 06:41pm)
DEAN REYNOLDS: The McCain campaign has been hard at work trying to undo those efforts. First was an ad attacking what it said was Obama's position on Iran. [Iran Ad shown] But the ad is a stretch because this is what Obama really said … on the need for diplomacy. [Clip of Obama] But painting Obama as a dangerous risk is a Republican mantra. Rudy Giuliani led the way in Denver just hours before Obama arrives.

RUDY GIULIANI: Joe Biden, his running mate, and this is a very extraordinary situation, has quite often made the point that Barack Obama is unprepared to lead.

REYNOLDS: A parallel GOP attempt to show Democratic discourse has had limited success. On Monday a Clinton Delegate, Debra Bartoschevich told a news conference she was for McCain but apparently it's for the wrong reasons, believing him pro-choice, when in fact he has spent years burnishing his anti-abortion credentials. Horrified McCain aides later avoided the subject. The McCain camp is hoping those Ads they're producing will eventually be picked up by the news media and given wider circulation. But the best man to respond is Barack Obama himself, and that's why his speech tomorrow night is so important.

Highlight #2
Rudy Giuliani Touts McCain's Experience with the "Global World" (MSNBC 08/27/08 1:34pm)
BRIAN WILLIAMS: What will the GOP be stressing and bragging about next week in St. Paul?

RUDY GIULIANI: I think we're going to talk about the fact that our candidate, John McCain, is ready and prepared to be commander-in-chief […] We don't have a part that's split on that issue the way the democrats are split on Barack Obama. […] We believe we have a candidate that's tested, that's ready; and we think we're right on the issues. Americans want to see lower taxes and less government spending, and they want to see a strong military presence […] but mostly it's going to come down to experience. […]

WILLIAMS: The area were your candidate, Senator McCain has admitted weakness has been famously economics. Do you think his VP choice will address that weakness?

GIULIANI: I think he has addressed it by having a much stronger economic plan than Barack Obama. John McCain will lower taxes […] John McCain will keep tariffs low […] Both the things that John wants to do will keep us at growth economy. John McCain is the only one offering a real plan to get us toward energy diversity. […] So I think on the economy, John has the stronger position. Something else- economic policy and foreign policy are the same thing now. I mean, the question is how can a president guide us through the global world. […] We have a presidential candidate that's been all over the world and understands it.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[…]

WILLIAMS: And what can the republicans tell Americans who are concerned about having troops on the ground in two nations overseas; concerned about a rather dire financial outlook- the list of banks that are in trouble yesterday that in the last reporting period went from ninety to well over a hundred; the environment; all of the issues that have been on the plate of the current administration for eight years.? All the stuff they're hitting you with from this podium?

GIULIANI: This is the time to have somebody who has taken independent positions like John McCain. There's nobody in the senate who's been more bipartisan than John McCain. There's no one that's been stronger at reducing spending; something we desperately have to do. I think on the economy he'd be a much stronger leader, and much more capable of working with democrats than Barack Obama would be of working with republicans.

Highlight #3

Tom Ridge Explains McCain's Foreign Policy (FNC 08/27/08 2:43pm)

TOM RIDGE: […] You start with John McCain's assessment of Putin's brand of leadership, when he looked into his eyes and saw three letters: KGB. And John understands fully well when you turn off natural gas to the Ukraine, which they did in the middle of winter to send a signal, and also negotiate a much better deal, this incursion into Georgia, the annexation by the Parliament, apparently of these two individual provinces, the relationship that we have and the approach vis-à-vis Russia, you know John's far better prepared to deal with any problems or challenges associated with that. But the universe of responsibility and potential problems- Iran, Iraq- dealing with the emerging strength of China […]There's only one person that has the experience and the relationships and network in order to affect international policy. By the way, I think John is very much into that notion that when we're engaged globally, you certainly use the military when appropriate, but global engagement means diplomacy, means foreign aid, and it means as many multi-lateral connections and relationships to help solve problems. […]

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Ryan Duncan" <ryan@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Big Campaign" <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com>
Date: 8/7/2008 3:44:20 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 08/07/08

Main Topic: Election Attention, McCain's Ads, Energy, Obama/Clinton Battling Again

Summary of Shift: Attention on the election tonight focused on just that, attention, and how more of it seems to being paid to McCain. This is mostly thanks to his recent ads focusing on Obama's celebrity. These ads continue to be a leading topic of discussion, especially with new reports showing that McCain YouTube web page has beaten Obama's in number of hits for the past seven days in a row. There was some criticism related to this, however, with some pundits pointing out that all these ads coming out at once seem to point to a lack of direction in McCain's.

New Clinton/Obama drama was the most talked about story this evening, overall. Much discussion was paid to whether the Clinton's really want Obama to win at the convention, what role Hillary will play at the convention, and whether Bill will be asked to speak. China, the Olympics, and Bush's visit there today was another major headline, especially focusing on China's human rights abuses and Bush's comments against those, followed by China's response telling Bush to mind his business. There's a new report claiming that Iraqi and U.S. officials are close to cementing a troop withdrawal timeline with troops gone by 2010. A man was arrested for threatening to assassinate Obama. Bin Laden's former driver, Hamdan was sentenced to 5.5 years in prison but was commuted for five of those as time served. And Detroit's mayor is in jail tonight for violating his parole.

Highlights:
1. MSNBC: Focus on McCain: Attention Switching from Obama to McCain
2. FNC: McCain's YouTube Hits Up Thanks to New Ads, But MoveOn.org Responds With Missing Votes Commercial of Their Own
3. CNN: McCain Reusing Old Tactics As He Now Pushes Economic Surge
4. CNN: McCain's Voting Record on Energy Scrutinized, Shadiness Over Big Oil Subsidies Highlighted
5. MSNBC: Leaked McCain Campaign Memo Reveals Plan to Portray Obama as Job Killer
6. FNC: Pawlenty Defends McCain's Efforts To Distance Himself From Bush
7. FNC: Guliani Discusses McCain's Unchanging Ways and Plans for Vice Presidency

Highlights, No Clip:
1. MSNBC – RACHEL MADDOW: "… The crack team at McCain HQ has made a lucrative offer to supporters. Cut and paste pro-McCain comments from the campaign website onto other websites as if they were your own, and you could earn points redeemable for an autographed McCain book or a good seat at a McCain event, or even a ride on McCain's bus. McCaniacs are invited to spread the word by quote, "Selecting from the numerous web, blog and news sites listed here, going there, and making your opinions supporting John McCain known. Once you've commented on a post, video or news story, report the details of your comment by clicking the button below. After your comments are verified, you will be awarded points through the McCain Online Action Center."

Clips:

Highlight #1
Focus on McCain: Attention Switching from Obama to McCain (MSNBC 08/07/08 6:15pm)
RACHEL MADDOW: On today's show there is a two syllable word that you're hearing a lot more of than usual. It is a proper noun, rarely uttered in discussions of 2008 presidential politics, it's the word McCain. For the first time the attention of the campaign is now turning away from Barack Obama and towards John McCain, after a series of four ads all on the subject of John McCain's so called, maverick status. Is that a brand that is too tough for Obama to tarnish? […]

[…]

MADDOW: What about this idea that the democrats are pushing now, that the John McCain of

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2008 is not the same as Maverick John McCain. He's a new John McCain, a worst John McCain, and even if you liked the old guy, you shouldn't like John McCain in his current incarnation. What do you make of that argument?

EUGENE ROBINSON: That seems to me to be a fairly promising argument, fairly easy for the democrats to make because you can just contrast the positions that the John McCain of old took and the positions of the John McCain of today takes. The one who just pledged fidelity to the White House in a way the old John McCain never would. So I think that's a fairly promising argument for the democrats, but I think you made the main point Rachel, which is they're talking about John McCain. It's not all about Barack Obama. […] It's a fundamental shift, I think, when people are asking those questions about John McCain and it takes some of the pressure off of Obama and puts some of the scrutiny on McCain.

TONY BLANKLY: […] I have a different view on these ads. I think for people over 40 or 45 the McCain brand is so indelible as the gag fly, that whatever he or the democrats say won't make much difference. For people under 35 maybe some advertising, if the democrats want to spend millions of dollars, they might be able to move it a bit. But I think this is going to be more age specific because he has such a strong brand for people who remember him over the last 20 years.

Highlight #2
McCain's YouTube Hits Up Thanks to New Ads, But MoveOn.org Responds With Missing Votes Commercial of Their Own (FNC 08/07/08 6:39pm)
BRET BAIER: The ads Senator John McCain has released over the past few weeks appear to be working, at least on the internet. The Washington Times reports the ads focusing on the celebrity of democratic rival Barack Obama have pushed McCain's YouTube channel to the sixth most watched on the website this week. McCain's YouTube webpage has beaten Obama's for seven straight days, and eleven of the last fourteen. That is a huge turnaround. The tracking service, Tube Mogul says Obama had been quadrupling McCain's YouTube views, and had beaten him everyday since February.

Liberal activist group, MoveOn.org, has circulated an online video attacking Senator McCain. It shows McCain calling for Congress to come back to Washington and work on an energy bill, pointing out that McCain has missed more votes than any other senator this year. To drive home that point, the video shows an arrow pointing to an empty seat. The problem, the seat highlighted in the video was in the House chamber. John McCain is a senator and therefore would sit in the Senate chamber. While McCain has missed the most votes in the 110th Congress, Obama is the third biggest offender. […]

Highlight #3
McCain Reusing Old Tactics As He Now Pushes Economic Surge (CNN 08/07/08 4:17pm)
WOLF BLITZER: Meanwhile, on the republican side, John McCain is using an interesting new way to try to describe how he hopes to fix the nation's economic problems. […]

ED HENRY: […] John McCain was already trying to get political credit for the surge working in Iraq, what's interesting now is he's taking the same approach to fixing the economy. Using the same language as the war debate, John McCain is now vowing to boost the economy with tax cuts. Just as vigourously as he worked to send more troops to Iraq last year.

MCCAIN: What we need is an economic strategy, an economic surge. A successful economic surge to keep jobs here at home and create new ones.

HENRY: McCain also sharpened his attacks on Barack Obama, mocking his lack of experience.

MCCAIN: All Americans should be proud of his accomplishments, but Washington is full of talented talkers.

HENRY: In a new refrain he charged Obama's economic approach boils down to increasing taxes and government spending.

[…]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCain was particularly harsh on energy, yet again hammering the democrat for urging Americans to inflate their tires.

[…]

Obama fired back that the tire guage incident shows McCain is more interested in scoring political points then solving the crisis.

[…]

The campaign feels that they are scoring on energy. When McCain blasted Congress in a townhall meeting for going home, going on vacation before dealing with gas prices, there was a big, big standing ovation. A McCain operative turned to me and said, "We're kicking 'blank' on energy." Clearly, they think they've got Obama on the defensive on this issue.

Highlight #4
McCain's Voting Record on Energy Scrutinized, Shadiness Over Big Oil Subsidies Highlighted (CNN 08/07/08 8:30pm)
CAMPBELL BROWN: Barack Obama is trying hard to connect John McCain to President Bush's energy policies, but McCain says woah not so fast.

[McCain's Town Hall in Lima, OH Shown]

[…]

TOM FOREMAN: For weeks Obama has been drawing these links between McCain's energy plan and the policies of President Bush, sticking with the theme that McCain will be just the McSame as Bush. But McCain is now saying let's play that record. In 2005 when a big energy bill came up with potentially far reaching impacts on America's energy supply, President Bush supported the plan. Signed it into law three years ago this week, and 85 senators voted for it, including Barack Obama. Only twelve voted against it, and John McCain was one of them, saying it contained wasteful spending. The bill was sharply criticisized, even at the time for giving billions in subsidies to big oil. But Obama defends his vote, by pointing out that the measure also included funding for alternative and renewable fuels such as ethanol. He is after all a Senator from Illinois, a big corn state, and the nation's third largest ethanol producer. And all of that said, Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi is now hitting McCain on a different vote, saying correctly that last year he could have helped repeal some of those tax breaks for big oil, but he was the only Senator to skip a critical vote on that measure, and big oil one the day.

Highlight #5
Leaked McCain Campaign Memo Reveals Plan to Portray Obama as Job Killer (MSNBC 08/07/08 6:33pm)
RACHEL MADDOW: Next up, a leaked memo from the McCain campaign reveals a strategy to paint Obama as a job killing machine. It's according to a memo that was obtained by the Huffington Post. Quote, "The McCain campaign will paint Obama as being 'aligned with trial lawyers' and 'unions (card check, trade, education reform),' and push the frame that he 'raises taxes' and 'will kill jobs.'" But that could be a tricky strategy for John McCain because his own advisor, former lobbyist Rick Davis, is loosely tied to a proposed closure of the DHL shipping site in Wilmington, OH that has made multiple appearances now on McCain's campaign trail. As many as 8,000 jobs would be lost by this planned closure, McCain tried to persuade DHL fears in Wilmington, OH today by promising Congressional hearings and an investigation led by the justice department. But McCain did admit, quote "I can't assure you that the train wreck isn't going to happen but I will do everything in my power to see that we avert it." […]

Highlight #6
Pawlenty Defends McCain's Efforts To Distance Himself From Bush (FNC 08/07/08 4:39pm)
[…]
NEIL CAVUTO: Still, Governor, there are some conservatives in the party who were a little concerned when

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Senator McCain recently would not make an ironclad guarantee about sticking to tax cuts. And I'm paraphrasing here, but, that he laid open the possibility, in saying in so many words, that taxes could go up under certain circumstances. What about just the no tax pledge, sticking to it, pounding it repeating it.

TIM PAWLENTY: In fairness to Senator McCain, he did come out shortly after those initial concerns and definitely clarify those statements, saying he was opposed to tax increases. So, over the years I think he's said in the context of a social security discussion, he would have a discussion, at least, about anything. But, as it relates to tax increases, he clarified his statement very promptly after that concern was raised to say he wasn't going to raise any taxes.
[…]

CAVUTO: Governor, Senator McCain has gone on record in saying via an ad that we are worse off than we were four years ago. Some of course, in the Bush White House, interpreted as a slap on the President. Was it?

PAWLENTY: Well, that can be objectively measured. I think Senator McCain and President Bush have had some tense relationships over the years on a variety of issues. But, if you look back at the key measurements of quality of life, or economic performance that's not a disputable matter, in the sense that you can go back and measure it. Whether it's fair or accurate is something that can be proven, not debated.

CAVUTO: […] Would you as a friend, and advisor be telling Senator McCain get as far away from President Bush as you can?

PAWLENTY: Well, Senator McCain has an established record and reputation for being a maverick, being an independent, and you look at all the times that he has taken on or been different than the President, including the surge, including torture, including nuclear proliferation issues, including spending, and energy issues as well, Senator McCain has already has a reputation being different then, or separated from President Bush.
[…]

Highlight #7
Guliani Discusses McCain's Unchanging Ways and Plans for Vice Presidency (FNC 08/07/08 5:04pm)

NAUERT: And there was a flurry of emails that came out today. They're all denouncing John McCain, saying, "Ok. He was an okay guy back then, but look now how far he has moved south. How much he has embraced President Bush."

GULIANI: I've known John forever. I mean a long time. He's a very good friend, and is essentially the same John McCain I knew ten years ago, fifteen years ago. Uh, same positions… on climate change… on energy. I mean, he's essentially the same guy.

NAUERT: Do you think he'll end up regretting this ad in any sense in that it could potentially hurt him with his conservative base?

GULIANI: I don't think so. Look. You've got a president of all the people. Yes, he is a republican, yes, he is a conservative, But most of all he's an American. I mean, that's the thing about John McCain that makes you admire him. You know it all comes from his great love for this country, he's going to put the country first. And the party is important, but the part comes second. The country comes first.

NAUERT: Okay. And that's certainly a theme that he's been echoing, uh, this week and last. You said he should wait until Barack Obama picks his VP.

GULIANI: I would wait. You know he's gonna make the decision he makes when he wants to make it. I'd like to have all the information available, including who Barack Obama picks. I would imagine that at this point John has it down to four or five people who he would be satisfied with would be good presidents. But then you've got to pick that one that would be a very good president , that could step right in, take over in a moment's notice, but also, obviously, one that would help him win the election.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[…]

NAUERT: … Does he need a younger person? Does he need, you know-

GULIANI: … he needs a person with experience, with background. And someone he's confident can be his partner. Because the vice president now has to be a partner in the sense of the vice president has to know what's going on, has to be part of it. We live in a world in which things happen so fast that, um, we need a vice president who's ready. I remember in September 11th-

NAUERT: No one knows that better than you.

GULIANI: I remember on September 11th being told the vice president was going to call me back. Um. I didn't know what happened to the president that morning. And the idea that Dick Cheney was going to call me back. First off, I thought, where is the president, what happened to the president, and I said, well, Dick Cheney is a man who has the background and experience to handle this, if God forbid he has to. But thank god that wasn't the case, and president Bush was okay, but that's something we have to be ready for.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 1/17/2015 6:00:12 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Saturday January 17, 2015 Roundup

Correct The Record Saturday January 17, 2015 Roundup:

Headlines:

MSNBC: “Is this Hillary Clinton’s economic agenda?”

“A new report from a leading Democratic think tank offers clues about how Hillary Clinton might tackle economic inequality, which has become a key motivating issue of the progressive base, if she decides to run for president in 2016.”

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: “Clinton: Focus more on wages, less on regs”

“Hillary Clinton on Friday criticized the new Republican-controlled Congress for trying to boost economic growth by loosening regulations, which progressives say would weaken financial watchdogs.”

MSNBC: “Clinton slams GOP attempts to roll back Wall Street reform”

“Hillary Clinton has been very careful about which issues she weighs in on as she considers a second run for the presidency in 2016, but she took to Twitter Friday to condemn Republican attempts to gut the Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform law.”

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: “RNC chairman: 'We're ready for Hillary'”

“Republican National Committee Chairman Reince Priebus said in a speech Friday that ‘we're ready for Hillary’ and previewed a line of attack linking the former secretary of State to the Obama administration.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Politico: “Mitt Romney's 2016 pitch: I'm a foreign policy prophet”

"But, as Democrats point out, any losing candidate can cherry-pick a few issues that later broke his way. And Romney’s batting average was hardly perfect. Nor do bragging rights on a few specific issues necessarily translate to a popular foreign policy vision overall."

New York Times: Sec. Clinton supports pro-democracy Saudi blogger

“Ms. Badawi also sued the government in 2011 for not allowing women to vote in local elections, a move cited by the State Department when it gave her an International Woman of Courage Award in 2012. ‘You are making a difference,’ Hillary Rodham Clinton, then secretary of state, told her at the award ceremony, which was also attended by Michelle Obama.”

The Weekly Standard: “Hillary Clinton's Charlie Hebdo Problem”

“What seems most likely is that Clinton has remained silent in response to the Charlie Hebdo massacre in order to avoid scrutiny of her own failure to defend free speech in the face of Islamist violence.”

The Hill blog: “Five reasons the left doesn’t believe Elizabeth Warren”

"Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) has said time and time that against she’s not running for president in 2016."

Articles:

MSNBC: “Is this Hillary Clinton’s economic agenda?”

By Alex Seitz-Wald and Suzy Khimm

January 16, 2015, 6:27 p.m. EST

A new report from a leading Democratic think tank offers clues about how Hillary Clinton might tackle economic inequality, which has become a key motivating issue of the progressive base, if she decides to run for president in 2016.

The report, assembled by an international panel of prominent economists and policy experts, tries to tackle one of the biggest and most difficult questions of contemporary economics – how to boost wages for the middle class and share prosperity more broadly. As Massachusetts Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren and many others have noted, while much of economy has recovered from the 2008 financial crisis, middle class wages remain stagnant.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But while Warren pins the blame on Wall Street, the Center for American Progress report, released Thursday, takes a broader and less confrontational approach, highlights a wide basket of policy solutions employed successfully by other countries. Its authors have embraced a more positive, hopeful message of economic empowerment, putting aside the messier and more contentious questions of whether and how such sweeping initiatives would be paid for.

Clinton will have to “walk a tightrope” between speaking to the middle class and Wall Street, as longtime Clinton donor Alan Patricof put it on Bloomberg TV Friday. “I think that she’s very sensitive to this kind of Elizabeth Warren trying to paint her as being identified with Wall Street,” he added.

It’s hard not see the report as the potential seed of an economic agenda that helps Clinton walk that tightrope. It tackles the issues Americans consistently list as their top priority in polls – jobs and the economy – but in a way that’s less likely to alienate the business community and financial sector, or appear inauthentic to her own identity. The report’s international focus also plays to the former secretary of state’s strengths, and it would allow her to promote lessons she’s learned from her many travels abroad.

“In our time, advocates and apologists for anti-democratic regimes argue that the democracies are no longer capable of managing their problems or creating a sense of social dynamism. Democracies are cast as sclerotic, inefficient, and ungovernable,” the report says. “But countering this persistent attack on democracy requires that free economic and political systems restore their vitality and reclaim their ability to deliver on the promise of prosperity for all.”

Democrats made inequality a centerpiece of their 2014 campaign, but the party’s steep losses in November suggest that their message and policy prescriptions weren’t strong enough to break through. Now that the pace of the recovery has picked up, they’re also struggling to take credit for the recovery while acknowledging the work that still needs to be done to make sure those gains reach ordinary Americans.

The CAP report suggests one potential way forward, providing a broad framework and positive message of empowerment that encompasses many of the economic policies that Clinton has highlighted in recent years, from paid family leave to a higher minimum wage to more affordable college education.

If the report seems tailor made for a Clinton campaign, that might not be an accident. CAP, after all, was founded by key Clinton allies to be an ideas factory for establishment Democrats.

Its current president, Neera Tanden, was Clinton’s policy director and one of her closest aides during the 2008 presidential campaign. Tanden keeps in touch with Clinton and her aides today, and will likely advise Clinton’s 2016 campaign from the outside, though Tanden has said she’s not interested in a day-to-day job on the campaign.

In addition to Tanden, the task force behind the report included former Michigan Gov. Jennifer Granholm, a board member of the pro-Clinton Priorities USA super PAC, and economist Larry Summers, who served as treasury secretary under Bill Clinton. And the man who founded CAP, John Podesta, served as Bill Clinton’s last chief of staff and is expected to become the chairman of Clinton’s 2016 presidential campaign should she decide to run.

Though Clinton has yet to lay out a detailed policy agenda, she has stressed the urgent need to deal with inequality since at least the spring. “The dream of upward mobility that made this country a model for the world feels further and further out of reach and many Americans understandably feel frustrated, even angry,” Clinton said during a high-profile speech in May at the New America Foundation.

And on Friday, Clinton tweeted that Congress should focus on helping the middle class, instead of rolling back financial reform, as Republicans are trying to do.

[The Hill blog: Briefing Room: “Clinton: Focus more on wages, less on regs”]

By Kevin Cirilli

January 16, 2015, 2:37 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton on Friday criticized the new Republican-controlled Congress for trying to boost economic growth by loosening regulations, which progressives say would weaken financial watchdogs.

"Attacking financial reform is risky and wrong. Better for Congress to focus on jobs and wages for middle class families," Clinton tweeted on Friday.

The former secretary of State and presumed Democratic presidential frontrunner has received criticism from progressives in her party who are concerned about her ties to Wall Street.

But the tweet is a clear signal that Clinton is looking to adjust her tone as she continues to mull her expected presidential campaign.

Clinton's tweet comes as progressives continue their efforts to try and draft Warren to challenge Clinton from the left in 2016. On Saturday, MoveOn.org will launch its efforts in New Hampshire with a kick-off campaign for its "Run Warren Run" effort, which the liberal group funded with a $1 million donation last month.

Earlier this week, the House passed legislation on a 271-154 vote that would delay for two-years the implementation of a portion of the 2010 Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform law.

[MSNBC: “Clinton slams GOP attempts to roll back Wall Street reform”]

By Alex Seitz-Wald

January 16, 2015, 3:50 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton has been very careful about which issues she weighs in on as she considers a second run for the presidency in 2016, but she took to Twitter Friday to condemn Republican attempts to gut the Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform law.

“Attacking financial reform is risky and wrong. Better for Congress to focus on jobs and wages for middle class families,” Clinton tweeted to her 2.66 million followers.

Many will read the move as channeling Sen. Elizabeth Warren, the Massachusetts Democrat who has risen to prominence as the Senate’s top Wall Street foe.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Now that Republicans control both chambers of Congress, they're preparing for a showdown over the 2010 financial reform law, which they say is too burdensome on business.

Late last year, President Barack Obama signed a government funding bill that included a provision to remove a part of the law that dealt with financial instruments known as swaps, despite vociferous objections from Warren and other progressive Democrats.

And this week, the House approved a measure on a largely party-line vote to reign in regulators, with more attacks on regulations promised for the future. The White House has threatened to veto attempts to gut progressive regulations, but Republicans may find ways to slip the measures into larger must-pass legislation, as they did with the funding bill in December.

Clinton, who faces criticism from some progressives over her financial support from Wall Street, has been trying to find ways to shore up her left flank ahead of a presidential run. She stumbled during a joint appearance with Warren last year when she said business don't create jobs.

Clinton tweets rarely, and the vast majority are about her work at the Clinton family's charitable foundation.

The presumed Democratic front-runner typically waits until her next planned public appearance before weighing in on the issue of the day, whether it's Syria or protests in Ferguson. Clinton has been laying low for about a month, but has two speeches scheduled for next week in Canada, sponsored by a Canadian bank.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "RNC chairman: 'We're ready for Hillary'"

By Peter Sullivan

January 16, 2015, 2:51 p.m. EST

Republican National Committee Chairman Reince Priebus said in a speech Friday that "we're ready for Hillary" and previewed a line of attack linking the former secretary of State to the Obama administration.

"At the RNC, we're not waiting until Hillary's the nominee; we're not waiting until she announces to go after her record," Priebus told the RNC's Winter Meeting in San Diego. "We've been preparing for a long, long time, and we're Ready for Hillary."

Priebus previewed what could be a line of attack against Hillary Clinton, arguing that she represents a continuation of President Obama's policies.

The extent to which Clinton differentiates herself from Obama is a major question. Likely Clinton campaign chairman John Podesta said this month that Clinton "will have some different views from the president," but "for the most part" agrees with his policies.

"We're ready to show America that this country can do better than Hillary Clinton and Obama's third term," Priebus said. "Because the next generation deserves better."

The RNC has already been attacking Clinton's paid speeches and travel requirements, dubbing her "high-flying Hillary." Priebus continued this line of criticism in the speech, referencing her gaffe last year that she was "dead broke" after leaving the White House.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"And let's be clear: she is campaigning," Priebus said. "She's just found a way to get paid really, really well for it. For example, bilking cash-strapped public universities for a quarter million dollars to fly in on a private jet and give a speech about nothing. But, she still wants you to know she's just your average 'dead-broke' American."

Priebus has also recently said that the RNC has opposition researchers in Arkansas looking for dirt, and that Bill Clinton's personal life is "fair game."

While Clinton is widely seen as by far the Democratic frontrunner, the Republican side has a wide field of viable candidates. But Priebus played up that contrast.

"The good news is we have great potential candidates for president," Priebus said. "Our voters are going to have a real choice. Leaders with diverse backgrounds and diverse experiences. We should be excited because this means real debates and real conversations."

"I'd much rather have that than what the Democrats have," he added.

Politico: "Mitt Romney's 2016 pitch: I'm a foreign policy prophet"

By Michael Crowley

January 17, 2015, 8:19 a.m. EST

[Subtitle:] But is he right about that?

He saw Vladimir Putin as a threat to peace. He insisted that radical Islam was spreading. He warned that Iraq was at risk without American troops to stabilize it.

And he was right.

As Mitt Romney's supporters push the idea that the 2012 Republican nominee might run for president again, one of their core talking points is that Romney was a foreign policy prophet in the last campaign. His vindication on several scores, they argue, gives him a rationale to run again — and a leg up on his potential Republican rivals.

"The results of the Hillary Clinton-Barack Obama foreign policy have been devastating," Romney declared at the Republican National Committee's winter meeting in San Diego on Friday. "The world is not safer."

But, as Democrats point out, any losing candidate can cherry-pick a few issues that later broke his way. And Romney's batting average was hardly perfect. Nor do bragging rights on a few specific issues necessarily translate to a popular foreign policy vision overall.

"Romney was right about the world getting more complicated," said Mieke Eoyang, director of the National Security Project at the moderate

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Democratic think tank Third Way. “But a complicated world doesn’t mean a more simplistic response, which is what Romney was offering.”

Back in 2012, President Barack Obama was less charitable. “You haven’t been in a position to actually execute foreign policy,” Obama told Romney in an October debate. “But every time you’ve offered an opinion, you’ve been wrong.”

More than two years later, however, hindsight suggests that’s not true. Romney offered warnings on several major issues that now appear prescient.

On Iraq, for instance, Romney told an audience in November 2011 that America’s withdrawal from the country the prior year was “an enormous mistake,” one that “puts at risk many of the victories that were hard-won by the men and women who have served there.” Obama later scoffed at his rival’s claim that the U.S. should have maintained a long-term troop presence in Iraq. Two years later, Obama has ordered thousands of troops back there to prevent the country’s collapse.

Putin’s annexation of Crimea and his intervention in eastern Ukraine dominated much of last year for Obama. But as early as December 2011 Romney called Putin ”a real threat to the stability and peace of the world,” noting that the Russian president’s rhetoric had been growing sharper.

After Romney later called Russia America’s top “geopolitical foe,” blocking U.S. interests at the United Nations and elsewhere, Obama openly ridiculed him: “The 1980s are calling to ask for their foreign policy back,” the president told Romney in an October 2012 debate. “You know, the Cold War’s been over for 20 years.”

Romney also cast repeated doubt on Obama’s claim that, after Osama bin Laden’s killing, al Qaeda was “on the run.” He warned about the spread of radical Islam in the Middle East and North Africa. “This is a group that is now involved in 10 or 12 countries, and it presents an enormous threat … and we must have a comprehensive strategy to help reject this kind of extremism,” Romney said. That characterization of the Islamist threat seems more apt as extremist violence surges around the world.

Beyond the emotional satisfaction of saying “I told you so,” people close to Romney argue that the 2012 record positions the former Massachusetts governor well for his third straight White House bid.

“Romney was right about a lot of this stuff. But I don’t see it as vindication,” said a former senior Romney advisor. “I think it’s a demonstration that he has a view of the world that’s rooted in reality.”

Credibility on foreign policy could matter more in 2016 than in the last presidential contest. Amid terror threats and the beheadings of Americans in the Middle East, voter concern about national security has spiked sharply.

Romney may also find it harder to repeat his warnings that the U.S. economy is headed for a crisis. Romney set a target of unemployment under 6 percent by the end of his first time. The jobless rate currently stands at 5.6 percent.

Meanwhile, Democrats say Romney is more vulnerable than he appears. “I think he should run again. It would be great for the Democratic Party,” said Tommy Vietor, a former Obama White House national security spokesman.

Vietor insisted that claims of Romney’s vindication overlook Obama’s repeated caveats that Islamic terrorism was still a threat even after the death of bin Laden. And he argued that Obama’s response to Putin had helped to cripple Russia’s economy. “Putin turned out to be his own greatest enemy,” Vietor said.

Romney’s hard-line approach to Iran, said Eoyang, would have precluded the nuclear talks Obama began in late 2013, which have paused the progress of Iran’s nuclear program. “He was totally wrong on Iran,” Eoyang said, saying that putting greater pressure on Iran would “potentially force us into another military confrontation."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And Democrats scoffed at the contention of an unnamed Romney advisor quoted in the Boston Globe last week, who said that "there wouldn't be an ISIS at all," if Romney were president.

One former advisor declined to repeat that assertion, saying "you can't run the counterfactual in history," while adding that Romney would have taken stronger action to arm and train moderate Syrian rebels — perhaps blunting the rise of radical Islamists in that country.

Romney can't perfectly recreate his campaign against Obama, of course. But one Romney advisor, foreshadowing a likely Republican line of attack for 2016, said that's not a problem. "Will you be running against Obama? Nope. You'll be running against the architect of his foreign policy" — namely, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton.

Democrats claim to be unfazed by such cocky talk. "Things aren't perfect," said Vietor, who has worked on behalf of Clinton since leaving the White House. "But by no means do I think Mitt was borne out to be the next Henry Kissinger."

New York Times: Sec. Clinton supports pro-democracy Saudi blogger

By Ben Hubbard

January 16, 2015

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A lawyer in Saudi Arabia who founded a human rights group was sentenced to 15 years in prison. His wife, a women's advocate who won a courage award from the State Department, says she is barred from leaving the country. Her brother, a writer who ran a liberal online forum, is also in jail and was sentenced to be caned regularly in a public square over the next few months.

International condemnation of the writer's sentence, which also included a prison term and a heavy fine, has mounted since a video of him receiving his first round of blows appeared on YouTube, and the State Department and the United Nations have called for the caning to stop.

The Saudi authorities did not administer the second round of blows as scheduled on Friday. But the case of the writer, Raif Badawi, has nonetheless drawn new attention to the Saudi government's harsh treatment of dissidents for acts that are considered anything but criminal in the West.

Adding to the scrutiny of Saudi Arabia's legal system are the rise of the Islamic State extremist group, which, like Saudi Arabia, claims to rule according to Shariah, and the attack on the French newspaper Charlie Hebdo for its satirical portrayals of the Prophet Muhammad, an act considered criminal in Saudi Arabia.

The Saudi government, which has joined the United States-led air campaign against the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, condemned the violence in Paris as a "cowardly terrorist attack which is incompatible with Islam." But at home, Saudi rulers strike hard at those who question how they apply Islam to governance, rights groups say.

"There is just no tolerance for any kind of domestic dissent or activism," said Adam Coogle, a researcher for Human Rights Watch. "They have made it a red line and a zero-sum game, where anyone who crosses that line will be dealt with."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The caning of Mr. Badawi is the latest step by the Saudi government to punish a small group of activists in the western port city of Jidda who have challenged the kingdom's fundamentalist, patriarchal system, to the fury of the state and conservative elements of Saudi society, including their own families.

Speaking through Skype from Jidda, Samar Badawi said her problems began after she fled her father's house and moved into a shelter for battered women. Her father, angry that she had left, filed a lawsuit against her in 2009 for "parental disobedience."

For her defense, she took on a young lawyer named Waleed Abulkhair, who had started a group to track human rights in Saudi Arabia, and the two found common ground in their activism.

"He was a rights activist, and his path was full of dangers, so would he be able to find a woman who would put up with the thorny road he was on?" Ms. Badawi said.

For her part, she liked how he valued women's rights.

The couple decided to marry, but Ms. Badawi's father withheld his consent. So she sued him under a Saudi law that makes it illegal to prevent a woman from marrying.

At the first court hearing in that lawsuit, she was arrested on the disobedience charge and spent six months in jail, according to Human Rights Watch. After she was released, she prevailed in both cases — hers against her father and her father's against her — and she and Mr. Abulkhair finally married.

The couple worked together on rights campaigns, calling for women to have the right to drive in the kingdom and criticizing Saudi Arabia's guardianship system, which generally bars women from working, marrying or traveling abroad without the permission of a male guardian.

Ms. Badawi also sued the government in 2011 for not allowing women to vote in local elections, a move cited by the State Department when it gave her an International Woman of Courage Award in 2012.

"You are making a difference," Hillary Rodham Clinton, then secretary of state, told her at the award ceremony, which was also attended by Michelle Obama.

But the Saudi government was pursuing her husband, barring him from traveling abroad, detaining him for holding "unauthorized gatherings" and charging him with various crimes, including seeking to overthrow the head of state, tarnishing the reputation of the judiciary and forming an unlicensed organization, according to a State Department report.

Mr. Abulkhair was convicted last year and is now serving a 15-year prison sentence. The United States government says he was punished for "exercising his rights to freedom of expression and association."

Ms. Badawi has continued her activism. But she said that when she tried to fly to Geneva a few months ago, she was told that she, too, was barred from traveling.

Meanwhile, Ms. Badawi's brother, Raif, started a website called "Free Saudi Liberal Network" that featured writings by him and others who had often criticized Saudi Arabia's religious establishment.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“He wanted to create an environment where there was an open forum to talk about ideas,” said his wife, Ensaf Haidar, who spoke by telephone from Canada, where she has political asylum with the couple’s three children.

On the website, which has since been taken down, Mr. Badawi criticized what he considered religious hypocrisy, lauded Western legal systems and said that atheists should have the right to state their views without punishment, according to Saudi court documents.

Prominent clerics responded with accusations that he was seeking to spread atheism, and he received personal threats, his wife said. Mr. Badawi’s father, Mohammed Badawi, denounced him and his sister repeatedly on television; in one program, the father said his children’s minds had been “formatted” like hard disks and filled with ideas that were foreign to Saudi society.

“I hope he will go down to the square of retribution, he and my daughter, to receive their retribution in front of me,” the elder Mr. Badawi said. “The reason: infidelity to God.”

Mr. Badawi’s wife said he was arrested at a supermarket in 2012. A Saudi court convicted him of running a website that promoted “heresy” and of not removing comments that were considered insulting to God, Islam and prominent Saudi clerics, according to court documents.

He was sentenced to 10 years in prison and 1,000 blows, to be given in installments of 50 with at least a week in between; he was also fined more than $250,000.

In the video showing the first installment on Jan. 9, a uniformed security officer swiftly strikes Mr. Badawi up and down his back with a wooden cane as a crowd looks on. Mr. Badawi squirms a bit, and the crowd applauds and yells “God is great!” as he is led away.

Mustafa Alani, an analyst with the Gulf Research Center who often works in Saudi Arabia, said that while the cases of the three dissidents had raised alarm in the West, few people in the conservative kingdom were bothered by them.

“These people have no support from the great majority of Saudi society,” Mr. Alani said. “They think that those people are weird, and influenced by the West, and trying to damage the interests of Saudi Arabia.”

He said the Saudi government faced competing pressures in dealing with human rights issues, with the West calling for more openness and tolerance of dissent while powerful conservatives at home want strict enforcement and punishment. He said that international pressure might have prompted the delay in the second round of caning for Mr. Badawi, and that the Saudi authorities might decide that one round was enough.

“You need to send a message,” he said, “and the message has already been sent.”

The Weekly Standard: “Hillary Clinton's Charlie Hebdo Problem”

By John McCormack

January 16, 2015, 3:52 p.m. EST

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In the days since the Charlie Hebdo massacre, the response from American politicians has ranged from pathetic to parodic. Through his press secretary, President Obama expressed regret on Monday that neither he nor any other high-ranking American official joined 44 world leaders who marched alongside millions in Paris last weekend. Then on Friday, in an effort to make amends, Secretary of State John Kerry brought James Taylor to Paris to sing "You've Got a Friend."

The response from Hillary Clinton, the former secretary of state and likely 2016 Democratic presidential nominee, hasn't been any better. Clinton has remained silent about the Charle Hebdo massacre since it occurred on January 7.

Clinton's spokesman Nick Merrill confirmed in an email to THE WEEKLY STANDARD that the former secretary of state has not publicly commented on the attack, but Merrill declined to give any particular reason for Clinton's silence. (She did manage to find the time Friday afternoon, however, to condemn Republicans in Congress for "[a]ttacking financial reform.")

What seems most likely is that Clinton has remained silent in response to the Charlie Hebdo massacre in order to avoid scrutiny of her own failure to defend free speech in the face of Islamist violence.

Three days after the September 11, 2012 terrorist attack killed four Americans, including Ambassodor Chris Stevens, in Benghazi, Libya, Clinton attended a ceremony at Andrews Air Force Base welcoming home the remains of the slain Americans. While flanked by four four flag-draped caskets, Clinton blamed an "awful internet video that we had nothing to do with" for the "rage and violence directed at American embassies." Clinton did not, in the course of her speech, defend the right to free speech.

What's worse, Clinton privately told the father of one of the CIA officers killed in Benghazi: "We will make sure that the person who made that film is arrested and prosecuted." By the end of the month, an American citizen known as Nakoula Basseley Nakoula, the man who made the anti-Islam YouTube video, was indeed arrested for violating the terms of his probation. He was later sentenced to a year in jail for using a name other than his given legal name.

A number of questions remain for Hillary Clinton: Does she dispute the claim that she said she would "make sure that the person who made that film is arrested and prosecuted"? How did she know on September 14 that the American who made the film was going to be arrested? And does Clinton see any difference between the blasphemous Charlie Hebdocartoons and the blasphemous anti-Islam YouTube video?

"I'd refer you to what she wrote in her book," Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill told me in an email. When I replied that the book does not address the questions I was asking, Merrill wrote: "She addresses the attack fully and comprehensively in Hard Choices, I don't have anything to add to that."

Despite her spokesman's stonewalling, we do know that Clinton did not dispute in her book the claim that she vowed the American filmmaker would be arrested and prosecuted, and her spokesman is not disputing it now. We also know, of course, that the terrorist attack on Benghazi was not the result of a spontaneous protest in response to the offensive video, but the filmmaker became a convenient scapegoat for an administration arguing that al Qaeda was on the run.

"A violation of probation, though, usually produces a court summons and doesn't typically lead to more jail time unless it involves an offense that would be worth prosecuting in its own right under federal standards. Not for Nakoula," National Review's Rich Lowry wrote in a column in May of 2013. "This wasn't a case of nailing Al Capone on tax evasion. As Nina Shea of the Hudson Institute points out, Al Capone's underlying offense was racketeering and gangland killings. Nakoula Basseley Nakoula's underlying offense wasn't an underlying offense. He exercised his First Amendment rights."

The Hill blog: "Five reasons the left doesn't believe Elizabeth Warren"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Kevin Cirilli

January 17, 2015, 8:50 a.m. EST

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) has said time and time that against she's not running for president in 2016.

But don't tell that to her fans in the Democratic Party.

Supporters on the left are moving full-steam ahead with efforts to draft her into the 2016 race, believing it's only a matter of time before the Massachusetts senator changes her mind — and becomes the populist challenger to Hillary Clinton that they think the party desperately needs.

Here are five reasons the left hears "yes" when Warren says "no."

1.) She hasn't definitively ruled out a presidential run.

Warren has yet to definitely say she won't run for president in 2016, choosing instead to phrase her denials by saying she isn't running now.

"Every candidate says they're not running before deciding to run," said Erica Sagrans, campaign director at Ready For Warren.

Sagrans pointed to 2012 GOP presidential nominee Mitt Romney, who up until this week insisted he wasn't running for president. Now there are reports he's mulling a third presidential bid.

"Things change fast in politics, and Warren hasn't ruled anything out," Sagrans said.

Political watchers say Warren is smart to keep Washington guessing about her political ambitions.

"Warren is wisely hedging her bets. She is underselling herself politically by saying, 'No,' which is intriguing to the base but she is leaving room to potentially over-deliver publicly should the circumstances merit her jumping into the 2016 fray," said Ford O'Connell, a GOP strategist.

2.) She's distancing herself from President Obama.

Warren flexed her political muscle during the budget negotiations late last year and spearheaded a successful revolt against an Obama nominee to the Treasury Department with ties to Wall Street.

Her attention-grabbing moves come at a time when Democrats are fiercely debating whether to move to the middle on economic issues or shift to the left.

"She's shown that she can rally, hold and lead progressives groups these past few weeks, especially," said Neil Sroka, communications director at the liberal Democracy For America, which is pushing to draft Warren into the presidential race.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Warren also has worked to get the White House to issue a veto threat on a financial regulatory bill she says would weaken Wall Street regulations.

"She's battling the White House on a lot of these issues," Sroka said.

3.) She hasn't ordered the grass roots groups to shut it down.

Groups like Ready For Warren and MoveOn.org's $1 million-funded "Run Warren Run" campaign are maneuvering in early caucus and primary states Iowa and New Hampshire. On Saturday, hundreds of supporters are expected to attend MoveOn's draft Warren kick-off event in New Hampshire.

In August, Warren's attorney filed a letter with the Federal Elections Commission (FEC) saying she wasn't endorsing "Ready For Warren," but has yet to personally comment on the groups' efforts.

"We're not running this campaign because of some sort of parsing of her speech," said Nick Berning, MoveOn.org communications director. "We take her at her word. We're running the campaign because we think our country will be better off if she enters the race."

"Elizabeth Warren has always been a reluctant politician, but she has always listened to her supporters," Sagrans said.

Sagrans noted that in Warren's book, the senator wrote that she was persuaded to challenge then-Sen. Scott Brown (R-Mass.) during the 2012 Senate race after one of her supporters urged her to get in.

"We've got an entire nation asking the same question now, and we think it's in Warren's nature to give the same answer she gave last time: 'Yes, I'll fight,'" Sagrans said.

4.) Her promotional tour didn't end after the midterms.

Warren campaigned heavily during the 2014 midterm election campaign, hitting the trail in states like Iowa, Kentucky and West Virginia. While she campaigned for these candidates, it also seems to have fueled national interest in her own political career.

Veteran pollster Peter D. Hart, chairman of Hart Associates, last week released the results of a special interest group with 12 voters in Aurora, Colo. that found widespread intrigue with Warren.

"There's a connection that she's made in terms of talking about the economy," Hart said. "The most established candidates, such as Mitt Romney, Jeb Bush, Hillary Clinton and Chris Christie — they did less well."

Still, Hart noted that, "someone who is appealing before they're in [the race] may not find the same type of appeal once they've announced."

"That doesn't diminish Elizabeth Warren," he said. "But she's connected as a person who is talking about economic issues in the way the public is responding positively."

5.) She's remained tight-lipped about Hillary Clinton.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It seems that virtually every prominent Democratic politician is being asked about Clinton ahead of 2016. While Warren did join each of the female Democratic senators in the last Congress in signing a letter urging Clinton to run, she has not openly endorsed her probably candidacy.

In an interview with The Washington Post in June, Warren declined an opportunity to defend Clinton after she said in an ABC News interview that she and former President Bill Clinton were "dead broke" after leaving the White House.

The Post reported that Warren paused for "a full 19 seconds" because answering: "Uh, I was surprised."

"There is no question about Warren is mulling a run and she has the dynastic Team Hillary unnerved," said O'Connell, the GOP strategist.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· January 21 – Saskatchewan, Canada: Sec. Clinton keynotes the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce's "Global Perspectives" series (MarketWired)

· January 21 – Winnipeg, Canada: Sec. Clinton keynotes the Global Perspectives series (Winnipeg Free Press)

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

· March 4 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton to fundraise for the Clinton Foundation (WSJ)

· March 19 – Atlantic City, NJ: Sec. Clinton keynotes American Camp Association conference (PR Newswire)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Oren Shur" <oshur@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Josh Schwerin" <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com> hrcrapid <HRCrapid@googlegroups.com>
Date:	4/26/2015 3:31:53 AM
Subject:	RE: 'This Week' Transcript: 'Clinton Cash' Author Peter Schweizer

nice work here

From: hrcrapid@googlegroups.com [mailto:hrcrapid@googlegroups.com] On Behalf Of Josh Schwerin Sent: Sunday, April 26, 2015 9:49 AM
To: hrcrapid
Subject: 'This Week' Transcript: 'Clinton Cash' Author Peter Schweizer

'This Week' Transcript: 'Clinton Cash' Author Peter Schweizer

Apr 26, 2015, 9:34 AM ET

This is a rush transcript for April 26, 2015. It will be updated and may contain errors.
http://abcnews.go.com/Politics/week-transcript-clinton-cash-author-peter-schweizer/story?id=30568766&singlePage=true

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, HOST: And the author of "Clinton Clash," Peter Schweizer, joins us now.

Thank you for joining us this morning, Peter.

You know, I was looking at the book jacket right here and you say that, here in the book jacket that your reporting raises serious and alarming questions about judgment of possible indebtedness to an array of foreign interests and ultimately, a fitness for high public office.

So how does your reporting show that Hillary Clinton may be unfit for the presidency?

PETER SCHWEIZER, AUTHOR, "CLINTON CLASH": Well, I think the real question here, George, is when you ever have an issue of the flow of funds to political candidates, whether that's to their campaigns, whether that's to private foundations, whether that's to their spouse, is there evidence of a pattern of -- of favorable decisions being made for those individuals?

And I think the -- the point that we make in the book is that there is a troubling pattern.

There are dozens of examples of that occurring.

Some people, I think particularly the Clinton camp, would say that these are all coincidence. I don't think, when you're talking about 12 instances, you're talking coincidence. I think you're talking trend.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But you take it pretty far. You write that, "The pattern of behavior is troubling enough to warrant further investigation by law enforcement (INAUDIBLE)."..

SCHWEIZER: Correct.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Do you have any evidence that a crime may have been committed?

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think it's -- if you look at a couple of recent examples. For example, Governor McConnell down in Virginia, or you look at Senator Menendez , in these cases, you didn't have evidence of a quid pro quo. What you had was funds flowing to elected officials, some of them gifts, some of them campaign contributions and actions that were being taken by those public officials that seemed to benefit the contributors.

Certainly, I think it warrants investigation. What that investigation will reveal, we'll see.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But a criminal investigation?

SCHWEIZER: Well, we'll see. I mean that's what the Governor McConnell has faced and that's what Menendez has faced.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But the...

SCHWEIZER: And I think the evidence here is far more widespread in terms of repeated action than there were in those two instances.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

STEPHANOPOULOS: As you know, the Clinton campaign says you haven't produced a shred of evidence that there was any official action as secretary that -- that supported the interests of donors.

SCHWEIZER: Well...

STEPHANOPOULOS: We've done investigative work here at ABC News, found no proof of any kind of direct action. And an independent government ethics expert, Bill Allison, of the Sunline Foundation (ph), wrote this. He said, "There's no smoking gun, no evidence that she changed the policy based on donations to the foundation."

No smoking gun.

Is there a smoking gun?

SCHWEIZER: Yes. The smoking gun is in the pattern of behavior. And here's the analogy I would give you. It's a little bit like insider trading . I wrote a book on Congressional insider trading a couple of years ago and talked with prosecutors.

Most people that engage in criminal insider trading don't send an e-mail that says I've got inside information, buy this stock.

The way they look at it, they look at a pattern of stock trades. If the person has access to that information and then they do a series of well-timed trades. That warrants investigation.

I think the same thing applies here.

By the way, what's important to note is it was confirmed on Thursday, both by "The New York Times" and "The Wall Street Journal," that there are multi-million dollar, non-disclosed donations that were made to the Clinton Foundation that were never disclosed by the Clintons.

This is a direct breach of an agreement they suggested with the White House.

STEPHANOPOULOS: That -- that is an issue for them, but it's not a criminal -- it's nothing that would warrant a cmii.

So let's look at some of the specifics behind your pattern.

SCHWEIZER: Sure.

STEPHANOPOULOS: A lot of focus on the sale of a company, Uranium One, to a -- to a Russian company. Of course, Frank Drisdra (ph), who had committed, what, a $130 million, a pledge to the Clinton Foundation back in 2006, had had an interest in this company.

But he actually sold it.

SCHWEIZER: Well, he sold his stock, but his firm, Endeavor Financial, continued to do finance deals well after that. And the individuals involved in the book, as you probably read, there are nine -- count them, nine major contributors to the Clinton Foundation who were involved in that nuclear deal.

The two individuals who were the financial advisers on the deal of the sale to the Russians, they're both major Clinton Foundation supporters. The chairman of that Foundation, Ian Telfer, whose donations were not disclosed, campaign -- and sorry, Clinton Foundation contributor. And there are others.

So this is not just about Frank Giustra. This is multiple layers (INAUDIBLE)...

STEPHANOPOULOS: OK, but you didn't disclose in your book that he had sold the interest.

SCHWEIZER: Yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Beyond that, this deal was approved by a -- a board of the government called the CFIUS Board.

SCHWEIZER: Correct.

STEPHANOPOULOS: This actually chaired by the secretary of the Treasury...

SCHWEIZER: Correct.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- not the secretary of State.

SCHWEIZER: Right.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Eight other agencies on board, the secretary of State, Homeland Security, Defense, Commerce...

SCHWEIZER: Right.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- Energy, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission...

SCHWEIZER: Right.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- signed off on it. And even though the State Department was one of nine agencies to sign off on it, there's no evidence at all that Hillary Clinton got directly involved in this decision.

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think it warrants further investigation. And there's a couple of things that need to be clarified.

Number one, she was one vote -- or the State Department was one vote on CFIUS. But any agency has veto power. So it needs to be unanimous. So they had to support this agreement.

The second thing that I would say is that in the midst of all of this, Hillary Clinton was in charge of the Russian reset. She was in charge of -- in -- of the A123 nuclear agreements with the Russians. She was the one that was meeting with Lavrov. There were four senior congressmen on national security issues that raised concerns about this issue...

STEPHANOPOULOS: But wait a second. There were nine different agencies...

SCHWEIZER: Sure.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- who approved it.

Doesn't that suggest that that was because there was no national security concern, not because of some nefarious influence by Hillary Clinton?

SCHWEIZER: But -- but look at the nine individuals that were on the CFIUS committee, the nine agencies represented.

Who was, by far, the most hawkish on CFIUS issues in the past?

Hillary Clinton. She was big on rejecting the Dubai ports deal. She was big on other issues. She sponsored legislation when she was in the Senate to straighten CFIUS.

This was a signature issue for her and this is totally out of character...

STEPHANOPOULOS: But the assistant secretary who sat -- the assistant secretary of State who sat on the committee said she never intervened on any CFIUS issue at all.

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think that deserves further scrutiny. I would question that.

To argue that (INAUDIBLE)...

STEPHANOPOULOS: But based on what?

Based on what?

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think based on her (INAUDIBLE)...

STEPHANOPOULOS: Do you have any evidence that she actually intervened in this issue?

SCHWEIZER: No, we don't have direct evidence. But it warrants further investigation because, again, George, this is part of the broader pattern. You either have to come to the conclusion that these are all coincidences or something else is afoot.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And that -- that is that -- the Clintons do say it's a coincidence. As they say, you have produced no evidence. And I still haven't heard any direct evidence and you just said you had no evidence that she intervened here.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But I do want to ask a broader question.

It's been reported that you -- you briefed several Republicans on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, including the chairman, Bob Corker.

Did you offer any briefings for Democrats?

SCHWEIZER: No, but I'd be glad to give them before the book is released. This was a -- a friend that asked me. He thought it would be a good idea to talk to these individuals. This was the committee that confirmed her.

And I was glad to meet with them. They did not get copies of the book. They did not get any material. It was simply a verbal briefing.

And I'd be glad to brief any Democrats before May 5th, when the book comes out.

STEPHANOPOULOS: As you know, the Democrats have said this is -- this is an indication of your partisan interest. They say...

SCHWEIZER: Well...

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- you used to work for President -- President Bush as a speechwriter. You're funded by the Koch brothers.

How do you respond to that?

SCHWEIZER: Well, George, what did I do when this book was completed?

I went to the investigative unit at "The New York Times," the investigative unit here at ABC. I went to the investigative unit at "The Washington Post." And I shared with them my findings, OK. These are not cupcakes. These are serious researchers and investigators.

And they are confirming what I've reported. So people can look at the facts and...

STEPHANOPOULOS: They haven't come -- they haven't confirmed any evidence of any crime.

SCHWEIZER: Well, but -- but it's not up to an author to prove crime. I mean do you think that when people first started looking at Governor McConnell or they started looking at Menendez, that they immediately had evidence?

You need subpoena power. You need access to records and information. You need access to e-mails.

There's all sorts of things that you can do. You can't leave it up to an author to say that an author has to prove a criminal case.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Finally, Bloomberg News is reporting that you're going to be looking into Jeb Bush's business dealings, as well.

Is that true?

What have you found?

Where and when will you publish?

SCHWEIZER: We've been working on it for about four months. We've been looking at land deals. We've been looking at an airport deal. We've been looking at some financial transactions involving hedge funds based out of the UK.

We have already reached out to several media outlets and we're going to adopt a similar model that we have here, which is to share that information with investigative journalists at established news outlets, share with them that information.

And I think that people will find it very, very interesting and compelling.

Peter Schweizer, thanks very much.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Thanks for having me, George.

Up next, the roundtable on this Hillary book and augways (ph) from the campaign trail.

Plus, same-sex marriage coming to the Supreme Court this week.

Bruce Jenner's big announcement puts transgender issues in the spotlight. We debate the next frontier in civil rights.

And we're back in just two minutes.

--
Josh Schwerin
Spokesperson
Hillary for America
@Josh Schwerin
--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com.
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 9/3/2014 9:31:01 PM
Subject: Re: HRC @ Clean Energy Summit

Thanks John! Will do.

From: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Date: Thursday, September 4, 2014 at 12:28 AM
To: Dan <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com >
Subject: Re: HRC @ Clean Energy Summit

I think this is great. One small addition. In the Paris graph, I think a reference to Obama's Climate Action Plan and particularly the power plant rule has changed the international dynamic and made the US credible and a global leader that make the chances of success much greater.

That's an easy place to be generous to him without taking on any baggage.

On Sep 3, 2014 3:31 PM, "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com > wrote:

John, I hope I've caught you in time. Below and attached is our draft for Nevada. Would love your feedback.
Thanks!
Dan

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

REMARKS AT NATIONAL CLEAN ENERGY SUMMIT

LAS VEGAS, NV

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2014

Thank you, Harry, for that generous introduction and for leading the way here in Nevada and for our country toward a clean energy future.

I also want to thank the Center for American Progress, the Clean Energy Project, MGM Resorts International, and the University of Nevada, Las Vegas for making this event possible. I'm particularly pleased to see so many business leaders here today. This kind of all-hands-on-deck partnership – from government, business, academia, and the not-for-profit sector – is exactly what it's going to take to make real progress on our energy and climate challenges.

And, as Harry and others have explained so well here, this is one of the most sweeping, urgent, and consequential challenges we face as a nation and a world.

The data is unforgiving, no matter what the deniers say. Sea levels are rising. Ice caps are melting. Storms, droughts and wildfires are wreaking havoc. Thirteen of the top fourteen warmest years have all come since 2000.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This July, scientists found levels of carbon dioxide in our atmosphere not seen in millions of years.

The threat is real.

But so is the opportunity.

If we come together to make the hard choices -- and make smart investments in infrastructure, technology and environmental protection, America can be the clean energy superpower for the 21st century.

Just look at what's happening in Nevada, thanks in large part to the leadership of Harry Reid.

This state has quintupled its renewable energy capacity since 2008. In the past four years, more than $5.5 billion have been invested here in clean energy production and infrastructure.

Harry helped bring together a broad coalition, including major casino companies, local tribal leaders, and environmental groups, to replace one of the nation's dirtiest coal plant with five utility-scale solar projects now under construction.

Nevada is now one of the leaders in the nation in solar energy capacity per person.

The state has more geothermal projects under development than any other.

The "One-Nevada Transmission Line" has created new markets for renewable energy and hundreds of jobs.

And on average, clean energy jobs in Nevada pay higher wages -- thousands of dollars a year higher. That means more Nevada families making it into the middle class and more families staying in the middle class.

This is the promise of a clean energy future. A future where we move past the old false choice between protecting our environment and growing our economy and instead do both.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Again, Senator Reid has led the way. In the Senate, he has worked with Democrats and Republicans alike and championed legislation such as the Energy Independence and Security Act, which led to new fuel economy standards for vehicles for the first time in 30 years.

He provided crucial support for President Obama's efforts to cut carbon pollution from power plants, which will spur billions of dollars in private clean energy investment, improve air quality and respiratory health, and make a measurable dent in harmful emissions.

And Harry understands we need to do even more. Because while we can all be proud that domestic electricity generation from wind, solar, and geothermal more than doubled between 2009 and 2013, we still have a long way to go.

China and other competitors are already racing ahead with big bets on renewables. We cannot afford to cede leadership in this area. Our economic recovery, our efforts against climate change, and our strategic position in the world all will improve if we can build a safe bridge to a clean energy economy.

Part of that bridge will certainly come from natural gas. There are challenges here, to be sure, but the boom in domestic gas production is an exciting example of American innovation changing the game. If we do this right, it can be good for both our environment and our economy.

Gas is cleaner than coal… expanding production is creating tens of thousands of new jobs... and lower costs are helping give the United States a big competitive advantage in energy-intensive industries. We're also reducing our dependence on foreign oil and freeing up supplies elsewhere to help our European allies lessen their dependence on Russian energy.

To capitalize on this boom, we have to face head on the legitimate environmental concerns about some new extraction practices and their impact on local water, soil, and air supplies. Methane leaks in the production and transportation of natural gas are particularly worrisome. So it's crucial that we put in place smart regulations and enforce them, including not drilling when the risks are too high.

And to make sure natural gas really is an effective bridge fuel, we need to keep moving forward on renewables and a clean energy future.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Today tax incentives for alternative energy investments are unpredictable at best, while generous subsidies for fossil fuel are easy to come by. In fact, the world spends more than $500 billion dollars subsidizing fossil fuel every year, bloating budgets and creating incentives against innovation and progress. We can do better.

We can create a positive environment for private-sector innovation and risk-taking, with targeted tax incentives, a commitment to research and development, and policies that encourage rather than undercut the transition to clean, renewable sources of energy.

We can invest in the infrastructure of the future, including next-generation power plants to produce electricity more cleanly, smarter grids to deliver it more effectively, and greener buildings to use it more efficiently.

At this point, we know a lot about what actually works.

Take the Clinton Climate Initiative, which my husband started some years ago through our Foundation. We're working with private and public sector partners to reduce carbon emissions, improve energy efficiency, and spur investments in green construction, including through some innovative new financing tools.

Our Home Energy Affordable Loan program works a little like a 401k or Health Savings Account, saving families as much as $500 a year in utility expenses. And the return on investment is up to about 23 percent.

When we helped retrofit the Empire State Building, with 2.8 million square feet of office space, 275 jobs were created over two years and the building's annual energy consumption dropped by 38 percent, worth roughly $4.4 million a year.

And that's just the beginning of what's possible. Good ideas are everywhere you look.

Jessica Matthews and Julia Silverman, two students at Harvard, created a soccer ball that harnesses kinetic energy with every kick and can power a lamp for three hours from just 30 minutes of play. They brought it to the Clinton Global Initiative and blew everyone away. The ball is now being used in six countries where soccer is universal but electricity is not.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If two college students can figure out a way to light up entire communities, imagine what we can do as a country if we roll up our sleeves and get to work?

Rumor has it that Apple will soon unveil their iPhone 6. When they do, millions of Americans will rush to get their hands on this latest prize of 21st century technology. Yet, when they plug their shiny new devices into the wall, they'll be relying on an electrical grid that was built in the 1950s and still uses technology from the '60s and '70s.

We can do better.

With a true 21st century smart grid, we could time our dishwashers or air conditioners to turn on when demand for power is less and costs are lower. We could manage stresses on the grid, cutting peak demand to avoid blackouts – which research shows occur about 285 percent more often today than in 1984 and cost our businesses billions of dollars a year.

If the public and private sectors put aside politics and come together to get this done, we could do it before the iPhone 7 comes out.

All of this work at home is crucial to what we want to achieve abroad. Because America's ability to lead the world on climate and energy hinges on our commitment to act ourselves. No country will fall in line just because we tell them to. They need to see us taking significant steps of our own.

I know first-hand how hard it is to mobilize progress on a global scale. But there's no way to tackle this challenge without it.

When President Obama and I went to Copenhagen in 2009 for a global climate change conference, we ran into a brick wall of opposition from countries like China, which has become the world's largest carbon emitter but resists any kind of agreement that would obligate them to do something about it.

We had to literally crash a secret meeting between the Chinese, Indians, Brazilians and South Africans to force the issue. I'll never forget watching the President gliding by flustered Chinese security guards and the look on their faces when we finally sat down at the table.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But our persistence paid off. Thanks to the agreement we hammered out there, for the first time all major economies, developed and developing alike, agreed to make national commitments to curb carbon emissions through 2020 and report transparently on their mitigation efforts. That was just a start, but it provided a foundation to build on.

Next year world leaders will return to the negotiating table in Paris with the hope of achieving an even stronger agreement applicable to all.

It will be another opportunity for American leadership. A chance to show the world that we're serious about meeting this challenge. That we can still do big things in this country.

So going forward, we all need to step up. Not just our government, but our private sector, our civil society, our research institutions and universities, our families and communities — all of us.

I know we can do better. When we work together, our capacity for progress is nearly limitless.

Let's make America the clean energy superpower our world needs.

Let's leave our children – and, yes, our grandchildren – a healthy and sustainable future.

Let's get to work.

Thank you.

###

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Tony Carrk" <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
	"Sara Latham" <slatham@hillaryclinton.com>
	"Kristina Schake" <kschake@hillaryclinton.com>
	"Christina Reynolds" <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com>
	"Brian Fallon" <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	1/24/2016 2:28:08 PM
Subject:	HRC Paid Speeches
Attachments:	HRC Paid Speeches Flags.docx

Team,

Attached are the flags from HRC's paid speeches we have from HWA. I put some highlights below. There is a lot of policy positions that we should give an extra scrub with Policy.

In terms of what was opened to the press and what was not, the Washington Examiner got a hold of one of the private speech contracts (her speeches to universities were typically open press), so this is worth a read http://www.washingtonexaminer.com/clintons-speeches-are-cozy-for-wall-streeters-but-closed-to-journalists/article/2553294/section/author/dan-friedman

CLINTON ADMITS SHE IS OUT OF TOUCH

Hillary Clinton: "I'm Kind Of Far Removed" From The Struggles Of The Middle Class "Because The Life I've Lived And The Economic, You Know, Fortunes That My Husband And I Now Enjoy." "And I am not taking a position on any policy, but I do think there is a growing sense of anxiety and even anger in the country over the feeling that the game is rigged. And I never had that feeling when I was growing up. Never. I mean, were there really rich people, of course there were. My father loved to complain about big business and big government, but we had a solid middle class upbringing. We had good public schools. We had accessible health care. We had our little, you know, one-family house that, you know, he saved up his money, didn't believe in mortgages. So I lived that. And now, obviously, I'm kind of far removed because the life I've lived and the economic, you know, fortunes that my husband and I now enjoy, but I haven't forgotten it." [Hillary Clinton Remarks at Goldman-Black Rock, 2/4/14]

CLINTON SAYS YOU NEED TO HAVE A PRIVATE AND PUBLIC POSITION ON POLICY

Clinton: "But If Everybody's Watching, You Know, All Of The Back Room Discussions And The Deals, You Know, Then People Get A Little Nervous, To Say The Least. So, You Need Both A Public And A Private Position." CLINTON: You just have to sort of figure out how to -- getting back to that word, "balance" -- how to balance the public and the private efforts that are necessary to be successful, politically, and that's not just a comment about today. That, I think, has probably been true for all of our history, and if you saw the Spielberg movie, Lincoln, and how he was maneuvering and working to get the 13th Amendment passed, and he called one of my favorite predecessors, Secretary Seward, who had been the governor and senator from New York, ran against Lincoln for president, and he told Seward, I need your help to get this done. And Seward called some of his lobbyist friends who knew how to make a deal, and they just kept going at it. I mean, politics is like sausage being made. It is unsavory, and it always has been that way, but we usually end up where we need to be. But if everybody's watching, you know, all of the back room discussions and the deals, you know, then people get a little nervous, to say the least. So, you need both a public and a private position. And finally, I think -- I believe in evidence-based decision making. I want to know what the facts are. I mean, it's like when you guys go into some kind of a deal, you know, are you going to do that development or not, are you going to do that renovation or not, you know, you look at the numbers. You try to figure out what's going to work and what's not going to work. [Clinton Speech For National Multi-Housing Council, 4/24/13]

CLINTON TALKS ABOUT HOLDING WALL STREET ACCOUNTABLE ONLY FOR POLITICAL REASONS

Clinton Said That The Blame Placed On The United States Banking System For The Crisis "Could Have Been Avoided In Terms Of Both Misunderstanding And Really Politicizing What Happened." "That was one of the reasons that I started traveling in February of '09, so people could, you know, literally yell at me for the United States and our banking system causing this everywhere. Now, that's an oversimplification we know, but it was the conventional wisdom. And I think that there's a lot that could have been avoided in terms of both misunderstanding and really politicizing what happened with greater transparency, with greater openness on all sides, you know, what happened, how did it happen, how do we prevent it from happening? You guys help us figure it out and let's make sure that we do it right this time. And I think that everybody was desperately trying to fend off the worst effects institutionally, governmentally, and there just wasn't that opportunity to try to sort this out, and that came later." [Goldman Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton: "Even If It May Not Be 100 Percent True, If The Perception Is That Somehow The Game Is Rigged, That Should Be A Problem For All Of Us." "Now, it's important to recognize the vital role that the financial markets play in our economy and that so many of you are contributing to. To function effectively those markets and the men and women who shape them have to command trust and confidence, because we all rely on the market's transparency and integrity. So even if it may not be 100 percent true, if the perception is that somehow the game is rigged, that should be a problem for all of us, and we have to be willing to make that absolutely clear. And if there are issues, if there's wrongdoing, people have to be held accountable and we have to try to deter future bad behavior, because the public trust is at the core of both a free market economy and a democracy." [Clinton Remarks to Deutsche Bank, 10/7/14]

CLINTON SUGGESTS WALL STREET INSIDERS ARE WHAT IS NEEDED TO FIX WALL STREET

Clinton Said Financial Reform "Really Has To Come From The Industry Itself." "Remember what Teddy Roosevelt did. Yes, he took on what he saw as the excesses in the economy, but he also stood against the excesses in politics. He didn't want to unleash a lot of nationalist, populistic reaction. He wanted to try to figure out how to get back into that balance that has served America so well over our entire nationhood. Today, there's more that can and should be done that really has to come from the industry itself, and how we can strengthen our economy, create more jobs at a time where that's increasingly challenging, to get back to Teddy Roosevelt's square deal. And I really believe that our country and all of you are up to that job." [Clinton Remarks to Deutsche Bank, 10/7/14]

Speaking About The Importance Of Proper Regulation, Clinton Said "The People That Know The Industry Better Than Anybody Are The People Who Work In The Industry." "I mean, it's still happening, as you know. People are looking back and trying to, you know, get compensation for bad mortgages and all the rest of it in some of the agreements that are being reached. There's nothing magic about regulations, too much is bad, too little is bad. How do you get to the golden key, how do we figure out what works? And the people that know the industry better than anybody are the people who work in the industry. And I think there has to be a recognition that, you know, there's so much at stake now, I mean, the business has changed so much and decisions are made so quickly, in nano seconds basically. We spend trillions of dollars to travel around the world, but it's in everybody's interest that we have a better framework, and not just for the United States but for the entire world, in which to operate and trade." [Goldman Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13]

CLINTON ADMITS NEEDING WALL STREET FUNDING

Clinton Said That Because Candidates Needed Money From Wall Street To Run For Office, People In New York Needed To Ask Tough Questions About The Economy Before Handing Over Campaign Contributions. "Secondly, running for office in our country takes a lot of money, and candidates have to go out and raise it. New York is probably the leading site for contributions for fundraising for candidates on both sides of the aisle, and it's also our economic center. And there are a lot of people here who should ask some tough questions before handing over campaign contributions to people who were really playing chicken with our whole economy." [Goldman Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13]

Clinton: "It Would Be Very Difficult To Run For President Without Raising A Huge Amount Of Money And Without Having Other People Supporting You Because Your Opponent Will Have Their Supporters." "So our system is, in many ways, more difficult, certainly far more expensive and much longer than a parliamentary system, and I really admire the people who subject themselves to it. Even when I, you know, think they should not be elected president, I still think, well, you know, good for you I guess, you're out there promoting democracy and those crazy ideas of yours. So I think that it's something -- I would like -- you know, obviously as somebody who has been through it, I would like it not to last as long because I think it's very distracting from what we should be doing every day in our public business. I would like it not to be so expensive. I have no idea how you do that. I mean, in my campaign -- I lose track, but I think I raised $250 million or some such enormous amount, and in the last campaign President Obama raised 1.1 billion, and that was before the Super PACs and all of this other money just rushing in, and it's so ridiculous that we have this kind of free for all with all of this financial interest at stake, but, you know, the Supreme Court said that's basically what we're in for. So we're kind of in the wild west, and, you know, it would be very difficult to run for president without raising a huge amount of money and without having other people supporting you because your opponent will have their supporters. So I think as hard as it was when I ran, I think it's even harder now." [Clinton Speech For General Electric's Global Leadership Meeting – Boca Raton, FL, 1/6/14]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CLINTON TOUTS HER RELATIONSHIP TO WALL STREET AS A SENATOR

Clinton: As Senator, "I Represented And Worked With" So Many On Wall Street And "Did All I Could To Make Sure They Continued To Prosper" But Still Called For Closing Carried Interest Loophole. In remarks at Robbins, Gellar, Rudman & Dowd in San Diego, Hillary Clinton said, "When I was a Senator from New York, I represented and worked with so many talented principled people who made their living in finance. But even thought I represented them and did all I could to make sure they continued to prosper, I called for closing the carried interest loophole and addressing skyrocketing CEO pay. I also was calling in '06, '07 for doing something about the mortgage crisis, because I saw every day from Wall Street literally to main streets across New York how a well-functioning financial system is essential. So when I raised early warnings about early warnings about subprime mortgages and called for regulating derivatives and over complex financial products, I didn't get some big arguments, because people sort of said, no, that makes sense. But boy, have we had fights about it ever since." [Hillary Clinton's Remarks at Robbins Geller Rudman & Dowd in San Diego, 9/04/14]

Clinton On Wall Street: "I Had Great Relations And Worked So Close Together After 9/11 To Rebuild Downtown, And A Lot Of Respect For The Work You Do And The People Who Do It." "Now, without going over how we got to where we are right now, what would be your advice to the Wall Street community and the big banks as to the way forward with those two important decisions? SECRETARY CLINTON: Well, I represented all of you for eight years. I had great relations and worked so close together after 9/11 to rebuild downtown, and a lot of respect for the work you do and the people who do it, but I do -- I think that when we talk about the regulators and the politicians, the economic consequences of bad decisions back in '08, you know, were devastating, and they had repercussions throughout the world." [Goldman Sachs AIMS Alternative Investments Symposium, 10/24/13]

CLINTON TALKS ABOUT THE CHALLENGES RUNNING FOR OFFICE

Hillary Clinton Said There Was "A Bias Against People Who Have Led Successful And/Or Complicated Lives," Citing The Need To Divese Of Assets, Positions, And Stocks. "SECRETARY CLINTON: Yeah. Well, you know what Bob Rubin said about that. He said, you know, when he came to Washington, he had a fortune. And when he left Washington, he had a small -- MR. BLANKFEIN: That's how you have a small fortune, is you go to Washington. SECRETARY CLINTON: You go to Washington. Right. But, you know, part of the problem with the political situation, too, is that there is such a bias against people who have led successful and/or complicated lives. You know, the divestment of assets, the stripping of all kinds of positions, the sale of stocks. It just becomes very onerous and unnecessary." [Goldman Sachs Builders And Innovators Summit, 10/29/13]

CLINTON SUGGESTS SHE IS A MODERATE

Clinton Said That Both The Democratic And Republican Parties Should Be "Moderate." "URSULA BURNS: Interesting. Democrats? SECRETARY CLINTON: Oh, long, definitely. URSULA BURNS: Republicans? SECRETARY CLINTON: Unfortunately, at the time, short. URSULA BURNS: Okay. We'll go back to questions. SECRETARY CLINTON: We need two parties. URSULA BURNS: Yeah, we do need two parties. SECRETARY CLINTON: Two sensible, moderate, pragmatic parties." [Hillary Clinton Remarks, Remarks at Xerox, 3/18/14]

Clinton: "Simpson-Bowles… Put Forth The Right Framework. Namely, We Have To Restrain Spending, We Have To Have Adequate Revenues, And We Have To Incentivize Growth. It's A Three-Part Formula… And They Reached An Agreement. But What Is Very Hard To Do Is To Then Take That Agreement If You Don't Believe That You're Going To Be Able To Move The Other Side." SECRETARY CLINTON: Well, this may be borne more out of hope than experience in the last few years. But Simpson-Bowles -- and I know you heard from Erskine earlier today -- put forth the right framework. Namely, we have to restrain spending, we have to have adequate revenues, and we have to incentivize growth. It's a three-part formula. The specifics can be negotiated depending upon whether we're acting in good faith or not. And what Senator Simpson and Erskine did was to bring Republicans and Democrats alike to the table, and you had the full range of ideological views from I think Tom Coburn to Dick Durbin. And they reached an agreement. But what is very hard to do is to then take that agreement if you don't believe that you're going to be able to move the other side. And where we are now is in this gridlocked dysfunction. So you've got Democrats saying that, you know, you have to have more revenues; that's the sine qua non of any kind of agreement. You have Republicans saying no, no, no on revenues; you have to cut much more deeply into spending. Well, looks what's happened. We are slowly returning to growth. It's not as much or as fast as many of us would like to see, but, you know, we're certainly better off than our European friends, and we're beginning to, I believe, kind of come out of the long aftermath of the '08 crisis. [Clinton Speech For Morgan Stanley,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

4/18/13]

Clinton: "The Simpson-Bowles Framework And The Big Elements Of It Were Right… You Have To Restrain Spending, You Have To Have Adequate Revenues, And You Have To Have Growth." CLINTON: So, you know, the Simpson-Bowles framework and the big elements of it were right. The specifics can be negotiated and argued over. But you got to do all three. You have to restrain spending, you have to have adequate revenues, and you have to have growth. And I think we are smart enough to figure out how to do that. [Clinton Speech For Morgan Stanley, 4/18/13]

CLINTON IS AWARE OF SECURITY CONCERNS AROUND BLACKBERRIES

Clinton: "At The State Department We Were Attacked Every Hour, More Than Once An Hour By Incoming Efforts To Penetrate Everything We Had. And That Was True Across The U.S. Government." CLINTON: But, at the State Department we were attacked every hour, more than once an hour by incoming efforts to penetrate everything we had. And that was true across the U.S. government. And we knew it was going on when I would go to China, or I would go to Russia, we would leave all of our electronic equipment on the plane, with the batteries out, because this is a new frontier. And they're trying to find out not just about what we do in our government. They're trying to find out about what a lot of companies do and they were going after the personal emails of people who worked in the State Department. So it's not like the only government in the world that is doing anything is the United States. But, the United States compared to a number of our competitors is the only government in the world with any kind of safeguards, any kind of checks and balances. They may in many respects need to be strengthened and people need to be reassured, and they need to have their protections embodied in law. But, I think turning over a lot of that material intentionally or unintentionally, because of the way it can be drained, gave all kinds of information not only to big countries, but to networks and terrorist groups, and the like. So I have a hard time thinking that somebody who is a champion of privacy and liberty has taken refuge in Russia under Putin's authority. And then he calls into a Putin talk show and says, President Putin, do you spy on people? And President Putin says, well, from one intelligence professional to another, of course not. Oh, thank you so much. I mean, really, I don't know. I have a hard time following it. [Clinton Speech At UConn, 4/23/14]

Hillary Clinton: "When I Got To The State Department, It Was Still Against The Rules To Let Most -- Or Let All Foreign Service Officers Have Access To A Blackberry." "I mean, let's face it, our government is woefully, woefully behind in all of its policies that affect the use of technology. When I got to the State Department, it was still against the rules to let most -- or let all Foreign Service Officers have access to a Blackberry. You couldn't have desktop computers when Colin Powell was there. Everything that you are taking advantage of, inventing and using, is still a generation or two behind when it comes to our government." [Hillary Clinton Remarks at Nexenta, 8/28/14]

Hillary Clinton: "We Couldn't Take Our Computers, We Couldn't Take Our Personal Devices" Off The Plane In China And Russia. "I mean, probably the most frustrating part of this whole debate are countries acting like we're the only people in the world trying to figure out what's going on. I mean, every time I went to countries like China or Russia, I mean, we couldn't take our computers, we couldn't take our personal devices, we couldn't take anything off the plane because they're so good, they would penetrate them in a minute, less, a nanosecond. So we would take the batteries out, we'd leave them on the plane." [Hillary Clinton Remarks at Nexenta, 8/28/14]

Clinton Said When She Got To State, Employees "Were Not Mostly Permitted To Have Handheld Devices." "You know, when Colin Powell showed up as Secretary of State in 2001, most State Department employees still didn't even have computers on their desks. When I got there they were not mostly permitted to have handheld devices. I mean, so you're thinking how do we operate in this new environment dominated by technology, globalizing forces? We have to change, and I can't expect people to change if I don't try to model it and lead it." [Clinton Speech For General Electric's Global Leadership Meeting – Boca Raton, FL, 1/6/14]

Hillary Clinton Said You Know You Can't Bring Your Phone And Computer When Traveling To China And Russia And She Had To Take Her Batteries Out And Put them In A Special Box. "And anybody who has ever traveled in other countries, some of which shall remain nameless, except for Russia and China, you know that you can't bring your phones and your computers. And if you do, good luck. I mean, we would not only take the batteries out, we would leave the batteries and the devices on the plane in special boxes. Now, we didn't do that because we thought it would be fun to tell somebody about. We did it because we knew that we were all targets and that we would be totally vulnerable. So it's not only what others do to us and what we do to them and how many people are involved in it. It's what's the purpose of it, what is being collected, and how can it be used. And there are clearly people in this room who know a lot about this, and some of you could be very useful contributors to that conversation because you're sophisticated enough to know that it's not just, do it, don't do it. We have to have a way of doing it, and then we have to have a way of analyzing it, and then we have to have a way of sharing it." [Goldman Sachs Builders And Innovators Summit, 10/29/13]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton Lamented How Far Behind The State Department Was In Technology, Saying "People Were Not Even Allowed To Use Mobile Devices Because Of Security Issues." "Personally, having, you know, lived and worked in the White House, having been a senator, having been Secretary of State, there has traditionally been a great pool of very talented, hard-working people. And just as I was saying about the credit market, our personnel policies haven't kept up with the changes necessary in government. We have a lot of difficulties in getting—when I got to the State Department, we were so far behind in technology, it was embarrassing. And, you know, people were not even allowed to use mobile devices because of security issues and cost issues, and we really had to try to push into the last part of the 20th Century in order to get people functioning in 2009 and '10." [Goldman Sachs Builders And Innovators Summit, 10/29/13]

CLINTON REMARKS ARE PRO KEYSTONE AND PRO TRADE

Clinton: "So I Think That Keystone Is A Contentious Issue, And Of Course It Is Important On Both Sides Of The Border For Different And Sometimes Opposing Reasons…" "So I think that Keystone is a contentious issue, and of course it is important on both sides of the border for different and sometimes opposing reasons, but that is not our relationship. And I think our relationship will get deeper and stronger and put us in a position to really be global leaders in energy and climate change if we worked more closely together. And that's what I would like to see us do." [Remarks at tinePublic, 6/18/14]

Hillary Clinton Said Her Dream Is A Hemispheric Common Market, With Open Trade And Open Markets. "My dream is a hemispheric common market, with open trade and open borders, some time in the future with energy that is as green and sustainable as we can get it, powering growth and opportunity for every person in the hemisphere." [05162013 Remarks to Banco Itau.doc, p. 28]

Hillary Clinton Said We Have To Have A Concerted Plan To Increase Trade; We Have To Resist Protectionism And Other Kinds Of Barriers To Trade. "Secondly, I think we have to have a concerted plan to increase trade already under the current circumstances, you know, that Inter-American Development Bank figure is pretty surprising. There is so much more we can do, there is a lot of low hanging fruit but businesses on both sides have to make it a priority and it's not for governments to do but governments can either make it easy or make it hard and we have to resist, protectionism, other kinds of barriers to market access and to trade and I would like to see this get much more attention and be not just a policy for a year under president X or president Y but a consistent one." [05162013 Remarks to Banco Itau.doc, p. 32]

CLINTON IS MORE FAVORABLE TO CANADIAN HEALTH CARE AND SINGLE PAYER

Clinton Said Single-Payer Health Care Systems "Can Get Costs Down," And "Is As Good Or Better On Primary Care," But "They Do Impose Things Like Waiting Times." "If you look at countries that are comparable, like Switzerland or Germany, for example, they have mixed systems. They don't have just a single-payer system, but they have very clear controls over budgeting and accountability. If you look at the single-payer systems, like Scandinavia, Canada, and elsewhere, they can get costs down because, you know, although their care, according to statistics, overall is as good or better on primary care, in particular, they do impose things like waiting times, you know. It takes longer to get like a hip replacement than it might take here." [Hillary Clinton remarks to ECGR Grand Rapids, 6/17/13]

Clinton Cited President Johnson's Success In Establishing Medicare And Medicaid And Said She Wanted To See The U.S. Have Universal Health Care Like In Canada. "You know, on healthcare we are the prisoner of our past. The way we got to develop any kind of medical insurance program was during World War II when companies facing shortages of workers began to offer healthcare benefits as an inducement for employment. So from the early 1940s healthcare was seen as a privilege connected to employment. And after the war when soldiers came back and went back into the market there was a lot of competition, because the economy was so heated up. So that model continued. And then of course our large labor unions bargained for healthcare with the employers that their members worked for. So from the early 1940s until the early 1960s we did not have any Medicare, or our program for the poor called Medicaid until President Johnson was able to get both passed in 1965. So the employer model continued as the primary means by which working people got health insurance. People over 65 were eligible for Medicare. Medicaid, which was a partnership, a funding partnership between the federal government and state governments, provided some, but by no means all poor people with access to healthcare. So what we've been struggling with certainly Harry Truman, then Johnson was successful on Medicare and Medicaid, but didn't touch the employer based system, then actually Richard Nixon made a proposal that didn't go anywhere, but was quite far reaching. Then with my husband's administration we worked very hard to come up with a system, but we were very much constricted by the political realities that if you had your insurance from your employer you were reluctant to try anything else. And so we were trying to build a universal system around the employer-based system. And indeed now with President Obama's legislative success in getting the Affordable Care Act passed that is what we've done. We still have primarily an employer-based system, but we now have people able to get subsidized insurance. So we have health insurance companies playing a major role in the provision of healthcare, both to the employed whose employers provide health insurance, and to those who are working but on their own are not able to afford it and their employers either don't provide it, or don't provide it at an affordable price. We are still struggling. We've made a lot of progress. Ten million Americans now have insurance who didn't have it before the Affordable Care Act, and that is a great step forward. (Applause.) And what we're going to have to continue to do is monitor what the costs are and watch closely to see whether employers drop more people from insurance so that they go into what we call the health exchange system. So we're really just at the beginning. But we do have Medicare for people over 65. And you couldn't, I don't think, take it away if you tried, because people are very satisfied with it, but we also have a lot of political and financial resistance to expanding that system to more people. So we're in a learning period as we move forward with the implementation of the Affordable Care Act. And I'm hoping that whatever the shortfalls or the glitches have been, which in a big piece of legislation you're going to have, those will be remedied and we can really take a hard look at what's succeeding, fix what isn't, and keep moving forward to get to affordable universal healthcare coverage like you have here in Canada. [Clinton Speech For tinePublic – Saskatoon, CA, 1/21/15]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com> "Jim Margolis" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com> "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com> "Kristina Schake" <kschake@hillaryclinton.com> "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com> "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com> "Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com> "Huma Abedin" <ha16@hillaryclinton.com> "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	5/1/2015 7:48:40 AM
Subject:	Fwd: Early state coverage:

Good stuff

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: May 1, 2015 at 2:46:16 PM EDT
To: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Early state coverage:

Iowa

- There have been no print stories at any point in Iowa newspapers.
- One local TV mention last Friday after the NYT story ran.
- WOI-ABC (Des Moines) did stories in the morning and evening on Monday about the Clinton Cash allegations.
- WQAD-ABC (Davenport) and KCCI-CBS (Des Moines) did pieces Monday morning on the Foundation refiling its tax forms.

New Hampshire

- WBZ-CBS (Boston) and WFXT-FOX (Boston) aired segments last Friday morning after the NYT story.
- WHDH-NBC (Boston) and WCVB-ABC (Boston) aired morning segments on Clinton Foundation acknowledging errors in its filings on Monday.
- NH1 (Concord) discussed the allegations Thursday in its reporting on Bernie Sanders' entrance into the race.
- Last week, the Union Leader ran a wire story on A1 on Friday on the Foundation saying it would re-file its 990 forms.

Nevada

- KSNV-NBC, which recently switched ownership from liberal Jim Rogers' Intermountain West group to Sinclair Broadcasting, has aired a couple short segments about Clinton Cash and the foundation re-issuing paperwork; they have given it the most attention.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- KTNV-ABC aired a short segment saying that the "Clinton foundation acknowledged mistakes were made in how it disclosed donors and it promises greater transparency amid growing scrutiny."

- KVVU-FOX gave airtime to an RNC statement regarding Clinton Cash the day we announced Hillary's visit to Nevada.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Chris Lu" <clu@barackobama.com>
To:	"Chris Lu" <clu@barackobama.com> "Adam Hitchcock" <ahitchcock@barackobama.com> john.podesta@gmail.com william.m.daley@jpmchase.com cedley@gmail.com "Valerie Jarrett" <vjarrett@barackobama.com> fpena@vestarden.com fromanm@citi.com don.gips@level3.com "Pete Rouse" <prouse@barackobama.com> "Melody Barnes" <mbarnes@barackobama.com> jg@rock-creek-ventures.com cbutts.obama08@gmail.com burke1262@cox.net cbrowner@thealbrightgroupllc.com sonalshah@google.com ricesusane@aol.com todd.stern@wilmerhale.com "Jim Steinberg" <djsberg@gmail.com> joshua.steiner@quadranglegroup.com elgieh@yahoo.com alexkoff@aol.com ldh@stanford.edu james.rubin@bcpartners.com cvarney@hhlaw.com "Lisa Brown" <lisabrown3660@gmail.com> "John Leibovitz" <leibovitz@gmail.com> noveck@gmail.com gaylesmithgayle@gmail.com tcuellar@stanford.edu sewallconroy@comcast.net "Gitenstein, Mark H." <MGitenstein@mayerbrown.com> tedkaufman@comcast.net blevin@stifel.com "katy kale" <katy_kale@yahoo.com> sarahelizabethfeinberg@gmail.com "laura nichols" <laurasnichols@yahoo.com> "Jeanne Lambrew" <jlambrew@mail.utexas.edu> "Brad Kiley" <bjkiley@aol.com>
Date:	10/18/2008 2:41:56 PM
Subject:	another transition article

Not even sure how to react to this article, since there's almost nothing in here that's accurate.

Daily Telegraph:
Barack Obama's team is briefed by Bush staff on after warnings about a terrorist attack
Senior aides to Barack Obama have been meeting George W.Bush's staff to begin planning a smooth transfer of power.
By Tim Shipman in Washington
Last Updated: 9:26PM BST 18 Oct 2008

Officials from both campaigns have been asked to briefings after warnings from US intelligence that terrorists and rogue states will seek to exploit the power vacuum following November's presidential election.

For the first time in American history the FBI has begun vetting likely officials of the next administration before the election, to ensure they have security clearance to deal with crises on day one.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Intelligence chiefs expect an attempt to emulate the terrorist strikes on Britain when Gordon Brown took power and are concerned that Russia or Iran could use the 77 days of paralysis between the election and the inauguration on January 20 for acts of international brinkmanship, like the invasion of Georgia.

An official involved in the transition discussions told The Sunday Telegraph: "There has been no specific threat but the assessment is that someone will try something.

"It could be a terrorist attack on US assets overseas. It could be the leader of a rogue state chancing his arm. Putin and Ahmadinejad have form."

The transition of power in the US is a chaotic process. More than 1,100 political appointees in senior posts have to be approved by the Senate, a process that can take months.

On Wednesday the current White House chief of staff, Josh Bolten, chaired a meeting of senior White House staff and representatives of both Mr Obama and his Republican rival John McCain.

President Bush's creation of this Presidential Transition Coordinating Council, the earliest ever, is designed to avoid a repeat of the situation on September 11 2001, when only one third of his national security appointees had been approved by the Senate, nine months into his presidency.

Martha Kumar, director of the White House Transition Project, an independent group that advises the transition teams of both campaigns, told The Sunday Telegraph: "The times of changing of power are soft times, times of vulnerability. Just look at what has happened around the world, including in Great Britain.

"You had the failed bombings in London and then the attack at Glasgow airport three days after Gordon Brown took office. In Spain the Madrid bombings were three days before the presidential election."

There have been particularly intensive efforts to make sure Mr Obama has his national security team in place, not just because he is widely expected to win the election on November 4, but because intelligence analysts believe America's enemies are more likely to try to take advantage of Mr Obama's international inexperience than they would of Mr McCain.

A senior official in the Obama camp, whose name has been submitted for FBI vetting, said: "We will be ready and we will be seen to be ready."

He said that Mr Obama is close to finalising plans for his first 100 days in power - which will include major moves on the economy, healthcare and Iraq in his first week, designed to make his priorities clear to Americans.

He is planning a series of early interventions to stamp his authority on the economic crisis. This will include legislation proposing a $300bn stimulus package which would be published before President Bush has even left the White House, so that it can be passed as soon as he takes power.

Mr Obama is also planning executive orders that do not require legislation on his first day in office, which could include plans to promote renewable energy resources and create jobs.

His transition team, which is reportedly much more extensive and active than Mr McCain's, features 10 working groups in different policy areas to convert campaign promises into concrete legislation. It is chaired by John Podesta, Bill Clinton's former White House chief of staff who runs the Centre for American Progress, a think tank long seen as a Democratic administration in exile.

Mr Podesta is working closely with Michael Signer, a former foreign policy aide to John Edwards in charge of homeland security affairs. Mr Podesta and Jason Furman, one of Mr Obama's two most influential economic advisers, have already held talks with sceptical conservative Democrats to line up the votes to pass a stimulus package.

Mr Obama has also worked to cultivate a close relationship with the Treasury Secretary, Henry Paulson, and personally asked him to help out during the transition, sparking speculation that he might keep Mr Paulson in post for the first year of his presidency.

Ms Kumar said: "There are things that a president can do immediately that establish his brand of leadership and help establish with the public what the priorities are.

"Reagan issued executive orders at the luncheon following the inauguration. He didn't even wait to get to the White House. He wanted to show how seriously he took the issue of the economy."

FBI vetting is also under way on 100 people from both campaigns, including Susan Rice, expected to be made the second successive black woman national security adviser after Condoleezza Rice; Greg Craig, a Washington lawyer tipped to become Mr Obama's chief White House counsel and his likely White House chief of staff; and the former senator and campaign chairman Tom Daschle. If Daschle prefers to become Health Secretary, Obama's current chief of staff Pete Rouse, nicknamed the 101st Senator for his connections on Capitol Hill, would take the job.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Other key national security officials will include Denis McDonough, chief foreign affairs adviser to the campaign and Richard Danzig, a secretary of the Navy under Clinton.

John Kerry, the Democratic candidate four years ago, and his fellow senator Chris Dodd, a failed candidate this year, are vying to become Secretary of State.

Mr Kerry, an Army veteran, is also a contender to take control of the Pentagon, but many expect that post to go to a Republican, perhaps the maverick senator Chuck Hagel. Colin Powell, a former secretary of state and chairman of the joint chiefs could return to government if he endorses Obama, as many expect. The veteran Democratic Senator Sam Nunn's name is also in the frame.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Washington Post" <email@e.washingtonpost.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 11/3/2015 1:17:52 AM
Subject: The Daily 202: Democrats playing offense on Obamacare in Kentucky

View The Daily 202 on the Web

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share on Twitter Share on Facebook

This portrait of former Speaker Dennis Hastert was removed from its prominent display just off the House floor following his guilty plea in federal court last week connected to illegal financial transactions that were designed as hush money. It is one of Paul Ryan's first official acts as Speaker. In this file photo, Hastert speaks at the July 2009 unveiling ceremony. (AP Photo/Pablo Martinez Monsivais, File)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—The outgoing Democratic governor of Kentucky, Steve Beshear, used an executive order to expand Medicaid and create a state-run exchange under Obamacare. Half a million people, around a quarter of the state's population, got coverage as a result.

Democrats have aggressively highlighted this in commercials and on the stump leading up to today's off-year gubernatorial election, suggesting that the Republicans would "callously" eliminate the exchange if they won. It's a stark contrast to the defensive posture that Democrats largely took on the issue in the midterm elections of 2010 and 2014.

Kentucky has seen the largest drop in its uninsured rate of any state in the country. It's currently 9 percent, down from 20.4 percent before Obamacare, according to the Louisville NPR affiliate . Open enrollment for next year began over the weekend, and the Kaiser Family Foundation says there are 285,000 uninsured Kentuckians who could still enroll using the so-called Kynect program.

GOP gubernatorial nominee Matt Bevin has backtracked on repeal since he won a four-way primary in May. In the spring, he said he would "absolutely" reverse Beshear's executive order "immediately." In the final debate of the race, he suggested he would narrow eligibility to below 138 percent of the poverty line and try to get participants to have some "skin in the game," in essence forcing people to pay some kind of deductible.

Polling shows the Medicaid expansion playing to Democrats' advantage: The final Bluegrass Poll put Democratic Attorney General Jack Conway up 5 points. The Lexington Herald-Leader's Sam Youngman reported that Bevin's opposition to the expansion "appears to be hurting him": 54 percent said they want the state's next governor to maintain the expansion; 24 percent say they would like to see it repealed; 22 percent were not sure. One-third of Republicans support maintaining the expansion.

For years, Gov. Beshear has publicly urged national Democrats to run on the health care law, regardless of whether they're from a red or a blue state. "You can tell there's a pent-up demand and a craving for access to health care," he said in an interview here. "People came out of the woodwork in droves wanting to find about this. …

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This is a winner for our people, and because it's a winner for our people, it's going to be a winner politically." Beshear has been publicly attacking Bevin for saying he'd roll back his signature initiative. "He understands that this is now a popular issue for Kentuckians and he's trying to somehow find a way out of it."

Expressing confidence that Conway will win today, Beshear told me: "In 2016, I predict the Democratic nominee will make this a major issue and will pound the Republicans into the dust with it."

Steve Beshear, pictured here with Nancy Pelosi, addressed the House Democratic Caucus in Dec. 2013, urging them to pitch healthcare.gov harder to their constituents. (Photo by Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images)

— But, but, but: The failure of the Kentucky Health Cooperative is a red flag that is giving Republicans fodder to argue that the exchange is not sustainable in the long-term, especially when federal money dries up. "More than a third of the 23 nonprofit health plans created under Obamacare with $2.4 billion in federal loan dollars have collapsed, and most experts predict more failures on the horizon," Politico reported last week. "South Carolina's co-op became the ninth to fail, following similar crashes in Iowa, Louisiana, Nebraska and New York. … The Kentucky plan dominated exchange enrollment during the first two years of operations, capturing roughly 60 percent of customers … Those Kentuckians will now have to scramble to find new coverage during the open-enrollment period." Beshear called the collapse of the co-op "a little inconvenient" but not indicative of broader problems: "It doesn't mean anything long-term for Kynect."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— Other red states are expanding Medicaid, as well: Just yesterday, Montana became the 30th state to expand the program under Obamacare, giving 70,000 more people access to health insurance. Once these folks get insurance, it becomes politically untenable to take it away. It's more evidence, if any was needed, that Obamacare, for better or worse, is not going away, no matter who the president is in 2017 or what happens today in Kentucky.

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost 's morning newsletter. Sign up to receive the newsletter.

With contributions from Michael Smith .

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

— An NBC/Wall Street Journal poll shows Hillary Clinton slightly expanding her national lead. She gets 62 percent of Democrats, to 31 percent for Sanders. Martin O'Malley received just 3 percent. Their last poll has Clinton up 58 to 33.

- Marco Rubio has popped from 4 percent last month to 13 percent now in a Monmouth University poll of New Hampshire. It's his best score in a poll of that state.
- PPP, the Democratic firm, released an Iowa poll showing that Donald Trump and Ben Carson are essentially tied (22-21), with Ted Cruz on the rise (14) and Rubio at 10. Bobby Jindal (6) now leads Jeb Bush (5) among Iowa caucusgoers…

— The company constructing the Keystone XL pipeline asked the State Department to halt its review, potentially delaying the final decision on the project until after President Obama leaves office. Juliet Eilperin has the latest on the zombie project.

— New books pull back curtain on Vatican. Catholic Church authorities arrested two officials yesterday, accusing them of leaking damaging internal information for two books coming out this week. The Post obtained an early copy of one overnight. It highlights lavish spending by the cardinals, including a $26,400 helicopter ride taken by the former Vatican secretary of state, as well as numerous "suspect accounts" that still exist in the Vatican Bank (even though the church has said that practice stopped). The AP got ahold of the second book, which has Pope Francis ripping into officials over millions of euros in lost revenue and a break-in at the Vatican.

— Ahmed Chalabi died of a heart attack at 73. The former deputy prime minster of

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Iraq, who strongly advocated for the U.S. to invade the country, gave some of the most-cited false intelligence that Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction.

— John Kerry urged Tajikistan's president not to go too far in cracking down on political Islam and religious beliefs. Yesterday, on his trip across the so-called Stans, he also warned Kazakhstan that repressing political opponents only invokes more extremism. (Carol Morello is on the trip.)

GET SMART FAST:

1. A member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity at Yale allegedly refused to allow dark-skinned students to enter a Halloween party, telling them: "White girls only." (Susan Svrluga)
2. Volkswagen allegedly also used devices to cheat air pollution in its luxury vehicles, such as Porsches and Audi's, escalating the scandal that began in September when the German carmaker copped to illegally installed devices on lower-tier cars. (Reuters)
3. The Russian government and the airline that operated the plane that went down over the Sinai Peninsula this weekend are publicly sparring over the cause of of the crash. (Andrew Roth and Ashley Halsey III)
4. The Defense Department spent almost $43 million to build an LNG gas station in Afghanistan that may not even be usable. (Huffington Post)
5. El Niño could kill many homeless people this year because they refuse to leave their living quarters near storm drains in Los Angeles. (Peter Holley)
6. Taco Bell fired a corporate employee who was captured on video hitting and pulling the hair of his Uber driver. (Los Angeles Times)
7. A rancher who bought almost 1,800 horses from the federal government sent them to slaughterhouses instead of finding safe places for the animals to live. (Lisa Rein)
8. The Social Security Administration overpaid disabled workers who went back to work by $11 billion during the past nine years. (Lisa Rein)
9. The U.S. Department of Education ruled that an Illinois school district violated anti-discrimination laws when it prevented a transgender girl from using a girls' locker room even though she plays on a girls' sports team. (New York Times)
10. Ohio could legalize marijuana with a ballot initiative today.

POWER PLAYERS IN THE NEWS:

1. Donald Trump's campaign said the billionaire will negotiate with television networks directly to set the rules and agendas of upcoming presidential debates, undercutting efforts by his Republican rivals to get consensus and leverage against the stations. Carly Fiorina and John Kasich are also not involved with the rest of the group. (Robert Costa, David Weigel and Paul Farhi)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2. Jeb Bush said the RNC should go through with the Telemundo debate, which the RNC canceled last week to retaliate against CNBC (NBC owns both networks). (Sean Sullivan)
3. Cory Gardner, the freshman Republican senator from Colorado, endorsed Marco Rubio. (Fox News)
4. Hillary Clinton met with the mothers of Michael Brown, Trayvon Martin and Tamir Rice in Chicago, privately outlining to them her plan for instituting stricter gun laws and changing the criminal justice system. (CNN)
5. President Obama wants making progress on issues of racial inequality and injustice to be a big part of his legacy. (NBC Nightly News interview)
6. Rep. Rich Nugent (R-Fla.) announced he'll retire at the end of this term, vacating a safe Republican seat. His chief of staff, Justin Grabelle, immediately announced he'll run. (Roll Call)
7. Rick Santorum is attacking Ted Cruz as soft on immigration as he campaigns in Iowa, citing his support for H-1B visas. (Quad-Cities Times)
8. Jeb replaced his campaign's Chief Operating Officer. Christine Ciccone, who left with the shakeup, has been replaced by Janan Grissom. (Politico)
9. Haley Barbour, the former RNC chair and Mississippi governor, praises Bush's e-book and leadership skills during hurricanes in an op-ed for today's Miami Herald .
10. Sean Parker, the Napster co-founder, appears to be the lead financial backer of a ballot initiative to legalize marijuana in California, likely to be on the ballot in Nov. 2016. (AP)
11. California boasts both the richest man and the poorest man in Congress, the Los Angeles Times notes: Darrell Issa is worth at least $254.7 million, and David Valadao has $10 million in credit lines (compared to $1.3 million in assets).
12. Philadelphia politician Dwight Evans will challenge embattled Rep. Chaka Fattah, facing corruption charges, in next year's Democratic primary. (Philadelphia Inquirer)
13. Bill Cosby could be forced to testify in Janice Dickinson's defamation lawsuit against the comedian who has been accused of several rapes. (AP)
14. LeBron James became the youngest player in NBA history to score 25,00 points, accomplishing the feat at 30 years and 307 days old, a few months faster than Kobe Bryant. (ESPN)
15. Larry Lessig, the Harvard professor trying to build support for campaign finance reform, dropped out of the Democratic presidential primary.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(Lessig2016)

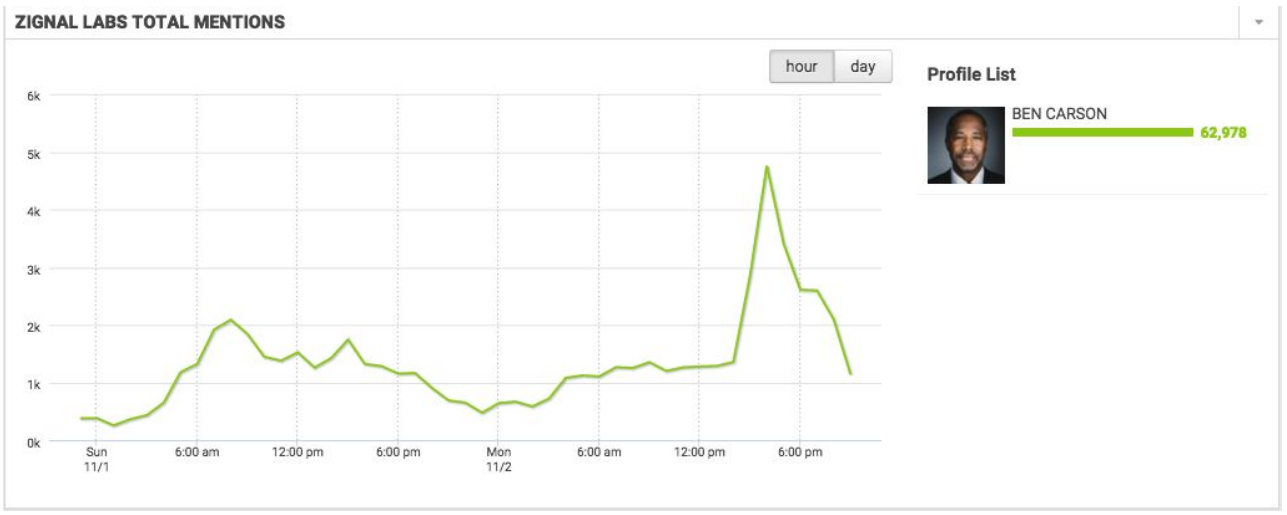
WAPO HIGHLIGHTS:

— "Democrats prepare for another shutdown showdown in December ," by Kelsey Snell: It is riders, not funding numbers, that could cause the problem. Specifically, Democrats say they won't allow a budget to go through that cuts off any funding for Planned Parenthood. It could make for a tense couple of weeks.

— "Along the migrant trail, pressure grows to close Europe's open borders, " by Griff White: "With Slovenia behind them and Austria just ahead, the asylum seekers shoved at the metal barriers blocking their path and chanted a plea into the smoky night air: 'We want to go!' Nearly 1,000 people had been waiting all day for the border crossing to open, penned into a no-man's land by twitchy troops armed with pistols and assault rifles who met requests for food or water with stern commands and glares icy enough to match the fast-falling temperature. 'We've already spent two nights outside,' said Galia Ali, pointing to her severely disabled 8-year-old son, who lay shivering on a blanket near a dwindling fire. 'If we're still here in the morning, he'll be dead' Hours later, the barriers were lifted, and the migrants surged into Austria. But up and down the route being traveled by a historic number of migrants this year as they seek new lives in Europe, pressure is building to close the continent's cherished open borders for good."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— An alarming cross-segment of white middle-aged Americans has seen its death rate jump since 1999 because of drugs, alcohol and suicide, a shocking reversal rarely seen by developed nations. (Lenny Bernstein and Joel Achenbach)



SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ — Curated by Elise Viebeck (@eliseviebeck):

— ZIGNAL VISUAL: Social media grapples with Ben Carson's new frontrunner status. Trump continues to dominate the media chatter, but the presidential race was atwitter with talk of Carson leading in polls out yesterday. Here's the word cloud of his mentions, via our analytics partners at Zignal Labs:

See how Carson mentions spiked after the NBC/Wall Street Journal poll posted :

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

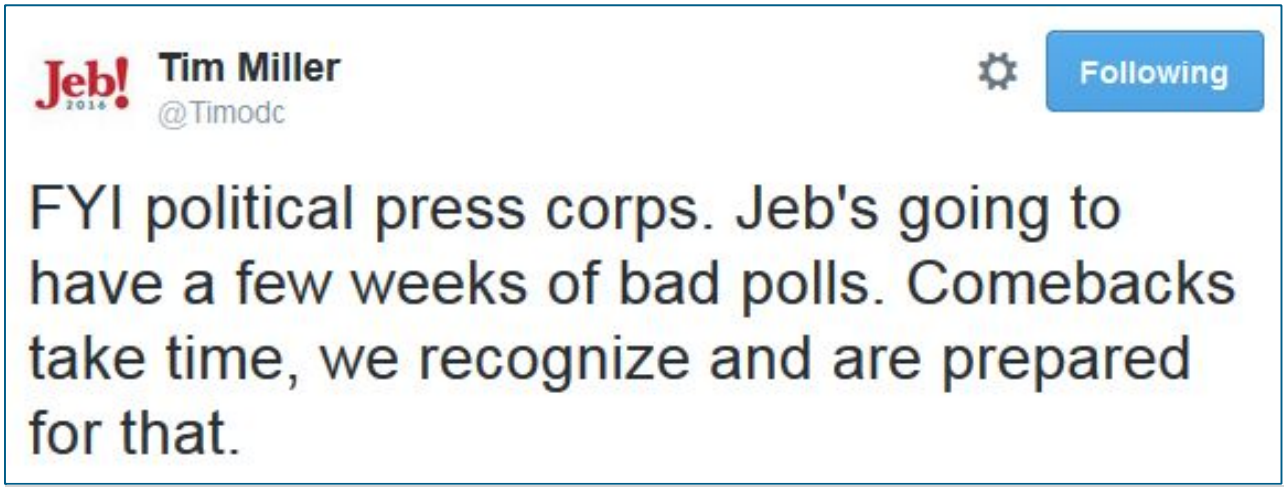
–Pictures of the day:

Sen. Claire McCaskill (D-Mo.) got really into Halloween this year (we totally missed this last month):

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(@clairecmc)

Rep. Joe Crowley (D-N.Y.) kept supporting his Mets even in defeat:



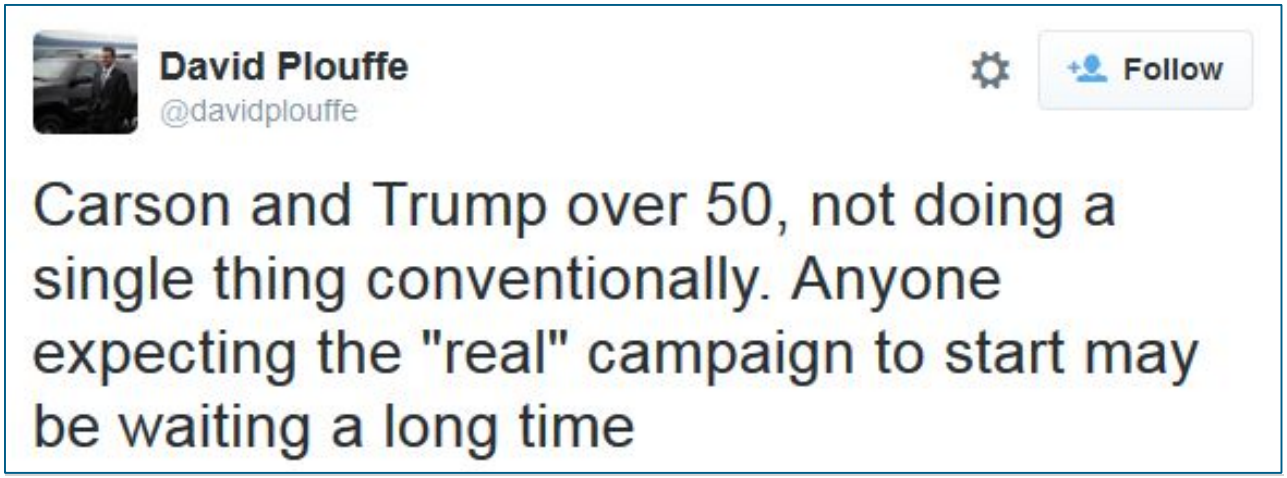
This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(@repjoecrowley)

–Tweets of the day:

Bush communications director Tim Miller sought to lower expectations about the speed of his boss's attempted turnaround:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



(@timodc)

Donald Trump, besides rolling out his new book later this morning at Trump Tower, is spending a good chunk of this week in New York rehearing for “Saturday Night Live”:

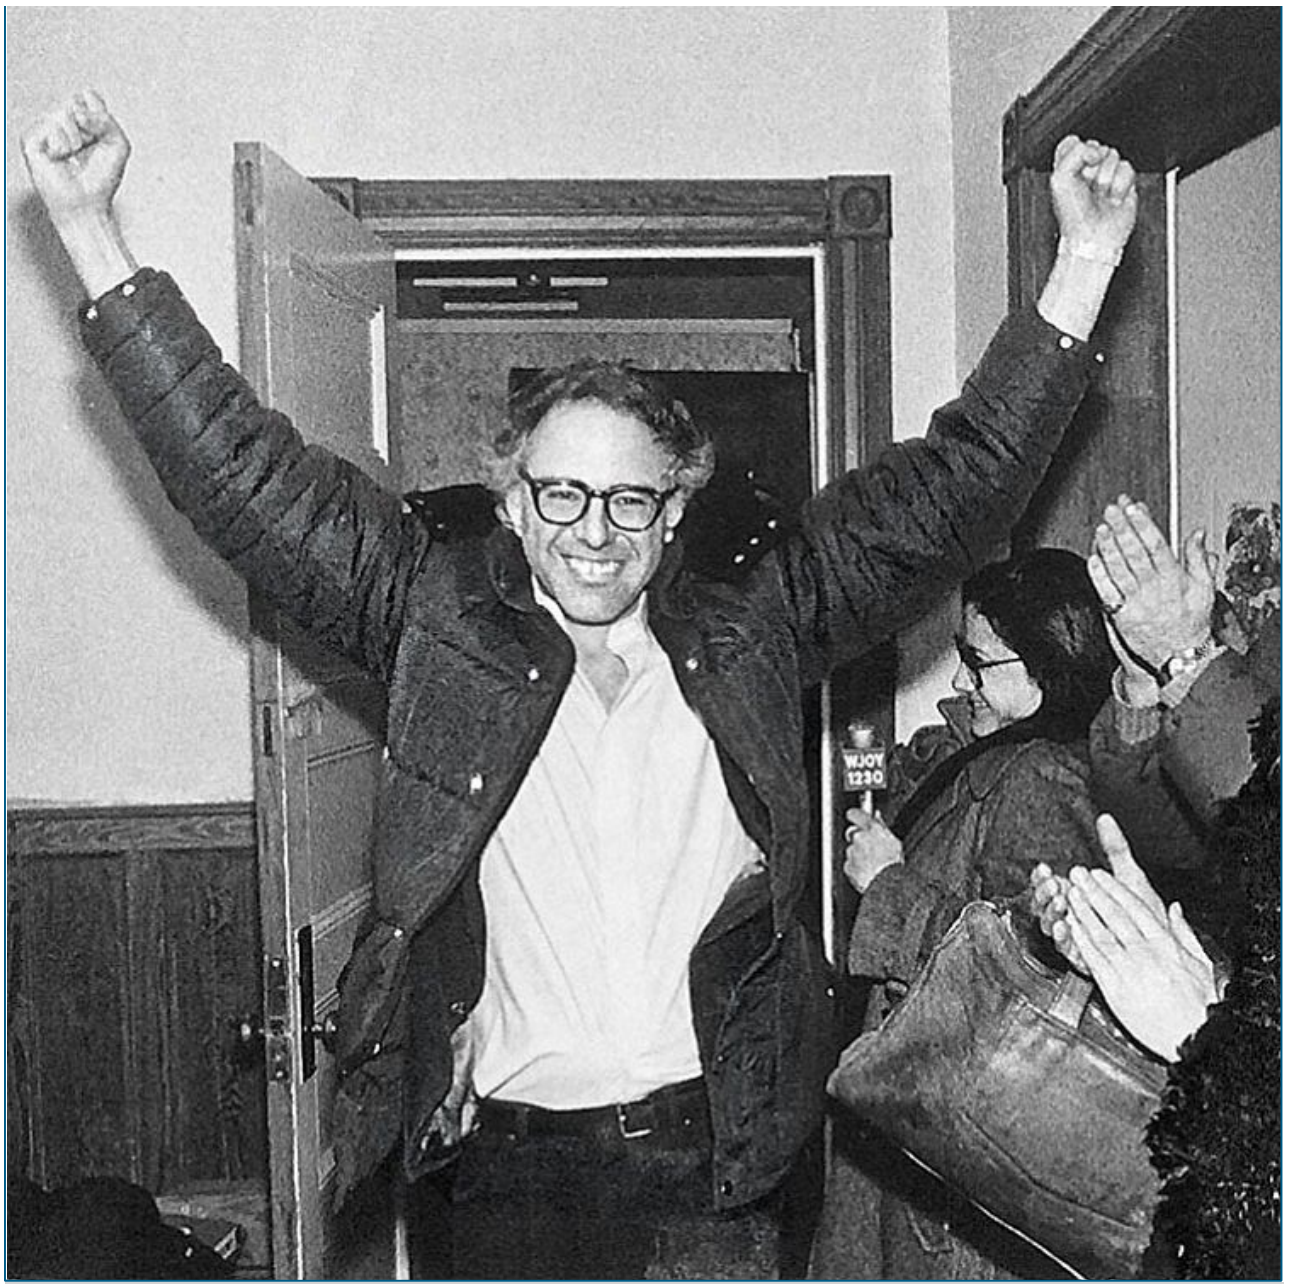
(@wpjenna)

A reality check from a former top Obama adviser:

(@davidplouffe)

Finally, Rep. Don Beyer (D-Va.) got a note of congratulations from President Obama for winning the National Press Club spelling bee:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



(@RepDonBeyer)

–Instagrams of the day:

The Sanders campaign posted a picture of vintage Bernie:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(berniesanders)

A family of Ben Carson supporters dressed up in Carson-themed Halloween costumes:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(realbencarson)

Sens. Claire McCaskill (D-Mo.) and Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) took in the final World Series game with their spouses:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(clairecmc)

GOOD READS FROM ELSEWHERE:

— New York Times, "Before the stump, Ben Carson took the stand as an expert witness," by Steve Eder and Pam Belluck: "Fifteen years before the Baltimore police were accused of causing the death of Freddie Gray, the city was taken to court by another black man, one who had been paralyzed from the waist down after being tackled by an officer. The man, Horace Muhammad, claimed that the police had manhandled him and that paramedics had mishandled his care before he got to the hospital. At the trial, the city's lawyers brought out the perfect expert witness to vouch for the paramedics: an internationally renowned surgeon and a revered local celebrity, Dr. Benjamin S. Carson. During two hours on the stand, Dr. Carson held the jury in thrall with careful medical explanations of spinal injuries, a quietly self-assured tone and even one reference to God as he undercut Mr. Muhammad's claims. Only the police had caused Mr. Muhammad's paralysis, Dr. Carson said. The paramedics had not hurt him — they had helped him. … Dr. Carson's testimony seems intriguingly resonant now, as he campaigns for president in a country shaken by a series of cases in which black men have died after encounters with the police, including Mr. Gray, who died in April of a spinal cord injury sustained in police custody. It also provides a window into Dr. Carson's stature in the community at the time, his understated confidence, and the way he was viewed by African-Americans whose lives were markedly less prosperous and accomplished."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— USA Today, "How Trump is helping Clinton: Latino mobilization takes place," by Heidi M. Pryzbyla: "Clinton, who captured the majority of the Hispanic vote in the 2008 primaries against President Obama, is once again stepping up efforts to control that demographic by having March Anthony and Salma Hayek use social media to pitch for her, as well as having an "all-Latina phone bank" is dial up Nevada's Latino women."

— New York Times, "Ad helped Chris Christie win a race, but then he had to apologize," by Matt Flegenheimer: Two decades ago, Chris Christie was forced to apologize to two local New Jersey politicians after he incorrectly stated in a television ad that they were under investigation by the country prosecutor, when in reality, it was a "procedural follow-up." After easily beating them in the race for a freeholder position, Christie, in his court-ordered mea culpa, said, "I am writing to express my sincere apology to both of you and your families."

HOT ON THE LEFT

Hillary: Assault at Spring Valley High can't be justified. From the Huffington Post : "Clinton joined SiriusXM … to discuss criticism of her criminal justice platform as well as the black teenager who was thrown from her desk by a school resource officer in Columbia, South Carolina, last week. The Democratic front-runner said she was disturbed by the video of former Spring Valley High School resource officer Ben Fields manhandling a 16-year-old student known only as Shakara … 'Whatever the facts are, it doesn't justify behavior like that," she said."

HOT ON THE RIGHT

Iran MPs: "Death to America" stands despite nuclear deal. From AFP : "A clear majority of Iranian legislators said Monday the Islamic republic will not abandon the slogan of 'Death to America' despite its July nuclear accord with world powers. 'The martyr-nurturing nation of Iran is not at all prepared to abandon the slogan of 'Death to America' under the pretext of a nuclear agreement,' 192 members of Iran's 290-seat parliament said in a statement carried by state news agency IRNA."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DAYBOOK:

–What's happening today on the campaign trail: Donald Trump holds a book signing at Trump Tower in New York, N.Y. Hillary Clinton attends town halls in Coralville and Grinnell, Iowa. Jeb Bush campaigns in Lexington, S.C. Ben Carson continues his book tour with stops in Tampa and Lakeland, Fla. Martin O'Malley pushes for stronger gun control in Manchester, Durham and Keene, N.H. John Kasich greets voters in Dubuque, Iowa and Mobile, Ala.

–On the Hill: The Senate meets at 10 a.m. to resume consideration of the Federal Water Quality Protection Act. The House meets at 10 a.m. for morning business and noon for legislative business, with the first votes expected between 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. This week the House will consider legislation related to a long-term Highway Trust Fund extension, and legislation related to the National Defense Authorization Act.

–At the White House: No public events are scheduled.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "I eat nails when I wake up, then I have breakfast." — Jeb Bush to Bloomberg 's Mark Halperin

NEWS YOU CAN USE IF YOU LIVE IN D.C.:

— Tuesday will be sunny with between 70-75 degrees and lows between 40 and 52. "Nice day all the way! After yesterday's near-constant cloudy ceiling, we break into serious sunshine with morning temperatures rising fast enough to make you reconsider bringing a jacket," the Capital Weather Gang reports . "Temperatures should reach the low to middle 70s by afternoon with just very light breezes. Our Indian Summer season is upon us as fantastic, comfortably warm sunny conditions dominate today and most of tomorrow," the Capital Weather Gang reports. "Some showers intrude on Thursday, but temperatures stay warmer than normal into at least Friday when we have the chance to hit 80 degrees in some parts. A cold front arrives early on Saturday to bring some showers and cooler weather. By Sunday, highs may only manage the 50s."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

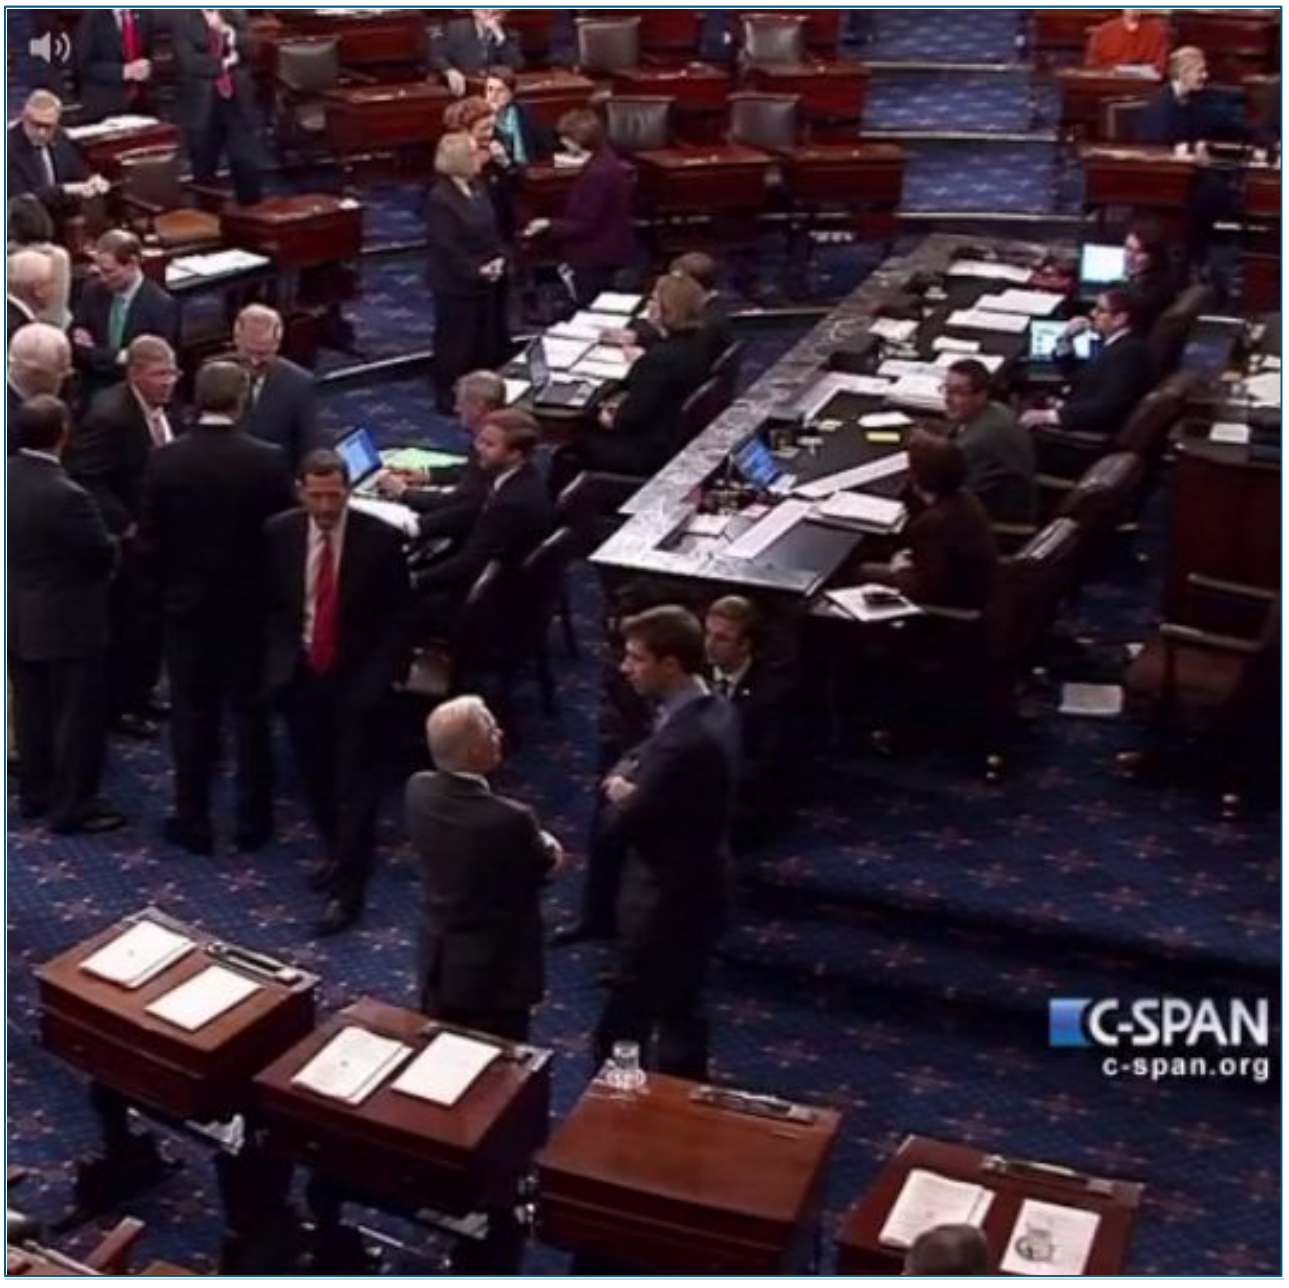
Dusty Baker in August (AP Photo/Brett Davis)

— Personnel moves fall apart at two of our city's biggest institutions:

- Contract talks crumbled over the weekend with Bud Black, who the Nationals had tentatively selected to be their new manager, The Post's James Wagner reports. CBS Sports reports that the Nationals have circled back to the other finalist, Dusty Baker, who last managed the Cincinnati Reds in 2013, and intend to offer him the job.
- Metro's year-long search for a new general manager hit another major snag as the transit agency and its top choice for the job, corporate financial expert Neal S. Cohen, called off their contract negotiations and parted ways," Paul Duggan, Michael Laris and Lori Aratani report. "The agency's four-member executive committee, which is conducting the search for a new chief executive, gave no reason publicly for the collapse … A Washington-area transportation official said he was told that Cohen — a career financial executive in private industry who has no experience in the public sector — was angry and taken aback by the media scrutiny he has been under since last Wednesday, when reporters learned that he was Metro's No. 1 candidate for the job."

— D.C. Coast, at 14th and K, will close at the end of the year.

— Charles Severance, convicted of murdering three Alexandria residents over an 11-year period, will spend the rest of his life in prison .



This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— Fairfax County schools eliminated all open-flame science experiments less than a week after a chemistry experiment got out of control and resulted in five students getting burned. (Moriah Balingit, Justin Jouvenal and T. Rees Shapiro)

— A former NSA division chief is expected to plead guilty to beating his 3-year-old son to death. (Dan Morse)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Overheard from a floor staffer on a hot Senate mic at 1:23 a.m. during last week's budget-related votes: "He better get his ass here, before, they've already lost one vote because he's not here." Watch:

(Jeremy Art)

Rand Paul said he loves Donald Trump and thinks he's "hilarious" … and that running with him could be an “utter and absolute disaster”:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(Comedy Central)

Usher speaks with Black Lives Matter protesters outside a Hillary Clinton event:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

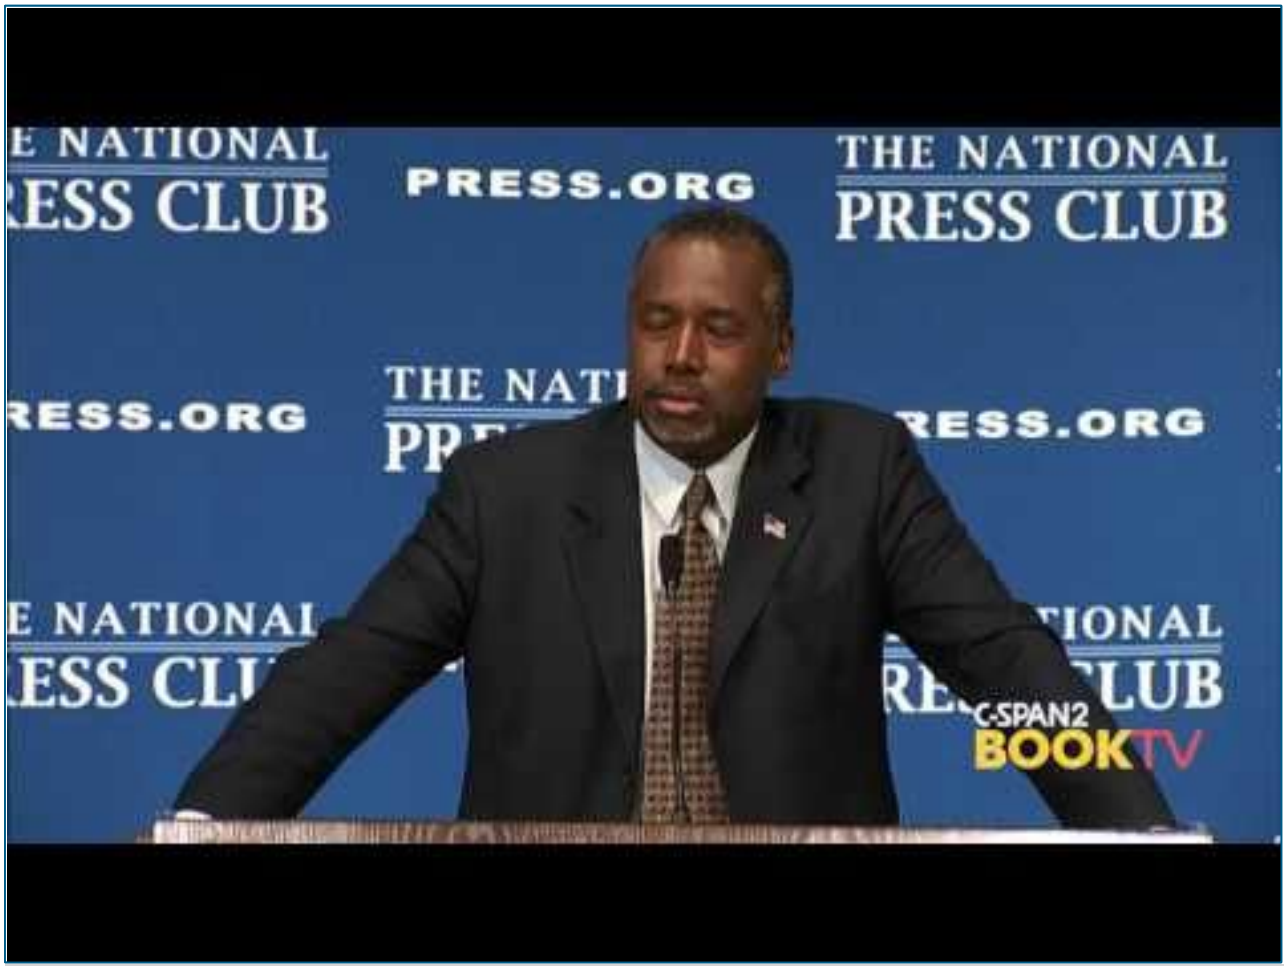
(TMZ)

C-SPAN dug up footage of Jeb introducing Marco Rubio on Election Night 2010:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(C-SPAN)

Bush went on the attack against Rubio and Trump yesterday in an attempt to revitalize his campaign. But one woman sitting in his camera shot could not keep her eyes open as he spoke:



On the bright side for Jeb, he has diehard supporters like the woman who put a sticker on her forehead (no video here, just a picture):

(@HowardMortman)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ben Carson spoke about his new book at Washington's National Press Club:

(BookTV)

You are receiving this e-mail because you signed up for the The Daily 202 newsletter or were registered on washingtonpost.com or were invited as a VIP. For additional free newsletters or to manage your newsletters, click here .

We respect your privacy . If you believe that this e-mail has been sent to you in error, or you no longer wish to receive e-mail from The Washington Post, click here . Contact us for help.

©2015 The Washington Post | 1150 15th St NW, Washington, DC 20071

The Washington Post

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jacob Roberts" <jroberts@progressivemediausa.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/3/2008 5:51:27 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Morning 06/03/08

Main Topics: McLobbyist, McBush, McCain's Iraq mistakes, Fallon interview, Bush tax cuts

Summary of Shift: Primary mania has swept the networks as the democratic nomination process comes to a close. Bill Clinton's contemptuous statements for a Vanity Fair columnist received considerable airtime. It looks as though Senator Kennedy's surgery was a success. GM announced a massive plant closure in the face of rocketing fuel prices. Dick Cheney's inbreeding joke about West Virginia was a running subject of coverage.

Highlights:
1) Steve Schmidt interviews
   a. Defends McCain's lobbyist ties, attacks Obama's Iran position
   b. Avoids discussion of McCain's foreign policy mistakes, instead attacks Obama
2) Bush tax cuts
3) Fallon and Iran
4) AZ sheriff, Joe Arpaio says he would endorse McCain if asked on "Fox and Friends" [no clip]

Clips:

Highlight #1
Steve Schmidt Defends McCain Against Lobbyist Accusations and Attacks Obama's Iran Policies
(MSNBC 06/03/08 08:39am)
[Clip of Gibbs]

ROBERT GIBBS: Right now the McCain campaign is run by lobbyist and special interests. What do you think the administration is going to be run by? My guess is it's going to be lobbyists and special interests. The guy has been in Washington for 26 years. Everybody values his service to this country but having worked in Washington for 26 years, having your campaign run by lobbyist and special interests. I think people are going to ask themselves this question: what's going to change? And my guess is what your going to see is a lot of the same.

[...]

STEVE SCHMIDT: What Mr. Gibbs is talking about is nonsense. The reality is when it comes to lobbyists the McCain campaign has the toughest policy in the history of presidential campaigns. There are lobbyists all around Senator Obama's campaign. [...] Let me give you an example of something that counts here. The Farm Bill. Politicians don't want to vote against something called a Farm Bill in an election year because who wants to be attacked as being against farms?

Senator McCain voted against that bill because it was bad news for the American people, loaded up with billions of dollars of corporate pork and wasteful spending. Senator Obama voted for it because he wasn't tough enough to stand up, put the American people over the special interests. Time and time again, Senator McCain, over the course of his career, has stood up to the special interests. He has been the single biggest and most effective voice for reform in Washington in the last generation.

Senator Obama doesn't have that record. He has a lot of rhetoric. If it's going to change Washington though, you have to be able to be tough enough to stand up and Senator Obama has a record of not being able to do that.

PAT BUCHANAN: The Senator addressed the pro-Israeli lobby, AIPAC yesterday in Washington. His message seemed to be [...] that john McCain will be a far-more trustworthy and reliable defender of Israel than you could expect Barack Obama to be. Is that correct?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SCHMIDT: What Senator McCain is talking about when it comes to Israel, America's most important ally in the region, is that Senator Obama pursues a path that will make the region more dangerous and will make the world more dangerous. If you talk to Israeli leaders, if you talk to our military commanders on the ground, the precipitous withdrawal from Iraq that Senator Obama advocates at a moment where we have turned a corner or now are winning there, would weaken Israel's security in the region, would weaken America's security in the region. His calls to go have unconditional meeting with President Ahmadinejad weaken the prestige of the American Presidency and make the world more dangerous. [...]

[...]

SCHMIDT: [...] One of the central lessons of history is that peace is secured through strength, not through weakness. Going to meet with the Iranian president who has called Israel a stinking it corpse, who has said Israel's days are soon to be ended, who is developing nuclear weapons, who is supplying deadly munitions used to kill Americans in Iraq. What is it that senator Obama is going to say to him? Is Senator Obama so arrogant that he believes he will charm his way into getting the Iranians to change their policies supporting terrorist organization?

Roberts: Does McCain Understand Iraq? Schmidt: Let's Talk about Obama (CNN 06/03/08 8:24pm)
JOHN ROBERTS: What's Senator McCain going to be talking about tonight?

STEVE SCHMIDT: [...] Senator McCain is very excited to talk to the country and to talk about the great debate we ought to have in this country. Our national security, getting the economy moving again, fixing health care, fixing the energy issue that affects so many millions of Americans. And he's going lay, to begin to lay out the choice tonight between his vision and the likely democratic nominee's position, Senator Obama.

ROBERTS: You chose New Orleans as the site for this speech because according to the campaign quoted, it epitomizes the government's failure to act. But it also brings President Bush into the conversation. Do you expect that while some people will talk about the differences between Senator McCain and President Bush, people who write about tonight's speech will also talk about what they have in common and that might not be so good for you.

SCHMIDT: All elections are about the future. This election will be about the future. It's going to be about Senator McCain's vision to move this country forward versus Senator Obama's vision. Senator Obama gives a great speech but a lot of his ideas will take us back, back to days of higher taxes, to a less secure America with regard to national security. New Orleans is a city that more than any other in the country signifies to the American people what is broken about our government and institutions. Senator Obama is fond of saying that John McCain represents a third term for George W. Bush. The reality is that Senator McCain has disagreed on issue after issue with President Bush over the last eight years. He is his own man. He has his own opinions. [...]

ROBERTS: [...] You say he has shown his independence over the eight years of the Bush administration and certainly ran on a different platform than President Bush did in the 2000 campaign. But people have written about Senator McCain that he has run to the right to mollify the conservative base, and they're wondering when are we going to see this maverick that independents like so much out there on the campaign trail?

SCHMIDT: I think you see him every day. For instance, when this war was going so badly, the one person in America who stood up and said we're losing this war, we have to change the strategy. He was attacked mercilessly for disloyalty by saying things were going badly. That person was John McCain. That strategy is working today. We are winning this war in Iraq. Senator Obama opposed that change strategy. When we look at the energy bill that Vice President Cheney was a great supporter of in 2005, a give away to the oil companies, Senator Obama supported it, Senator McCain voted against it. Surprised? I think a lot of your viewers probably will be. Over the course of the campaign, Senator McCain is going to talk about his views, his vision, and a lot of times -- those views and that vision is different than the president's policy. Again, we ought to have a great debate about the future. When Senator Obama repeats his talking point 300 times a day about the third term of George Bush, it's a dishonest debate. It's one that does a disservice to the American people.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ROBERTS: Let me come back to Iraq and by association Iran. Senator McCain has been hammering Barack Obama on his idea of meeting with Iranian leaders. Senator Obama has been mocking Senator McCain for saying late last week that U.S. troops in Iraq were backed down to pre-surge levels. Let's listen to what Senator Obama said.

[Clip]

BARACK OBAMA: He said, quote, we have drawn down to pre-surge levels. That's what he said. This is the guy who said I had no knowledge. John McCain was wrong.

ROBERTS: Steve, there are more troops in Iraq now than there were pre-surge. The Senator was incorrect when he said that. He's will once said that general David Petraeus drives around Baghdad in a light skinned humvee and not up armored one. Some people are wondering does Senator McCain have a full grasp of the facts on the ground there in Iraq?

SCHMIDT: Well, Senator McCain, of course he does. The reality here is the strategy That Senator McCain advocated is working. "The Washington Post" in an editorial this week talked about politicians like Barack Obama trying to reconsider their rhetoric about the fact that this war is lost. Three of the five brigading that were part of the surge are home. Two more are coming home. We are drawing down troops in Iraq. Reality is that the strategy Senator McCain advocated has turned a corner in Iraq. That was a strategy opposed by Senator Obama. Judgment counts here, too.

After promise that he wouldn't do it, Senator Obama voted against funds for combat troops in the field. He's not ready to be commander in chief. On the biggest question this country has faced, over the last couple of years, while the two of them have been in the senate, t was this question about how we change the strategy in Iraq. Senator McCain advocated a change in strategy that has led to where we are today, which is success in Iraq. We are winning this war after many years of mismanagement. Senator Obama said that strategy would not succeed. He was wrong. Senator McCain was right. Senator Obama's trying to it pick around the fringes because he's wrong on the big question. […] The difficult debate in this country is who can secure the peace for the next generation, and that person is Senator McCain.

Highlight #2
Admiral Fallon Denies Plans for Iran, Outlines Prescription for Iraq (CNN 06/03/08 7:24am)
KYRA PHILLIPS: Do you feel you were pushed out, Admiral?

WILLIAM FALLON: I think the real story here is what's important and what was important was not me. […] It was the fact that we have a war in progress […] and we needed to be focused on that. […]

PHILLIPS: […] Tom Barnett made it appear that you were the only man standing between the president and a war with Iran. Is that true?

FALLON: Kyra, I don't believe for a second President Bush wants a war with Iran. [...] I believe, in our relationship with Iran, we need to be strong and firm [...], at the same time, demonstrate a willingness and openness to engage in dialogue because there are certainly things we can find in common with these people.

PHILLIPS: Would you have done that? Would you have negotiated with Iran?

FALLON: Well it's not my position to really negotiate with Iran. […] It's the role of the diplomats to do the negotiation.

PHILLIPS: So when all the talk came about with regard to a third war, a war with Iran the president didn't have it on the table. He didn't say to you, 'Look, this is what I want to do,' and did you stand up to him and say, 'Nope. Sir, bad move.'

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FALLON: […] it's probably not appropriate to try to characterize it in that way. Again don't believe for a second that the president really wants to go to war with Iran. We have a lot of things going on and there are many other ways to solve problems.

I was very open and candid in my advice. I'm not shy. I will tell people, the leaders what I think and offer my opinions on Iran and other things and continue to do that.

PHILLIPS: Do you think that's what cost you your job?

FALLON: No, I don't believe so at all. I think, again it's this confidence issue of: do people really believe the chain of command is working for them? Or do we have doubts and if the doubts start focusing attention away from what the priority issues oughtta be then we gotta make a change.

[…]

PHILLIPS: Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama talk about pulling troops out by next year. John McCain says, 'Nope—we gotta stay the course. What is the best course for Iraq right now?

FALLON: I believe the best course is to retain the high confidence we have in General Dave Petraeus and his team out there. Dave's done an absolutely magnificent job in leading our people in that country. […] There's a very, very important military role here in providing stability and security in this country but that's not gonna be successful as we know without lots of other people playing a hand.

The political side of things in Iraq has got to move forward; that appears to be improving. People have to have confidence in their futures. They wanna have civility. They'd like to raise their families in peace.

They'd like to have a job. They'd like to look to tomorrow as better than today and it takes more than the military but the military is essential to provide stability and security. So the idea that we would suddenly just walk away from Iraq strikes me as not appropriate.

We all want to bring our troops home. We want to have the majority of our people back. We want the war ended, but given where we are today, the progress that they've made—particularly in the last couple of months—I think it's very, very heartening to see what's really happened here.

The right course of action is to continue to work with the Iraqis, let them take over the majority of the tasks for insuring security for the country and have our people come out on a timetable that's appropriate to the conditions that are on the ground.

Highlight #3
Velshi: McCain Wants the Tax Cuts Permanent for Everyone (CNN 06/03/08 6:47am)
ALI VELSHI: […] The only thing about this that you probably need to know is that none of the three major candidates running for president right now support getting rid of the tax cuts for everybody. In fact, John McCain, Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama all say that the tax cuts should stay in place for low and middle class earners. The only issue separating them all is that John McCain thinks that they should stay in place for everybody […].

--
Jacob Roberts
Media Analyst
PMUSA
(c) 208.420.3470
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara DuBois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Sara Du Bois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 8/4/2008 1:38:07 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 7/4

08 Election Daily News Clips
August 4th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

11:25am McCain: Tour and Business Roundtable in Lafayette Hill, PA
- Tracking scheduled for this event
9:30pm McCain: Participates in Sturgis Rally 2008 motorcycle rally in Sturgis, SD

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

McCain Leans Toward a Compromise on Offshore Drilling (NYT 8/4/08)
By BRIAN KNOWLTON
A day after Senator Barack Obama said he would consider supporting broad energy legislation that would permit some of the offshore oil drilling he had previously opposed, an aide to Senator John McCain said Sunday that he too might support such a compromise package.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/04/us/politics/04campaign.html

McCain and Obama tweak views on Iraq (USA Today 8/4/08)
By Kathy Kiely and David Jackson
John McCain and Barack Obama have been on opposite sides of the debate over U.S. policy in Iraq for much of the past two years. Now, they seem to be drawing closer together. Both now say the U.S. military can begin winding down combat operations in Iraq. Both believe the U.S. should begin stepping up its combat presence in Afghanistan. And each candidate says those views are a change of heart for his opponent.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/politics/election2008/2008-08-03-iraq-flap_N.htm?csp=34

Rerouting McCain's Bus (Washington Post 8/4/08)
By Howard Kurtz; C01
...the captain of the Straight Talk Express is having a bumpier ride with journalists than when he ran for president eight years ago. The popular image of the campaign -- McCain bantering with national journalists in the back of his bus -- has, in reality, all but vanished. The traveling press is now routinely stiffed in favor of five-minute sit-downs with local reporters.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080301851.html
See WSJ's "McCain Gains Better Control of Message": http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121764003514606519.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

McCain Response to HIV Report (The Page 8/4/08)
U.S. Senator John McCain today issued the following statement on the report by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) that there were more new HIV infections in the United States than previously estimated: "...As President, I will work closely with non-profit, government, and private sector stakeholders to continue the fight against HIV/AIDS..."
http://thepage.time.com/mccain-response-to-hiv-report/
Link to International Herald Tribune's "New HIV cases in U.S. underreported by 40 percent": http://www.iht.com/articles/2008/08/03/healthscience/aids.php

McCain likely to let Obama choose VP first (Politico 8/4/08)
By: Jonathan Martin

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

John McCain's extended circle is divided on whether he should announce his running mate in the immediate days ahead—but the Republican is more likely to wait for Barack Obama to announce his choice first, according to advisers.
http://dyn.politico.com/printstory.cfm?uuid=8AEA36D9-3048-5C12-0054349F7C5E83DA

McCain Urges Bush to Avoid Confrontations on China Trip (Washington Post 8/3/08)
by David S. Broder
Sen. John McCain urged President Bush yesterday to avoid saying anything "confrontational" to his Chinese hosts when he visits Beijing this week for the opening of the Olympics, lest he damage prospects for cooperation between the United States and China.
http://feeds.washingtonpost.com/~r/wp-dyn/rss/politics/index_xml/~3/354176166/AR2008080201681.html
See Reuters's "Bush's China hurdle: Keeping sports, politics apart": http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080300406.html

Campaigns spar over drilling as leadership issue (AP 8/3/08)
By DOUGLASS K. DANIEL
The different paths John McCain and Barack Obama have taken to support expanded offshore drilling for oil demonstrate how each would govern as president, their supporters said Sunday. McCain surrogates contended on the Sunday news programs that the Arizona Republican's turn toward drilling, which he had once opposed, showed how McCain would respond decisively to a crisis. Obama's supporters argued that his willingness to consider a bipartisan proposal including more drilling showed how the Illinois Democrat would pursue compromise to achieve results.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080300570.html

McCain, Obama Advisors See Balanced Budget (CBS 8/3/08)
Obama Backer Robert Rubin And McCain Advisor Carly Fiorina Say Sound Fiscal Policy Could Help Erase Massive Federal Deficit
http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2008/08/03/ftn/main4317557.shtml
Link to pdf of "Face the Nation" transcript: http://www.cbsnews.com/htdocs/pdf/FTN_080308.pdf

Can $4 Gasoline Drive McCain Campaign? (WSJ blog 8/3/08)
By Peter A. Brown
The conventional wisdom is that $4 gasoline raises the odds that Sen. Barack Obama will become the nation's next president. ...Yet, the American people are undergoing a change of opinion when it comes to all things energy that might actually provide a useful campaign opportunity for Sen. John McCain. Simply put, this transformation offers the Republican presidential nominee a potential vehicle to turn around his largest problem – voters don't think he can resurrect the nation's slumping economy.
http://blogs.wsj.com/politicalperceptions/2008/08/03/can-4-gasoline-drive-mccain-campaign/

POW status was key factor in McCain's first race (AP 8/3/08)
By JACQUES BILLEAUD
A newcomer to Arizona, John McCain used his wife's wealth, ties to powerful Washington figures and, most of all, the emotional power of his five years in a Vietnamese prison to launch his political career 25 years ago. Well-known today, McCain's harrowing experience during the Vietnam War was new to voters in his 1982 race for an open congressional seat. McCain saturated local TV with an ad focused on his military record that showed him getting off a plane on crutches shortly after his release as a POW.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080300728_pf.html

McCain, the Analog Candidate (NYT 8/3/08)
By MARK LEIBOVICH
Big surprise: a lot of smarty-pants computer types have been snickering at John McCain lately. The self-described "Neanderthal" of the Grand Old Party (emphasis, old) has been catching flack for admitting that he is no techno-geek. He not only did not invent the Internet, he can barely use it.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/03/weekinreview/03leibovich.html
See Politico's "McCain's tech deficit poses problem": http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0808/12261.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Is a John McCain-Daddy Yankee ticket forthcoming? (LA Times 8/3/08)
By Nicholas Riccardi
Despite mocking Barack Obama's celebrity status, McCain isn't above flirting with pop culture. He chills with a reggaeton star and hangs with a country singer whose latest song is 'Raising McCain.'
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-celebs3-2008aug03,0,6707693.story?track=rss

Poll: McCain's attack strategy paying dividends (AP 8/3/08)
By STEVEN R. HURST
Intensified attacks by Republican John McCain on the character of his Democratic opponent have coincided with Barack Obama losing a nine percentage point advantage in a national poll, which showed the candidates running dead even over the weekend.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080301299.html

Paris Hilton's mom takes offense at McCain's humor (AP 8/3/08)
Paris Hilton's mother doesn't share John McCain's sense of humor. ... On Sunday, Hilton's mother, Kathy Hilton, a McCain donor, registered her disapproval.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080300977.html

The Story the Campaign Pictures Tell (Washington Post 8/3/08)
By Deborah Howell; B06
Barack Obama may be only eight points ahead of John McCain in the latest Washington Post-ABC News poll, but he's creaming McCain in the number of pictures and stories published in The Post in the past two months.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080102874.html

Kerry Accuses GOP of 'Character Assassination' (Washington Post blog 8/3/08)
By Zachary A. Goldfarb
The 2004 Democratic presidential nominee accused the campaign of Sen. John McCain of trying to impugn the character of Sen. Barack Obama in this year's presidential race. ...Kerry and Lieberman were among a number of campaign surrogates who defended their candidates after an especially negative week in the campaign.
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-talk/2008/08/kerry_accuses_gop_of_character.html

McCain Takes a Page From Clinton's Playbook (NYT blog 8/3/08)
By John Harwood
... Mr. Obama has watched Senator John McCain pick up central strands of Mrs. Clinton's approach, and amplify them. In exaggerated form, Mr. McCain, the presumed Republican presidential nominee, has adopted her attitude toward Mr. Obama's emergence (disdain), employed the same core argument against him (unproven and risky) and singled out his lingering electoral vulnerabilities (older voters, Rust Belt whites) in a contest where the Democrat's race forms the backdrop.
http://thecaucus.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/08/03/mccain-takes-a-page-from-clintons-playbook/

Topless Women, Kid Rock, Bikers, And John McCain (Huffington Post 8/3/08)
By Sam Stein
The town of Sturgis, South Dakota will witness, on Monday, the rare fusion of drunken debauchery, public stripteasing, motorcycle rallying, a live performance by Kid Rock, and - last but not least - a veterans-themed speech by presidential candidate John McCain. Seriously.
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/08/03/topless-women-kid-rock-bi_n_116632.html
See EarthTime's " McCain to roar into motorcycle haven in South Dakota": http://www.earthtimes.org/articles/show/223259,mccain-to-roar-into-motorcycle-haven-in-south-dakota.html

McCain, Obama Deliver Economic-Aid Proposals (WSJ 8/2/08)
By AMY CHOZICK and ELIZABETH HOLMES; Page A4
With the unemployment rate hitting a four-year high, Sen. Barack Obama and Republican rival Sen. John McCain ratcheted up the debate about how to bolster the ailing economy. ...Sen. McCain reiterated his plan promoting corporate tax cuts while criticizing his opponent's economic proposals.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121760304424804763.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

Lobbyists Gave Campaigns $140 Million in 1st Half (WSJ 8/2/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By T.W. FARNAM
While many candidates decry special interests' influence in Washington, new reports show campaigns received $140 million from lobbyists in the first half of 2008. ...Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain took in about $1.7 million from lobbyists, accounting for less than 2% of his total contributions.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121763902619406511.html?mod=special_page_campaign2008_leftbox

John McCain's oft-used Teddy Roosevelt analogy is fitting (LA Times 8/2/08)
By James Hohmann
His 'ultimate hero' was also a maverick Republican admired for military courage and devoted to conservation. And the fact that T.R. was the youngest president and is widely revered? Just good PR.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-teddyjohn3-2008aug03,0,2298498.story?track=rss

McCain faces a tough crowd on affirmative action (LA Times 8/2/08)
By David G. Savage
He tells a largely black audience that the practice should end. But his position on the issue is nuanced.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-affirm2-2008aug02,0,3426297.story?track=rss
Link to Prepared Text of Speech: http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/01/us/politics/01mccain-text.html

McCain: "People Aren't Just Choosing a Motivational Speaker" (ThePage 8/2/08)
The Republican spanks Obama over energy, tax hikes, earmarks and more in his weekly radio message. "Washington is full of talented talkers. And Senator Obama is one of the best to come along in quite a while…. But good speeches aren't everything in politics."
http://thepage.time.com/2008/08/02/mccain-people-arent-just-choosing-a-motivational-speaker/
Link to transcript of radio address: http://thepage.time.com/mccains-weekly-radio-address-2/
Link to audio: http://www.johnmccain.com/Downloads/aug22008_wra.mp3

McCain's Race Comments an Issue at Urban League (Washington Post blog 8/1/08)
By Juliet Eilperin
A day after he accused Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.) of unfairly exploiting the issue of race in this election, Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) made the same pitch to the National Urban League that he delivered two weeks ago to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People: "I am a candidate for president who seeks your vote and hopes to earn it."
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/08/01/mccains_race_comments_an_issue.html

Obama calls McCain 'cynical,' not racist (Politico 8/2/08)
By MIKE ALLEN
Barack Obama told reporters in Titusville, Fla., on Saturday that he is at "peace" with a McCain campaign ad seeking to portray him as an airhead celebrity in the mold of Britney Spears or Paris Hilton. "Let me be clear," Obama said in response to a question about the injection of race into the campaign. "In no way do I think that John McCain's campaign was being racist; I think they're cynical, and I think they want to distract people from talking about the real issues.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0808/12255.html

McCain: The original political celebrity (Politico 8/2/08)
By: Carrie Budoff Brown
If Barack Obama gave new meaning to the term "political celebrity," then John McCain helped define it. He emerged as the most popular Republican in Hollywood following his 2000 presidential primary defeat, winning more screen time than the rest of Congress combined.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0808/12260.html

How Shitty Was McCain? (Atlantic Online 8/2/08)
By Andrew Sullivan
...The arrogant-celebrity meme is a variation on the usual Rovian fare: empty of actual policy substance but evocative of playground loyalties and resentments. Basically, McCain called Obama a girl, to appeal to the jocks, and then called him arrogant to flatter the nerds.
http://andrewsullivan.theatlantic.com/the_daily_dish/2008/08/how-shitty-was.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama says McCain Camp Turned Comment Into 'Racially Incendiary Remark' (Washington Post blog 8/2/08)
By Jonathan Weisman
Sen. Barack Obama conceded Saturday morning that allegations he made that Republicans would try to "scare" voters by raising his appearance and name did allude to race, but he said it was rival John McCain's campaign that transformed general comments about his unusual biography into a "racially incendiary remark."
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/08/02/obama_says_mccain_camp_turned.html
See AP's "Analysis: Race remains the political wild card": http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080102607.html

Obama backs away from McCain's debate challenge (AP 8/2/08)
By DOUGLASS K. DANIEL
Democratic candidate Barack Obama on Saturday backed away from rival John McCain's challenge for a series of joint appearances, agreeing only to the standard three debates in the fall.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/P/PRESIDENTIAL_DEBATES?SITE=ILROR&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

McCain chides Obama over school vouchers (AP 8/2/08)
By BETH FOUHY
John McCain, the father of private school students, criticized Democratic rival Barack Obama on Friday for choosing private over public school for his kids. The difference, according to the Arizona Republican, is that he _ not Obama _ favors vouchers that give parents more school choices.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080101180.html

Race Proves to Be Unwelcome but Persistent Issue (Washington Post 8/2/08)
By Juliet Eilperin and Jonathan Weisman; A04
Sens. John McCain and Barack Obama tried yesterday to step back from a divisive debate over race, with each candidate denying that he was the first to inject the issue into the campaign. Nonetheless, the candidates and campaigns battled throughout the day over the issue and over which side was engaged in "low road" politics, an indication that race is likely to remain a major point of contention in what is becoming an increasingly bitter contest.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080103481.html

McCain Camp's Debate Response: Our Town-Hall Proposal Is "Beneath A Worldwide Celebrity" (TPM ElectionCentral 8/2/08)
By Greg Sargent
Here's the McCain campaign's response to Camp Obama's acceptance today of the four-debate framework put forth by the Commission on Presidential Debates, complete with the obligatory reference to Obama as a "celebrity" http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/08/mccain_campaigns_response_on_d.php

McCain-Backing GOP Senator Mel Martinez: Obama Did Not Play the Race Card (Huffington Post 8/2/08)
"I think we should be in a post-racial environment," said Sen. Mel Martinez, R-Fla., a supporter of Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., "I think Sen. [Barack] Obama has done an admirable job of that. I don't think he has race-baited. I think he has been very good about that."
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/08/02/mccain-backing-gop-senato_n_116537.html

McCain asks Va. congressman for records (AP 8/2/08)
U.S. Rep. Eric Cantor of Virginia has been asked for "personal documents" by John McCain's campaign, a Republican knowledgeable with the discussions said Saturday.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/politics/election2008/2008-08-02-McCain-camp_N.htm?csp=34

Bredesen warns McCain of race-baiting (Politico 8/1/08)
By: Alexander Burns
With the two presidential campaigns trading accusations of race-baiting, one of Barack Obama's prominent red-state backers warned John McCain's campaign on Friday to be careful of attacking Obama in ways that could seem racially motivated.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0808/12247.html

McCain camp mocks Obama as Messiah-like (Reuters 8/1/08)
By Steve Holland
Republican John McCain's presidential team mocked Democrat Barack Obama on Friday as an overconfident, Messiah-like candidate with a tendency toward exaggeration in a Web ad that closed out a week of attacks.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080101760.html
Link to video of ad ("The One"): http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mopkn0lPzM8

McCain: Our Campaign Isn't "Negative In The Slightest" (TPM ElectionCentral 8/1/08)
By Greg Sargent - August 1, 2008, 4:38P
John McCain just held a presser in Florida. Here are the, er, high points:
• Said "I don't think our campaign is negative in the slightest." There are negative McCain ads running as we speak, and in the very same presser, he attacked Obama for injecting race into the campaign again.
http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/08/mccain_our_campaign_isnt_negat.php

McCain suggests military-style invasion modeled on the surge to control inner city crime. (ThinkProgress 8/1/08)
Today, Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) spoke to the National Urban League, a group "devoted to empowering African Americans to enter the economic and social mainstream." When an audience member asked him how he planned to reduce urban crime, McCain praised Mayor Rudy Giuliani's efforts in New York Cirty before invoking the military's tactics in Iraq as the model for crime-fighting:
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/08/01/mccain-suggests-military-style-invasion-modeled-on-the-surge-to-control-inner-city-crime/

Dueling Web Ads (CBS blog 8/1/08)
by Scott Conroy
The McCain campaign's advertising blitz against Barack Obama continues with a new web spot called "Barack Obama Forgot Latin America."
http://www.cbsnews.com/blogs/2008/08/01/politics/horserace/entry4315226.shtml
Link to video of ad ("Barack Obama Forgot Latin America"): http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pZKxWrPQFXc
Link to script (with translation): http://www.standardnewswire.com/news/607493142.html

High-Ranking McCain Campaign Staffer Lobbied For Repeal Of Economic Sanctions Against Cuba (TPM 8/1/08)
By Greg Sargent and Eric Kleefeld
A high-ranking campaign staffer for John McCain lobbied for years on behalf of a major corporation in favor of repealing economic sanctions against Cuba, a position that is directly at odds with McCain's position, according to lobbyist disclosure forms.
http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/08/high_ranking_mccain_staffer_has_lobbied.php

McCain's blogger rips bloggers 'sitting in mother's basement, ranting into the ether.' (ThinkProgress 8/1/08)
Yesterday, the New York Times' editorial board blog, The Board, wrote a post criticizing a McCain campaign ad. McCain spokesman Michael Goldfarb — who writes and edits the campaign's blog — ripped into the Times, comparing the editors to "the average Daily Kos diarist" "ranting into the ether between games of dungeons and dragons":
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/08/01/mccains-blogger-rips-bloggers-sitting-in-mothers-basement-ranting-into-the-ether/

The Curious Mind of John McCain (Washington Post 8/1/08)
By Robert G. Kaiser; A01
Ambition and Emotion Color the Complex Intellect of the Candidate
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080103032.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCain's Country Music Extravaganza (Washington Post blog 8/1/08)
By Juliet Eilperin
"Can I get a yee-haw?" With that, country music star John Rich launched into a spirited "Country First" concert on behalf Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) tonight featuring his number-one hit "Lost in This Moment with You" and the debut of a song he had written especially for the presumptive GOP nominee, "Raising McCain." The free concert, sponsored by the Florida Republican Party, attracted several hundred people http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/08/01/mccains_country_music_extravag.html

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

Answering McCain's Attacks (Washington Post 8/4/08)
By Fred Hiatt; A11
As a week of name-calling and rapid responses faded into history, political practitioners seemed to agree that John McCain had diminished himself and his straight-talk brand with negative ads and petty misrepresentations. Yet, surprisingly, a consensus also seemed to be forming that Barack Obama, at least tactically, had not come out on top.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080301574.html

Why McCain is still in it (LA Times 8/4/08)
By Nate Silver
Barack Obama seems to enjoy some enormous advantages over John McCain in their pursuit of the White House. ...But since clinching the Democratic nomination June 3, Obama has consistently held only a four-percentage-point lead, on average, over McCain in national polls. ...That's led some reporters to conclude that Obama is underachieving.
http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-oe-silver4-2008aug04,0,1279703.story?track=rss

Why McCain Has Caught Obama and What Obama Can Do About It (Huffington Post 8/4/08)
by Cenk Uygur
There are two principal reasons why John McCain has caught Barack Obama in the national polls. 1) McCain has changed the whole conversation about this election into one question - do you want to vote for or against Obama? This is genius. Obama needs to switch the conversation if he wants to win. 2) Obama has only played defense so far and has not attacked at all. This is weakness and a sure-fire way to lose an election.
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/cenk-uygur/why-john-mccain-has-caugh_b_116672.html

Both presidential candidates are capable of better. (Washington Post 8/3/08)
IS BARACK Obama a celebrity lightweight, a self-involved Paris Hilton yearning to live "The Simple Life" in the Oval Office? Is John McCain trying to scare voters about the fact that Mr. Obama, soon to be the first African American nominee, "doesn't look like all those other presidents on those dollar bills?" And one more question: How silly were we, just two months ago, in venturing "some hope that the general election can be waged on the elevated plane that both nominees say they want?"
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/02/AR2008080201298.html

McCain's Problem Isn't His Tactics. It's GOP Ideas. (Washington Post 8/3/08)
By Greg Anrig; B01
At long last, the conservative juggernaut is cracking up. From the Reagan era until late 2005 or so, conservatives crushed progressives like me in debates as reliably as the Harlem Globetrotters owned the Washington Generals. The right would eloquently praise the virtues of free markets and the magic of the invisible hand. We would respond by stammering about the importance of regulation and a mixed economy, knowing even as the words came out that our audience was becoming bored.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080103061.html

We've Looked at Clouds From Both Sides Now (Washington Post 8/3/08)
LEFT: Word cloud created from Obama's campaign blog at my.barackobama.com/page/content/hqblog/ | RIGHT: Word cloud created from McCain's campaign blog at www.johnmccain.com/McCainReport/
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/graphic/2008/08/01/GR2008080102726.html

Defeat Your Opponents. Then Hire Them (NYT 8/3/08)
By DORIS KEARNS GOODWIN

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The scale of the challenges faced by the next president makes a diverse inner circle all the more necessary.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/03/opinion/03goodwin.html

'Bomb Bomb Iran'? Not Likely. (Washington Post 8/3/08)
By David Ignatius; B07
Analysts speculate about the danger of a U.S. or Israeli military attack on Iran before the Bush administration departs office next January. But if you read the tea leaves carefully, the evidence is actually pointing in the opposite direction.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080102872.html?nav=rss_print/editorialpages

What Did He Do to be So Black and Blue? Obama and the Race Card (Huffington Post 8/3/08)
by Drew Westen
This year should be a perfect storm for a Democratic presidential candidate, particularly one with the rhetorical gifts of Barack Obama. McCain has literally every indicator political scientists enter into their models to predict electoral success or defeat working against him...
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/drew-westen/what-did-he-do-to-be-so-b_b_116658.html

The McCain Strategy Is Vintage Karl Rove, the Media Loves It, and the Obama Camp Is Not Taking It Seriously Enough (Huffington Post 8/3/08)
by Paul Abrams
There is a plausible argument that no one has so negatively impacted the lives of the American people and the world as has Karl Rove. Not only did he elect an incompetent, not only did he misuse the White House to further his goal of a permanent Republican majority, but he has destroyed the American political dialogue.
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/paul-abrams/the-mccain-strategy-is-vi_b_116648.html

Running While Black (NYT 8/2/08)
By BOB HERBERT
Gee, I wonder why, if you have a black man running for high public office — say, Barack Obama or Harold Ford — the opposition feels compelled to run low-life political ads featuring tacky, sexually provocative white women who have no connection whatsoever to the black male candidates.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/02/opinion/02herbert.html

Right strategy, wrong candidate? (MSNBC 8/2/08)
By Chuck Todd
The hardest thing to do in politics is campaign as someone you aren't.... Unless, somehow, the candidate figures out how to embrace the strategy. Are we seeing this happen right now to John McCain?
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/25989371/

Where Have You Gone, John? (Newsweek 8/2/08*)
*Print Edition: 8/11/08
By Jonathan Alter
His zesty attacks on corporate greed and inspiring plans for national service are no more.
http://www.newsweek.com/id/150477

The Low-Road Warrior (NY Mag 8/1/08)
By John Heilemann
Mudslinging will damage McCain's brand—but it may be the only way he can win.
http://nymag.com/news/politics/powergrid/48928/

BUSH NEWS

Bush Aims to Pull Off Balancing Act on Asian Trip (WSJ 8/4/08)
By JOHN D. MCKINNON; Page A6
U.S. President George W. Bush leaves for a visit to Asia on Monday that will help mark China's emergence on the world stage but will also seek to reassure longtime allies in the region that the U.S. still stands with them. To some of China's nervous neighbors, though, the U.S.'s actions -- or lack thereof -- don't always match its words.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121778995910008045.html?mod=rss_whats_news_us

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Barack Obama fans wish Mr. President a happy birthday (LA Times blog 8/3/08)
By DON FREDERICK and ANDREW MALCOLM
Sen. Barack Obama walked into a town hall meeting in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, last week. ... But, before listening to his usual stump speech, the crowd, perhaps spontaneously, had something to do for their guy, according to the From the Road blog of CBS News' Allison O'Keefe. The nominee-to-be's fans sang "Happy Birthday." On Monday, Obama will turn 47. But the happy crowd did not sing "Happy birthday, Sen. Obama." It confidently sang "Happy birthday, Mr. President." And Barack Obama looked very pleased to hear it.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-ticket3-2008aug03,0,5841944.story?track=rss

Bush plays host at Camp David to ruler of Dubai (AP 8/3/08)
By BEN FELLER,
President Bush welcomed Dubai's ruler to his presidential retreat on Sunday, returning the favor for the opulent hospitality he received in the United Arab Emirates this year.
http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20080803/ap_on_go_pr_wh/bush

OTHER TOP NEWS

Al Qaeda Posting Confirms Death of Weapons Expert (WSJ 8/4/08)
By ALAN CULLISON
In a blow to al Qaeda in Pakistan, the terrorist group confirmed Sunday that one of its top weapons researchers, Abu Khabab al-Masri, was killed, apparently in a U.S. missile strike.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121778969565808003.html?mod=rss_whats_news_us

New Obama Ad. McCain "In the Pocket of Big Oil" (ABC blog 8/4/08)
As Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., kicks off a week focused on energy, his campaign will on Monday begin running a new TV ad that attacks Sen. John McCain as "in the pocket of big oil."
http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalpunch/2008/08/new-obama-ad-mc.html
Link to video of ad: http://my.barackobama.com/page/content/pocket_ad

Obama Says Energy Compromise Is Necessary (Washington Post 8/3/08)
By Jonathan Weisman; A14
Sen. Barack Obama on Saturday said a shift in his stance on offshore oil drilling is a necessary compromise with Republicans to gain their support for his broader goals of energy independence.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/02/AR2008080201538.html
See WaPo's "Obama Signals Support for Wider Offshore Drilling": http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080103199.html

2 U.S. soldiers killed by roadside bomb in Baghdad (AP 8/4/08)
The U.S. military said two American soldiers were killed and one was wounded by a roadside bomb in Baghdad on Monday, while Iraqi officials reported that at least nine Iraqis died in a series of bombings of Iraqi security forces.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/world/iraq/2008-08-04-roadside-bombs_N.htm?csp=34

U.N. council must increase sanctions on Iran: U.S '(Reuters 8/3/08)
By Louis Charbonneau
The United States said on Sunday that Iran has left the U.N. Security Council no choice but to increase sanctions on the Islamic Republic for ignoring demands that it halt sensitive nuclear activities. The U.S. declaration came a day after an informal deadline lapsed for Iran to respond to an offer from the United States, Britain, France, Germany, China and Russia for talks on its disputed nuclear program.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080300969.html

Rasmussen: Only 22% Say McCain Ad Racist, But Over Half (53%) See Obama Dollar-bill Comment That Way (Rasmussen 8/3/08)
Sixty-nine percent (69%) of the nation's voters say they've seen news coverage of the McCain campaign commercial that includes images of Britney Spears and Paris Hilton and suggests that Barack Obama is a celebrity just like them. Of those, just 22% say the ad was racist while 63% say it was not.
http://www.rasmussenreports.com/public_content/politics/election_20082/2008_presidential_election/only_22_say_mccain_ad_racist_but_over_half_53_see_obama_dollar_bill_comment_that_way

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama makes bid in 7 longtime Republican states (AP 8/3/08)
By LIZ SIDOTI
Alaska is young. Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia have growing populations and many black voters. Montana has seen recent Democratic inroads, and North Dakota has sent only Democrats to Congress since 1986. Indiana borders Barack Obama's home state.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080300714.html

House conservatives plan another political stunt tomorrow. (Think Progress 8/3/08)
Just as they did last Friday, a group of House Republicans will engage in political theater on the floor tomorrow, staging a fake session on gas prices. Congress adjourned last week, but some conservatives remained behind to clamor in the dark chamber for a vote on oil drilling. Politico reports that "Republicans felt they got a lot of good press out of Friday's 'revolt,' so they will be back at it again."
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/08/03/house-conservatives-plan-another-political-stunt-on-monday/

Jobless Rate Hits a High, Dims Hope For Recovery (Washington Post 8/2/08)
By Neil Irwin and Alejandro Lazo; A01
Four-Year Peak Signals Deeper Economic Woes... The fallout from the economic downturn spread into new corners of the job market in July, adding to the deep stresses facing American workers. ...GOP presidential candidate John McCain, meanwhile, renewed his call for a job-creation plan that includes cutting the corporate income tax.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080100920.html

Ahmadinejad: Iran won't give up nuclear rights (AP 8/2/08)
By NASSER KARIMI
Iran will not give up "a single iota of its nuclear rights," the country's president said Saturday, rebuffing an informal deadline to stop expanding uranium enrichment or face more sanctions.
http://apnews.myway.com/article/20080803/D92AHU5G0.html

Bin Laden driver could stay indefinitely at Gitmo (AP 8/2/08)
The commander of the Guantanamo Bay detention center said Saturday he has been researching new potential accommodations for Osama bin Laden's driver, who could be held here indefinitely regardless of the verdict at his war crimes trial.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/world/2008-08-02-Gitmo_N.htm?csp=34

Fewer Iraqi civilians killed in July (Reuters 8/1/08)
By Missy Ryan
The number of civilians killed in Iraq last month fell to less than a quarter of the toll in July 2007, government figures released on Friday showed, underscoring a dramatic improvement in security.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080100568.html

Economic models predict clear Obama win in November (Reuters 8/1/08)
By Alister Bull
It really is the economy, stupid! Economic models that have correctly predicted the winner of almost all post-war U.S. presidential elections say recession fears will secure a victory for Barack Obama in November.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080101181.html

Wal-Mart denies that it told employees how to vote (AP 8/1/08)
By CHUCK BARTELS AND ANNE D'INNOCENZIO
Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the world's largest retailer, denied a report Friday that it had pressured employees to vote against Democrats in November because of worries that a bill the party supports would make it easier for workers to unionize.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/01/AR2008080101136.html

POLLS

Obama Leads, Pessimism Reigns Among Key Group (Washington Post 8/4/08)
By Michael D. Shear and Jon Cohen; A01
Democratic Sen. Barack Obama holds a 2 to 1 edge over Republican Sen. John McCain among the nation's low-wage workers, but many are unconvinced that either presidential candidate would be better than the other at fixing the ailing economy or improving the health-care system, according to a new national poll.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/03/AR2008080301969.html
Link to pdf of poll results: http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-srv/business/hardesthit/images/assets/Poll.pdf?hpid=topnews

--
Sara DuBois
Tracking / Communications Manager
ProgressiveAccountability.org
sara@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Adam Blickstein" <ablickstein@nsnetwork.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 9/16/2008 6:49:10 AM
Subject: [big campaign] 5 Secretaries of State Agree: We Must Talk to Iran

5 Secretaries of State Agree: We Must Talk to Iran

Washington, D.C. - Yesterday five former American secretaries of state including Republicans Henry Kissinger, Colin Powell, and James Baker all reaffirmed their support for direct talks with Iran. Kissinger went as far as to say that there must be high-level talks with the Iranians "without conditions." These statements reaffirm Barack Obama's position for the need for tough direct diplomacy with Iran. Even the Bush administration has started to come around after years of pursuing a failed policy of refusing to engage. It is only John McCain who continues to call this approach "naïve" and instead clings to a reckless strategy that has clearly failed to make us safer.

Five former Secretaries of State advocate direct talks with Iran without pre-conditions. "Five former U.S. secretaries of state said on Monday the next American administration should talk to Iran, a foe President George W. Bush has generally shunned as part of an 'axis of evil.'" At the event sponsored by the Center for New American Security, George Washington University, Rice University and City College, Henry Kissinger, Colin Powell James Baker, Madeleine Albright and Warren Christopher all agreed. Former Clinton Secretary of State Madeleine Albright advised that "You need to engage with countries you have problems with," and said "I believe we need to engage with Iran." Colin Powell, Secretary of State under George W. Bush echoed the need for negotiations stating: "Let's get together and talk about nuclear weapons." [AP, 9/15/08 . ABC News, 9/15/08 . Reuters, 9/16/08 .]

Henry Kissinger, an advisor to John McCain, supports negotiating with Iran "without preconditions." Henry Kissinger, former Secretary of State under Presidents Nixon and Ford, not only indicated that he "was in favor of negotiating with Iran," but said that such negotiations should occur "without conditions," and should begin at a high level." These remarks put Kissinger firmly in line with Senator Obama's long-held position of engagement with Iran and against McCain's refusal to talk. [ABC News, 9/15/08]

Even the Bush administration is moving toward Senator Obama's strategy of diplomatic engagement with Iran. The Bush Administration is beginning to embrace a number of foreign policy positions favored by Senator Obama. "On a range of major foreign policy issues over the past year, Bush has pursued strategies and actions very much along the lines of what Sen. Obama has advocated during his presidential race." "On the diplomatic front, Obama has made a point of advocating dialogue with Iran" and though he has been vilified by conservatives for it, "in July, Bush sent a high-level U.S. emissary to attend nuclear talks with Iran." In June, the Washington Post reported that "Senior officials at the State Department and beyond are mulling a proposal to open an interest section in Tehran, similar to the one the United States has operated in Havana since1977." [Washington Post, 9/15/08 . Washington Post, 6/23/08]

As consensus forms around the Obama position, John McCain continues to promote his reckless approach for dealing with Iran that has not worked for years now. Senator McCain has consistently derided Barack Obama as naïve for his willingness to have tough direct diplomacy with Iran. McCain has instead called for more sanctions and the continuation of a policy that has not worked for the past five years and that even President Bush is now backing away from. He even put out an advertisement two weeks ago reaffirming this position and deriding Obama's position on Iran. [John McCain conference call, 5/15/08 . John McCain.com]

Adam Blickstein
Press Secretary
National Security Network
202-289-7113 (office)
617-335-0859 (mobile)
ablickstein@nsnetwork.org

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 6/29/2015 9:08:01 AM
Subject: Re: Ben Gemen policy background

Also- Trevor just followed up again with the following on the SCOTUS ruling:

"One more thing to flag. John is certainly aware of today's Supreme Court decision presenting a near-term obstacle for Mercury regulations. He may be asked about it, and he could underscore his confidence that the Obama administration will take the necessary steps to comply and fully implement the regulations, but should there be a delay, HRC will do so as President.

Of note, These pollutants are dangerous primarily to women and their fetuses. They have never been regulated. It's been 25 years since the toxics provisions were adopted by Congress in 1990. The regulations are long overdue."

On Mon, Jun 29, 2015 at 4:00 PM, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> Yep, you're all good to call him at 5:00 or even later if it takes you longer to get here or home. His best number is his desk line: 202-266-7429

On Mon, Jun 29, 2015 at 3:56 PM, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > Yep I have a number and I will call him now to ask. Will circle back.

On Mon, Jun 29, 2015 at 3:54 PM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com > wrote:
> > > Can you call Ben and see if I can cal him at 5:00
> > > Get a number.

On Jun 29, 2015 3:19 PM, "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > > > Trevor just followed up with the below. His cell is 917-755-5446 just in case you want to call.

> > > > _____

> > > > We've also found it successful when chatting with folks to frame energy/climate as integral to each of her four fights:

> > > > - investing in clean energy that will power the economy of the future

> > > > - protecting families from pollution

> > > > - safeguarding our country from the impacts of climate change and reducing our oil dependence

> > > > - preventing those who want to keep us trapped in the energy economy of the past from distorting our political process.

On Mon, Jun 29, 2015 at 3:14 PM, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > > > > Hi John-

> > > > > Here's the policy background Trevor Houser sent over for the Ben Gemen interview. Policy memo attached and at the bottom in plain text. All printed for you in the office as well in case you're able to make it in.

> > > > > Thanks,
> > > > > Milia

> > > > > Note From Trevor Houser:

> > > > > "Not sure if comms gave John background, but the reporter has been asking about HRC's process for a climate and enviro policy. Jake and the team felt now was an appropriate time to work with Ben Geman on that story in an effort to:

> > > > > 1) underscore how seriously she takes these issues;
> > > > > 2) Climate and Environment are top priorities for the campaign; and

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

3) The campaign is leading a deliberate and thoughtful policy process that has sought input from a large number of experts and key stakeholders in the environment, clean energy, and conservation communities.

The one other thing I would flag for John is that if Ben asks whether we would support a permanent extension of the PTC/ITC we need to hedge given out solar/renewable targets. Those imply a $10-$15 billion per year price tag by 2020 and $25-$35 billion per year by 2027 if extended at current levels. May need to call for "extending and improving" or something like that."

Secretary of State Record

As Secretary, Hillary fought hard to mobilize a global response to climate change. She immediately created the first high-level post at the State Department dedicated exclusively to climate diplomacy (the US Special Envoy for Climate Change)

She put climate squarely on the agenda during her first trip as Secretary to Beijing

Hillary worked to feature climate change in the annual US-China Strategic and Economic Dialogue meeting

She helped to hammer out the breakthrough that led to the Copenhagen Accord, which, among other things, was the first international agreement in which all of the major economies – including China – committed to reduce their greenhouse gas pollution.

In addition, she worked hard as Secretary to build new coalitions to combat emissions from methane and other super-pollutants that damage the climate, as well as to launch a clean cookstove initiative that is bringing not only health but climate benefits.

In pursuing these international agreements, and the leadership we are showing at home and abroad, the United States now has a much stronger hand to play in the upcoming negotiations in Paris.

To: John Podesta, Jake Sullivan, Maya Harris and Dan Schwerin

From: Energy and Climate Team

Date: June 29, 2015

Re: Energy, Climate and Environment Policy Platform

This memo provides a brief overview of our proposed energy, climate and environment policy platform. We have developed six major policy initiatives that together offer a comprehensive strategy for a) protecting American families from pollution, b) powering the economy of the future, c) delivering energy and climate security that lasts, and d) responsibly stewarding our country's natural bounty and beauty. We are finalizing separate white papers with more detail on each of the six initiatives.

Our platform is designed to make the US the clean energy superpower of the 21st century and a global leader in the fight against climate change, and to do so in a way that provides economic opportunity and security for all Americans. We will have half a billion solar panels installed across the country by 2020 and generate enough renewable energy to power every home in the country within 10 years. During that time we will reduce US oil consumption by 20% and partner with other countries bring global oil demand growth to a halt [note: this is a proposed target we haven't yet discussed as a group].

The next decade is critical if we are going to successfully transition to a clean energy economy, deliver security that lasts, and prevent catastrophic climate change. The following is an ambitious and achievable plan of attack.

1. Smart Standards

We will fight efforts to roll back environmental protections in favor of polluters. We will defend and extend common-sense standards that make our air and water cleaner, safeguard the health of our families, reduce energy waste, driven clean energy deployment and fight global climate change. This includes full implementation of the Clean Power Plan, extension of efficiency standards for cars, trucks, airplanes and appliances, better building codes, mandatory disclosure of fracking chemicals and methane regulations on oil and gas production.

2. Clean Energy Challenge

Standards set the floor, not the ceiling. We can and must go further. We will form a new partnership with states, cities and rural communities that are ready to lead, providing competitive grants to those that exceed federal guidelines, remove barriers to clean energy access and entrepreneurship, and invest in innovative solutions that reduce energy costs, protect public health and cut carbon pollution.

As part of this bargain, we will guarantee that every agency within the federal government is working in concert to ensure Americans have the tools and resources they need to succeed. That includes investing in new technologies, both in our labs and through our tax code, and ensuring that we are maximizing the clean energy potential of public lands and public buildings. We will expand successful innovation initiatives, like ARPA-e, cut those that fail to deliver results, and ensure that public R&D supports private sector entrepreneurialism, small business creation and employment growth.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

3. Modernizing North American Infrastructure

We must improve the safety and security of existing energy infrastructure in North America and ensure that the new infrastructure we build is consistent with the clean energy economy we are seeking to create. We will launch a major initiative to repair, replace and better regulate our existing pipeline and rail network to protect our families, communities, and outdoor economy from the risk of oil spills and explosions and protect the climate from fugitive methane emissions. And we'll negotiate a North American Climate Compact with Canada and Mexico that guides future infrastructure investment on the continent through ambitious emission reduction commitments, coordinated policy action, and strong accountability mechanisms.

Security that Lasts

The recent growth in domestic oil and gas production provides important economic and geopolitical benefits, but it doesn't solve the energy-related security issues that have plagued our country for decades. US gasoline prices will continue to be set by the global market, no matter how much oil we produce, leaving our economy vulnerable to supply disruptions elsewhere in the world. In addition, the more oil and other fossil fuels we burn, the more risk we bear – both to our economy and our national security - from higher sea levels and increasingly devastating storms, heatwaves and droughts.

The only way to truly safeguard our country is to reduce the amount of oil consumed both at home and around the world and make our investments, our communities and our infrastructure more resilient to climate-related risks. We will take actions necessary to drive down oil consumption in the US, and will partner with other countries to halt the growth in global oil consumption within the next ten years. We will lead the world in combatting climate change, build resilient infrastructure and ensure American families, businesses and investors have actionable information on the kinds of risks they face.

Collaborative Stewardship

We are still developing the public lands/conservation leg of the platform, which will include the following components:

1. Royalty reform: Raise the on-shore oil and gas royalty rate on public lands to match that charged on private lands in Texas and other states and close the loophole in coal royalty policy that costs taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars per year.

2. Leasing: Take areas too sensitive for energy production, like the Arctic, off the table.

3. LWCF: Fully fund the Land and Water Conservation Fund

4. Outdoor economy: Support the growth of the outdoor economy by protecting national parks and forests and improving access to public lands for hunters and anglers and other types of recreation.

A Just Transition

As we build the energy economy of the 21st century, we cannot turn our backs on the workers and communities in the coalfields who kept the lights on and factories running during the 20th century. We will ensure that the retirement benefits of coal miners and their families are secure, invest in carbon capture, utilization and sequestration technology, and launch a major workforce and local economic development initiative for coalfield communities from Central Appalachia to the Powder River Basin.

We will also address the legacy costs fossil fuel combustion in communities disproportionately impacted by the resulting air pollution. We will provide block grants to states, cities and rural communities that develop innovative economic development and public health solutions for vulnerable communities as part of their clean energy strategy, such as the SB 535 program in California.

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

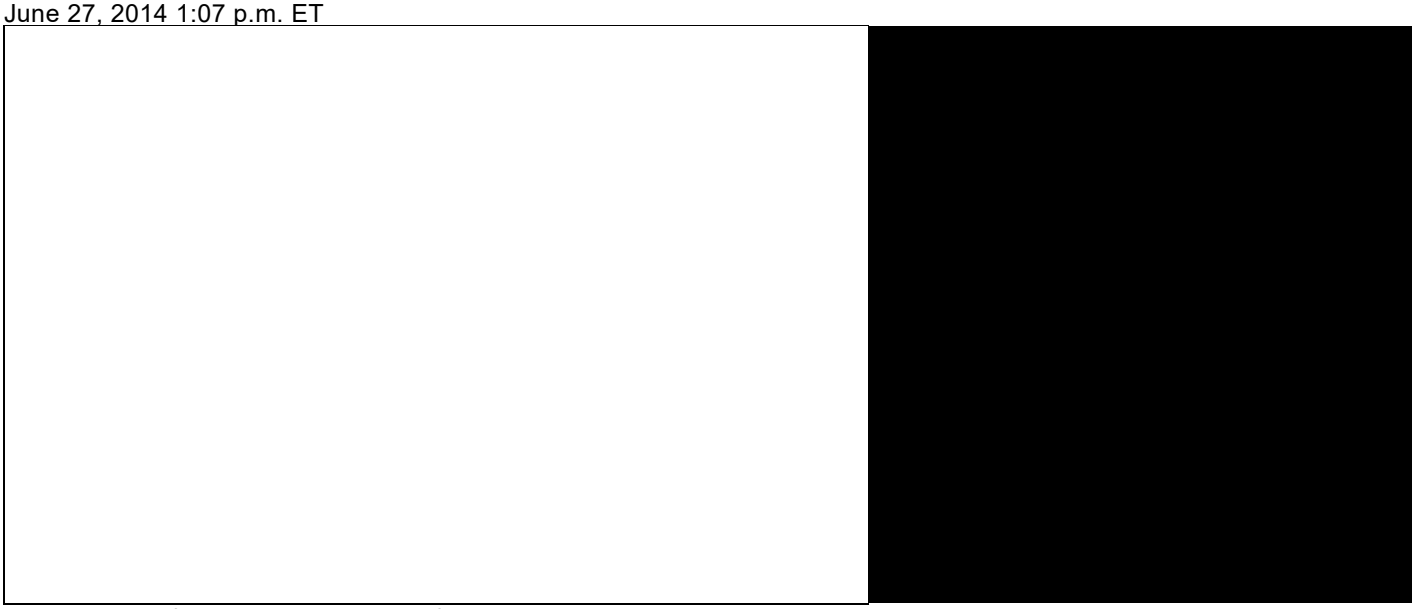
--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Suzy George" <sgeorge@albrightstonebridge.com>
To: "Ben Chang" <bchang@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Fariba Yassaee" <fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Anne Hall" <Anne.Hall@APORTER.COM>
"Bill?? Antholis" <wantholis@brookings.edu>
bill.danvers@gmail.com
"Brian Katulis" <bkatulis@americanprogress.org>
"Bruce Riedel" <briedel@brookings.edu>
"Caitlin McDonnell" <cmcdonnell@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Carol Browner" <cmbrowner@me.com>
"Carole Hall" <chall@brookings.edu>
"Catherine Whitney" <Catherine.Whitney@skadden.com>
"Chris Roberts" <croberts@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Dan Benjamin" <dbenjam61@hotmail.com>
"Daniel Silverberg" <danielsilverberg@yahoo.com>
"Denis McDonough" <denis.mcdonough@gmail.com>
"Derek Chollet" <dhchollet@gmail.com>
"Don Gips?? \(don.gips@gmail.com\)" <don.gips@gmail.com>
donkerrick <donkerrick@comcast.net>
"Eryn M. Sepp \(eryn.sepp@gmail.com\)" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
"Greg Craig" <gcraig@skadden.com>
"Jamie Rubin" <JamesPRubin1960@gmail.com>
"Jan Stewart" <jstewart@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jeff Smith" <jeffrey_smith@aporter.com>
"Jeremy Bash" <jeremybash@gmail.com>
"Jessica Lewis" <lewisje03@yahoo.com>
"Jim Miller - Department of Defense?? \(james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com \)" <james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com>
"Jim O'Brien" <jobrien@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Joanna Nicoletti?? \(info@forwardengagement.org\)" <info@forwardengagement.org>
"Joe Cirincione" <jcirincione@ploughshares.org>
"John Norris" <jnorris@americanprogress.org>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Julianne Smith" <julsmi@gmail.com>
"Ken Lieberthal" <klieberthal@brookings.edu>
"Kurt Campbell" <kurtmcampbell@yahoo.com>
"Laura Huber" <lhuber@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Leon Fuerth" <hdpf@msn.com>
"Maida Stadtler" <mstadtler@apcoworldwide.com>
"Marcel Lettre" <mlettre@verizon.net>
"Mariah Sixkiller \(mariah6@gmail.com\)" <mariah6@gmail.com>
"Martin Indyk" <mindyk@brookings.edu>
"Michele Flournoy" <micheleflournoy3@gmail.com>
"Pat Griffin" <pgriffin@pmj-dc.com>
"Rich Verma" <rverma@steptoe.com>
"Rob Malley" <rmalley555@gmail.com>
"Samuel Berger" <sberger@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Sharon Burke" <burkese@comcast.net>
"Steve Ricchetti" <sricchetti@cox.net>
"Strobe Talbott" <stalbott@brookings.edu>
"Susan Rice" <ricesusane@aol.com>
"Tamara Wittes \(twittes@brookings.edu\)" <twittes@brookings.edu>
"Tara Sonenshine" <tsonenshine@earthlink.net>
"Theodore Waddelow" <twaddelow@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Tim Roemer" <tjroemer@gmail.com>
"Tom Daschle" <tom.daschle@dlapiper.com>
"Tom Donilon" <tdonilon@gmail.com>
"Tom Downey" <tdowney@dmggroup.com>
"Tommy Ross" <tommy_ross@reid.senate.gov>
"Toni Verstandig" <tonigverstandig@gmail.com>
"Tony Blinken" <ablinken@aol.com>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



"Veronica Pollack" <Veronica.Pollock@dlapiper.com>
"Vikram Singh" <vsingh@americanprogress.org>
"Wendy Sherman" <wendyrsherman@gmail.com>
Date: 6/28/2014 5:33:21 AM
Subject: Dan Benjamin in WSJ

ESSAY

Iraq's Problem Is Power Politics, Not 'Ancient Hatreds'

Today's Sunni-Shiite rifts stem from years of jostling by modern states—above all, Iran and Saudi Arabia.

By DANIEL BENJAMIN
June 27, 2014 1:07 p.m. ET

Sunni jihadists from the Islamic State of Iraq and al-Sham, or ISIS, on the march in Raqqa, Syria, in an image posted on a militant website on Jan. 14. Militant Website/Associated Press

As the Sunni jihadists of the Islamic State of Iraq and al-Sham conquer city after city in northern Iraq and as black-clad soldiers from Shiite militias muster to repel them, it is tempting to blame the chaos there on ancient religious hatreds. But the strife in Iraq today is less the mystifying product of primordial grievances than the predictable result of very modern power politics.

The U.S. shouldn't repeat the mistake made two decades ago, when a generation of Western leaders explained away the wars that ripped Yugoslavia apart as the result of primeval ethnic hatreds. Then as now, such resignation is an easy way to avoid hard thinking.

There is indeed plenty of bad blood between Sunnis and Shiites. But today's sectarian rifts in Iraq and the wider region are the result of calculated efforts over many years by modern states—above all, Shiite Iran and Sunni Saudi Arabia. Both countries have long jostled for regional dominance, and despite their bitter harvest, neither seems particularly willing to change.

This means that sectarianism—intentionally stoked rather than bubbling spontaneously—will remain a massive problem for the Middle East and the U.S. The no-holds-barred conflict between rival Muslim subgroups has grabbed widespread attention today, as the killing in Iraq threatens to turn into history's final derisive laugh at America's loss of some 4,500 lives and trillions of dollars trying to remake the country.

The Sunni-Shiite split traces back to the founding days of Islam, when the newly founded Muslim community had to decide who would lead after the Prophet Muhammad's death. Some believed that succession should run within his family; their candidate was Ali ibn Abi Talib, the Prophet's nephew and son-in-law. But other Muslims preferred some of the companions of the Prophet, and Ali was passed over three times before becoming caliph in 656—and then murdered in 661.

Years later, Ali's supporters—known as the "Shiat Ali," from which we get the name Shiite—persuaded his son Hussein to try to take control of the caliphate. But an army led by the reigning caliph killed Hussein in Karbala, which is in modern-day Iraq—thus creating the seminal trauma of Shiism.

The centuries since that rupture have witnessed plenty of conflict, with the minority Shiites, who comprise about 10% of global Islam, usually bearing the brunt of exclusion and persecution. But Muslim history has seen epochs of relative comity too. The Fatimids, a Shiite dynasty that ruled over North Africa in the 10th-12th centuries, were highly tolerant of Sunnis. At the dawn of Iraqi nationalism in the early 20th century, Sunni and Shiite fought side by side. And for decades, even Saudi Arabia, the global champion of Sunni Islam, and the Shiite Iran led by Shah Reza Pahlavi got along well enough.

So to find the spark that lighted the fires of 2014, don't look back to the seventh century. Look to 1979, when Ayatollah Ruhollah

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Khomeini and his followers toppled the shah and installed a theocratic government unprecedented in the history of Shiism. Iran sought to expand its influence by creating terrorist organizations such as Hezbollah in Lebanon and stirring Shiite ambitions in Bahrain, Iraq and Saudi Arabia's Eastern Province.

The Saudi monarchy saw its religious leadership of the Muslim world challenged. The kingdom poured hundreds of millions of dollars into building mosques and schools, established huge organizations that propagated its puritanical brand of Sunni Islam and flooded the Muslim world with textbooks depicting Shiites as heretics and Christians and Jews as subhuman. The same poisonous springs that nourished the kingdom's sectarian counterrevolution would later help bring forth al Qaeda and its offshoots.

Meanwhile, other Muslim leaders were also playing with sectarian fire. In Pakistan, the dictator Gen. Zia ul-Haq sought to Islamize Pakistani society, helping establish thousands of madrassas, many teaching intolerant versions of Sunnism. In Shiite-majority Iraq, Saddam Hussein appointed himself the champion of Sunni Islam, waging war against neighboring Iran and cracking down on his own Shiite citizens.

Since about 1990, sectarian tensions have risen and fallen. After Ayatollah Khomeini's death, Iran's militancy cooled, while Saudi Arabia held an unprecedented national dialogue with the kingdom's restive Shiites in 2003.

That same year, though, the engines of hatred again slipped into high gear. The trigger was the U.S. invasion of Iraq, which destroyed the region's fragile equilibrium and, in retrospect, upended regional politics as much as the Iranian Revolution. Most Sunnis detested Saddam Hussein, but they also hated the results of his overthrow: the empowerment of Iraq's Shiite majority and the rise of a government in Baghdad closely tied to Iran.

Today, much of the blame for the chaos in Iraq is being laid at the doorstep of Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki. He deserves it. Mr. Maliki disdained attempts to bring Sunnis together with Shiites, helping spur today's strife. But forces much bigger than Mr. Maliki are also at work.

What finally doomed Iraq was the Arab Spring. After the 2011 revolutions began toppling Arab autocrats, the anxious Gulf monarchies fell back on old tricks to shore up their rule, treating democratic aspirations as sectarian treason. The Saudis, for example, backed Bahrain's minority Sunni ruling family with an armored column as it put down demonstrators from the tiny country's Shiite majority.

The most important new battlefield was Syria, long run by a dictatorship dominated by the Alawites, a small sect descended from Shiite Islam. For the Saudis and many other Sunnis, the chance to rob Iran of its key Arab ally and get payback for losing Iraq to the Shiites was irresistible. That produced a brawl in which everyone is all in. Syrian President Bashar al-Assad is propped up by his Shiite allies, Hezbollah and Iran; the Gulf Sunnis, with Qatar at the forefront, are pouring cash and weapons to his Sunni foes. ISIS, the lineal descendant of the Iraqi branch of al Qaeda born after the U.S. invasion , grew fearsome in Syria, then stormed back to its homeland.

Today, the sectarian disease has metastasized. In Pakistan, the terrorist groups created under Zia now ruthlessly target Shiites. In neighboring Afghanistan, violence against the Shiite Hazara minority has suddenly escalated. In Lebanon, Sunni extremists plot to kill Shiite government officials and Hezbollah leaders.

What can the U.S. do? In the near term, very little. The demons of sectarianism shouldn't be seen as chthonic beings returned to wreak havoc—but in the decades since the Iranian Revolution, they have gripped much of the region, from Beirut to Islamabad. At key points, the U.S. has even unintentionally abetted them, turning a blind eye to Saudi machinations in the name of containing Iran and foolishly inflaming sectarian antipathies with the invasion and bungled occupation of Iraq.

America cannot abandon the Middle East because of our energy and security needs, and the U.S. and its allies are going to have to deal with the vast terrorist safe haven where much of Syria and Iraq used to be. President Barack Obama is right to push for a more inclusive government that could hold the Iraqi state together. And if he can reach a deal on Iran's nuclear ambitions and preserve our valuable tactical cooperation with Saudi Arabia on counterterrorism, we might talk seriously to both countries about dialing back their murderous rivalry.

But don't get your hopes up.

—Mr. Benjamin, a former coordinator for counterterrorism at the State Department, is director of the John Sloan Dickey Center for International Understanding at Dartmouth.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Washington Post" <email@e.washingtonpost.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 6/25/2015 12:29:46 AM
Subject: The Daily 202: Marco Rubio is playing to win The Sheldon Adelson Primary

View The Daily 202 on the Web

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share on Twitter Share on Facebook

Sheldon Adelson in Las Vegas last month (Ethan Miller/Getty Images)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

— Marco Rubio is playing to win The Sheldon Adelson Primary. The Florida senator, who has relentlessly sought the billionaire casino mogul's backing for 2016, co-sponsored a bill yesterday afternoon to ban online gaming. It is not only Adelson's top legislative priority, it could significantly boost his company's bottom line. Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), another presidential hopeful who has assiduously courted Adelson over their shared hawkishness on foreign policy, is the lead Republican author on the legislation for a second year in a row.

An intense courtship: This is just the latest in an aggressive string of moves by Rubio to win over one of the GOP's biggest donors. The two men dined together at Charlie Palmer steak house, adjacent to the Capitol, in March. That was one of at least half a dozen private meetings, which we know about, since the Florida senator took office. Politico reported in April that Rubio calls Adelson every fortnight to provide detailed updated about the campaign. Meanwhile, the newspaper Adelson owns in Israel has trumpeted Rubio on its front page so much so that Israelis joke about it.

Electability matters to Adelson: After spending at least $92 million on the 2012 elections, a good chunk of it for Newt Gingrich, GOP insiders say that Adelson wants to get behind someone who can actually win. That was reportedly a factor in his souring on Ted Cruz. He likes Graham (hosting a fundraiser for him earlier this year and donating to his reelection campaign last year), but he's seemingly more attracted to Rubio's story as the son of Cuban immigrants. He's reportedly told friends that Rubio is the future of the Republican Party. Adelson has telegraphed that he will hold off until at least September to get behind anyone, and he could also invest in multiple contenders. This posture will encourage others to keep kissing his ring.

Marco again risks upsetting conservatives, but Adelson's money would more than make up for any blowback: Rubio's move puts him at odds with movement conservatives (i.e. federalists) who believe that, under the Constitution, states should have the right to decide for themselves whether to legalize online gaming, and that the federal government should not be in the business of boosting one business interest (brick-and-mortar casinos) over another, more innovative one. (This would be akin to Rubio siding with the traditional taxi industry against Uber, the opposite of the approach he's taken.) The senator, for his part, has previously said online gaming hurts people already struggling economically, messaging that sounds like it is meant to resonate with social conservatives.

— First in The Daily 202 (via Tom Hamburger): House Republicans quietly tucked language into an appropriations bill to protect dark money. The House Appropriations Committee approved a spending bill last week that included little-noticed provisions to hobble executive branch efforts that would mandate more campaign finance disclosures by federal contractors. The restrictions are in a 157-page financial services funding bill. The spending bill would also prohibit the IRS from moving ahead with a rule defining political activity for nonprofits and prohibit the SEC from creating a rule requiring public companies to disclose their political spending.

It is not clear when or if there will be a floor vote on the spending measure but campaign finance reform advocates said they hope an executive order will be in place before the legislation is considered by the full House and Senate, which like other appropriations bills, may not occur until late this year. White House spokesman Eric Schultz declined Wednesday evening to discuss plans for future executive orders, but he criticized the House committee action while confirming ongoing White House concern over "dark money" contributions to politically active non-profit organizations.

Appropriations bills have carried language protecting contractors against executive branch disclosure requirements since 2011, when a draft of an Obama executive order on the topic leaked publicly. The Brennan Center at NYU tallies hundreds of thousands of dollars in contributions collected by committee members from firms doing business with the federal government. Read more trenchant analysis from Tom Hamburger here.

Speaking of government contractors: "The recipient of a sole-source contract to help secure the computer network of the Office of Personnel Management was accused by a government watchdog this year of possibly misusing $135 million of taxpayer money after videos appeared to show its employees high on drugs and alcohol while working on a U.S. Army contract in Afghanistan," Christian Davenport and Lisa Rein report.

— Momentum keeps building against symbols of the the Confederacy:

- Mississippi Sen. Roger Wicker, the chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, reversed course and announced that his stage's flag should be redesigned to eliminate the Confederate emblem. His fellow Republican senator, Thad Cochran, followed suit a few hours later.
- The National Park Service moved to stop its sale in federal parks.
- Warner Brothers will stop selling toy cars featuring the "General Lee" automobile from Dukes of Hazzard because it has the flag on its roof.
- Alabama Gov. Robert Bentley (R) ordered the battle flag flying on the grounds of his state capitol taken down.
- Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) is working to stop the issuing of vehicle tags with the Confederate battle flag.
- Georgia Gov. Nathan Deal flipped in a matter of hours on Confederate license plates. After telling the Atlanta Journal Constitution that he would not support any changes in the morning, he announced that he wants a redesign of a state-sponsored plate featuring the Confederate flag emblem.
- Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, who was late to the party on this, claimed in Madison yesterday that he avoided weighing in because South Caroline Gov. Nikki Haley "asked him to hold off speaking about it." [Jeb Bush did not wait.] Harry Reid called on the University of Nevada's Board of Regents to consider changing the Las Vegas school's mascot and team name from the "Running Rebels" to something else.
- Strom Thurmond's son, a South Carolina state senator, made an impassioned call to remove the Confederate flag from the state capital grounds in Columbia during a eulogy for Charleston victim Clementa

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Pinckney.

Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost 's morning newsletter.
With contributions by Elise Viebeck .

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

— Hopes were dashed for a quick Greek bailout deal. "Hopes that Greece was on the verge of an agreement to release €7.2bn in desperately-needed bailout funding were dashed on Wednesday night after Alexis Tsipras, Greece's prime minister, failed to reach a deal after hours of talks with creditors in Brussels," the Financial Times reports. "The marathon session between Mr Tsipras and the heads of his country's three bailout monitors — the European Commission, the International Monetary Fund and the European Central Bank — produced 'not much progress,' according to a senior eurozone official."

—A new Fox News poll puts Jeb Bush in first place with 15 percent among Republican primary voters nationally. Donald Trump is second at 11 percent, followed by Scott Walker (9%), Rand Paul (6%), Rubio (8%), Mike Huckabee (6%), Ted Cruz (4%), Carly Fiorina (3%), Rick Santorum (3%) and Bobby Jindal (2%).

— "Republicans in the Ohio Senate pushed through legislation that would ban abortions in Ohio after 20 weeks of pregnancy," per the Cleveland Plain Dealer . "The legislation … would make it a crime — a fourth degree felony — for a physician to perform an abortion if the unborn child is more than 20 weeks from fertilization." Meanwhile, a District court judge will hear a challenge today to a strict new anti-abortion law in Kansas.

—The artist who created the iconic "Hope" poster of Barack Obama in 2008, Shepard Fairey, now faces felony arrest warrants in Detroit after he allegedly tagged buildings while he was in the city working on a mural. "He faces two counts of malicious destruction of property, which carry a maximum penalty of five years in jail, plus fines that could exceed $10,000," according to the Detroit Free Press .

— An F-16 crashed during nighttime training in the Arizona desert, causing a large fire that's still being contained this morning. The pilot's condition is unknown, per Tucson's Arizona Daily Star .

GET SMART FAST:

1. It's another decision day at the Supreme Court. We're awaiting landmark decisions on gay marriage, Obamacare subsidies and redistricting .
2. NBC and the Wall Street Journal found in their most recent poll that 57 percent of Americans want the Supreme Court to rule that same-sex couples have a constitutional right to marry. Thirty-seven percent oppose such ruling. While 62 percent of independents favor SCOTUS legalizing gay marriage, only 33 percent of Republicans do, according to numbers that came off embargo at midnight.
3. Hillary Clinton "has raised at least $17 million, based on the number of people her campaign says have attended 49 fundraising events," since announcing in mid-April, according to an AP calculation. "Unlike in 2008, Clinton is collecting money only for the primary contest, an amount capped at $2,700 per individual."
4. Hillary will skip the Netroots Nation conference next month. Many progressives who show up are not on her team, and she risked an icy reception.
5. Obama won a huge legislative victory on trade yesterday, as the Senate gave final approval to fast-track authority and key House Democrats signaled that they would concede defeat and support the trade-adjustment assistance legislation — which they had blocked two weeks ago.
6. The Republican-controlled House Appropriations Committee voted down an amendment yesterday that would have allowed the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to again study the underlying causes of gun violence. The CDC has been restricted from doing so since 1996 because of the National Rifle Association.

POWER PLAYERS IN THE NEWS:

1. Rep. Ken Buck (R-Colo.) may be stripped of his position as president of the House Republican freshman class later this morning because he voted against the trade bill. He told the Denver Post that it is "retribution" from leadership. He's now trying to use it to raise money and his profile.
2. Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) is expected to announce later this morning whether he will go forward with plans to build the Purple Line, a 16-mile rail line that would connect two Washington suburbs.
3. Ohio Gov. John Kasich (R), campaigning in Des Moines yesterday, called for a path to citizenship for undocumented immigrants and said deporting those who entered the country illegally is "inhumane ," according to Iowa Public Radio.
4. Rep. Gerry Connolly (D-Va.), whose Northern Virginia district includes many federal workers, strongly defended the embattled OPM director during a House hearing in which members from both parties attacked her. He said the Chinese are to blame, and she's being made a "scapegoat" unfairly.

WAPO HIGHLIGHTS:

—"Mark Meadows House of Cards Moment," by Elise Viebeck: After being booted from a subcommittee chairmanship for flouting the House GOP leadership one time too many, "Meadows, perplexed at being the symbol of the controversy, has shot to prominence in the last week. He's receiving text messages from presidential candidates like Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas), hosting a rally in North Carolina with Ben Carson on Tuesday and will have completed about 15 live media hits by the end of the week. For an obscure House sophomore known primarily to viewers of Greta Van Susteren's "On the Record" (he's a semi-regular guest), it's a swift rise."

—"Supreme Court ruling could push health industry agenda to the back burner, again," by Catherine Ho: "Industry advocates are concerned that no matter how the court rules on the legality of certain insurance subsidies provided under the law, the health care debate in Congress will once again become dominated by the political divisions over the Affordable Care Act (ACA). 'It has the potential for serious chaos and disruption," said health care lobbyist Ilisa Halpern Paul, who represents hospital systems and health advocacy groups.'"

BOBBY JINDAL'S FIRST 100 DAYS — He would not appoint "celebrity" cabinet secretaries who might go "native." George W. Bush appointed him assistant secretary at the Department of Health and Human Services in 2001, so the Louisiana governor knows what it's like to work inside the federal bureaucracy. Ahead of his formal announcement last night, the Republican told The Daily 202 that his experience at the agency, in his early 30s, would influence his approach to governing if he winds up in the White House.

In a wide-ranging interview, focused on how he would spend his hypothetical first 100 days as president, he complained that past Republican presidents have not done enough to actually reduce the size of government – only to limit the size of its growth. Part of the problem in Jindal's view is who gets put in the cabinet. "Too many of them go native and come back to OMB and start advocating for their power and for more funding," he complained. "When I was at McKinsey, when a CEO buys an $800 hammer, everything starts to look like a nail. Even Republican administrations are guilty of this. There's a temptation to expand and use those powers …We need every member of the administration to be willing to rock the boat and to be unpopular on the D.C. cocktail circuit."

Jindal took a shot at Jeb Bush by name in his announcement yesterday: He concluded a kickoff speech outside New Orleans by seizing on the former Florida

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

governor's comment last year that to win the general election, you've got to be willing to lose the primary. "Republicans must stop being afraid to lose," he said. "If we try to hide who we are again, we will lose again."

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

— ZIGNAL VISUAL: Jindal dominated the 2016 conversation among Republicans yesterday.

In the 24 hour period between midnight and midnight yesterday, 316,000 people on Facebook in the U.S. generated 542,000 interactions (likes, posts, comments, shares) related to Jindal and his announcement. Compare that to 493,000 and 849,000 for Jeb Bush last week. Top states chattering about Jindal (by engagement): Louisiana, Mississippi, the District, Arkansas and Texas.

–WHAT EVERYONE IS TALKING ABOUT:

Picture of the day:

Lawmakers beat reporters 1-0 at the Congressional Women's Softball game:

Look what we get to keep! #cwsg @cwsoftballgame #beatthepress #beatcancer (@DWStweets)

Tweets of the day:

Fox News hosts Bret Baier and Greta Van Susteren aired dueling interviews with presidential hopefuls:

Thanks to @BretBaier for having me join Center Seat on #SpecialReport this evening! (@tedcruz)

Looking forward to joining @greta tonight on @FoxNews at 7pm. Tune in to hear about my tax cut proposal! (@RandPaul)

Meanwhile, Donald Trump is seriously trolling Neil Young after he said Trump wasn't authorized to use "Rockin' In The Free World" at his campaign launch:

> .@Neilyoung A few months ago Neil Young came to my office looking for $$ on an audio deal & called me last week to go to his concert. Wow!
>
> — Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) June 24, 2015

> For the nonbeliever, here is a photo of @Neilyoung in my office and his $$ request—total hypocrite. pic.twitter.com/Xm4BJvetla
>
> — Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) June 24, 2015

> .@Neilyoung 's song, "Rockin' In The Free World" was just one of 10 songs used as background music. Didn't love it anyway.
>
> — Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) June 24, 2015

Instagrams of the day:

Gov. Jindal, is that a new haircut?

On to New Hampshire and Iowa. (bobbyjindal)

The boys playing football before the speech. #GeauxBobby (bobbyjindal)

Rick Santorum posted a new photo of puppy Darcy:

Darcy wants you to join Team Rick! (ricksantorum)

GOOD READS FROM ELSEWHERE:

— Miami Herald, "Archbishop: Pope Francis' words nudge Marco Rubio, Jeb Bush on climate change," by Patricia Mazzei: "Miami Archbishop Thomas Wenski believes Pope Francis' recent document on global warming is already changing the climate of the conversation in the presidential race, particularly among two friends [and] members of his flock. Wenski said comments on climate change by Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio, Republicans and devout Roman Catholics from Miami, have been noticeably milder in tone since Francis weighed in."

— New York Times, "Bernie Sanders Lags Hillary Clinton in Introducing Himself to Black Voters," by Patrick Healy and Jonathan Martin: "Even his own campaign advisers acknowledge that Mr. Sanders is virtually unknown to many African-Americans, an enormously important Democratic constituency. Though he led sit-ins as a civil rights activist in the 1960s, helped the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson Sr. pull off a surprising campaign victory in Vermont in 1988, and espouses liberal policy ideas broadly popular with many Democrats, Mr. Sanders has had little direct experience with black voters as a politician in a state that is 95 percent white. And they have been largely absent from his campaign events so far. Mr. Sanders, 73, had planned to start introducing himself to larger numbers of African-Americans last Sunday at a large gathering in Charleston, but he quickly postponed the event after the church killings."

Smart point: "David Axelrod, formerly Mr. Obama's chief strategist, noted that insurgent Democrats like Gary Hart and Mr. Dean who were able to win over many white voters fell short because they could not attract blacks."

— USA Today, Loretta Lynch visited the 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, by Kevin Johnson: "Since the Charleston attack, U.S. officials have fielded repeated questions about whether the mass shooting should be regarded as an act of terrorism, rather than a hate crime. Justice officials have said they would explore domestic terror-related charges during the course of the federal inquiry. But Lynch suggested Wednesday that there were few differences in the definitions involving the crimes committed in Charleston. 'Make no mistake,' she said. 'Hate crimes are the original domestic terrorism.'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— Huffington Post, "Obama May Have to Lean on Democratic Governors To Resell His Health Care Law," by Jeffrey Young: "Officials in states that created their own health insurance exchanges under the Affordable Care Act — thereby shielding their residents from the possible consequences of the lawsuit currently pending before the high court — are standing by to help their counterparts in other states get marketplaces up and running that would allow subsidies in those states to flow again."

BUZZING AT THE CAPITOL:

— CNN, "IRS watchdog: As many as 24K Lerner emails lost," by Chris Frates: "The IRS watchdog investigating the disappearance of Lois Lerner's emails has concluded that there could be as many as 24,000 missing emails … Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration Russell George and his deputy, Timothy Camus, will tell the House Oversight Committee on Thursday that their investigation was able to recover more than 1,000 emails the IRS did not turn over to Congress, according to the written testimony."

— National Journal, "Cornyn's new role: the 'bridge' on tricky bills," by Alex Rogers: "Almost seven months into his role as Senate majority whip, Cornyn talks quite a bit about breaking cycles, whether in prisons or the nature of crises in the Senate. His official role is to keep the Republicans in line and on-message, but he also has been an influential figure—the "bridge," as one Democrat puts it—on bipartisan pieces of legislation, particularly on two in the Judiciary Committee that bedeviled the last Congress."

HOT ON THE LEFT

Coulter says Nikki Haley is an 'immigrant' who doesn't get American history. From Talking Points Memo: "Ann Coulter claimed on Tuesday that South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley (R) has a poor grasp on American history as 'an immigrant,' even though Haley was born in the United States … Haley was born in Bamberg, S.C., but her parents are Indian immigrants, according to the governor's biography."

HOT ON THE RIGHT

Did Jim Webb defend the Confederate flag? From the Washington Post : "'Honorable Americans fought on both sides in the Civil War, including slave holders in the Union Army,' and 'many non-slave holders fought for the South,' [Webb] wrote [on Facebook]. 'This is a time for us to come together, and to recognize once more that our complex multicultural society is founded on the principle of mutual respect.'"

DAYBOOK:

–On the Hill: The House is expected to wrap up work on a trade bill. The Senate will consideration of an education bill and vote on confirmation of a federal circuit judge. The Senate Homeland Security Committee will hold a hearing on federal cybersecurity and the OPM data breach. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will hold a hearing on nuclear negotiations with Iran.

–At the White House: President Obama has no public events scheduled. Press Secretary Josh Earnest will brief the media at 12:30.

–On the campaign trail: Marco Rubio will address the New Hampshire chapter of Americans for Prosperity. Bobby Jindal will also make appearances in New Hampshire. Ben Carson is in Iowa.

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "I'd like to now apologize to the victims and the survivors. I am sorry for the lives I have taken and suffering I have caused you and the damage I have done." — Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, speaking in a Boston courtroom yesterday for the first time since being sentenced to death

NEWS YOU CAN USE IF YOU LIVE IN D.C.:

— The Nationals beat the Braves 2-1 last night in the 11th inning.

—Mugginess muscles back into town today: The humidity may fuel another round of intense evening storms. "While showers and storms are going to be an ever present threat the next 3 days, do not abandon all outdoor plans," per the Capital Weather Gang . "The only likely candidate for scrapping the pool plans and grabbing the board game comes on Saturday, when heavy rains threaten."

—Two lanes are barely getting by on Interstate 95 north near the Intercounty Connector after an early morning crash left one construction worker dead.

—A fan at the Nationals game on Tuesday night caught on video a lightning strike hitting a crane adjacent to the stadium.

VIDEO OF THE DAY:

Watch Obama challenge a heckler at an LGBT event in the East Room — "Listen, you're in my house … It's not respectful.":

You received this e-mail because you are registered on washingtonpost.com . We respect your privacy . If you believe that this e-mail has been sent to you in error, or you no longer wish to receive this newsletter, click here . Contact us for help.

©2015 The Washington Post | 1150 15th St NW, Washington, DC 20071

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Lisa P Jackson" <lisa_jackson@apple.com>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	1/31/2016 2:02:54 PM
Subject:	Fwd: NYT: New Technologies Give Government Ample Means to Track Suspects, Study Finds

Godspeed tomorrow. I was in SC this weekend.

Sanger's latest piece below. I know you have lots of other things to do.

NYT
New Technologies Give Government Ample Means to Track Suspects, Study Finds http://www.nytimes.com/2016/02/01/us/politics/new-technologies-give-government-ample-means-to-track-suspects-study-finds.html?emc=edit_tnt_20160131&nlid=57372299&tntemail0=y

For more than two years the F.B.I. and intelligence agencies have warned that encrypted communications are creating a “going dark” crisis that will keep them from tracking terrorists and kidnappers.

Now, a study in which current and former intelligence officials participated concludes that the warning is wildly overblown, and that a raft of new technologies — like television sets with microphones and web-connected cars — are creating ample opportunities for the government to track suspects, many of them worrying.

“‘Going dark’ does not aptly describe the long-term landscape for government surveillance,” concludes the study, to be published Monday by the Berkman Center for Internet and Society at Harvard.

The study argues that the phrase ignores the flood of new technologies “being packed with sensors and wireless connectivity” that are expected to become the subject of court orders and subpoenas, and are already the target of the National Security Agency as it places “implants” into networks around the world to monitor communications abroad.

The products, ranging from “toasters to bedsheets, light bulbs, cameras, toothbrushes, door locks, cars, watches and other wearables,” will give the government increasing opportunities to track suspects and in many cases reconstruct communications and meetings.

The study, titled, “Don’t Panic: Making Progress on the ‘Going Dark’ Debate,” is among the sharpest counterpoints yet to the contentions of James B. Comey, the F.B.I. director, and other Justice Department officials, mostly by arguing that they have defined the issue too narrowly.

Over the past year, they have repeatedly told Congress that the move by Apple to automatically encrypt data on its iPhone, and similar steps by Google and Microsoft, are choking off critical abilities to track suspects, even with a court order.

President Obama, however, concluded last fall that any effort to legislate a government “back door” into encrypted communications would probably create a pathway for hackers — including those working for foreign governments like Russia, China and Iran — to gain access as well, and create a precedent for authoritarian governments demanding similar access.

Most Republican candidates for president have demanded that technology companies create a way for investigators to unlock encrypted communications, and on the Democratic side, Hillary Clinton has taken a tough line on Silicon Valley companies, urging them to join the fight against the Islamic State.

Apple’s chief executive, Timothy D. Cook, has led the charge on the other side. He recently told a group of White House officials seeking technology companies’ voluntary help to counter the Islamic State that the government’s efforts to get the keys to encrypted communications would be a boon for hackers and put legitimate business transactions, financial data and personal communications at greater risk.

The Harvard study, funded by the Hewlett Foundation, was unusual because it involved technical experts, civil libertarians and officials who are, or have been, on the forefront of counterterrorism. Larry Kramer, the former dean of Stanford Law School, who heads the foundation, noted Friday that until now “the policy debate has been impeded by gaps in trust — chasms, really — between academia, civil society, the private sector and the intelligence community” that have impeded the evolution of a “safe, open and resilient Internet.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Among the chief authors of the report is Matthew G. Olsen, who was a director of the National Counterterrorism Center under Mr. Obama and a general counsel of the National Security Agency.

Two current senior officials of the N.S.A. — John DeLong, the head of the agency’s Commercial Solutions Center, and Anne Neuberger, the agency’s chief risk officer — are described in the report as “core members” of the group, but did not sign the report because they could not act on behalf of the agency or the United States government in endorsing its conclusions, government officials said.

“Encryption is a real problem, and the F.B.I. and intelligence agencies are right to raise it,” Mr. Olsen said Sunday. But he noted that in their testimony officials had not described the other technological breaks that are falling their way, nor had they highlighted cases in which they were able to exploit mistakes made by suspects in applying encryption to their messages.

Jonathan Zittrain, a Harvard law professor who convened the group, said in an interview that the goal was “to have a discussion among people with very different points of view” that would move “the state of the debate beyond its well-known bumper stickers. We managed to do that in part by thinking of a larger picture, specifically in the unexpected ways that surveillance might be attempted.”

He noted that in the current stalemate there was little discussion of the “ever-expanding ‘Internet of things,’ where telemetry from teakettles, televisions and light bulbs might prove surprisingly, and worryingly, amenable to subpoena from governments around the world.”

Those technologies are already being exploited: The government frequently seeks location data from devices like cellphones and EZ Passes to track suspects.

The study notes that such opportunities are expanding rapidly. A Samsung “smart” television contains a microphone meant to relay back to Samsung voice instructions to the TV — “I want to see the last three ‘Star Wars’ movies” — and a Hello, Barbie brought out by Mattel last year records children’s conversations with the doll, processes them over the Internet and sends back a response.

The history of technology shows that what is invented for convenience can soon become a target of surveillance. “Law enforcement or intelligence agencies may start to seek orders compelling Samsung, Google, Mattel, Nest or vendors of other networked devices to push an update or flip a digital switch to intercept the ambient communications of a target,” the report said.

These communications, too, may one day be encrypted. But Google’s business model depends on picking out key words from emails to tailor advertisements for specific users of Gmail, the popular email service. Apple users routinely back up the contents of their phones to iCloud — a service that is not encrypted and now is almost a routine target for investigators or intelligence agencies. So are the tracking and mapping systems for cars that rely on transmitted global positioning data.

“I think what this report shows is that the world today is like living in a big field that is more illuminated than ever before,” said Joseph Nye, a Harvard government professor and former head of the National Intelligence Council. “There will be dark spots — there always will be. But it’s easy to forget that there is far more data available to governments now than ever before.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "German Marshall Fund" <tbudak@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 2/23/2016 7:02:47 AM
Subject: Reminder: A Book Talk with Robert Kaplan

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here

G | M | F The German Marshall Fund of the United States
STRENGTHENING TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION

Our Organization | Our Work | Our Events | Our Experts | GMFUS.org

The German Marshall Fund of the United States is pleased to invite you to:

Invitation

In Europe's Shadow: A Book Talk with Robert Kaplan

Tuesday, March 1, 2016
1:30 - 3:00 pm

The conversation will be on-the-record.

Speaker
Robert Kaplan, Author and Senior Fellow, Center for a New American Security

Moderator
Derek Chollet, Senior Advisor for Security and Defense Policy, The German Marshall Fund of the United States

Location
The German Marshall Fund of the United States
1744 R Street NW, Washington, DC 20009

RSVP

If you have any questions, please contact Dillon Rheuby at +1 202 683 2926 or fpintern2@gmfus.org .

GMF invites you to a discussion with author Robert Kaplan on his most recent book In Europe's Shadow: Two Cold Wars and a Thirty-Year Journey Through Romania and Beyond, in which Kaplan examines larger questions of geography, imperialism, the role of fate in international relations, the Cold War, the Holocaust, and how Romania continues to shape its destiny today.

In Europe's Shadow: Two Cold Wars and a Thirty-Year Journey Through Romania and Beyond
Robert Kaplan first visited Romania in the 1970s, when he was a young journalist and the country was a bleak Communist backwater. It was one of the darkest corners of Europe, but few Westerners were paying attention. What ensued was a lifelong obsession with a critical, often overlooked country—a country that, today, is key to understanding the current threat that Russia poses to Europe. In Europe's Shadow is a vivid blend of memoir, travelogue, journalism, and history, a masterly work thirty years in the making—the story of a journalist coming of age, and a country struggling to do the same. Through the lens of one country, Kaplan examines larger questions of geography, imperialism, the role of fate in international relations, the Cold War, the Holocaust, and more.

Here Kaplan illuminates the fusion of the Latin West and the Greek East that created Romania, the country that gave rise to Ion Antonescu, Hitler's chief foreign accomplice during World War II, and the country that was home to the most brutal strain of Communism under Nicolae Ceau escu. Romania past and present are rendered in cinematic prose: the ashen faces of citizens waiting in bread lines in Cold War–era Bucharest; the Bărăgan Steppe, laid bare by centuries of foreign invasion; the grim labor camps of the Black Sea Canal; the majestic Gothic church spires of Transylvania and Maramureș. Kaplan finds himself in dialogue with the great thinkers of the past, and with the Romanians of today, the philosophers, priests, and politicians—those who struggle to keep the flame of humanism alive in the era of a resurgent Russia.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Upon his return to Romania in 2013 and 2014, Kaplan found the country transformed yet again—now a traveler's destination shaped by Western tastes, yet still emerging from the long shadows of Hitler and Stalin. In Europe's Shadow is the story of an ideological and geographic frontier—and the book you must read in order to truly understand the crisis with Russia, and within Europe itself.

Robert Kaplan is currently a senior fellow at the Center for a New American Security and contributing editor at The Atlantic. Prior to this, he worked for Stratfor as the chief geopolitical analyst from March 2012 to December 2014. In 2009, he was appointed to the Pentagon's Defense Policy Board and served through 2011. From 2006 to 2008, he was the Class of 1960 Distinguished Visiting Professor in National Security at the U.S. Naval Academy. He is the bestselling author of sixteen books on foreign affairs and travel, including In Europe's Shadow, Asia's Cauldron, The Revenge of Geography, Monsoon, The Coming Anarchy, and Balkan Ghosts. Foreign Policy magazine twice named him one of the world's "Top 100 Global Thinkers."

Derek Chollet is the counselor and senior advisor for security and defense policy at GMF. From 2012 to 2015, Chollet was the U.S. assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, where he managed U.S. defense policy issues related to the nations and international organizations of Europe (including NATO), the Middle East, Africa, and the Western Hemisphere, as well as advising Secretaries of Defense Leon Panetta and Chuck Hagel. Prior to joining the Pentagon, Chollet served at the White House as special assistant to the president and senior director for strategic planning on the National Security Council staff. From 2009 to 2011, he was the principal deputy director of Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's policy planning staff. Chollet is also the author, co-author, or co-editor of six books on U.S. foreign policy.

The German Marshall Fund of the United States (GMF) strengthens transatlantic cooperation on regional, national, and global challenges and opportunities in the spirit of the Marshall Plan.

GMF contributes research and analysis and convenes leaders on transatlantic issues relevant to policymakers. GMF offers rising leaders opportunities to develop their skills and networks through transatlantic exchange, and supports civil society in the Balkans and Black Sea regions by fostering democratic initiatives, rule of law, and regional cooperation.

Founded in 1972 as a non-partisan, non-profit organization through a gift from Germany as a permanent memorial to Marshall Plan assistance, GMF maintains a strong presence on both sides of the Atlantic. In addition to its headquarters in Washington, DC, GMF has offices in Berlin, Paris, Brussels, Belgrade, Ankara, Bucharest, and Warsaw. GMF also has smaller representations in Bratislava, Turin, and Stockholm.

Policy Leadership Civil Society

Follow

Strengthening Transatlantic Cooperation

Our Organization
About GMF
Career Opportunities
Press Room

Our Work
Leadership
Policy
Civil Society
Research & Analysis
Transatlantic Academy

Our Events
Major Conferences & Forums
Recent & Upcoming Events

Our Experts
Find an Expert

Manage preferences | Forward email | Unsubscribe | Subscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Louis Seidman" <seidman@law.georgetown.edu>
To: "Abdulaziz Altuwaijri" <aaa244@law.georgetown.edu>
"Abdulwahab Sadeq" <aas78@law.georgetown.edu>
"Ada Siqueira" <as3591@law.georgetown.edu>
"Agustin Ignacio Barroilhet\(fwd\)" <ab2897@georgetown.edu>
"Alexandra Phelan" <alexandra.phelan@gmail.com>
"amanda Shandor" <amanda.shanor@gmail.com>
"Amy?? Uelmen" <aju2@law.georgetown.edu>
"Anna Offit \(fwd\)" <annaoffit@gmail.com>
"Daniel A Hougendobler" <dah93@law.georgetown.edu> derek.webb@law.stanford.edu
"Dina B. Mishra" <dina.b.mishra@gmail.com>
"Edit Frenyo" <ef246@law.georgetown.edu>
"Evan?? Zoldan" <evan.zoldan@utoledo.edu>
"Faculty Support" <facultysupport@law.georgetown.edu>
"Han-hsi Liu\(fwd\)" <hl580@georgetown.edu>
"Hisham Alsabt\(fwd\)" <ha374@georgetown.edu>
"Ian M?? Kysel\(fwd\)" <imk6@georgetown.edu>
IBhatty@ussc.gov
"Ido Kilovaty\(fwd\)" <ik292@georgetown.edu>
"Itamar J. Mann-Kanowitz \(fwd\)" <itamar.mann@gmail.com>
"Jamillah Williams" <jamillah.williams@law.georgetown.edu> jofarin@hotmail.com
"John M Bentil" <jmb386@law.georgetown.edu>
"Jonathan?? Keim \(fwd\)" <jonathan.keim@gmail.com>
"Julia Cadaval Martins" <jc2403@law.georgetown.edu>
"Julia Tomassetti" <julia.tomassetti@gmail.com>
"Justin S Murray \(fwd\)" <jumurray@gmail.com>
"L Caplan" <lcaplan3@gmail.com>
"Laura Alexander" <Alexander.Laura@gmail.com>
"Law Center Staff" <LawCenterStaff@law.georgetown.edu>
"Law Faculty and Visitors" <LawFacultyandVisitors@law.georgetown.edu>
"Law Library All" <LawLibraryAll@law.georgetown.edu>
"Lorenzo G Di Silvio\(fwd\)" <disilvio@gmail.com> mahony.christopher@gmail.com
Maxtell@Princeton.edu milton@toledojunior.com.br molly.beth.wilder@gmail.com
Munshis <munshisherally@gmail.com>
"Nancy?? Cantalupo" <cantalun@law.georgetown.edu> nasredeen.abdulbari@post.harvard.edu oso@georgetown.edu
Patrick.Glen@usdoj.gov
"Rabia S. Belt" <rsb81@law.georgetown.edu>
"Ramzan Alnoaimi" <ra357@law.georgetown.edu> richizquierdo <richizquierdo@gmail.com>
"Ruthanne M Deutsch" <rmd8@law.georgetown.edu>
"Samantha Godwin" <sgodwin3@googlemail.com>
"Shana Tabak" <shanatabak@gmail.com>
"Sooz Shin" <soozshin@gmail.com>
ss735@georgetown.edu
Sshmuely <sshmuely@MIT.EDU>
tpschmidt@gmail.com
Zachary.kaufman@aya.yale.edu

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Date: 7/9/2015 5:34:54 AM
Subject: Today's Summer Workshop

At noon today, David Koplow will discuss his paper entitled "You're Gonna Need a Bigger Boat: Alternatives to the U.N. Security Council for Enforcing Nuclear Disarmament and Human Rights. The paper was attached to an earlier email. It is also available here David Koplow—You're Gonna Need a Bigger Boat: Alternatives to the U.N. Security Council For Enforcing Nuclear Disarmament and Human Rights and, in hard copy, at Faculty Support.

We meet in McDonough 492. Cookies and drinks will be served.

Mike Seidman

Louis Michael Seidman
Carmack Waterhouse Professor of Constitutional Law
Georgetown University Law Center
600 New Jersey Ave. NW
Washington, DC 20001
202-662-9102

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Stephen Paduano" <spaduano@hfaintern.com>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	8/11/2015 3:44:04 AM
Subject:	Summarized Clips (8.11.15)
Attachments:	Daily Clips (8.11.15).docx

Daily Clips

August 11, 2015

Democrats Offer Ways To Make College Affordable

NYT/Editorial Board

- The New York Times Editorial Board outlined HRC's "ambitious" New College Compact in a piece that also discussed Bernie Sanders' free-tuition plan. The Editorial Board spoke to the importance of making college more affordable, but also noted that the two plans will run into tall obstacles with the tax increases they call for.

Clinton Student-Loan Plan Draws On Bipartisan Bill

WSJ/Douglas Belkin, Colleen McCain Nelson

- "The $350 billion plan to make college more affordable unveiled by Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton on Monday takes a page from the left wing of her party, but it also champions an idea gaining traction on the right: holding schools liable when a student's education doesn't pay off."

Hillary Clinton's Cruel Summer

Politico/Gabriel Debenedetti

- "Welcome to Hillary's summer, a season chock-full of rough national headlines about her slipping poll numbers, her email controversies, Sanders' surging popularity, Joe Biden's presidential ruminations – and Trump."
- HRC's $350 billion New College Compact struggled to win airtime yesterday ov er the "wall-to-wall Donald Trump media cov erage" and the news that the 185,000-member National Nurses United union had endorsed Bernie Sanders.

Clinton's Favorability Strong Among Black Americans

Gallup/Justin McCarthy, Andrew Dugan

- In a new Gallup poll, HRC was found to have an 80% favorability rate among blacks, 12% unfavorability, and 92% familiarity. Bernie Sanders trailed substantially with a 23% favorability rate, 10% unfavorability, and 33% familiarity.
- Only Ben Carson in the GOP field has a net favorability rating (22% favorable, 18% unfavorable). All other candidates are more unfav orable among black voters than fav orable. Jeb Bush and Donald Trump fall at the bottom of the pack with a 52% unfav orability rating and a 68% unfavorability rating, respectively.

All Emails Were Provided, Hillary Clinton Says In Statement

NYT/Michael Schmidt

- "Hillary Rodham Clinton said in a statement filed under oath in federal court on Monday that she had provided to the State Department all of the work-related emails that were on the personal email account she used exclusively while she was secretary of state."

Clinton Pledges To Build on Iran Deal As President and 'Keep The Lid On' Iranian Nuclear Program WaPo/ Anne Gearan

- "Hillary Rodham Clinton pledged Monday to defend and further the international nuclear deal with Iran if she is elected president and said congressional rejection of the accord would send a signal of weakness to the rest of the world."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Group Backing Hillary Clinton Gets $1M From Anonymous Donors

AP/July Bykowicz

- Priorities USA Action received a $1 million donation from another Super PAC called Fair Share Action – it is unclear who provided the money. The only listed donors to Fair Share Action are Fair Share Inc. and Environment America Inc.

Bernie Sanders Gets Endorsement From Nurses' Union

WSJ/Melanie Trottman, Laura Meckler

- With Monday's announcement of the 185,000-member National Nurses United, Bernie Sanders received his first endorsement from a national union.

Lawrence Lessig to Explore a Run for President as a Democrat

NYT/ First Draft

- Lawrence Lessig, Harvard professor and democratic theorist, will run for president if he can raise $1 million in small donations by Labor Day.
- Lessig hopes his candidacy would refocus the spotlight on money in politics.

Jeb Bush To Outline Islamic State Strategy, Criticize Clinton

Reuters/Steve Holland

- "Republican presidential candidate Jeb Bush will v ow on Tuesday to pursue an aggressive strategy against Islamic State militants if elected, in a speech in which he will also seek to blame Democrat Hillary Clinton for some of the unrest in Iraq."

Marco Rubio Says He Opposes Abortions In All Instances

CNN/Eric Bradner

- "Florida Sen. Marco Rubio says he opposes abortion in all instances – but he'd support legislation that includes exceptions in cases such as rape, incest, and when the light of the mother is threatened, and he has no problem with contraception."

Rick Perry Stops Paying All of His Staff as Fundraising Dries Up

WaPo/Philip Rucker, Abby Livingston, Dan Balz

- "Former Texas governor Rick Perry's presidential campaign is no longer paying its staff because fundraising has dried up, while his cash-fluid super PAC is preparing to expand its political operation to compensate for the campaign's shortcomings, campaign and super PAC officials and other Republicans familiar with the operation said late Monday."

Emergency Declared in Ferguson After Shooting

NYT/John Eligon, Michael Smith

- "The St. Louis County executive declared a state of emergency here on Monday as officials and activists sought to regain control of the volatile streets after plainclothes police officers shot and critically wounded an 18-y ear-old black man who they said was firing on them late the night before."

Google To Reorganize in Move to Keep Its Lead As An Innovator

NYT/Conor Dougherty

- "The Silicon Valley behemoth is reorganizing under a new name – Alphabet – and separating its moneymaking business from the moonshot ones," Larry Page announced in a blog post on Monday.

China Moves To Devalue Yuan

WSJ/Lingling Wei

- "China's central bank devalued its tightly controlled currency , causing its biggest one-day loss in two decades, as the world's second-largest economy continues to sputter. Chinese authorities said the change would help drive the currency toward more market-driven movements."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara DuBois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 10/13/2008 7:56:21 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Rally in Wilmington, NC 10/13/08

Hello All,
Just got off the phone with our tracker, Kelli, on the ground in Wilmington. Below are the notes from our call.

Big Highlights

- In grass outside the main door, a poster with picture of Obama next to picture of Osama Bin Laden (by the end of the event, the sign had been taken down)
- Rowdy crowd moments
    - Before McCain arrives, someone yells, unprompted, "Kill ACORN"
    - When McCain says 'defend our country from its enemies,' someone yells, "Obama! Obama!"
    - When McCain says, 'I know what fear feels like,' someone yells: "that's barack!"
    - When McCain says, 'I know what hopelessness feels like, "someone yells "that's obama!"
- Repeat of speech made earlier today in Virginia Beach
    - Repeats "We cannot spend the next four years as we have spent much of the last eight: waiting for our luck to change. "
    - Repeats "I have fought for you most of my life. There are other ways to love this country, but I've never been the kind to do it from the sidelines."
    - Repeats Hoover comparison: "The last president to do what Senator Obama wants to do- raise taxes and restrict trade in a bad economy was Herbert Hoover. That didn't turn out too well."
    - Repeats that 'we must fight,' 'I'm a fighter'

Wilmington, NC: McCain Rally 10/13/08
(Disclaimer: The following are notes, not direct quotes. If you'd like a quotable transcript or video of any part below, please email us.)

Background details

- 1500 ppl inside - venue (gym at a community college) at capacity
    - an hour beforehand, line to get into event was 4 blocks long
    - Crowd mostly middle-aged and elderly white couples (a few grps of college kids)
- Event slated as a town hall, but it was a rally
- Before event started or candidates arrived, someone in crowd shouts "Kill ACORN"
- Tracker overheard people on board of Community College (the venue) complaining that this had been slated to be a town hall but had been switched to be a rally
- In grass outside the main door, a poster with picture of Obama next to picture of Osama Bin Laden (by the end of the event, the sign had been taken down)
- Rowdy crowd moments
    - Stand up to defend our country from its enemies. [Obama! Obama!]
    - I know what fear feels like. [someone yells: "that's barack!"]
    - I know what hopelessness feels like. [someone yells "that's obama!"]
- Cindy intros McCain: between us and the Palins, we have 3 sons serving...
- Lots of Elizabeth Dole chum

FULL REMARKS
Americans are fighting in two wars. We face many enemies in this dangerous world, and they are waiting to see if our current troubles will permanently weaken us.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The next President won't have time to get used to the office. He won't have the luxury of studying up on the issues before he acts. He will have to act immediately. And to do that, he will need experience, courage, judgment and a bold plan of action to take this country in a new direction. We cannot spend the next four years as we have spent much of the last eight: waiting for our luck to change. The hour is late; our troubles are getting worse; our enemies watch. We have to act immediately. We have to change direction now. We have to fight.

I've been fighting for this country since I was seventeen years old, and I have the scars to prove it. If you elect me President, I will fight to take America in a new direction from my first day in office until my last. I'm not afraid of the fight, I'm ready for it.

I'm not going to spend $700 billion dollars of your money just bailing out the Wall Street bankers and brokers who got us into this mess. I'm going to make sure we take care of the people who were devastated by the excesses of Wall Street and Washington. I'm going to spend a lot of that money to bring relief to you, and I'm not going to wait sixty days to start doing it.

I have a plan to protect the value of your home and get it rising again by buying up bad mortgages and refinancing them so if your neighbor defaults he doesn't bring down the value of your house with him.

I have a plan to let retirees and people nearing retirement keep their money in their retirement accounts longer so they can rebuild their savings.

I have a plan to rebuild the retirement savings of every worker.

I have a plan to hold the line on taxes and cut them [cheers] to make America more competitive and create jobs here at home.

Raising taxes makes a bad economy much worse. Keeping taxes low creates jobs, keeps money in your hands and strengthens our economy.

The explosion of government spending over the last eight years has put us deeper in debt to foreign countries that don't have our best interests at heart. It weakened the dollar and made everything you buy more expensive.

If I'm elected President, I won't spend nearly a trillion dollars more of your money, on top of the $700 billion we just gave the Treasury Secretary, as Senator Obama proposes. Because he can't without raising your taxes or digging us further into debt. I'm going to make government live on a budget just like you do.

[These call for significant action] I will freeze government spending on all but the most important programs like defense, veterans care, Social Security and health care until we scrub every single government program and get rid of the ones that aren't working for the American people. And I will veto every single pork barrel bill [that comes across my desk. You'll know their names, I'll make them famous.]

If I'm elected President, I won't fine small businesses and families with children, as Senator Obama proposes, to force them into a huge new government run health care program, whi-- I keep the cost of the fine a secret until I hit you with it. I will bring down the skyrocketing cost of health care with competition and choice to lower your premiums, and make it more available to more Americans. I'll make sure you can keep the same health plan if you change jobs or leave a job to stay home. [cheers]

I will provide every single American family with a $5000 refundable tax credit to help them purchase insurance. Workers who already have care insurance from their employers will keep it and have more money to cover costs. Workers who don't have health insurance can use it to find a policy anywhere in this country to meet their basic needs.

If I'm elected President, I won't raise taxes on small businesses, as Senator Obama proposes [cheers], and force them to cut jobs. I will keep small business taxes where they are, help them keep their costs low, and let them spend their earnings to create more jobs.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If I'm elected President, I won't make it harder to sell our goods overseas and kill more jobs as Senator Obama proposes. I will open new markets to goods made in America and make sure our trade is free and fair. And I'll make sure we help workers who've lost a job that won't come back find a new one that won't go away.

The last President, my friends, to raise taxes and restrict trade in a bad economy as Senator Obama proposes was a guy named Herbert Hoover. That didn't turn out too well. [crowd laughs] [We went into a Great Depression.] They say those who don't learn the lessons of history are doomed to repeat them. Well, my friends, I know my history lessons, and I sure won't make the mistakes Senator Obama will.

If I'm elected President, we're going to stop sending $700 billion to countries that don't like us very much. I won't argue to delay drilling for more oil and gas and building new nuclear power plants in America, as Senator Obama does. We will start drilling now. We will invest in all energy alternatives -- nuclear, wind, solar, and tide. [btw, do you how much of nucl equipment and parts for the future of US is made right here in NC? 100% of GE, Richard Burke] We will encourage the manufacture of hybrid, flex fuel and electric automobiles. We will invest in clean coal technology. [crowd cheers] We will lower the cost of energy within months, and we will create millions of new jobs in this country. [crowd cheers]

Let me give you the state of the race today. We have 22 days to go. We're 6 points down. The national media has written us off. [boos] Senator Obama is measuring the drapes, [boos] and planning with Speaker Pelosi and Senator Reid [boos] to raise taxes, increase spending, take away your right to vote by secret ballot in labor elections, [boos] and concede defeat in Iraq. [boos] But they forgot to let you decide. [cheers] My friends, we've got them just where we want them.

What America needs in this hour is a fighter [someone yells, "you're a hero!"]; someone who puts all his cards on the table and trusts the judgment of the American people. [john mccain! john mccain!] I come from a long line of McCains who believed that to love America is to fight for her. I have fought for you most of my life. There are other ways to love this country, but I've never been the kind to do it from the sidelines.

I know you're worried. America is a great country, but we are at a moment of national crisis that will determine our future. Will we continue to lead the world's economies or will we be overtaken? Will the world become safer or more dangerous? Will our military remain the strongest in the world? Will our children and grandchildren's future be brighter than ours?

My answer to you is yes. Yes, we will lead. Yes, we will prosper. Yes, we will be safer. Yes, we will pass on to our children a stronger, better country. But we must be prepared to act swiftly, boldly, with courage and wisdom.

I know what fear feels like. [someone yells: "that's barack!"] It's a thief in the night who robs your strength.

I know what hopelessness feels like. [someone yells "that's obama!"] It's an enemy who defeats your will.

I felt those things once before. I will never let them in again. I'm an American. And I choose to fight.

Don't give up hope. Be strong. Have courage. And fight.

Fight for a new direction for our country.

Fight for what's right for America.

Fight to clean up the mess of corruption, infighting and selfishness in Washington.

Fight to get our economy out of the ditch and back in the lead.

Fight for the ideals and character of a free people.

Fight for our children's future.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Fight for justice and opportunity for all.

Stand up to defend our country from its enemies. [Obama! Obama!]

Stand up, stand up, stand up and fight. America is worth fighting for. Nothing is inevitable here. We never give up. We never quit. We never hide from history. We make history.

Thank you, God bless you. Thank you.

in the next 22 days, i'm asking you to go out and do what's necessary to win NC [someone yells, "fight!"] i also want to tell you again b/c we're so close, to brave men and women here in NC who are serving, i want to promise you that i know how brave they are and you too, we cherish and love them. they are the best of us. i'm proud of all the vets who come to these rallies, their support, i'm grateful. i'll take care of HC of our vets and it'll be our highest priority. i also want to tell you, of all the generations i've had the honor of this one, i'm proudest of this one. they're the best trained, best equipped, bravest. and everytime i need to get my priorities in perspective... Matthew Stanley story ... make sure my son's death did not die in vain. i want to be president b/c i belive i can inspire a generation of americans to serve a cause greater than their self-interest. there's nothing nobler. the great honor of my life has been to be able to serve this great country. we might disagree from time to time. as president, i will inspire a generation of americans to serve a cause greater than self-interest and i will always put country first. thank you and god bless.

[Rocky music]

--
Sara DuBois
Tracking / Communications Manager
ProgressiveAccountability.org
sara@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: Creamer2@aol.com
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
can@americansunitedforchange.org
Date: 11/3/2009 7:21:21 AM
Subject: [big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer -- Anniversary of Obama's Election

One Year After Obama's Victory – We Are in the Opening Months of a New Progressive Era

As I watched Barack Obama's victory speech, I thought that America was on the brink of a new progressive era. I believe that just as strongly one year later.

I know there are many Progressives who are disappointed at the pace of change, or who believe that there are many instances when the Obama Administration should take bolder action. Sometimes I am among them. But there is no question that in the first nine months of his Presidency, Barack Obama has begun to lead America in a fundamentally new direction. The success of this new progressive project will certainly depend upon the decisions that he and those around him make in the years ahead. But it will also depend on the skill, resilience and resourcefulness of the progressive forces in America.

In evaluating his leadership – and the success Progressives have had since that hopeful night in Chicago's Grant Park -- seven points are especially important.

1). Obama has fundamentally changed the political value frame. For the thirty years before Obama's election, the full constellation of right wing values charted the path for American political and economic development. Obama has shifted that value frame from the Right's belief in unbridled pursuit of individual interest, to the progressive commitment to the common good; from selfishness to commitment to others; from division to unity; from fear to hope; to the sense that we're all in this together, not "all in this alone."

The Administration's political messaging, its expressed beliefs, and its policy goals all embody these progressive values -- and many of its key personnel are deeply committed to those values as well. We have a White House where idealism is cool once again.

2). Progressives are on the offensive, not the defensive. After being in a defensive crouch for over thirty years, Progressives have taken the offense. For years we have fought about defending values and policies – defending Medicare, defending Social Security, combating the ascendant Neo-Con foreign policy, defending the role of government, defending unions, defending civil liberties, defending the incomes of everyday Americans.

Now the Right is attempting to slow our progress on climate change, the rights of unions, civil liberties, a public option, immigration reform, and regulating Wall Street.

In the long battle between progressive and conservative values in America, that denotes a critical turning point – because in any type of combat, including politics – the force on the offense almost always prevails.

3). While the pace of many big changes has taken longer than some had hoped, it is easy to forget the major successes that have already been achieved. Here are a few:

* Saving the economy from complete meltdown – another Great Depression --following the failure of eight years of right wing economic policy and financial risk-taking "gone wild" – including his bold rescue of the American auto industry.

* Laying the first layer of a foundation for longterm, bottom-up economic growth by passing the largest economic recovery package in history and a Federal Budget that the Center on Budget Priorities called the most progressive budget in half a century.

* Abandoning the failed Neo-Con foreign policy and changing our relationship with the rest of the world.

* Signing into law measures that had repeatedly passed the Democratic Congress but been vetoed by George Bush – the "Matthew Shepard" bill that expands the definition of hate crimes to include sexual orientation, expanding the State Children's Health Care Program (SCHIP), and passing the "Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act" that seriously strengthened the ability of women to seek redress for employment discrimination.

* The Administration and Congress ended a program of wasteful subsidies to private banks that provided student loans using Federal money and used the savings to greatly expand Pell Grants to college students.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

* Executive actions like ending the "Global Gag Rule" that prevented U.S. foreign aid from going to family planning programs that even mentioned abortion – and changes in labor law enforcement that make it easier to organize on the job.

* Ending torture.

* Funding stem cell research and generally restoring a respect for science to government.

* Setting and keeping to a schedule to end the American presence in Iraq.

* Putting in motion a legislative agenda that will make major progressive change: providing health care for all, creating clean energy jobs and addressing global warming, overhauling the regulation of the financial sector and beginning to shrink its dominance in the American economy, and passing comprehensive immigration reform.

4). Why have the major initiatives in his agenda taken longer than some might have hoped? Because, as a great American once said: "power surrenders nothing without a struggle." You don't just snap your fingers to make fundamental change. That's because fundamental change alters the relations of power – it removes power and money from one group of people and gives it to another.

The insurance companies and big Wall Street banks were not about to just roll over and say "I give up."

Why is it so tough to pass real health care reform through a Congress that is dominated by Democrats? Because Congress is an expression of the distribution of power in American society and that's what Progressives are out to change. Obama – and the rest of the progressive forces in America – have to make change starting with things as they are – not things as they wish they were.

That doesn't mean we can make fundamental change. Nor does it mean we have to settle for "gradualism" or accept the rules of the game as they are. It does mean that change is not neat and simple. It involves struggle and conflict. It is war without bloodshed and sometimes it isn't pretty. It means you can't have the rain without the thunder and lightning – and sometimes it takes a little longer than planned.

5). The importance of a President that is both committed to progressive values and cool under fire is not simply manifest when it comes to passing a legislative agenda. It is critical when it comes time to deal with any form of real crises.

In 1963, John Kennedy relied on his own steady temperament and progressive values to defuse the Cuban Missile Crisis that nearly led to nuclear War with the Soviet Union. Think how lucky we were that George Bush and Don Rumsfeld were not the ones with their fingers on the nuclear trigger.

This Administration demonstrated its ability to deal with major crises as soon as it walked in the door and acted decisively to avoid another Great Depression. America could confront any number of other unexpected dangerous crises on any given day. It ought to literally make the people of America sleep better tonight that Barack Obama, and not George W. Bush or John McCain or Sarah Palin, sits in the Oval Office to deal with them.

6). The key for us – and for Obama – is not to miss this historic window of opportunity to make real structural change – to emerge from battle having changed the relations of power. That is the central element that will allow progress to continue and accelerate.

The key to health care reform, regulatory reform, energy legislation, and immigration reform is to get the architecture right. Quantitative questions we can compromise on now – and fix later. But we have to get the qualitative things right the first time.

We must have a public option in a health care bill, not just to provide consumers with more choices or put downward pressure on health insurance rates. We need a public option to change the relations of power in the health care industry. We need to take power away from private insurers who have a stranglehold on our health care and put it into the hands of voters, citizens and and consumers who make choices.

We need to change the regulatory architecture of the financial sector to reduce its outsized power, to change the perverse incentives that promote reckless risk-taking, and to prevent it from siphoning off all of our nation's economic growth from ordinary Americans as it did during the last eight years.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We need to change the rules of the economic game that incentivize the discharge of greenhouse gases and enslave us to foreign oil.

And Progressives need to change the immigration laws to take 12 million people out of the shadows – and, by the way, to change the balance of electoral power in a number of key states.

Progressive success ultimately revolves around our ability to change the relations of power – to democratize power in our society. Obama and those leading his Administration understand that and have launched an agenda to help make it happen.

7). Finally, how long the window for progressive change stays open depends entirely on our ability to forge an enduring progressive political majority – among the electorate, in Congress and in our state Legislatures.

In the near term, that means holding our ground in the 2010 mid-terms. Of course the major factor affecting our success in 2010 will be Obama's ability to show progress creating jobs. That will certainly require a good deal more Federal stimulus early next year.

It will also require continued attention to great messaging and to political organizing. So far Obama has done his politics with enormous skill. His approval rating stands at a robust 56% in most polls and fewer Americans (20%) self-identify as Republicans than at any other time in a quarter-century. We've done a good job helping the Republicans marginalize themselves – but of course Sarah Palin, Glen Beck, Rush Limbaugh and the Tea Party gang haven't needed much help guiding their party out to the margins of the political playing field.

Obama's commitment to political organization has not diminished. His political organization, Organize for America (OFA) has blossomed into a major force. By and large, Obama has done a masterful job cultivating and maintaining the relationship of his administration to the many elements of the progressive base.

But our success in 2010 also rests upon Obama's ability to deliver real, meaningful change on his big-ticket items over the next six months. Someone suggested the other day that if we can't get everything we want on health care or regulatory reform, we should stall action and ask the voters to send us more progressive Democrats. Unfortunately, history tells us that if Obama doesn't deliver on things like health care reform, his numbers and the Democratic brand will sink and leave many Democratic candidates for Congress looking for other lines of work.

We have to win health care reform and the other items on our agenda before the next election season. That doesn't mean we should settle for wins in name only. Completely apart from the importance of changing the relations of power in America, real change is necessary to produce the final ingredient for electoral success in 2010: Obama needs to be able to reinvigorate the base – to inspire once again. To inspire the base we have to deliver real change. For instance, we can't settle for a health care bill that is not affordable and doesn't have a public option -- and if it takes a bloody fight to get them, we have to have the stomach for the task.

A lot has happened since November 4, 2008 and the plot line will thicken over the next six months. Barack Obama will be the leading man in this drama. But, just as in the campaign, there is also no doubt that this story will have a cast of thousands who will have an enormous amount to say about the outcome. And I am more convinced than ever that the 2008 Obama slogan got it right: "Yes We Can."

Robert Creamer is a long-time political organizer and strategist, and author of the recent book: "Stand Up Straight: How Progressives Can Win," available on amazon.com .

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail dubois.sara@gmail.com with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To:	"Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	9/25/2015 7:39:01 AM
Subject:	Re: TWEETS: US-China Announcement

Ok

On Friday, September 25, 2015, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> These with input from Kristina and the Climate guys.
>
> TWEETS:
>
> The US and China are following up their joint announcement last November with domestic policy action (1/3)
>
> The US has adopted the first-ever carbon pollution standards for power plants and new efficiency standards for trucks and appliances (2/3)
>
> China has added more than 55 GW of wind, solar & nuclear since last November = 800 wind turbines or 1 nuclear plant every week (3/3)
>
> Read my statement on US-China climate announcements on @TheBriefing2016: https://www.hillaryclinton.com/p/briefing/factsheets/2015/09/25/republicans-get-it-wrong-on-china-and-climate-change/
>
> --
> Milia Fisher
> Special Assistant to the Chair
> Hillary for America
> mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
> c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Gene Karpinski, League of Conservation Voters" <feedback@lcv.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 4/15/2011 3:01:05 AM
Subject: Stop Uranium Mining Near the Grand Canyon

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John,

The Grand Canyon is one of America's most iconic and beautiful national parks. Each year, millions of people come from around the world to enjoy its natural beauty. No one can deny that the Grand Canyon is an intrinsic part of our nation's culture and heritage.

That's why it's so outrageous that corporate polluters are trying to open up the land around the Grand Canyon to dangerous uranium mining.

Fueled by a recent boom in uranium prices, corporate mining interests are staking out thousands of new mining leases and working to re-open old mines near the Grand Canyon.

Thankfully, the Department of the Interior is taking action -- they're proposing to make 1 million acres of land around the Grand Canyon off-limits to uranium mining for the next 20 years.

Click here to submit a public comment to the Department of the Interior.

But the Department of the Interior's proposal isn't set in stone. Tell the department that you support making the land around the Grand Canyon off-limits to harmful uranium mining.

The recent tragedy in Japan has taught us just how dangerous -- and unpredictable -- radiation can be. The damage from uranium mining near the Grand Canyon could be catastrophic -- permanently destroying one of our most precious national treasures.

Additionally, the pollution from uranium mining near the Grand Canyon could endanger tens of millions of Americans. Radiation and toxic waste could leech into the groundwater and the Colorado River, contaminating the drinking water of over 27 million people in Nevada and California alone.

Can you imagine tens of millions of Americans drinking radioactive water? Can you imagine the Grand Canyon polluted with radiation and toxic mining runoff? It's a disturbing image for one of our nation's most beloved landmarks. That's why we need you to take action to protect the land around the Grand Canyon from uranium mining.

The Department of the Interior's deadline for accepting public comments is around the corner. Time is running out, so please tell the department now that the Grand Canyon must be protected from big polluters.

If we're going to succeed in facing down corporate polluters, we need everyone standing up and speaking out. Please take action to protect the Grand Canyon, and then encourage your friends and family to take action as well.

Thank you,

Gene Karpinski
President
League of Conservation Voters

P.S. After you've submitted a public comment, please encourage your family and friends to do so by sharing this action via e-mail, Facebook or Twitter.

Update Your Profile
To Unsubscribe Click Here

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

POWERED BY blackbaud
nonprofit software

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Matt Paul" <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 10/24/2015 4:37:54 AM
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

Wow. You people are a bunch of ninnies.

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:37 AM, Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Agree-tempting. but she shouldn't go there tonight
>
> On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 10:33 AM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > I love the joke too but I think HRC should stay above the committee - and especially above personal insults about it. She's got every inch of the high ground right now.
> >
> > On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:30 AM, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > That's because you love your own joke.
> > >
> > > But I think it is okay.
> > >
> > > Sent from my iPhone
> > >
> > > On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:04 AM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com > wrote:
> > >
> > > > I don't think so.
> > > >
> > > > On Oct 24, 2015 10:54 AM, "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com > wrote:
> > > > > LOVE the Trey Gowdy line.
> > > > >
> > > > > Just wonder if that undercuts our statesmanship point too much.
> > > > >
> > > > > Mandy Grunwald
> > > > > Grunwald Communications
> > > > > 202 973-9400
> > > > >
> > > > > -----Original Message-----
> > > > > From: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
> > > > > To: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
> > > > > Cc: Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com >; Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >; Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; Sawsan Bay <sbay@hillaryclinton.com >; Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >; Bonnie Rubin <brubin@hillaryclinton.com >; Marlon Marshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com >; Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >; Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com >; Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com >; Kate Offerdahl <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com >; Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >
> > > > > Sent: Sat, Oct 24, 2015 10:49 am
> > > > > Subject: Re: Call with HRC
> > > > >
> > > > > I couldn't talk on the call, but I agree with Joel, let's not go back to emails.
> > > > > Re Jen's point on this being a partisan crowd salesmanship not partisanship is a hard shot at the Republicans, so I think it's fine.
> > > > > On freshening things up, what about: I used to be obsessed with Donald Trump's hair, that was until I got to spend 11 hours staring at the top of Trey Gowdy's head

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Oct 24, 2015 9:38 AM, "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Here's Obama in 2007:

Barack Obama, 2007

Thank you so much. To the great Governor of Iowa and Lieutenant. Governor of Iowa. To my dear friend Tom Harkin for the outstanding work that he does. To the congressional delegation of Iowa that is doing outstanding work and to Nancy Pelosi , Madam Speaker, thank you all for the wonderful welcome and the wonderful hospitality.

[Responding to audience] I love you back.

A little less than one year from today, you will go into the voting booth and you will select the President of the United States of America. Now, here's the good news -- the name George W. Bush will not be on the ballot. The name of my cousin Dick Cheney will not be on the ballot. We've been trying to hide that for a long time. Everybody has a black sheep in the family. The era of Scooter Libby justice, and Brownie incompetence, and Karl Rove politics will finally be over.

But the question you're going to have to ask yourself when you caucus in January and you vote in November is, "What's next for America?" We are in a defining moment in our history. Our nation is at war. The planet is in peril. The dream that so many generations fought for feels as if it's slowly slipping away. We are working harder for less. We've never paid more for health care or for college. It's harder to save and it's harder to retire. And most of all we've lost faith that our leaders can or will do anything about it.

We were promised compassionate conservatism and all we got was Katrina and wiretaps. We were promised a uniter, and we got a President who could not even lead the half of the country that voted for him. We were promised a more ethical and more efficient government, and instead we have a town called Washington that is more corrupt and more wasteful than it was before. And the only mission that was ever accomplished is to use fear and falsehood to take this country to a war that should have never been authorized and should have never been waged.

It is because of these failures that America is listening, intently, to what we say here today -- not just Democrats, but Republicans and Independents who've lost trust in their government, but want to believe again.

And it is because of these failures that we not only have a moment of great challenge, but also a moment of great opportunity. We have a chance to bring the country together in a new majority -- to finally tackle problems that George Bush made far worse, but that had festered long before George Bush ever took office -- problems that we've talked about year after year after year after year.

And that is why the same old Washington textbook campaigns just won't do in this election. That's why not answering questions, because we are afraid our answers won't be popular just won't do. That's why telling the American people what we think they want to hear instead of telling the American people what they need to hear just won't do. Triangulating and poll-driven positions because we're worried about what Mitt or Rudy might say about us just won't do. If we are really serious about wining this election Democrats, we can't live in fear of losing it.
This party -- the party of Jefferson and Jackson; of Roosevelt and Kennedy -- has always made the biggest difference in the lives of the American people when we led, not by polls, but by principle; not by calculation, but by conviction; when we summoned the entire nation to a common purpose -- a higher purpose. And I run for the Presidency of the United States of America because that's the party America needs us to be right now.

A party that offers not just a difference in policies, but a difference in leadership.

A party that doesn't just focus on how to win but why we should. A party that doesn't just offer change as a slogan, but real, meaningful change -- change that America can believe in. That's why I'm in this race. That's why I am running for the Presidency of the United States of America -- to offer change that we can believe in.

I am in this race to tell the corporate lobbyists that their days of setting the agenda in Washington are over. I have done more than any other candidate in this race to take on lobbyists -- and won. They have not funded my campaign, they will not get a job in my White House, and they will not drown out the voices of the American people when I am President. I'm in this race to take those tax breaks away from companies that are moving jobs overseas and put them in the pockets of hard working Americans who deserve it. And I won't raise the minimum wage every ten years -- I will raise it to keep pace so that workers don't' fall behind.

That is why I am in it. To protect the American worker. To fight for the American worker.
I'm in this race because I want to stop talking about the outrage of 47 million Americans without health care and start actually doing something about it. I expanded health care in Illinois by bringing Democrats and Republicans together. By taking on the insurance industry. And that is how I will make certain that every single American in this country has health care they can count on and I won't do it twenty years from now, I won't do it ten years from now, I will do it by the end of my first term as President of the United States of America.

I run for president to make sure that every American child has the best education that we have to offer -- from the day they are born to the day they graduate from college. And I won't just talk about how great teachers are -- as President I will reward them for their greatness -- by raising salaries and giving them more support. That's why I'm in this race.

I am running for President because I am sick and tired of democrats thinking that the only way to look tough on national security is by talking, and acting, and voting like George Bush Republicans.

When I am this party's nominee, my opponent will not be able to say that I voted for the war in Iraq; or that I gave George Bush the benefit of the doubt on Iran; or that I supported Bush-Cheney policies of not talking to leaders that we don't like. And he will not be able to say that I wavered on something as fundamental as whether or not it is ok for America to torture

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-- because it is never ok. That's why I am in it.

As President, I will end the war in Iraq. We will have our troops home in sixteen months. I will close Guantanamo. I will restore habeas corpus. I will finish the fight against Al Qaeda. And I will lead the world to combat the common threats of the 21st century -- nuclear weapons and terrorism; climate change and poverty; genocide and disease. And I will send once more a message to those yearning faces beyond our shores that says, "You matter to us. Your future is our future. And our moment is now."

America, our moment is now.

Our moment is now.

I don't want to spend the next year or the next four years re-fighting the same fights that we had in the 1990s.

I don't want to pit Red America against Blue America, I want to be the President of the United States of America.

And if those Republicans come at me with the same fear-mongering and swift-boating that they usually do, then I will take them head on. Because I believe the American people are tired of fear and tired of distractions and tired of diversions. We can make this election not about fear, but about the future. And that won't just be a Democratic victory; that will be an American victory.

And that is a victory America needs right now.

I am not in this race to fulfill some long-held ambitions or because I believe it's somehow owed to me. I never expected to be here, I always knew this journey was improbable. I've never been on a journey that wasn't.

I am running in this race because of what Dr. King called "the fierce urgency of now." Because I believe that there's such a thing as being too late. And that hour is almost upon us.

I don't want to wake up four years from now and find out that millions of Americans still lack health care because we couldn't take on the insurance industry.

I don't want to see that the oceans have risen a few more inches. The planet has reached a point of no return because we couldn't find a way to stop buying oil from dictators.

I don't want to see more American lives put at risk because no one had the judgment or the courage to stand up against a misguided war before we sent our troops into fight.

I don't want to see homeless veterans on the streets. I don't want to send another generation of American children to failing schools. I don't want that future for my daughters. I don't want that future for your sons. I do not want that future for America.

I'm in this race for the same reason that I fought for jobs for the jobless and hope for the hopeless on the streets of Chicago; for the same reason I fought for justice and equality as a civil rights lawyer; for the same reason that I fought for Illinois families for over a decade.

Because I will never forget that the only reason that I'm standing here today is because somebody, somewhere stood up for me when it was risky. Stood up when it was hard. Stood up when it wasn't popular. And because that somebody stood up, a few more stood up. And then a few thousand stood up. And then a few million stood up. And standing up, with courage and clear purpose, they somehow managed to change the world.

That's why I'm running, Iowa -- to give our children and grandchildren the same chances somebody gave me.

That's why I'm running, Democrats -- to keep the American Dream alive for those who still hunger for opportunity, who still thirst for equality.

That's why I'm asking you to stand with me, that's why I'm asking you to caucus for me, that's why I am asking you to stop settling for what the cynics say we have to accept. In this election -- in this moment -- let us reach for what we know is possible. A nation healed. A world repaired. An America that believes again. Thank you very much everybody.

On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 9:24 AM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Here is latest draft
>
> On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 9:01 AM, Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > She just called about the JJ speech. Isn't entirely convinced it is > > the right speech to deliver. I suggest we get on phone with her to > > discuss. Our only window is 930 for 30 minutes. Hope that works.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 11/12/2014 1:13:32 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Wednesday November 12, 2014 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Wednesday November 12, 2014 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

MSNBC: "Clinton camp to meet with progressive critics"

"Adam Green, the co-founder of the Progressive Change Campaign Committee, one of the groups most closely associated with the so-called 'Warren wing of the Democratic Party,' said his organization reached out to Clinton's camp before the election and that a meeting was coming 'very soon.'"

The Hill: "Hillary Clinton in no hurry to announce 2016 plans"

"Democratic midterm thumping, Clinton is likely to stick to the timeline of making her plans known early next year."

Washington Post: PostPartisan: "The central challenge for Hillary Clinton and Democrats in 2016"

"Here, then, is the central challenge for Hillary Clinton and Democrats in 2016: Convince enough voters that they have a credible plan to raise incomes for the middle class through jump starting economic growth."

Washington Post blog: Plum Line: "Why a Bernie Sanders presidential candidacy is good for Democrats — and for Hillary Clinton"

"By critiquing her from the left, he [Sen. Sanders] could pull her [Sec. Clinton] in his direction in order to satisfy primary voters, which on many issues would wind up being to her advantage."

Politico Magazine: "Why Wall Street Loves Hillary"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[Subtitle:] “She's trying to sound populist, but the banks are ready to shower her campaign with cash.”

MSNBC: “Potential Hillary Clinton challengers gear up for fight”

“Hillary Clinton’s allies may think the likely presidential candidate is stronger now than she was before last week’s midterm elections, but that hasn’t stopped her potential challengers from moving ahead with their own plans.”

The New Republic: “Hillary's Going to Have a Primary After All, and She Should Be Grateful”

“It is appearing more and more likely, however, that Clinton will face primary opponents. In fact, three potential candidates—Senator Bernie Sanders, former Senator Jim Webb and Maryland Governor Martin O’Malley—have all signaled they will seek the Democratic nomination.”

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: “Bill Clinton: Hillary 'happy as a clam' even without run”

“When DeGeneres joked that Clinton was going to make a ‘big announcement’ about his wife, Clinton replied, ‘She's the happiest grandmother.’”

Mediaite: “Fox’s Cavuto Hammers Rand Paul for ‘Condescending Swipe’ at Hillary’s Age”

“And just to stick the knife in a little further, Cavuto invoked Paul’s father, who happens to be a couple of years older than Clinton.”

Politico Magazine: “Wave? What Wave?”

"Many expect her to serve until at least Obama leaves office in 2017 — in part to defend the 2010 Affordable Care Act from a Republican-led Congress. Pelosi adamantly declined to say what she would do if Hillary Clinton won the White House in 2016..."

Articles:

MSNBC: “Clinton camp to meet with progressive critics”

By Alex Seitz-Wald

November 11, 2014, 10:00 p.m. EST

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary's critics on the left may finally have the opportunity they've been waiting for.

Adam Green, the co-founder of the Progressive Change Campaign Committee, one of the groups most closely associated with the so-called "Warren wing of the Democratic Party," said his organization reached out to Clinton's camp before the election and that a meeting was coming "very soon."

He declined to name the Clinton advisers with whom he's been in contact, saying discussions have so far been limited to "conversations about having conversations." "We want to keep as open a line of communication with Hillary Clinton and her team as possible," he told msnbc.

The meeting will hopefully be a precursor to a larger summit with more progressive leaders and Clinton herself. "The more the merrier," Green said. "Individual meetings are useful, but progressive movement-wide meetings would be really smart for her."

Their message is that Clinton should adopt the kind of economic inequality issues championed by Warren, both for substantive and political reasons. "This is the path to victory in the primary and general election," Green and co-founder Stephanie Taylor wrote in an op-ed in The Hill.

Other liberal groups, which have sometimes been critical of Clinton, are also interested in a chance to bend Clinton's ear on these issues. MoveOn.org, which has 8 million members and traces it roots to defending Bill Clinton during his impeachment trial, said that while noting is planned at the moment, they anticipate some kind of interaction with Clinton. "We would be open and expecting a meeting and interactions with anybody looking for the Democratic nomination," said a source at the group.

MoveOn and others say it will be especially important for Clinton to engage with their members, who number in the millions and include some of the most active Democratic grassroots volunteers and supporters. "We're looking forward to meeting with her team," said Neil Sroka of Democracy for America, which grew out of Howard Dean's 2004 presidential campaign. It's important that Clinton "find ways to connect with the grassroots progressives our organizations represent," he added, calling them the "foot soldiers" of the party.

Clinton plans an unofficial "listening tour" after the election, according to The New York Times, but Green says his group's outreach pre-dated the elections by several months.

Activists involved with several other labor and progressive groups said they have not yet been contacted by Clinton's team. One suspected the tour will be confined to "known likely friends," rather than people skeptical of Clinton. Still, they acknowledged it's early yet.

Dean's DFA has gotten a jump on 2016 by trying to take the temperatures of its more than 1 million members. Last week, it launched an internal poll that, "demonstrates our commitment to making sure the fight for the Democratic nomination is a contest, not a coronation," Sroka said. The poll is still ongoing, but this week, the group sent a series of emails to supporters making "the progressive case" for several different candidates, including Clinton.

"Hillary Clinton is a brawler, willing to take Republicans head on and expose their lies. Can you imagine watching Hillary demolish Ted Cruz or Rand Paul in a debate? It would be epic," the Clinton email notes. It also praises her experience and political strength, concluding: With "the mistakes of her 2008 presidential campaign in her rearview mirror, Hillary Clinton appears to be ready to win the White House."

The other emails tout the progressive bona fides for Warren and Sen. Bernie Sanders. There's also an email for, curiously, former Labor Secretary Robert Reich.

On a DFA conference call in February, Reich said, "I think that there will be a lot of people – Elizabeth Warren, others, maybe even me – who will toss our hats in the ring."

Progressives are encouraged by Clinton's recent rhetoric on the stump for Democratic midterm candidates, especially the speech she gave while appearing with Warren in Massachusetts on behalf of failed Democratic gubernatorial candidate Martha Coakley. "It's clear that she's listening," Sroka said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Hill: "Hillary Clinton in no hurry to announce 2016 plans"

By Amie Parnes

November 12, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EST

Hillary Clinton is in no rush to announce that she's running for president.

Sources in Clinton World say while there's been some chatter about an earlier-than-expected announcement, given the Democratic midterm thumping, Clinton is likely to stick to the timeline of making her plans known early next year.

"She's not going to get in early. Period. End of sentence," said one Clinton ally. "She's not ready. She hasn't fully decided that's what she wants to do."

Clinton formally launched her first White House bid on Jan. 20, 2007, with a statement on her website that said, "I'm in."

And the expectation has been that she would follow a similar plan, at least on the timing of an announcement, if she chooses to run for the presidency again.

But suggestions that she should move up her plans have become more common in recent weeks — particularly after the midterms.

Those arguing that Clinton should get in sooner rather than later say an earlier bid would help her fundraising and organizing. It would also provide some, much-needed energy to a party still reeling from an electoral disaster.

"It would be a good reminder that we'll see them on the playing field in two years," said one Democratic strategist. "To be continued."

It could also downplay the storyline that Clinton is too cautious and is taking cues from old playbooks.

David Plouffe, who ran President Obama's 2008 campaign, recently advised her to stop playing coy and push the go button as soon as possible, according to a report in Politico.

And Clinton herself offered remarks last month during a Q-and-A in Ottawa that left some wondering if she was readjusting her timeline.

"I've been dodging this question now for a year and a half or more," she said at an event hosted by a Canadian think tank. "I'm going to keep dodging it, certainly until the midterm elections are over. I'm thinking hard about it. But I'm not going to really bear down and think hard about it in a way you make a decision until after these elections."

Hillaryland sources say Clinton — who recently celebrated the birth of her granddaughter — is currently in "listening mode," as one put it. After campaigning with Democratic candidates, she wants some downtime to really mull the decision inside and out.

"I don't see any reason to announce anytime in the next two months," said one Clinton insider. "Frankly, I'm thinking, 'Take your time.' "

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

These sources maintain she will likely make a decision about her next steps sometime over the holidays. Should she choose to run, she could then form an exploratory committee, allowing her to have a soft launch of sorts.

The committee would in turn send a clear message of her intent without a huge announcement or quick ramp-up of a large team, allowing her to remain somewhat low-key for the time being.

Voters could suffer from an early dose of Clinton fatigue, argue those saying Clinton should not get in early.

And once a campaign begins on the early side, there's "more time for negative coverage to set in and doubts in the media," said Julian Zelizer, a professor of history and public affairs at Princeton University.

The longtime Clinton adviser maintained that the election results don't and shouldn't affect the general timeline of an announcement.

For one thing, the aide pointed out, there is plenty of action already taking place to eat up the political oxygen including the debate between mainstream Republicans and Tea Partyers in addition to the string of would-be presidential candidates on the GOP side.

Furthermore, the source added, issue-oriented debates on immigration reform and other issues are also taking up space in the political stratosphere.

But most of all, Clinton — who spent the bulk of the year on a book tour, giving speeches and then stumping for Democrats — needs more time.

"The timeline is what it is," one longtime Clinton ally said. "And I don't see that changing."

Washington Post: PostPartisan: "The central challenge for Hillary Clinton and Democrats in 2016"

By Carter Eskew

November 11, 2014, 12:33 p.m. EST

David Leonhardt has an essential article today for those who wish to understand the recent volatility in electoral outcomes generally, and the misfortune of Democrats specifically. The key driver of these outcomes, according to Leonhardt, is stagnant middle-class incomes. The average American worker, who is lucky enough to have a job, makes $3,600 less today in inflation-adjusted wages than he did in 2001. That is an extraordinary fact, and one that overshadows all other aspects of our politics. It is why Obama and Democrats not only fail to receive any credit for a decline in the unemployment rate, but also are currently seen as weaker than Republicans on what was always their strength: running the economy for the benefit of the middle-class. It is why the "war on women," climate change, health care, and Social Security, Democratic go-to issues, cut so little this year, and seem exhausted for the foreseeable future. It's not just the economy, stupid; it's the fact that people are working the same and making less, moron.

Here, then, is the central challenge for Hillary Clinton and Democrats in 2016: Convince enough voters that they have a credible plan to raise incomes for the middle class through jump starting economic growth. It won't be easy, as Leonhardt makes clear. Democratic ideas for the economy, investment in infrastructure and education, to cite two favorites, take years to pay dividends. A faster way to prime the pump, Leonhardt suggests, would be to cut taxes on the middle class, offset by an increase in rates for the wealthy, which echoes, to some degree, the platforms Bill Clinton and Barack Obama campaigned on in 1992 and in 2008, respectively.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For Mrs. Clinton, of course, economic growth and raising stagnant wages must be the sine qua non of her candidacy. It's time to bring the "laser beam" that Bill Clinton promised in 1992 out of storage and refocus it on the economy. Politically, all else is distraction.

Washington Post blog: Plum Line: "Why a Bernie Sanders presidential candidacy is good for Democrats — and for Hillary Clinton"

By Paul Waldman

November 11, 2014, 1:44 p.m. EST

Ever since people started thinking about the 2016 presidential primaries, the assumption has been that the Republican side will feature a fascinating and bloody donnybrook with no initial frontrunner and as many as a dozen potentially realistic candidacies, while the Democratic contest will be no contest at all, but rather a coronation for Hillary Clinton.

But might we finally have a real clash of ideas on the Democratic side? Yes, we might:

"Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) has spent months fishing for a strategist to guide his potential 2016 presidential campaign. On Monday, he hooked a big one: Tad Devine, one of the Democratic Party's leading consultants and a former high-level campaign aide to Al Gore, John Kerry, and Michael Dukakis.

"'If he runs, I'm going to help him,' Devine said in an interview. 'He is not only a longtime client but a friend. I believe he could deliver an enormously powerful message that the country is waiting to hear right now and do it in a way that succeeds.'

"Devine and Sanders, who first worked together on Sanders's campaigns in the 1990s, have been huddling in recent weeks, mapping out how the brusque progressive senator could navigate a primary and present a formidable challenge to Hillary Rodham Clinton, the frontrunner for the Democratic presidential nomination."

The height of Devine's influence may be in the recent past, but he still brings establishment credibility that could lead people in the media to give Sanders more attention. His involvement is also a sign that Sanders isn't just thinking he'll get a van and drive around New Hampshire, but instead that he'd mount a serious campaign, no matter how formidable the obstacles to victory. That could mean a genuinely interesting debate about the problems America confronts and how the Democratic party should address them.

Sanders says he'll center his campaign on economic inequality and the struggles of the middle class, and this is what Clinton needs to address as well. That may be the most important message for Democrats of the 2014 election, not to mention Barack Obama's continuing low approval ratings: Democrats need to figure out how to address persistent economic insecurity, stagnating wages, and the failure of the recovery's gains to achieve widespread distribution.

If you look at most economic measures, the Obama administration seems spectacularly successful. Since the economy stopped hemorrhaging jobs at the end of 2009, it has added 10 million. We've now had nine straight months with over 200,000 jobs created, which hadn't happened since the mid-1990's. Unemployment is below 6 percent, GDP growth is steady, and the federal deficit is less than half what it was when Obama took office. Yet his approval on the economy is an anemic 40 percent.

The reasons why are many and complicated (the most important is that wages are not increasing), but one problem Democrats face is that they don't have a coherent story to tell on the economy that explains what they've done right, connects with people's current displeasure, and shows a way forward. If by focusing on the economy Sanders forces Clinton to articulate that story and support it with a specific agenda that she could implement if she wins, he will have done her a great service.

Of course, he'd say he isn't running to do Hillary Clinton any favors. But the reality is that he would. By critiquing her from the left, he could pull her in his direction in order to satisfy primary voters, which on many issues would wind up being to her advantage. At the same time, the broader message their debates would communicate to the general electorate is that she's a moderate. When Republicans try to argue that she's some wild-eyed Alinskyite radical bent on turning America socialist (just as they did with Obama), she can say, "I ran against an actual socialist in the primaries, and it's pretty obvious we aren't the same person."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A strong Sanders candidacy will do something else: make liberal Democrats feel that their opinions and their concerns are getting a fair hearing in the 2016 process. Sanders is an eloquent and unapologetic voice for liberalism. His presence as a real contender on the campaign trail would assure liberals that their party can still be a vehicle for their ideology, even if the candidate who triumphs is the more centrist establishment figure. And that's something they could use right now.

Politico Magazine: "Why Wall Street Loves Hillary"

By William D. Cohen

November 11, 2014

[Subtitle:] She's trying to sound populist, but the banks are ready to shower her campaign with cash.

An odd thing happened last month when, stumping just before the midterms, Hillary Clinton came in close proximity to the woman who has sometimes been described as the conscience of the Democratic Party. Speaking at the Park Plaza Hotel in Boston as she did her part to try to rescue the failing gubernatorial campaign of Martha Coakley in Massachusetts, Clinton paid deference to Senator Elizabeth Warren, the anti-Wall Street firebrand who has accused Clinton of pandering to the big banks, and who was sitting right there listening. "I love watching Elizabeth give it to those who deserve it," Clinton said to cheers. But then, awkwardly, she appeared to try to out-Warren Warren—and perhaps build a bridge too far to the left—by uttering words she clearly did not believe: "Don't let anyone tell you that it's corporations and businesses that create jobs," Clinton said, erroneously echoing a meme Warren made famous during an August 2011 speech at a home in Andover, Massachusetts. "You know that old theory, trickle-down economics? That has been tried, that has failed. It has failed rather spectacularly."

The right went wild. See? Hillary Clinton has finally shown her hand. After having sat out the financial crisis and all the economic turmoil that has followed in the past six years—and with good reason, since for most of that time she was tending to the nation's diplomacy as secretary of state—she is proving to be an anti-Wall Street populist too, and as much a socialist as her former boss, President Obama.

But here's the strange thing: Down on Wall Street they don't believe it for a minute. While the finance industry does genuinely hate Warren, the big bankers love Clinton, and by and large they badly want her to be president. Many of the rich and powerful in the financial industry—among them, Goldman Sachs CEO Lloyd Blankfein, Morgan Stanley CEO James Gorman, Tom Nides, a powerful vice chairman at Morgan Stanley, and the heads of JPMorganChase and Bank of America—consider Clinton a pragmatic problem-solver not prone to populist rhetoric. To them, she's someone who gets the idea that we all benefit if Wall Street and American business thrive. What about her forays into fiery rhetoric? They dismiss it quickly as political maneuvers. None of them think she really means her populism.

Although Hillary Clinton has made no formal announcement of her candidacy, the consensus on Wall Street is that she is running—and running hard—and that her national organization is quickly falling into place behind the scenes. That all makes her attractive. Wall Street, above all, loves a winner, especially one who is not likely to tamper too radically with its vast money pot.

According to a wide assortment of bankers and hedge-fund managers I spoke to for this article, Clinton's rock-solid support on Wall Street is not anything that can be dislodged based on a few seemingly off-the-cuff comments in Boston calculated to protect her left flank. (For the record, she quickly walked them back, saying she had "short-handed" her comments about the failures of trickle-down economics by suggesting, absurdly, that corporations don't create jobs.) "I think people are very excited about Hillary," says one Wall Street investment professional with close ties to Washington. "Most people in New York on the finance side view her as being very pragmatic. I think they have confidence that she understands how things work and that she's not a populist."

The bottom line for Wall Street, says this executive—echoing many others—is that Clinton understands that America's much-maligned financial industry wants to be part of the solution to the country's problems. "Everybody who makes money feels a shared responsibility," he continues.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Everybody sort of looks at her with a lot of optimism because they feel she doesn't mind making hard decisions. She'll do what she needs to do, but it's not a 'Let me blame you.' It's, 'Hey, here's what you've got to do.' And I think that's very different." During a speech last December at the Conrad Hotel, in New York, her message could not have been more different from Obama's hot, anti-Wall Street rhetoric: "We all got into this mess together, and we're all going to have to work together to get out of it."

During the 2012 presidential election, Wall Street felt burned by Obama's rhetoric and regulatory positions and overwhelmingly supported with their money Republican candidate Mitt Romney, co-founder of private-equity firm Bain Capital. Now, though, there's a significant momentum back behind the Democratic contest. "The money is already behind her," the Wall Street money manager says. "I don't think it's starting to line up behind her: It's there for her if she wants it."

The informal head of her informal Wall Street outreach effort for her informal campaign is a finance executive she knows well—and recruited to work for her at the State Department. Tom Nides, 53, the Morgan Stanley executive, knows both New York and Washington intimately. Today he speaks with Clinton regularly and has begun to play the role of gatekeeper on Wall Street to her embryonic campaign. He also has been known to run interference between the Obama administration and the leaders of the Israeli government, in order to try to patch up their dysfunctional relationship. "Tom at the end of the day is the guy—she trusts him, she knows him," says the Wall Street investment manager.

Nides returned to Morgan Stanley in 2013 after two years working for Clinton at the State Department as deputy secretary of state for management and resources. Nides (with whom I once shared a one-week summer rental on Nantucket) epitomizes the revolving door that has long existed between Washington and Wall Street. Born in Duluth, Minnesota, he served in a senior leadership role for a diverse group of Washington politicians, from Representatives Tony Coehlo and Tom Foley to, as chief of staff, Mickey Kantor, Bill Clinton's U.S. trade representative. He worked at Fannie Mae for six years, ran Joe Lieberman's 2000 vice-presidential campaign and served a brief stint as CEO of Burson Marsteller, the public relations firm.

In 2001, Morgan Stanley CEO John Mack took Nides under his wing. When Mack was named CEO of Credit Suisse, Nides went along with him as chief administrative officer. When Mack returned to Morgan Stanley as CEO in 2005, Nides accompanied him again as chief operating officer and then stayed another year serving in the same role for James Gorman. Then Nides returned to Washington to work for then-Secretary Clinton at the State Department, replacing Jack Lew, who became head of the Office of Management and Budget. Many thought Nides' time at Morgan Stanley was over, especially with Mack's retirement at the end of 2011. But Gorman—also a Hillary supporter—surprised people by bringing Nides back to the firm as a vice-chairman.

Now Nides is the first stop in New York for many a visiting dignitary and for those ambitious Wall Street types hoping to get access to Clinton. Nides declined to comment on the record, as did other Wall Street executives with whom Clinton is said to confer, among them Blair Effron, one of the three founders of Centerview Partners, an investment banking boutique, and Marc Lasry, the founder of Avenue Capital, a New York hedge fund, who was almost named Obama's ambassador to France.

But Greg Fleming, Nides' partner at Morgan Stanley and the president of Morgan Stanley Wealth and Investment Management, was pleased to discuss his enthusiastic support for Clinton. He says that the "broad perception" across Wall Street, among both Democrats and Republicans, is that she, "like her husband, will govern from the center, and work to get things done, and be capable of garnering support across different groups, including working with Republicans." He agreed that, as a former senator from New York, Clinton is trusted by Wall Street and will tackle issues, such as fiscal and tax reform, that have been long neglected thanks to the intractable polarization that rules Washington these days. "She will be trying to govern from the center with a problem-solving bent like her husband," Fleming says.

Beyond that, Hillary Clinton—and the Clintons generally—have always courted Wall Street assiduously and without apology. In June, the biggest donors to the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation met with the Clintons at Goldman Sachs' headquarters in lower Manhattan for a day-long discussion about the foundation's goals. Goldman has donated hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Clintons' foundation, and in October 2013, Hillary Clinton gave two speeches at Goldman. Her usual speaking fee is $200,000, and Goldman is known to be a full payer on the speaking circuit. Goldman is hardly alone—Clinton is popular in the financial industry: In 2013, she also gave speeches to KKR and the Carlyle Group, two private-equity behemoths.

Wall Street does not seem to be the slightest bit shy about coming out for Hillary—and are now contributing their money to prove it. While Priorities USA Action, a super PAC dedicated to getting Clinton elected in 2016, does not have any Wall Street banks among its top 50 donors to date, there have been large contributions from wealthy hedge funds, such as Renaissance Technologies, which has donated $4 million (the largest single contribution); D.E. Shaw, which has donated $1.375 million; Khosla Ventures and Soros Fund Management, which have each donated $1 million; and Ripplewood Holdings, a private equity firm, which contributed $400,000. There are many Wall Street financiers who have donated $25,000—by design, the maximum contribution—to the Ready for Hillary superPAC.

Goldman is an interesting case study. As in nearly every other way, it has always been careful to hedge its bets where electoral politics is concerned. Historically, although trending Democratic, Goldman employees have managed to give nearly equally to both parties in presidential elections. And a lot of it: Since 1990, Goldman's employees have given $47 million to political candidates and various political action committees—more than any other single group of company employees. But that calculus changed dramatically in 2008 when Goldman employees gave about $1 million to Barack Obama's presidential campaign, according to the Center for Responsive Politics, second only to that given to Obama by the employees of the University of California, who donated nearly $1.8 million. By contrast, Goldman employees gave only $235,000 to Senator John McCain, the Republican Party nominee.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By 2009 the bloom was off the rose. In an interview with 60 Minutes, Obama not only referred to Wall Street as the "fat cat bankers" but also blamed Wall Street for causing the financial crisis. "People on Wall Street still don't get it," he said. In July 2010, just weeks after a much-vilified Goldman agreed to pay a $550 million fine to the Securities and Exchange Commission—then the largest fine ever—to settle charges stemming from Goldman's underwriting and selling of a synthetic collateralized debt obligation, the details about which the SEC believed Goldman had failed to properly disclose to investors, Obama joked at the White House Correspondents Dinner: "All of the jokes here tonight are brought to you by our friends at Goldman Sachs. So you don't have to worry—they make money whether you laugh or not."

By 2012, in an historic turnaround, Goldman went full force for Romney. According to the Center for Responsive Politics, Goldman employees gave $1.2 million to the Republican National Committee and another $1 million or so to Romney directly. By contrast, Obama received a mere $210,000 from Goldman employees (who also gave $493,000 to the Democratic National Committee). "In the four decades since Congress created the campaign-finance system, no company's employees have switched sides so abruptly, moving from top supporters of one camp to the top of its rival," the Wall Street Journal observed. So far this year, Goldman remains a Republican shop. Some 63 percent of the firm's political contributions, or $1.75 million, has gone to support Republican candidates.

That will change if Clinton decides to run. For starters, as the former U.S. senator from New York, she is well known to many of Goldman's leaders. They have seen her at numerous Goldman events over the years or at fundraisers in the Hamptons. Blankfein ran into the Clintons in August at a party in the Hamptons at Hollywood mogul Harvey Weinstein's house, and there are the many pictures of Blankfein smiling broadly at her side during September's Clinton Global Initiative in New York. A few weeks later, they spent time together at a dinner celebrating the Goldman Sachs "10,000 Women Initiative," a Goldman-funded training and education program for female entrepreneurs.

Many Goldman employees, especially women, are also excited about the historic potential of the 2016 presidential election since Clinton could become the first female president. "They're not going to reflexively support any woman, but she's a woman that seems more or less in sync with the way they think about the world," says another former Clinton administration official who now works on Wall Street. "And she's successful, and they just like her."

More significant, the 10,000 Women Initiative was designed by Clinton operatives and is being implemented at Goldman by people who still have close ties to her. For instance, Goldman paid Gene Sperling, a longtime Washington insider who was director of the National Economic Council under both Bill Clinton and Barack Obama, nearly $900,000 in 2008 for his help in creating the 10,000 Women Initiative. Noa Meyer, who runs the program at Goldman, once wrote speeches for Hillary Clinton when she was First Lady. "The whole idea to spend money on women and women's education in developing countries came straight out of her playbook," says someone familiar with the origins of the 10,000 Women Initiative. "The same people who got her interested in that issue are the people who …design[ed] the program."

Of course, the ties between Goldman Sachs and Washington run deep, very deep, and many analysts have argued that the broad deregulatory moves pushed by former Goldman senior partner Robert Rubin—who later became Bill Clinton's National Economic Council director and then Treasury secretary—were a major part of the process that led to the subprime mortgage disaster. But Rubin was only among the latest in a long line of Goldman executives who went to Washington and helped create the talent-and-ideas nexus that later became derisively known as "Government Sachs." Sidney Weinberg, the longtime senior partner at Goldman Sachs in the 20th century, was a confidante of Franklin D. Roosevelt's who enticed him to Washington on several occasions before, during and after World War II. In 1938, Roosevelt offered Weinberg the position of ambassador to the Soviet Union, but Weinberg thought better of it because he did not speak Russian, was a Jew from Brooklyn and didn't want to leave Goldman. In November 1943, FDR did succeed in enlisting Weinberg to go to the Soviet Union "openly" as a representative of the Office of Strategic Services—the predecessor of the CIA—although what he did there and for how long has been lost to history.

In 1968, Henry Fowler joined Goldman Sachs as a partner, and thus became the first former Treasury secretary to spin the revolving door and land a Wall Street job. John Whitehead, who was the co-senior partner of Goldman Sachs in the 1970s and the early 1980s, became deputy secretary of state in the second Reagan Administration, after he retired from the firm. John F. W. Rogers, a former close Reagan advisor, has been the longtime consigliore at Goldman and oversees both the global communications and government relations departments. Rubin, who had befriended Fowler during his time at Goldman and who went on to run Goldman Sachs in the 1980s, along with Steve Friedman, left Goldman in January 1991 to join the Clinton administration. In 1995, he succeeded Lloyd Bentsen as Treasury secretary. Friedman, meanwhile, became chairman of the National Economic Council under George W. Bush, and, of course, Hank Paulson, the former CEO of Goldman, was Bush's Treasury secretary during the financial crisis of 2007 and 2008.

Rubin, apparently, is not content to go gracefully into the good night when it comes to wielding power, and lingering questions about his continued influence inside the Clinton camp are at the center of an issue that is likely to dog Hillary through 2016. From his perches as co-chairman of the Council on Foreign Relations and as a founder of the Hamilton Project at the Brookings Institution, Rubin—long considered a Washington kingmaker—continues to cast his spell on the Obama administration, which has been, and continues to be, chock full of appointees with close ties to him, including Tim Geithner, Larry Summers, Peter Orszag, Gene Sperling, Jason Furman, Jack Lew, Michael Froman and Sylvia Matthews

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Burwell. While Rubin's reach is both unprecedented and stunning, it remains to be seen whether he is able to work his magic and position Blankfein into an important role in a Hillary Clinton administration, should there be one and if he aspires to such a thing.

***

All of which raise the most pertinent question of all: rhetoric and fundraising aside, where does Clinton really stand on Wall Street? If she becomes president, is she going to side with the Rubinites—or has she come to realize, as even her husband apparently has, having conceded in remarks that he naively supported too much deregulation, that Wall Street must be carefully watched and kept at arm's length?

She's been fairly cagey about this issue, eager to assuage both sides. Where Obama blamed Wall Street—not inaccurately—for behavior that caused the 2008 financial crisis and championed new Wall Street regulations like the Volcker Rule and the 2010 Dodd-Frank law that really stick in the craw of money men—all while presiding over a veritable profit boon for the financial industry—Clinton said hardly a word on the topic of Wall Street shenanigans.

Her nascent populism has only appeared in the last year or so, as the Elizabeth Warren movement took off. For instance, in a speech at the progressive New America Foundation, she spoke about the dangers of the growing inequality in the country. "Americans are working harder, contributing more than ever to their companies' bottom lines and to our country's total economic output, and yet many are still barely getting by, barely holding on, not seeing the rewards that they believe their hard work should have merited," she said. "And where's it all going? Well, economists have documented how the share of income and wealth going to those at the very top—not just the top one percent, but the top one-tenth percent or the top-hundredth percent of the population—has risen sharply over the last generation. Some are calling it a throwback to the Gilded Age of the Robber Barons."

She also lamented how government regulators had "neglected their oversight" of Wall Street and "allowed the evolution of an entire shadow banking system that operated without accountability."

Asked about these issues, Clinton's spokesman Nick Merrill is quick to point out times she has called for more regulation—an eagerness that underscores how the Clinton operation wants to appear populist even as it collects the Wall Street money. Merrill noted that back in March 2008, as a presidential candidate, she called for "much more vigorous government oversight and enforcement of the subprime mortgage market." He also said that she staked out positions, in the year or so before the financial crisis hit, on reducing or eliminating the carried interest of private equity partners being taxed at capital gains rates; on a financial transaction tax; and on repatriating overseas income by U.S. corporations. In a 2007 press release from her campaign, for example, Clinton declared: "Our tax code should be valuing hard work and helping middle class and working families get ahead. It offends our values as a nation when an investment manager making $50 million can pay a lower tax rate on her earned income than a teacher making $50,000 pays on her income. As president I will reform our tax code to ensure that the carried interest earned by some multi-millionaire Wall Street managers is recognized for what it is: ordinary income that should be taxed at ordinary income tax rates." Clinton said she would use the funds generated by the tax change—which some have estimated at $4 to $6 billion per year—to invest in middle-class and working families.

There's no question, when and if she decides to run, that she's going to have an incredible support foundation from Wall Street."

Yet all of these efforts seem at best a combination of campaign trail rhetoric or minor tweaks around the edges—rather than the wholesale change that an Elizabeth Warren-type populist would want to impose on the financial industry.

Probably the best answer to the question of what Clinton will do to Wall Street comes from Wall Street's own support of her. Wall Street executives, bankers and traders have already shown their hand in support of the two Clintons individually as well as of the causes they care about most deeply—money they wouldn't contribute if they thought her political future would be detrimental to their economic future. And, in return, one thing we know about the Clintons: They value loyalty profoundly. They are unlikely to turn their backs on the banks, especially since it seems highly unlikely that Warren will mount the kind of outsider challenge to Hillary in 2016 that Barack Obama did in 2008. Instead, Clinton will find ways to work with Wall Street on issues it cares about, rather than vilifying it for political gain.

Democratic pollster Douglas Schoen says that Hillary's hope is that she can use supposed slips like the one in Boston to appeal just enough to the liberal wing of the Democratic party to ward off Warren, who offers a "far more resonant message with the Democratic base than Hillary's." Without a strong national ground organization and a strong financial network, Warren's message alone won't get her very far, but the Clintons want to avoid repeating the mistakes of 2008, when an idealism-based campaign derailed her inevitability campaign.

She will also have much of her former opponent's network behind her again in 2016. Robert Wolf, the former president of UBS' investment bank who now has his own advisory boutique, 32 Advisors, has long been described as Obama's BFF (Best Friend in Finance), and although he has little direct involvement with Clinton or her campaign team, he plans to support her fully when the time comes. He is one of the hosts of a December 16 gala in New York City where she will be honored. By his rough calculus, six in 10 Wall Street types are Democrats, three are Republicans and just one is independent. He predicts that the independents, who voted for Obama in 2008 and then defected to Romney in 2012, will return to Clinton in 2016. As he says, “There’s no question, when and if she decides to run, that she’s going to have an incredible support foundation from Wall Street.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As we have all seen repeatedly, Wall Street often gets what Wall Street wants. Will it get a President Hillary Clinton, and will she be the president Wall Street expects?

MSNBC: “Potential Hillary Clinton challengers gear up for fight”

By Alex Seitz-Wald

November 11, 2014, 2:11 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton’s allies may think the likely presidential candidate is stronger now than she was before last week’s midterm elections, but that hasn’t stopped her potential challengers from moving ahead with their own plans.

Vermont Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders, who says he is seriously considering a presidential run as a Democrat, has hired veteran Democratic strategist Tad Devine, while the group trying to draft Sen. Elizabeth Warren is also staffing up.

With a career in presidential politics stretching more than three decades, Devine is highly respected in Democratic political circles. His involvement with Sanders will instantly lend credibility to the progressive senator, who has sometimes struggled to be taken seriously as a viable national candidate.

“I believe he could deliver an enormously powerful message that the country is waiting to hear right now and do it in a way that succeeds,” Devine told The Washington Post. Devine played senior roles in Al Gore and John Kerry’s presidential campaigns, as well as those of 17 winning Senate races.

Sanders and his message of “political revolution” have been well received on recent trips to New Hampshire and Iowa, both key early presidential states. And some Clinton allies fear he could find a following on the left.

“In terms of fundraising, there would be real interest in him at the grassroots level,” Devine told the Post. “He knows how to do the organizing that’s required. As a mass media person, I also think he would be a great television candidate. He can connect on that level.”

Meanwhile, Ready for Warren announced Monday that it had hired a deputy campaign manager to help run its day-to-day operations. Kate Albright-Hanna, who is also an Emmy-award winning documentary filmmaker, worked with Ready for Warren founder Erica Sagrans on Obama’s 2008 campaign. This year, she served as communications director for Zephyr Teachout, who mounted a surprisingly competitive Democratic primary campaign against New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo. The group is also in the process of hiring several field directors in key states. Warren has repeatedly said she is not running.

At the same time, former Virginia senator Jim Webb, an anti-war moderate, is more seriously considering a run that previously disclosed. “I do believe that I have the leadership and the experience and the sense of history and the kinds of ideas where I could lead this country,” he told The New Yorker’s Ryan Lizza for a profile of the Democratic field published Monday. “We’re just going to go out and put things on the table in the next four or five months and see if people support us. And if it looks viable, then we’ll do it.”

And then there’s Maryland Gov. Martin O’Malley, who has the most complete infrastructure in place of anyone not named Clinton, but now to has figure out whether or not to dismantle it after the election. His political action committee dispatched 32 staffers to help Democrats in key states, and now has to decide how many to keep. Many of the staffers were fairly junior, but earned positive reviews from Iowa Democrats. O'Malley was seen as damaged by the loss of lieutenant governor Anthony Brown in last week's race to replace him in the Maryland statehouse.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton still has an enormous lead in early public opinion surveys, and allies think her party's drubbing last week will encourage Democrats to rally around Clinton and help clarify her message against a Republican Congress. At the same time, many Democrats, especially in early states, say they want to see a vigorous primary campaign.

New Republic: "Hillary's Going to Have a Primary After All, and She Should Be Grateful"

By Danny Vinik

November 11, 2014

With the midterms over, political operatives and professional pundits are quickly turning their attention to the 2016 presidential election. Their interest, though, is unbalanced, focused on the wide-open Republican field. Many don't expect a competitive Democratic primary. Will anyone even challenge Hillary Clinton? Some Democrats worry Clinton's supposed inevitability will come across as arrogance. "She's an enormously capable candidate and leader," Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick told CNN in May. "But I do worry about the inevitability thing, because I think it's off-putting to the average voter."

It is appearing more and more likely, however, that Clinton will face primary opponents. In fact, three potential candidates—Senator Bernie Sanders, former Senator Jim Webb and Maryland Governor Martin O'Malley—have all signaled they will seek the Democratic nomination.

Of the three potential candidates, Sanders seems most serious about running for president. The clearest sign came Tuesday when Tad Devine, a major Democratic consultant who worked closely with Al Gore, John Kerry, and Michael Dukakis, said that he would work with Sanders. "If he runs, I'm going to help him," Devine told the Washington Post. "He is not only a longtime client but a friend. I believe he could deliver an enormously powerful message that the country is waiting to hear right now and do it in a way that succeeds."

Sanders, who is a socialist, has been a vocal critic of President Obama and the Democratic Party for failing to go after Wall Street and being too close to big-money interests. He believes Clinton is no different, and this has made him consider a presidential run. On Saturday, he appeared on C-SPAN's "Newsmakers" and talked about a potential campaign as well. "If there is not that support, I will not run," he said. "I want to run a good campaign and a meaningful campaign and a winning campaign. If I can't do that, I'm not interested in running."

Ryan Lizza documents Sanders's commitment to challenging the Democratic Party in a new piece for The New Yorker focusing on Clinton's supposed inevitability. Lizza does not assess whether Clinton is actually inevitable. Instead, he describes how O'Malley and Webb, along with Sanders, are both positioning themselves for presidential campaigns. For instance, O'Malley spent time in Iowa campaigning for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Jack Hatch. Hatch lost by nearly 22 points, but O'Malley still used the campaign to introduce himself to Iowa voters. On Sunday, the Washington Post reported that O'Malley, whose term is up in January, sent 32 staffers to battleground states across the country during the midterms—another sign he is thinking about 2016.

Webb has done the least to prepare for a presidential run, but he is certainly flirting with the idea. "I do believe that I have the leadership and the experience and the sense of history and the kinds of ideas where I could lead this country," he told Lizza. "We're just going to go out and put things on the table in the next four or five months and see if people support us. And if it looks viable, then we'll do it." He travelled to New Hampshire in October to discuss his memoir, a chance to introduce himself to voters in the pivotal state.

All three of these campaigns are in their infancy but there's a very good chance that at least one—and possibly several—of them will run. Each would likely challenge Clinton from the left on economic issues, attempting to tie her to Wall Street. Webb and Sanders have also been critical of her on foreign policy issues such as the interventions in Libya and Syria. In addition, there's always the chance that Vice President Joe Biden or Senator Elizabeth Warren enter the race as well.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Can any of them derail Clinton as Obama did in 2008? Unlikely. Clinton is even better positioned now to ward off Democratic challengers than she was six years ago. But at the very least, a Sanders, O'Malley, or Webb campaign will force Clinton to defend her record and persuade primary voters that her agenda is best for the country. She may still be the inevitable candidate. But at least she'll be prepared as well.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "Bill Clinton: Hillary 'happy as a clam' even without run"

By Peter Sullivan

November 11, 2014, 1:28 p.m. EST

Former President Clinton says that Hillary Clinton would be "happy as a clam" even without running for president in 2016.

Appearing on the "Ellen DeGeneres Show" in a segment airing Tuesday, DeGeneres jokingly presented Clinton with two baby's onesies. One said "My grandma's running for president in 2016" and the other read "My grandma's a stay-at-home granny."

"If I pick that one, it would be best for the country," Clinton said, pointing at the 2016 onesie.

Pointing at the "granny" onesie, he said "If I pick that one, she would be happy as a clam and so would I."

"So keep 'em both and give her the right one when she decides," he said.

The Clintons' granddaughter, Charlotte, was born in September, and Hillary Clinton has made clear in her speeches since then how much she values being a grandmother.

When DeGeneres joked that Clinton was going to make a "big announcement" about his wife, Clinton replied, "She's the happiest grandmother."

"I don't know what Hillary's going to do, that's the truth," Clinton said, as he has said before. "If I did I wouldn't tell you, but I don't know."

Clinton pointed to a program at the Clinton Foundation to encourage parents to read to their children to boost development. "Whatever she wants to do I'm for, she's the ablest public servant I ever worked with, but I'm more interested, now that I have a granddaughter, than I ever have been in this project she and Chelsea started at our foundation called Too Small to Fail," Clinton said.

Despite these comments, Hillary Clinton is seen as all but certain to run. She has campaigned across the country for Democrats, including trips to Iowa and New Hampshire, and there have been several reports of strategy meetings lining up a campaign.

Mediaite: "Fox's Cavuto Hammers Rand Paul for 'Condescending Swipe' at Hillary's Age"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Josh Feldman

November 11, 2014, 5:36 p.m. EST

Fox's Neil Cavuto scolded Senator Rand Paul today for his "condescending swipe" at Hillary Clinton for maybe being too old to be president. Paul said yesterday that Hillary might not be ready for the "rigorous physical ordeal" of a presidential campaign.

Well, Cavuto thought that was a pretty cheap shot, worse than Chris Christie shouting at someone to "shut up." He pointed out that Ronald Reagan was 69 on inauguration day, as Clinton would be, and no Republican would say he wasn't up to the job.

And just to stick the knife in a little further, Cavuto invoked Paul's father, who happens to be a couple of years older than Clinton. Cavuto said Paul's done some "damage with that condescending swipe" and told him to stop "pull[ing] this nonsense."

Politico Magazine: "Wave? What Wave?"

By Lauren French and John Bresnahan

November 12, 2014, 5:03 a.m. EST

[Subtitle:] An exclusive interview with an unbowed Nancy Pelosi.

House Democrats ended Election Day controlling fewer seats than they have in nearly 80 years, but Nancy Pelosi isn't conceding anything.

"I do not believe what happened the other night is a wave," Pelosi said in her sit-down first interview since Democrats lost a dozen House seats to Republicans on Nov. 4. "There was no wave of approval for the Republicans. I wish them congratulations, they won the election, but there was no wave of approval for anybody. There was an ebbing, an ebb tide, for us."

As for whether she would consider stepping down as minority leader, Pelosi said she's needed now more than ever.

"Quite frankly, if we would have won, I would have thought about leaving," Pelosi declared, a remark that will likely surprise both admirers and detractors.

Pelosi's take on the midterms is this: It wasn't a Republican wave, her party's message is fine and while President Barack Obama thinks Democrats need to play better politics, she believes Democrats just need to better engage voters.

As Pelosi prepares to run for another term as House minority leader, a position she's expected to win unchallenged next week, the powerful Californian is unrepentant about a brutal election night.

Seated in her Capitol Hill office on Friday, the 74-year-old Pelosi offered her thoughts on the state of her caucus in a Republican-controlled Congress, revealing a leader who is standing by her principles, policies and strategies.

From plans to harness her power among fellow Democrats to keep her job as minority leader, to digging in on Obamacare and the party's economic messaging, Pelosi is setting up her party to fight to take back the House in 2016 on similar grounds as this year, apparently without a dramatic shakeup of the Democratic leadership team.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“It’s always time for fresh leadership, but my members have asked me to stay,” she said. “If they want me to stay, I stay. If they don’t want me to stay, I won’t stay.”

Some of this is the spin that any party leader uses. Some of it is vintage Pelosi — she shrugs off defeats as lessons learned, and never overplays her victories. She is an experienced enough pol to know that both happen routinely in a political career that has spanned nearly four decades.

It’s also a reflection of her own power inside the House Democratic Caucus. She’s built loyalty around her incredible fundraising prowess, raising more money than anyone else for House Democrats — $65 million for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee and another $35 million for members this cycle alone, her office said. She hit 750 fundraisers and events in the past two years, spending 200 days on the road this year raising money.

Democrats don’t often rebuke her publicly, but since the election, a number of younger members and staffers have begun to say privately it’s time for new blood in leadership to energize the party ahead of the 2016 elections — they don’t want Pelosi gone but want her to cast a wider net within the party for advice.

On a conference call with members last Thursday, just two days after the election, Rep. Diana DeGette (D-Colo.) said Democrats need to “rethink” their message after a number of young people voted for Sen.-elect Cory Gardner, a Republican, over Sen. Mark Udall, a Democrat.

Pelosi cut her off, sources on the call said.

Other Democratic aides and insiders have grumbled privately, too, that they want more dramatic moves on the policy and messaging front.

“As a party, we need to change,” a senior Democratic aide said. “[Voters] like our policies. All this leftie [talk], the country likes, but somehow the message about us as individual members of the conference isn’t breaking through. There is great unrest.”

Pelosi is giving ground that Democrats need to do a better job at bringing young people to the polls — suggesting that Democrats launch an aggressive voter engagement drive for 2016 just one day after the election.

“We have to engage people in voting again. Two-thirds of the electorate did not vote in this election the other night,” Pelosi said. “That’s shameful.”

Pelosi suggested the new effort has to go far beyond just registering likely Democratic voters — the party needs to provide an “inspiration” to get people to the polls.

“It’s not just registration. You can’t just go up to someone and say, ‘Will you register to vote?’ You have to have an inspiration. It’s not just registration, it’s the whole engagement of it,” Pelosi said.

On Nov. 4, as the Election Day drubbing for Democrats unfolded, Pelosi gathered with a small group of supporters and staffers at Rep. Chellie Pingree’s (D-Maine) home on Capitol Hill to watch the results. Attendees described the event as “somber” and “downbeat.” Congressional Campaign Committee Chairman Steve Israel of New York talked about turnout and the party’s effort to defend all incumbents — unlike when in 2010 the DCCC had to cut off some vulnerable members because of stretched resources.

By the time she left the event at 11 p.m., a number of high-profile Democrats in California and New York were in tight — and unexpected — battles for their careers.

Flanked by Rep. George Miller (D-Calif.), her husband and Democratic staffers, Pelosi went back to the DCCC’s Capitol Hill headquarters. By 1 a.m., when races across the country were still turning against Democrats, Pelosi began drafting a letter to colleagues, asking for their support as minority leader. At the center of her pitch was the voter engagement drive.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Pelosi argues that House Democrats aren't getting enough credit for preventing a total rout. Compared with losses in the Senate, the losses among incumbent House Democrats were better than expected, she says.

She also disputes that the White House had a "failure of politics" — a term Obama used after POLITICO's interview with Pelosi — during the midterm that hurt Democrats.

"I don't think it was a failure of his message; it was the extent of his success. Let's say it in a more positive way. This president has accomplished many great things," Pelosi said of the president. "You know there is always an October eclipse. We couldn't catch a break."

Instead, Pelosi faulted a series of international crises — fighting in Ukraine, the terrorist group ISIL and the deadly outbreak of Ebola — for distracting the media and voters from Democrats' economic message.

Pelosi's outlook was wildly optimistic running into the homestretch. She insisted in July that Democrats were going to win 25 seats and take back the House. As Congress adjourned in September, Pelosi was still claiming that Democrats had a "60 percent" chance of winning the House, even when all the polls said the exact opposite. "The momentum is coming our way," Pelosi said at the time. In private, members-only conference calls before Nov. 4, Pelosi was predicting Democrats would break even on Election Day.

Pelosi isn't backing away from the liberal economic message that House Democrats based their campaign on, such as their focus on equal pay for women and an increased minimum wage. Those messages were poll tested, Pelosi said, and did well in districts that weren't distracted by higher-profile statewide races.

"The message that is important for everybody is financial stability … our message was about that," Pelosi said. "[It was] jump-start the middle class, stop tax breaks that send jobs overseas … [the idea that] when women succeed, America succeeds, equal pay for equal work and investments in education."

Democrats were also hit by an onslaught of outside money, Pelosi said. Even in the minority, the DCCC had a huge fundraising advantage over the GOP, buoyed by Pelosi's network of deep-pocketed donors. Yet despite outraising the National Republican Congressional Committee, Democrats couldn't compete with a torrent of late spending by Republican super PACs.

"We controlled the damage enormously. They were coming endlessly without one fact. Endless money, no commitment to truth. They will say anything," she said.

Pelosi isn't nearly ready to give up on her tenure as the House Democrat's top fundraiser and leader. The veteran lawmaker said she has no plans to leave or stay past 2016, but she said that to win back the House, Democrats will need access to her expansive donor network.

As for leaving after a tough loss, Pelosi said she is committed to helping Democrats regain the majority. In fact, Pelosi insisted that she would have only considered stepping down had Democrats won the House, returning her to the speaker's chair.

Many expect her to serve until at least Obama leaves office in 2017 — in part to defend the 2010 Affordable Care Act from a Republican-led Congress.

Pelosi adamantly declined to say what she would do if Hillary Clinton won the White House in 2016, turning into a joke about her relationship with a presidential front-runner.

"You know what I've read? I've read that my lifelong dream is to serve as speaker with Hillary Clinton as president. So what? My lifelong dream …" Pelosi deadpanned.

House Democrats remain intensely loyal to Pelosi. She's known for impressing donors with handwritten "thank you" notes and personal phone calls. Members say she pushes them not with threats or strong-arming but by asking them what they need from certain legislation or votes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That bond with her rank and file explains why Pelosi has been able to stave off any challenge to her leadership post. It helps that no current Democrat could take up her fundraising network. Pelosi has raised more than $400 million since 2002.

She does it by attending roughly 750 fundraising and campaign events in the past two years, her office said.

“We would have lost more than 15 [seats] without Nancy Pelosi,” Israel said. “She’s the one who raised the money that gave us the resources to build the firewall that mitigated against even worse losses.”

With Republicans in the majority in both sides of the Capitol, Pelosi now faces a new Congress that will be more conservative than in the past four years of just a GOP-controlled House. Already, GOP hard-liners are demanding a series of votes on Republican-friendly legislation that will anger Democrats. Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio) and Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.), poised as the next Senate majority leader, already pledged to hold an Obamacare repeal vote early in the new session.

The 2010 health care law is one of the cornerstones of Pelosi’s legacy in the House — and the California Democrat said she would remain in leadership to defend the law at least for another term.

“I’m honestly here to protect the Affordable Care Act from the clutches of … whatever,” Pelosi said.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· November 14 – Little Rock, AR: Sec. Clinton attends picnic for 10th Anniversary of the Clinton Center (NYT)

· November 15 – Little Rock, AR: Sec. Clinton hosts No Ceilings event (NYT)

· November 21 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton presides over meeting of the Global Alliance for Clean Cookstoves (Bloomberg)

· November 21 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton is honored by the New York Historical Society (Bloomberg)

· December 1 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton keynotes a League of Conservation Voters dinner (Politico)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

· December 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton honored by Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights (Politico)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Clinton, Press Office \(Clinton\)" <Press_Office@clinton.senate.gov>
To:
Date: 11/26/2007 10:57:02 PM
Subject: Clips: Tue 11/27

Office of Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton
Tuesday, November 27th, 2007

Front Pages

The New York Times: http://www.nytimes.com/pages/pageone/scan/index.html

Daily News: http://www.nydailynews.com/front/covers/

New York Post: http://www.nypost.com/frontback

Albany Times Union: http://www.timesunion.com/news/frontpage/

HRC Articles/Mentions

In Elderly Women, Clinton Sees An Electoral Edge NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/us/politics/27ladies.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Clinton To Offer An AIDS Policy, Joining Her Main Rivals NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/us/politics/27Clinton.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Clinton The Organized LAT
http://www.latimes.com/news/printedition/front/la-na-hillarydecisions27nov27,1,6986272.story

Confident Clinton Takes On Attacks CBS
http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2007/11/26/eveningnews/main3540666.shtml

Clinton Calls For Aid For Debt-Ridden Families DMR
http://www.desmoinesregister.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20071126/NEWS/71126016

Clinton Touts Health Insurance Plan AP
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5j3s8p4osFk88PUwaGyOU5ZldeXFwD8T5KSV80

Susan Lynch Comes Out For Clinton Concord Monitor
http://concordmonitor.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20071127/FRONTPAGE/711270368

Clinton Gains Susan Lynch Endorsement Nashua Telegraph
http://www.nashuatelegraph.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20071126/NEWSBLOG/71126020

Gov. Lynch's Wife Endorses Clinton Run Manchester Union Leader
http://unionleader.com/article.aspx?headline=Gov.+Lynch%27s+wife+endorses+Clinton+run&articleId=d7089bba-d195-46c7-b758-d5139ae03c97

N.H. First Lady Endorses Clinton AP
http://www.boston.com/news/nation/articles/2007/11/26/nh_first_lady_endorses_clinton/

Oprah Winfrey, Bill Clinton Bring Star Power To Iowa WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112602392_pf.html

Barack Obama Mocks Hillary Clinton's First Lady Role NY Daily News
http://www.nydailynews.com/news/politics/2007/11/27/2007-11-27_barack_obama_mocks_hillary_clintons_firs.html?print=1&page=all

Clinton: Obama Campaign Misused PAC Funds Newsday
http://www.newsday.com/news/nationworld/nation/ny-usobam275477888nov27,0,2729801,print.story

Clinton Bores Into Obama PAC's Distribution Of Money In Primary States Fox News
http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,312933,00.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

GOPers Duke It Out To Be Less Like Hill Boston Herald
http://news.bostonherald.com/news/2008/view.bg?articleid=1047016

In February 5 States, Clinton And Giuliani Still On Top Rasmussen
http://www.rasmussenreports.com/public_content/politics/election_2008__1/2008_presidential_election/in_february_5_states_clinton_and_giuliani_still_on_top

New Poll Shows Clinton Trails Top Republicans Reuters
http://uk.reuters.com/article/worldNews/idUKN2645320920071126

Column: Behind The Curtain By Bob Herbert NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/opinion/27herbert.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Op-ed: Barack Clinton By Fred Hiatt WSJ
http://online.wsj.com/article_print/SB119611332101404327.html

LTE: Clinton Has Helped Bethlehem's Workers Buffalo News
http://www.buffalonews.com/opinion/everybodyscolumn/story/214506.html

LTE: We Will Witness History In 2008 Rochester D&C
http://www.democratandchronicle.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=2007711260310

Blog Post: Obama's Excuse Ezra Klein
http://ezraklein.typepad.com/blog/2007/11/obamas-excuse.html

Blog Post: The Experience Argument Ezra Klein
http://ezraklein.typepad.com/blog/2007/11/the-experience.html

Blog Post: Oddsmakers Say Obama Campaign Is Doomed! MyDD
http://www.mydd.com/story/2007/11/26/161553/26

Blog Post: Ending The Terrible Bush/Clinton Dynasty Left Coaster
http://www.theleftcoaster.com/archives/011398.php

Blog Post: A New Politics? Maybe Not So Much Talk Left
http://www.talkleft.com/story/2007/11/26/133310/49

Blog Post: New Ground The Atlantic (Matthew Yglesias)
http://matthewyglesias.theatlantic.com/archives/2007/11/new_ground.php

Blog Post: Suckers Taylor Marsh
http://www.taylormarsh.com/archives_view.php?id=26610

Blog Post: In Punditland, When Bush Fails, Clinton Gets Bashed First Pacificviews
http://www.pacificviews.org/weblog/archives/003216.html

New York

Despite Spitzer's Efforts, Commuter Costs Will Rise NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/nyregion/27fares.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

New York Defends Much-Criticized School Grades NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/nyregion/27schools.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

After A Rough Start, Spitzer Rethinks His Ways NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/nyregion/27spitzer.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Albany Powers OK Attorney General's Doctor-Rank Plan For Health Insurers NY Daily News
http://www.nydailynews.com/news/2007/11/27/2007-11-27_albany_powers_ok_attorney_generals_docto-1.html?print=1&page=all

High Fuel Prices Inflating Food Costs Troy Record
http://www.troyrecord.com/site/news.cfm?newsid=19060086&BRD=1170&PAG=461&dept_id=7021&rfi=6

NYT Editorial: Those Lovely Manhole Covers

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/opinion/27tue4.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

National

Signs Are Pointing South On Wall St. WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112602206_pf.html

Tax Cuts Gain Relevance As Outlook Dims WP
http://online.wsj.com/article_print/SB119611821355604485.html

'Predatory' Politics WSJ
http://online.wsj.com/article_print/SB119612958721004797.html

Countrywide Borrowing Triggers Call For Review WSJ
http://online.wsj.com/article_print/SB119610325216704176.html

Budget Chokehold Threatens WIC Funding USAT
http://www.usatoday.com/printedition/news/20071127/a_wic27.art.htm

NYT Editorial: The Citizenship Surge
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/opinion/27tue1.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

NYT Editorial: Regulating Cable
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/opinion/27tue3.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Political/Administration/Capitol Hill/Media

Defense Secretary Urges More Spending For U.S. Diplomacy NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/washington/27gates.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Cheney Treated For An Irregular Heartbeat AP
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/us/27cheney.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Gore Makes It To The Oval Office, If Only For A Chat NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/washington/27bush.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Mississippi's Lott To Leave Senate Seat NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/washington/27lott.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Analysis: Lott's Exit Reflects GOP Woes AP
http://www.nytimes.com/aponline/us/AP-GOP-Congress.html?pagewanted=print

GOP Comeback Climb Is Increasingly Steep WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112602235_pf.html

LAT Editorial: Lott Leaves The Senate
http://www.latimes.com/news/printedition/opinion/la-ed-lott27nov27,1,2767788.story?coll=la-news-comment

2008

Obama Touts His Time Away From Capital AP
http://www.nytimes.com/aponline/us/AP-Obama-Experience.html?pagewanted=print

Edwards Touts Record As Trial Lawyer AP
http://www.nytimes.com/aponline/us/AP-Edwards-Lawyer.html?pagewanted=print

Web Videos Aim Questions At GOP Field WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112602335_pf.html

Huckabee Lays Out His Claim As An 'Authentic Conservative' NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/us/politics/27adbox.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

WP Editorial: Running From 'No Child'
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112601852_pf.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Column: Can Oprah Boost Her 'Favorite Guy'? By Eugene Robinson WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112601849_pf.html

Op-ed: Bad For Huckabee, Good For America By Dan Gilgoff LAT
http://www.latimes.com/news/printedition/asection/la-oe-gilgoff27nov27,1,5628412.story?coll=la-news-a_section

Iraq/Afghanistan

Politics Creates Odd Pair: Sanchez And Democrats WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112602039_pf.html

U.S. And Iraq To Negotiate Pact On Long-Term Relations NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/world/middleeast/27iraq.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

WSJ Editorial: The Missing Ambassadors
http://online.wsj.com/article_print/SB119613012358904822.html

International

Israelis And Palestinians Try To Set Pace For Peace Talks As Bush Plans Speech NYT http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/washington/27diplo.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Seeking A Mideast Path, Bush Offers A Nudge NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/washington/27prexy.html?_r=1&oref=slogin&ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Iran: The Uninvited Wildcard In Mideast Talks WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112602236_pf.html

Bono's Calling WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/25/AR2007112501535_pf.html

Back In Pakistan, Sharif Condemns Musharraf NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/world/asia/27pakistan.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Putin Accuses U.S. Of Trying To Discredit Russian Vote NYT
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/world/europe/27russia.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

Op-ed: Bush's Big Moment In Annapolis By Zev Chafets LAT
http://www.latimes.com/news/printedition/opinion/la-oe-chafetz27nov27,1,6158453.story?coll=la-news-comment

Column: Beyond The Reach Of Annapolis By Richard Cohen WP
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/26/AR2007112601853_pf.html

Column: Condi's Road To Damascus By Bret Stephens WSJ
http://online.wsj.com/article_print/SB119613071668804836.html

LAT Editorial: The U.N.'s AIDS Recount
http://www.latimes.com/news/printedition/opinion/la-ed-aids27nov27,1,4944245.story?coll=la-news-comment

NYT Editorial: Exit, Russian Democracy
http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/27/opinion/27tue2.html?ref=todayspaper&pagewanted=print

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace" <info@centerpeace.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/11/2014 5:46:11 AM
Subject: News Update - August 11

S. DANIEL ABRAHAM
CENTER FOR MIDDLE EAST PEACE

Israel and the Middle East News Update

August 11, 2014

Headlines:

- New Cease-Fire Begins Between Israelis and Palestinians
- Rocket Barrage on Israel Shortly Before Start of Truce
- Lieberman: We Should Have Aimed to Defeat Hamas
- Jordan's King Slams Israel for Gaza Assault, Ignores Hamas
- Third London Mass Protest for Gaza in One Month
- Gaza Periphery Residents: Why Did They Tell Us to Return Home?
- Sisi, King of Saudi Arabia Meet to Discuss Islamist Threat
- Experts Warn of Terrorism Blowback From Iraq Air Strikes

Commentary:

- Yedioth Ahronoth: "Cairo Circus"
  - By Alex Fishman
- Washington Post: "Peace in the Mideast Will Only Come With International Help"
  - By Daniel Kurtzer

New York Times

New Cease-Fire Begins Between Israelis and Palestinians

A new 72-hour cease-fire in the Gaza fighting, which Israeli and Palestinian negotiators had agreed to on Sunday, began at one minute after midnight Monday. The negotiators had accepted Egypt's call for the three-day truce and for a resumption of Egyptian-mediated negotiations toward a more durable solution for Gaza. The Israeli government said in a statement that it had accepted the Egyptian cease-fire request. On Sunday evening, Azzam al-Ahmed, the lead Palestinian negotiator in Cairo, said the delegation, which includes Hamas, had notified the Egyptians "that we agreed on the cease-fire based on the Egyptian statement."

See also, "How Hamas Beat Israel in Gaza" (by Ronen Bergman, New York Times)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jerusalem Post

Rocket Barrage on Israel Shortly Before Start of Truce

Israel will send its team of negotiators back to Cairo on Monday if Hamas honors the 72-hour cease-fire that went into effect at midnight, diplomatic officials said Sunday evening. Rocket sirens were sounded in Ashdod, Ashkelon, and Kiryat Malachi at around 11:45 p.m. An additional rocket fired at the Tel Aviv area fell in an open area.

See also, "Hillary Clinton: 'Hamas responsible for civilian casualties'" (Ynet News)

Ma''ariv

Lieberman: We Should Have Aimed to Defeat Hamas

After a few days of media silence, Foreign Minister Avigdor Lieberman gave a statement to the media in which he leveled sharp criticism at the prime minister's conduct vis-a-vis Hamas and the policy decisions made in Operation Protective Edge. "I believed from the outset that we should have aimed to defeat Hamas," Lieberman said, "that was my proposal before the start of the operation, and had it been accepted—we would already have been after this stage. It is clear at the moment that Hamas's minimum demands are far beyond the maximum to which Israel can agree. What remains is to defeat Hamas, to clean up the area and to leave Gaza as quickly as possible."

See also, "Israeli ministers complain of being left in the dark over truce talks" (Ha'aretz)

Times of Israel

Jordan's King Slams Israel for Gaza Assault, Ignores Hamas

Jordan's King Abdullah II castigated Israel for waging what he called an unjustified war in Gaza, Sunday. In an interview in which he made no mention of Hamas, the king urged the world to hold Israel accountable for what he termed a bloody, devastating "wide-scale assault. Abdullah said he backed Egyptian efforts to end "the Israeli offensive" and that Jordan would use its international presence "to bring the aggression to a complete halt and prevent any recurrence, guarantee the success of efforts to reach a lasting truce, mobilize international efforts to rebuild Gaza and provide a conducive environment to re-launch final-status negotiations to reach a peace that is based on the two-state solution."

Times of Israel

Third London Mass Protest for Gaza in One Month

Tens of thousands of pro-Palestinian demonstrators marched through central London on Saturday, demanding Britain take a tougher line against Israel over its military assault on Hamas in Gaza The Palestinian Solidarity Campaign said 150,000 people attended the march, the third major demonstration for Gaza in London in the past four weeks. Protesters packed the main shopping artery of Oxford Street, marching to the US embassy and on to Hyde Park, many of them chanting "Free, Free Palestine" and holding up banners saying "UK — Stop Arming Israel."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Yedioth Ahronoth

Gaza Periphery Residents: Why did they tell us to Return Home?

The anger voiced by the residents of the Gaza periphery communities has continued to mount. After the residents of Kibbutz Nahal Oz announced that they would not be returning to the kibbutz, and after the residents of Kibbutz Ein Hashlosha returned only to decide to leave again—now the residents of Kibbutz Kfar Azza have decided not to be silent anymore. Residents of the kibbutz, who acceded to the call to return home after a cease-fire was reached—but who have since only come under incessant fire—lashed out at Public Security Minister Yitzhak Aharonovich, who visited the kibbutz yesterday, saying: "We feel forsaken. It's impossible to raise kids here." "I haven't got the words to describe the mental anguish, the fear, the anxiety, the lack of trust, the crisis and the frustration," said Orit Oron, the community administrator in Kibbutz Kfar Azza. "You knew that this was a process and that things hadn't yet been sewn up, so why did you tell us to return? Why rush?"

See also, "In a kibbutz down south, where the kids can tell a Hamas 'boom' from an Israeli one" (Times of Israel)

Reuters

Sisi, King of Saudi Arabia Meet to Discuss Islamist Threat

The leaders of the Arab world's most populous state and its richest state met on Sunday to talk over joint efforts to counter Islamist militancy across the Middle East, including the turmoil now shaking Iraq. President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi of Egypt and Saudi Arabia's King Abdullah are sworn enemies of the Muslim Brotherhood. They see the recent success of militants in Iraq as a threat to their stability and undermining security in the region. Sisi's spokesman, Ehab Badawi, said the two leaders agreed to work together promote the "true and moderate values of Islam that reject extremism and terrorism."

TIME

Experts Warn of Terrorism Blowback From Iraq Air Strikes

The American air strikes against a militant group in Iraq could motivate the fighters to retaliate with terrorist attacks against U.S. civilians, experts warn. President Barack Obama's air strikes against militants from the group Islamic State of Iraq and Greater Syria (ISIS) "could increase the likelihood that ISIS or somebody inspired by ISIS, would strike against the homeland," says Seth Jones, a terrorism expert with Rand Corp. ISIS has long threatened America openly. In June the group's leader warned Americans that "soon enough, you will be in direct confrontation [with us]." Last week a spokesman for the group vowed that "we will raise the flag of Allah in the White House."

Yedioth Ahronoth – August 11, 2014

Cairo Circus

By Alex Fishman

The chances of this cease-fire lasting are not high. Everyone wants quiet, including Hamas, but everyone is still stuck way up in the air on the flying trapeze, afraid to do the final somersault before landing on the ground in fear of crashing. As long as that is the situation, the shooting is going to be renewed and will continue.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The talks in Cairo are a three-ring circus. Yesterday the Arab League entered the central ring, offering Hamas, which is standing precariously on a tightrope and is liable to fall, a ladder to use to climb down. That happened after Hamas announced yesterday morning that if Israel refused to accept its demands, it was going to quit the talks. While it is the Egyptians who have been torturing Hamas in Cairo and have flatly rejected all of its demands, Hamas would not dare insult the circus ring leader, Sisi. That is why Hamas has continued to fire on Israel, so that Israel might pressure Egypt into treating it a bit better.
While the actors in the Egyptian-Israeli-Hamas ring have been racing around to almost no end, the Arab League entered the second ring in order to allow Hamas to do a back flip: Hamas will supposedly "accede" to the Arab League's request for a 72-hour cease-fire so that Israel might be able to come back with better offers than before. But that's all 'as if,' It's as if Hamas is doing the Arab countries a favor and does not really want a cease-fire. Hamas would very much like to stay in Cairo to continue the talks. It's the humiliation that's killing it.

One shouldn't rule out the possibility that Israel does have a number of creative ideas for Hamas. For example, Israel might examine the possibility of having the public workers in Gaza receive their salaries, which will be paid out of Qatar's pocket, and that no distinction would be made between the civil servants and the members of Hamas's military wing. Israel is also prepared to be generous and to expand the fishing zone off the Gaza coast. There is even talk of granting a limited number of 5,000 permits to Gazans to work in Israel—and to open another border crossing (apparently Erez) so as to increase the volume of goods that enter the Gaza Strip. Officials with the Office of the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories have drawn up a list of products that might be exported from the Gaza Strip. Israel has a number of new formulas about its military presence in the security zone on the Palestinian side of the border.

Israel is prepared to show the generosity of victors in ways that pertain to the welfare of the population in Gaza, but the Egyptians are currently busy taming the Hamas tiger. Director of Egyptian Intelligence Mohamed al-Tuhami won't even speak directly with the Hamas representatives; he talks only with Azzam al-Ahmed, the Palestinian Authority's representative on the delegation. Tuhami has discussed the possibility of opening the Rafah border crossing only with Ahmed as well.

The third ring in the circus is the European ring. The Europeans have, to a certain extent, taken the place of the Americans, who are frustrated and have gone off to sit in the stands. The countries of Europe have offered long-term plans that include opening a seaport (under strict European supervision), among other things.

Three European Union ambassadors presented to Netanyahu this weekend a plan that has benefits for both sides: it promises Hamas, inter alia, mechanisms that will allow it to have access to the world, such as a supervised terminal in Cyprus, from where goods will be delivered directly to Gaza. It offers Israel a commitment that all of the international crossings in and out of Gaza by land and sea, will be under tight supervision.

Meanwhile, the big prize is already waiting for the Gazans: a billion dollars to rehabilitate the Gaza Strip. The Saudis have already undertaken to supply half a billion dollars' worth of raw materials. Representatives of the United States and various European countries are to meet in September to decide on providing the other half a billion dollars.
Incidentally, the Palestinian Authority, which is supposed to coordinate the reconstruction activities in the Gaza Strip—demanded between five and six billion dollars. Someone in Ramallah tried to clip a coupon for the West Bank—and possibly for himself personally as well. Until the PA officials were told that even Gaza, with all the destruction, wouldn't be able to absorb such a large sum of money.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

While those three rings—the Israeli-Egyptian-Hamas ring, the Arab League ring and the European ring—continued to turn (mainly on their own axes), the IDF utilized the last 24 hours to test the original Israeli development called Hupot Esh [literally, "canopies of fire"], which allows the troops to identify the members of a terror cell on their way to firing rockets or a terror attack, verify their identity and take them out. Eleven such terror cells were stopped that way yesterday.

This is what a war in its twilight looks like, when the chief of staff tries to persuade the residents of southern Israel to let him give his strategy a bit more time before he reverts to using military tactics that no one believes are the ultimate solution. So, there's a bit of shooting, a bit of killing, a bit of hunkering down, while slowly but surely a dynamic of negotiations is created that might—from one cease-fire to the next—lead to an arrangement.
That is the pace of things, and with that being the pace of things a strong leadership with nerves of steel is needed. The leadership's real test is now: translating the military operation into broad political gains: not only vis-a-vis Hamas, but also vis-a-vis the Europeans, the moderate Arab world and, yes, the Americans too.

Washington Post – August 10, 2014

Peace in the Mideast Will Come Only with International Help

By Daniel Kurtzer

Negotiations to end the fighting in Gaza are at an impasse. In the talks under way in Cairo, Israel made a reasonable demand for the demilitarization of Gaza, but no country has raised its hand to aid in the process. Israel has developed technological fixes for the offensive weaponry Hamas has developed, but this is simply a reaction, not a permanent fix, to potential violence.

Hamas's demand for the release of prisoners and the reopening of Gaza's passages also will not win unconditional acceptance; Israel will not hand over prisoners to Hamas. Even if the passages are opened, Hamas will not be involved in their operation. Despite trying to build a political coalition against Israel, Hamas will emerge from this war with only Qatar and Turkey in its corner, and an array of Arab and international actors opposed to what it stands for.

Unless Israel and the Palestinians develop a pathway forward, these violent encounters will recur every few years, with military capability simply buying time between wars.
If nothing else, this war has made abundantly clear that the status quo in the Israeli-Palestinian arena is not sustainable. Amazingly, however, rather than see this and realize the need for continued diplomacy, the leaders have hardened their positions even further: Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said that Israel would never relinquish security control of the West Bank, and Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas said Palestine will seek to join the International Criminal Court.

The current Israeli and Palestinian leadership may not see a way out, but I refuse to see endless conflict as a fait accompli. There is a pathway forward that could translate the fighting in Gaza into something meaningful and positive. Lasting peace demands a creative, multipronged approach.

First, the international community must play a far more prominent role in peacemaking. Since 2002, an Arab Peace Initiative has been on the table, and there is increasing interest in developing a regional approach to peace. At the same time, the immediate issue at hand is how to govern Gaza and create conditions conducive to peace. One way would be to temporarily internationalize the governance of Gaza.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The international Quartet (the United States, the United Nations, the European Union and Russia) and key Arab states (Egypt, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and others) could structure a transitional governance arrangement over Gaza as a means of addressing the immediate needs of the population while paving the way for the ultimate assumption of responsibility by the Palestinian Authority. Such an arrangement would also facilitate the protection of Palestinian civilians, an issue surely to occupy the attention of diplomats in the period ahead.

To give this idea legal and political weight, the U.N. Security Council could ask key Arab states to form a temporary governing body that would coordinate closely with the May 2014-created Palestinian Authority cabinet . This temporary body would start disarming all militias and facilitating the deployment of Palestinian Authority security forces to maintain order .

At the same time, an internationally supported security mechanism would be set up to prevent arms smuggling into Gaza. This would be an impetus for the reopening of Gaza's passages to Israel and Egypt and provide a secure context for an international effort for the reconstruction of Gaza infrastructure and the development of the Palestinian economy. The E.U. is well-positioned to take the lead on this and has already developed serious proposals for reconstructing Gaza.

Second, as this transitional government comes into being, the Quartet would convene a regional conference designed to launch serious and practical peace talks between Israel and the Palestinian Authority to devise a vision and process for resolving the underlying Palestinian-Israeli conflict. To ensure the success of the conference and succeeding negotiations, the Quartet would lay out ambitious terms of reference, and there would be active participation by regional Arab states.

Furthermore, when the conference is convened, the Palestinian Authority would agree to freeze its activities in the U.N. system, and Israel would release the remaining prisoners to the authority under the agreement reached in July 2013. During negotiations, Israel would freeze settlement activity in all the areas occupied in June 1967 , and the authority would intensify steps to curb incitement in media and education.

Some will question the viability of a plan that requires such a level of activity, commitment and direct involvement of outside parties. Others will question why it is assumed that Hamas would accept being sidelined. And there is the large question of whether the current leadership in Israel and the Palestinian Liberation Organization are ready to take the hard decisions even to get to a conference, let alone sustain negotiations and reach a positive outcome.

Surely, if there were easier options, they would be advisable and more manageable. But there are no easy options for what ails Israelis and Palestinians. Another de facto cease-fire will solve nothing, and another lull in hostilities will yield nothing more than a brief respite between wars. Further delay is not an option. If we are to emerge from the current hostilities with even a small prospect of a durable solution — and not a temporary fix that will unravel again in a few years — then a package of this sort, and the leadership to make it happen, is required.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace
633 Pennsylvania Ave. NW, 5th Floor, Washington, DC 20004
www.centerpeace.org

2014 S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace, All rights reserved.
YOU ARE RECEIVING THIS EMAIL BECAUSE YOU SIGNED UP FOR OUR NEWS UPDATES.

unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Melissa Cantrell" <mcantrell@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"HRC Rapid" <HRCRapid@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	7/22/2015 4:10:53 AM
Subject:	July 22 Morning Cable News Roundup
Attachments:	7.22.15 Morning Cable.docx

Document attached, 2016 highlights below:

Fox News' Fox and Friends: Anchors talked with Carly Fiorina; Fiorina said Americans are tired of the professional political class and their rhetoric; Hasselbeck played a clip of Trump from yesterday; Fiorina said Trump taps into the frustration of people outside the political class including herself, Trump, and Ben Carson; Fiorina said in the end, HRC is the one to beat so Trump should target her more often; Fiorina said she has been speaking plainly to people; Fiorina said politics are deadly serious now, not entertainment, and America needs to exhibit leadership and solve the major problems facing it; Hasselbeck asked Fiorina about HRC's silence on Planned Parenthood; Fiorina called HRC a hypocrite for lobbying against laws that would give woman the "opportunity" to see an ultra-sound of their fetus before having an abortion, yet using that same technology to harvest babies' body parts; Fiorina said HRC has been dead silent because the platform of her party is: it's not a life until it leaves the hospital; Fiorina said Planned Parenthood should not be federally funded; Fiorina said if Democrats want to provide federal funding for abortion clinics, they should also provide funding for pregnancy centers right next to the abortion clinics; Kilmeade played a clip of a former Navy Seal backing Fiorina; Fiorina said she knows more world leaders than anyone else running, except maybe HRC; Fiorina said HRC did photo-ops with world leaders, while she had substantive meetings with them; Kilmeade played a clip of a general talking about the deterioration of Iraq; Fiorina said HRC was the one who declared victory in Iraq, but was dead wrong; Fiorina said HRC was dead wrong for calling Bashar Al Assad a "positive reformer"; Fiorina said HRC lied about Benghazi; Fiorina said HRC failed with the Russian reset. Anchors talked with Marco Rubio; played a clip of Obama on the Daily Show talking about the Iran deal; Rubio said Obama's remarks were "par for the course" and showed such little class; Rubio said the Iran Nuclear Deal is a serious issue and the President shouldn't joke about it; Rubio said Iran will keep all of it's enrichment capabilities and could become a nuclear power in 10 to 15 years; Rubio said ending sanctions will result in Iran funneling more money to terror groups around the Middle East; Rubio said Obama is almost guaranteeing a war, because the deal obligates the United States to protect Iran from those who seek to sabotage their nuclear program; Rubio said the sanctions against Iran were working; Rubio said Obama was against the additional sanctions to begin with; Rubio said Obama wanted the Iran deal more than Iran did; played a clip of Obama defending the IRS on the Daily Show; Rubio said Obama's statements that the IRS did not target conservatives was completely false; Rubio said there were meetings and cooperation between the Obama Administration, the DOJ, and the IRS; Rubio said immigration is a legitimate issue that we need to solve; Rubio said the office of the Presidency needs to be conducted with dignity and class, which Trump has failed to show; Rubio said Obama also has no class; Rubio said some of the language Trump has used is not becoming of a President; Kilmeade talked about a poll showing Rubio doing better against HRC than most other GOP candidates; Rubio said he's getting ready for the GOP debates.

MSNBC's Morning Joe: Trump's speech in South Carolina, criticized Rick Perry, Lindsey Graham (even gave out his phone number), Jeb Bush, and Hillary Clinton. Mika said that was entertainment. It shines a light on how donors feel completely entitled by this process. Every time anyone picks a fight with him, Trump says you actually hit me up for campaign contributions two years ago. Willie Geist said Trump thinks he's in first because he's being himself and providing an alternative to the politicians. For now, it's a show and most people don't think he'll get far enough that they need to look at his policy proposals. Most polls are Trump, Bush, and Walker in the top three, and it must be frustrating for everyone else. New polls out this morning, Trump has negative favorability ratings in Iowa, Colorado, and Virginia. HRC does not have much higher approval ratings, except in Virginia. HRC is upside down by 23 in Iowa, by 9 in Virginia, and 23 as well in Colorado. Chuck Todd said if it weren't for Trump, the biggest story of the summer would be HRC solidifying herself within the Democratic party. Both parties are seeing its populist base "flex its muscles" and who have felt marginalized by this economy, the political establishment, and the media. When HRC is the focal point of the Democratic party, her numbers go down. In Iowa, HRC would lose to Rubio, Walker, and Bush by 5-10 points according to the new Quinnipiac poll. In Colorado, she is also losing to the three Republicans by 5-10 points as well. In Virginia, she performs better but still losing to the three Republicans by 1-3 points. Said HRC's numbers are a reflection of a lot of people's estrangement from the political process and HRC just doesn't wear well. Immigration put Trump on the map and it's not just dissatisfaction about political process, it's that Republicans are trying to appeal to Hispanics. If Trump runs as third party candidate, it will hurt Bush badly in a potential HRC/Bush match up.

CNN's New Day: Donald Trump gave Lindsey Graham's personal phone number to hundreds of people at a rally in South Carolina. Trump once was a Democrat. Mel Martinez, former chairman of the RNC, supports Jeb

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bush and thinks that Donald Trump's success in the polls will wane. John King believes that if Trump runs as a third party candidate, he will guarantee Hillary Clinton's victory. Commentator states that Trump is his own enemy and that he doesn't have the political infrastructure that other candidates have. Clip of Donald Trump from a past interview stating that he sees himself as a Democrat because "the economy does better under Democrats." King states the two issues Clinton faces are trust and leadership and polls show Clinton is showing vulnerabilities in swing states. Juana Summers has strong competition in the right and within the left with Sanders and O'Malley. King states that Kasich, on paper, is a strong candidate but Summers states that he needs to get on the debate stage because he has no name recognition as of now.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To:	Pete <progden@gmail.com>
Date:	11/30/2014 7:38:51 AM
Subject:	Re: global tech initiative

The three of us should talk. China project is supposed to involve international partners.

JP
--Sent from my iPad--
john.podesta@gmail.com
For scheduling: eryn.sepp@gmail.com

> On Nov 30, 2014, at 1:19 PM, Pete <progden@gmail.com> wrote:
>
> Yeah, Deutch didn't have any answers off the top of his head about how to operationalize something bigger but said that if you wanted him to spend time trying to work something like that up he'd want to talk to you directly first.
>
> Let me know if you do want to do that -- I am going to see him Thur -- or if there's someone else you'd like me to approach. Arun Majumdar?
>
> --Pete
>
>
> On Nov 30, 2014, at 11:33 AM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com> wrote:
>
> Not sure what to do with this beyond ccs demo announced in Beijing.
>
> JP
> --Sent from my iPad--
> john.podesta@gmail.com
> For scheduling: eryn.sepp@gmail.com
>
>> On Nov 29, 2014, at 2:07 PM, Pete Ogden <progden@gmail.com> wrote:
>>
>> Hi John -- Good seeing you the other day, and hope you had a good Thanksgiving.
>>
>> I asked John Deutch if he had any thoughts about what a global technology initiative might look like, and he sent the attached note for you to take a look at. He makes the case that the focus should be on CCS, and told me that nuclear he thought too expensive and solar was progressing on its own. If you are interested in him thinking about what exactly the shape of an initiative might be, he'll want to hear from you directly.
>>
>> Let me know if there's anyone else you think that I should solicit ideas on this from at at this stage.
>>
>>
>> --Pete
>> <CCS RD&D proposal.pdf>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	7/21/2014 6:50:44 AM
Subject:	Correct The Record Monday July 21, 2014 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Monday July 21, 2014 Afternoon Roundup:

Twitter:

Pres. Bill Clinton @billclinton: Congrats @McIlroyRory on your 2014 British Open title. See you for another round next time I'm in Ireland. [7/21/14, 3:48 a.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton's record as secretary of state http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/the-fix/wp/2014/07/21/benghazi-and-hillary-clintons-misunderstood-record-as-secretary-of-state/ … via @AaronBlakeWP [7/21/14, 12:36 p.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton "We have an economic crisis and...a political crisis of our democracy and I think they are related." http://youtu.be/Ot-WT7QY9oY?t=25m11s … [7/20/14, 3:30 p.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: As FLOTUS, @HillaryClinton spoke at summit about power of microcredit to stimulate economic activity #HRC365 http://1.usa.gov/1i5Fryu [7/20/14, 2:30 p.m. EDT]

Headlines:

Washington Post blog: Plum Line: "Why the 'rich Hillary Clinton' storyline is so dumb"

"Today the Republican party unveiled a new web site titled Poor Hillary Clinton, making the devastating point that Hillary Clinton has lots of money and should therefore not be elected president. If that's what the geniuses at the RNC think is going to win the 2016 election for them, it may be time to start figuring out who's going to be in Clinton's cabinet."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Vox: "5 reasons Hillary Clinton's weaknesses are greatly exaggerated"

"If you've been reading political coverage lately, you will have learned that Hillary Clinton is currently on a gaffe-laden book tour where she has proven how out of touch she is with ordinary Americans, while Elizabeth Warren is getting a rapturous reception from progressive activists yearning for her candidacy. This is an entertaining narrative, but it's missing a few key facts…"

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "Benghazi, and Hillary Clinton's misunderstood record as secretary of state"

"The biggest takeaway from this poll is that Clinton's time as secretary of state might not be the feather in the cap that many thought it was. But people shouldn't look at this poll and suddenly see it as a liability."

Slate blog: Weigel: "The Poll That Will Make Democrats Panic About Hillary Clinton"

"So it should be interesting to see if the criticism of Clinton is turned back by an aggressive left -- by David Brock's groups like Correct the Record and Media Matters, for example -- or if it emboldens one of the junior Democrats to criticize her and raise speculation about primary challenges. So far, there's a little of the former and none of the latter."

Christian Science Monitor blog: DC Decoder: "Hillary Clinton's $12 million problem: Will focus on her wealth persist?"

"When she switches into a more overtly political mode, she will begin making policy proposals and speaking more directly about the national situation. Then the media focus will move from Clinton wealth gaffes and book sales to the newer, more substantive material."

Wall Street Journal blog: Washington Wire: "Payback: Republicans Paint 'Millionaire' Democrats as Out of Touch"

"And of course there is the nonstop Republican smirking about Hillary Clinton's wealth — virtually all of it emanating from Mrs. Clinton's book tour statement that she and Bill Clinton were "dead broke" upon leaving the White House 13 years ago."

Salon column: Joan Walsh: "GOP's '16 consolation vanishes: Suddenly, Democrats have the deep bench!"

"In the end, the rising number of possible alternatives to Hillary Clinton is a sign of Democratic strength, even if the media tends to bill it as weakness."

Twitter: "Today at Twitter: Ask @HillaryClinton your questions"

"We're thrilled to welcome Secretary Hillary Clinton to Twitter headquarters in San Francisco today."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Politico: "Bill Clinton: Hillary 'wants time'"

"Hillary Clinton still needs 'time' to think through her message ahead of a possible presidential run, according to her husband, former President Bill Clinton."

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "Joe Biden is the most interesting politician that has no chance of becoming president"

"Osnos conducted many interviews with Biden -- and even talked to President Obama. You should read the whole thing -- especially since the New Yorker archives are now open for browsing this summer -- but here's a look at some of the most interesting tidbits."

Articles:

Washington Post blog: Plum Line: "Why the 'rich Hillary Clinton' storyline is so dumb"

By Paul Waldman

July 21, 2014, 12:08 p.m. EDT

Today the Republican party unveiled a new web site titled Poor Hillary Clinton, making the devastating point that Hillary Clinton has lots of money and should therefore not be elected president. If that's what the geniuses at the RNC think is going to win the 2016 election for them, it may be time to start figuring out who's going to be in Clinton's cabinet.

But what may be even more remarkable is that so many in the press go right along with this stupidity. For instance, a Bloomberg News story from this morning begins this way:

"Hillary Clinton has earned at least $12 million in 16 months since leaving the State Department, a windfall at odds with her party's call to shrink the gap between the rich and the poor."

There's a hidden assumption in some of this coverage that candidates should be nothing more than advocates for their class. If you're rich, then you can't sincerely care about the well-being of people who aren't, and anything other than advocacy on behalf of other rich people is odd, even suspect. But politicians aren't motivated only by self-interest. How, exactly, is Clinton making a lot money "at odds with her party's call to shrink the gap between the rich and the poor"? Did I miss the Democratic policy paper demanding a national cap on speaking fees, or a proposed law making it illegal to get rich? No, I don't believe I did.

What we see here is actually a journalistic version of the paranoid billionaire whining that people who criticize wealth inequality are like Nazis ready to herd hedge fund managers into concentration camps, because it portrays the inequality issue as one in which poor and middle-class people are completely absent. The only question it asks is whether the rich are heroic job-creators or evil kleptocrats, and you're supposed to take one position or the other.

So let's say this real slow: You can simultaneously believe that 1) It's perfectly fine for some people to get rich, even spectacularly rich, and 2) government policies should be geared toward maximizing fair economic treatment of everyone, particularly those at the bottom.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That is, more or less, the position of Hillary Clinton's party. And it has been for the entire lifetime of anyone who will vote in 2016.

It's absolutely legitimate for reporters to look closely at Clinton's income, just as they should for every presidential candidate. But much of the coverage of the dispute over it fails to supply political context. What's often missing is a discussion of what the parties stand for, how they're perceived, and why it matters. The fact that Democrats advocate policies like increasing the minimum wage and achieving universal health coverage that are aimed at the interests of the non-wealthy, while Republicans advocate policies like upper-income tax cuts and the weakening of labor unions that are aimed at the interests of the wealthy, is one of the foundational contrasts of American politics. The dynamic that contrast creates — how much success Democrats have in exploiting it and how much success Republicans have in working around it — helps determine the outcome of pretty much every presidential campaign.

And it is in this context that the question of whether Clinton's wealth is politically damaging needs to be considered.

In recent history there has not been a single instance in which a Democratic presidential candidate was significantly harmed, let alone lost an election, because of his or her personal wealth. Yet it has been a problem for Republican candidates like Mitt Romney and John McCain (who, you'll recall, couldn't remember how many homes he and his wife owned). Why might that be?

The answer is that when it comes to extremely practical issues like economic policy, voters draw connections between the personal and the political. They didn't care that Franklin Roosevelt was rich, because he was clearly an advocate for the downtrodden. The reason the issue of personal wealth was a potent one for Democrats to use against Romney was that they successfully told a story in which he gained his wealth by stepping over the broken lives of working-class people, and that showed, they argued, how he would act as president. What story are Republicans trying to tell about Clinton's speaking fees?

There doesn't appear to be one, and there is precisely zero evidence that anyone who thinks income inequality is a problem that should be addressed will vote against Clinton because she has a lot of money — particularly when the Republican nominee in 2016 will almost certainly say that inequality isn't actually a problem at all.

The "who's on your side" issue will work to Democrats' advantage whether Republicans nominate a career politician whose wealth is limited (which describes many of the 2016 GOP contenders) or whether they nominate Scrooge McDuck. Democrats will make it an issue, because they always do; the only question is whether it turns out to be somewhat effective or extremely effective. Unless Clinton's rather sudden elevation into the ranks of the super-wealthy actually made her change her policy positions and what should would do as president — in other words, unless getting rich turned her into a Republican — there's no reason to believe her wealth will have any serious impact at all.

Vox: "5 reasons Hillary Clinton's weaknesses are greatly exaggerated"

By Andrew Prokop

July 20, 2014, 4:00 p.m. EDT

If you've been reading political coverage lately, you will have learned that Hillary Clinton is currently on a gaffe-laden book tour where she has proven how out of touch she is with ordinary Americans, while Elizabeth Warren is getting a rapturous reception from progressive activists yearning for her candidacy. This is an entertaining narrative, but it's missing a few key facts about what's going on in advance of the Democratic presidential primary right now — facts indicating that Clinton remains the overwhelming favorite.

1) Clinton's lead in polling is much larger than it was in 2008

Yes, Hillary Clinton was the frontrunner in 2008 and then lost the nomination. But back in early 2007, she reached only 30 to 40 percent in polls of Democratic voters — indicating that a majority of Democrats weren't yet on board with a Clinton candidacy. Now, she regularly tops 60 percent in polls, and sometimes even breaks 70 percent, as you can see on RealClearPolitics. In particular, her position in Iowa, where she lost to Obama in 2008, is now enormously stronger, as Harry Enten of FiveThirtyEight points out:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FiveThirtyEight's Harry Enten @ForecasterEnten: At this point in the 2008 cycle, Clinton was at 26% in Iowa Caucus polling http://www.mysterypollster.com/main/2006/06/the_first_iowa_.html … Right now? 70% http://www.nbcnews.com/politics/first-read/what-we-learned-about-christie-clinton-rand-paul-week-n158281 … [7/18/14,12:53 p.m. EDT]

With clear majorities of Democrats nationally and in the two major early states already saying they'll back Clinton, it's difficult to see an opportunity for a challenger.

2) Democrats don't actually want a more liberal nominee

The assumption among people who talk to a lot of very progressive activists is that the Democratic base is yearning for a much more liberal nominee. But according to a poll from CNN and ORC International, that's not the case at all.

Only 11 percent of Democrats would prefer a nominee who's more liberal than Clinton — compared to 20 percent who'd like a more conservative nominee. Once again, it's difficult to see the opening for a progressive challenger here.

3) The experience of Obama's presidency has discredited the main anti-Clinton argument

In 2008, Obama ran on an inspirational platform of bringing hope and change to America and transcending partisan politics. Of course, this didn't happen. Therefore, any Democratic candidate sounding similar themes in 2016 will face serious skepticism from the party's voters. TNR's Noam Scheiber made this point in a recent article — he found support for Clinton among many progressive activists, and expounded on why in an interview with Vox. "When you pressed further it was about disappointment in President Obama," Scheiber said. "Watching the system not change really made an impact on these people. I don't think they want to get burned again."

4) Inequality is not Iraq

In 2008, Obama and Clinton were quite similar in most policy areas. But he always had one issue on which he could draw a very clear contrast with Clinton — her vote to authorize the war in Iraq. "Most of you know I opposed this war from the start. I thought it was a tragic mistake," Obama said in his February 2007 announcement speech. He continued to emphasize this contrast throughout the primary campaign, and capitalized on serious resentment from party activists against Clinton and other Democratic leaders who had authorized the war.

Some commentators have argued that Clinton could be similarly vulnerable on issues of economic inequality in 2012. But every major figure in the party, including Clinton, now agrees that inequality is a serious concern. The rhetoric Clinton uses on the issue sounds quite a lot like Warren's, as you can see in the video above, and in this video mashup of the two by the Huffington Post. Now, on the narrower issue of banking regulation, there are some serious rhetorical and substantive differences between Clinton and Warren. But there's no real indication that that issue has enough national resonance to dislodge a front-runner — especially considering the above poll results that indicate there's little desire among Democrats for a more liberal candidate.

5) There's no credible challenger who can amass broad party support

A recent article by Phil Rucker and Robert Costa of the Washington Post lists many examples of potential Democratic candidates purportedly "making moves" to "position themselves" as an alternative to Clinton. Martin O'Malley has been giving speeches to Democrats all over the country. Amy Klobuchar is visiting Iowa. Elizabeth Warren, Kirsten Gillibrand, and Governor Andrew Cuomo are releasing books. Vice President Biden even called some of his former aides, "ostensibly to say hello"!

Yet while all this happens, Clinton has been racking up actual endorsements from Democrats — even though she's not yet running. These include figures who endorsed Obama last time around, like Tim Kaine and Claire McCaskill. Indeed, several of the potential contenders mentioned in the Post article — including Warren — actually signed a private letter urging Clinton to run for president. (Warren has said she hopes Clinton runs and that "Hillary is terrific," but hasn't publicly endorsed so far.)

It's more plausible that the politicians mentioned by the Post are positioning themselves so they can jump in if Clinton doesn't run. It's prudent for them to prepare for that possibility, however small, since the nomination really would be up for grabs, as Amy Walter lays out here. Plus, for the younger potential candidates, building a national network now might help prepare them for 2020 (if Clinton loses) or 2024 elections. But serious challenges to Clinton still seem extremely unlikely — except, perhaps, for the most quixotic of contenders.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "Benghazi, and Hillary Clinton's misunderstood record as secretary of state"

By Aaron Blake

July 21, 2014, 10:47 a.m. EDT

There's something of a bombshell headline this morning at Politico: "Dim views of Hillary Clinton's time at State."

The story, which is based on a new poll conducted by GfK, has quite a different take than previous polling on Clinton's record as secretary of state, which has regularly shown that people view her as a success. In fact, a Washington Post poll just last month showed 59 percent of people approved of her tenure.

Here are a few sample headlines for similar polls:

NBC/WSJ poll: Nearly 70% approve of Hillary Clinton's job

Hillary Clinton remains popular for her time as secretary of state, viewed apart from Obama

Hillary Clinton's Strengths: Record at State, Toughness, Honesty

So why the disconnect? Are people suddenly rethinking one of Clinton's biggest qualifications for running for president? Is Benghazi having the impact Republicans always thought it would?

Not completely. But the poll does lend us some valuable perspective on what has been a widely misunderstood portion of Clinton's resume.

The big reason for the disparate results: While most polls ask whether people approve or disapprove of Clinton's time as secretary of state, the new poll asked people to rate it as "excellent," "good," "fair" or "poor."

We generally dislike this type of question -- mostly because those writing about such polls lump "fair" together with "poor" to suggest people in both camps disapprove of the person in question. We see "fair" as a much more neutral response. (The great Maggie Haberman, who wrote the story, did not make this conflation, but others undoubtedly will.)

One person might look at this poll and see that a majority of people (53 percent) rate Clinton as either "fair" or "poor," while another could make a credible argument that it shows more people think she did well (42 percent said "excellent" or "good") than poorly (32 percent). Both are okay arguments, as long as they are in the correct context.

But in this case, we actually like this question, because it exposes the casual nature of support for Clinton's tenure as secretary of state.

Secretary of state is a great resume-builder, and the vast majority of the United States' top diplomats have emerged from the job quite popular

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(proof here). It's a job that sets you up for success. But just because people say they approve of their secretary of state doesn't mean they are huge fans. Perhaps she did well enough to earn people's "approval" but not necessarily enough to get positive marks -- hence "fair."

But part of the new poll is also that the bloom is off the rose. Clinton's numbers in general have dropped pretty significantly, to the point where she's not really all that popular anymore. Her numbers as secretary of state have remained a little better, but it's not surprising to see scrutiny of Clinton -- including on Benghazi -- to prompt even those numbers to drop.

The biggest takeaway from this poll is that Clinton's time as secretary of state might not be the feather in the cap that many thought it was. But people shouldn't look at this poll and suddenly see it as a liability.

Slate blog: Weigel: "The Poll That Will Make Democrats Panic About Hillary Clinton"

By David Weigel

July 21, 2014, 8:22 a.m. EDT

At the moment I'm wrapping up a piece about progressive activists and Netroots Nation, having found (as most reporters found) young party activists pretty much satisfied by the promise of Hillary 2016 campaign. Other candidates, like Elizabeth Warren and Bernie Sanders, have their adherents who want to shift the party's stances on banks, on student loans, on inequality. But few doubt that Hillary is the most electable, most Republican-infuriating candidate on the horizon.

Comes now this Politico poll:

[GRAPHIC OF POLITICO POLL "HOW WOULD YOU RATE THE JOB THAT HILLARY CLINTON DID AS SECRETARY OF STATE?]

As Maggie Haberman writes in her summary of the poll, Clinton left Foggy Bottom with a favorable rating well above 60 percent. Profiles of her tenure took for granted that she was a "rock star," a historic figure, a success. The decline is undoubtedly, as Haberman writes, tied in part to 18 months of no-end-in-sight Benghazi investigations; I wish the Politico pollster had asked voters to think of a single word to describe Clinton, because surely "Benghazi" would have erupted from most Republicans and led the list.

What else might explain the swoon? Well, turn your eyes north from Libya, up to Russia. In a piece subtly titled "Is Hillary Clinton imploding?" Jonathan Last asked readers to look at what Hillary Clinton told the BBC about the administration's Russia stance. Was it untenable? Well, according to Hillary, the thoughtful observer had to look at the situation when she arrived at State.

"Medvedev is President, Putin is Prime Minister, and there were jobs that we wanted to get done. We wanted to get Russia on board with tough sanctions against Iran. We wanted to have a new START Treaty to limit nuclear weapons. We wanted to get their help in transiting across through huge country to get things we needed into Afghanistan. We got all that done. Putin comes back. Look where we are now. He invaded another country, so yes, but while we had that moment, we seized it, we used it, and succeeded."

"He invaded another country, so..." is, to my ears, a more face-palm-worthy quote than "we were dead broke" (which was basically true) and "what difference does it make?" (which was about the Republican focus on September 2012 talking points, not a callous dismissal of dead heroes). Is there some way for Hillary to run as the person who was at the wheel before the Obama administration's policy failures? Maybe. But her re-emergence happened to concede with a run of major setbacks, and that's complicating the storyline of Clinton as a "rock star" secretary. It follows months and months of Republicans chortling at the inability of Clinton allies to name a major accomplishment. (In this interview she cites START, but her allies are really lost at sea in discussing this stuff).

So it should be interesting to see if the criticism of Clinton is turned back by an aggressive left -- by David Brock's groups like Correct the Record and Media Matters, for example -- or if it emboldens one of the junior Democrats to criticize her and raise speculation about primary challenges. So far, there's a little of the former and none of the latter.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Christian Science Monitor blog: DC Decoder: "Hillary Clinton's $12 million problem: Will focus on her wealth persist?"

By Peter Grier

July 21, 2014

[Subtitle:] Hillary Clinton has earned $12 million since leaving the State Department in early 2013, says a Bloomberg News report. Though GOP officials are gleefully sharing this story on social media, here's why the issue of her wealth is likely to fade.

Hillary Clinton's wealth problem isn't fading. It began in June when she said she and husband, Bill, were "dead broke" when they left the White House – a comment she later publicly labeled "inartful." It has continued through July as media reports document the Clintons' wealth and Republicans bash the former secretary of State as a closet 1 percenter.

The latest episode in this political soap opera is Monday's Bloomberg News report that, since resigning as secretary of State, Mrs. Clinton has earned at least $12 million by giving speeches and selling books.

"Her earnings represent a fraction of the Clinton family's total income and yet were large enough to rank her not only in the top 1 percent of the nation's earners but in the top one-hundredth of the 1 percent," write Bloomberg's Lisa Lerer and Lauren Streib.

Republican Party officials have gleefully disseminated this story on social media. They're using it as a means to promote their latest anti-Hillary website, poorhillaryclinton.com .

"How out of touch is Hillary? ... We've documented it," tweeted the Republican National Committee on Monday morning.

Will mocking Clinton for her "hard knock life" help the GOP in the long run? Maybe – that's the sort of political trend line it's impossible to precisely predict. Perhaps Republican strategists hope to simply increase vague negative feelings about Clinton in the months prior to her expected 2016 presidential run.

But there are some problems with the tactic of attacking Clinton for her cash, per se. Presumably Democratic voters are the ones most concerned with the issue of inequality and concentration of US wealth. However, they don't appear at all concerned about charges of Clinton buck-raking.

As we reported last week, polls show Clinton rolling full throttle toward the Democratic 2016 nomination, if she wants it. She's crushing all potential intraparty challengers. That stuff about a challenge from the left by Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts? Basically it's bored journalists looking for ways to inject drama into a foreordained race.

Republican voters will be happy to tut-tut about Clinton's perceived hypocrisy on money. But there's a twist: What will they feel about their own party attacking someone for making money? Kind of a role reversal, no?

That's what Politico's Dylan Byers opines Monday in his post about Bloomberg's new Clinton numbers.

"Wouldn't it be rich if the same Republicans who complain about the demonization of wealth decided to turn this into a talking point? Oh wait," writes Byers.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It's likely the focus on wealth will fade at some point. It has persisted partly because Clinton is an unusual presidential precandidate, writes Bloomberg View political pundit Jonathan Bernstein.

At this point in a campaign the media are generally busy filling in the life story and political background of potential candidates. But everybody knows Clinton, so instead they're picking at holes in her story.

When she switches into a more overtly political mode, she will begin making policy proposals and speaking more directly about the national situation. Then the media focus will move from Clinton wealth gaffes and book sales to the newer, more substantive material.

"None of the [current media] attention appears to be obstructing her path to the nomination, and it will be long forgotten by fall 2016. Except, perhaps, by those who aren't going to vote for her anyway," writes Mr. Bernstein.

Wall Street Journal blog: Washington Wire: "Payback: Republicans Paint 'Millionaire' Democrats as Out of Touch"

By Reid J. Epstein

July 21, 2014, 1:18 p.m. EDT

When Democrats in 2012 tarred Mitt Romney as so wealthy he was out of touch, the Republican pushback was to assert that there's no shame in being rich. "Republicans come here and say everyone should live like this," Mr. Romney said at one fundraiser held at a supporter's mansion.

Back then it worked, as President Barack Obama and his allied Democrats launched a full-scale campaign to tag Mr. Romney as the candidate of the rich, by the rich and for the rich. By and large, that worked, with a handful of assists from Mr. Romney himself.

Two years later, it's Republicans who are using their opponents' wealth as a campaign cudgel. In Wisconsin, New York, Pennsylvania and Georgia, GOP candidates have taken shots at their opponents for being wealthy – usually as part of trying to build a larger case that the foe is out of touch.

And of course there is the nonstop Republican smirking about Hillary Clinton's wealth — virtually all of it emanating from Mrs. Clinton's book tour statement that she and Bill Clinton were "dead broke" upon leaving the White House 13 years ago. On Monday morning the Republican National Committee launched a website called poorhillaryclinton.com .

Almost every attack Republicans are throwing at Democrats on their wealth could have been made against Mr. Romney – some of them were, almost verbatim.

Starting last fall Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker branded his Democratic opponent Mary Burke "Millionaire Mary." The Walker-controlled Wisconsin GOP mocked her for owning a "swanky second home valued at nearly $600,000." And last week Mr. Walker's campaign released a new TV ad called "Fortune" in which it accused Ms. Burke of "making millions of dollars" when her family's bicycle company moved some of its manufacturing operations to China. (That whether the company actually did outsource jobs to China is in debate mirrors the Romney campaign's insistence it did not offshore jobs.)

On Friday Allysia Finley of the Journal's editorial page criticized Mr. Walker's attacks on Ms. Burke's business record. "Economic populism is usually the province of Democrats who don't understand how free markets work or who cynically hope to exploit voters' insecurities," she wrote.

But Mr. Walker is hardly the only Republican attacking a Democratic opponent's wealth. In Pennsylvania, GOPGov. Tom Corbett's campaign dubbed his Democratic self-funding opponent “Millionaire Tom Wolf.” And in New York, Republicans are trying to tar Democratic House candidate Sean Eldridge as wealthy and out of touch.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Virtually every missive the National Republican Campaign Committee blasts about Mr. Eldridge – the husband of Facebook billionaire Chris Hughes who has spent more than $1 million of his own funds in his campaign against GOP Rep. Chris Gibson in an upstate New York district – replaces the first letter of his first name with a dollar sign.

“After repeatedly ignoring the media, refusing to answer questions about the stunning hypocrisy of his multimillion dollar investment portfolio, and putting voters off by using his dark money group to try and buy an election, the only thing Eldridge is going to gain on Election Day is some much needed humility,” NRCC spokesman Ian Prior said in one representative missive.

Obama campaign aide David Axelrod, in a plea for campaign donations in October 2012, wrote: “I’ll be blunt: They are trying to buy this election.”

And in Georgia – where Republicans will vote Tuesday in a run-off election between Rep. Jack Kingston and David Perdue – the highlight of the final debate was Mr. Kingston laying into the wealth of Mr. Perdue, the former CEO of Reebok and Dollar General.

“Your whole lifestyle is based in a different way,” Mr. Kingston snapped at Mr. Perdue, the Associated Press reported. “You live inside a gate inside a gated community with a gate on your house.”

Mr. Perdue responded much the same way Mr. Romney did in 2012: “I’m not going to apologize for my success.”

Salon column: Joan Walsh: “GOP’s ’16 consolation vanishes: Suddenly, Democrats have the deep bench!”

By Joan Walsh

July 21, 2014, 1:10 p.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] After Romney’s 2012 loss, pundits raved about the GOP’s new leaders. But two years later, Democrats have the edge

In the wake of President Obama’s re-election in 2012, reporters found one soothing source of solace for the GOP. “One race the Republicans appear to be winning is the one for the deepest bench of rising stars,” wrote the Washington Post, and plenty of folks followed up. Democrats, meanwhile, had nobody on the bench but Hillary Clinton – a formidable candidate if she were to run, but that wasn’t even certain.

Beyond Clinton, there seemed to be a wasteland populated by ambitious governors no one had ever heard of (Martin O’Malley), some who were well known but not widely liked (Andrew Cuomo). Oh, and Brian Schweitzer.

The Republican list, meanwhile, seemed almost infinite: blue and purple state governors like New Jersey’s Chris Christie, Wisconsin’s Scott Walker, Ohio’s John Kasich and Virginia’s Bob McConnell, and Tea Party senators like Rand Paul, Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio. Romney’s ambitious, “wonky” running mate, Rep. Paul Ryan, had his fans, as did former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush. Even Texas Gov. Rick Perry, recovered from back surgery and sporting hot new glasses, could have another life in 2016.

But in two years, the situation has almost reversed itself. Promising GOP governors – McDonnell, Christie, Walker – find themselves dogged by scandal. The Tea Party trio of Paul, Cruz and Rubio still vies for media attention and right wing adoration, but Rubio’s immigration reform work doomed him on the right. Unbelievably, Paul is widely labeled the frontrunner (but don’t tell that to Cruz), while the party establishment and neocon hawks search for an alternative. Despite all that impressive talent, Mitt Romney leads the pack in New Hampshire.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Meanwhile, in what's widely being reported as trouble for Hillary Clinton, because that's the narrative the media know best, it turns out there are a bunch of popular and maybe even formidable Democrats. Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Elizabeth Warren wowed the crowd at Netroots Nation. (Check out this great New Yorker Biden profile if you want to know how the VPis keeping his options open). The Netroots buzz inspired the Washington Post's Phillip Rucker and Robert Costa to survey the landscape of Democrats who've put a toe or more in the water for 2016.

We learned that Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar is visiting Iowa (it is only one state away), while New York Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand has a book coming out. Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon is said to be huddling with donors, believing the party could use a dose of red state common sense.

This is all framed as mildly ominous news for Hillary Clinton – the headline is "With liberals pining for a Clinton challenger, ambitious Democrats get in position" — but Klobuchar, Gillibrand and Nixon have all endorsed Clinton, and Warren has encouraged Clinton to run while insisting she won't do so herself. The only Democrats listed who may still run even if Clinton does too are O'Malley and Vermont's Bernie Sanders.

Regardless of the intent of the framing, the Rucker-Costa story actually pointed up the vitality in the Democratic Party, where lively debates over income inequality and foreign policy have so far fallen short of creating bitter divisions and factions, at least so far. Again, contrast that with the GOP, where Ted Cruz seems to be staking his 2016 hopes on his ability to humiliate every party leader and make sure Republicans will never make inroads with the Latino population. He's blocking bipartisan emergency legislation to deal with the border crisis, and pushing to reverse President Obama's deferred action on deportation for young people brought here by their parents.

Meanwhile Warren, the progressive elected the same time as Cruz, is touring the country campaigning for Democratic Senate candidates, even some who are more centrist than she is, like Kentucky's Alison Lundergan Grimes and West Virginia's Natalie Tennant. She's focused on growing the Democratic Party, not cutting down colleagues who are less progressive.

So: the GOP's right wing firebrand is a loose cannon who is completely out for himself, while the Democrats' left wing firebrand is working amiably with party leaders and deflecting talk of a primary challenge to Clinton. In the end, the rising number of possible alternatives to Hillary Clinton is a sign of Democratic strength, even if the media tends to bill it as weakness.

Twitter: "Today at Twitter: Ask @HillaryClinton your questions"

By Katie Stanton

July 21, 2014, 15:57 UTC

We're thrilled to welcome Secretary Hillary Clinton to Twitter headquarters in San Francisco today. We frequently welcome delightful and inspiring people in to meet our employees and talk about their careers, their passions and how they use Twitter to connect with the world.

Given the impact Secretary Clinton's work throughout her career has had on the world—much of which she documents in her new book about her time as America's chief diplomat, "Hard Choices"—we want to open her visit to you too. At about 5:20 p.m. PT, I will join the Secretary on stage in front of our employees to hear from her about the challenges she faced and the lessons she learned during her time as America's 67th Secretary of State. We'll explore how those experiences have shaped her views on human rights, domestic policy and other topics. And of course I'm curious to learn the backstory of Tweets like this:

Sec. Hillary Rodham Clinton @HillaryClinton: It's so much more fun to watch FOX when it's someone else being blitzed & sacked! #SuperBowl [2/2/13, 8:44 p.m. EDT]

You can tune in live at about 5:20 p.m. PT by visiting Secretary Clinton's Twitter profile at Twitter.com/@HillaryClinton; we'll stream the event from a Tweet pinned to the top of her page. You can also send the Secretary questions that I will do my best to ask her by using the hashtag #AskHillary. I'll be checking Twitter throughout the day so feel free to start sending your questions now.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We look forward to sharing this special event with all of you. See you later this afternoon!

Politico: "Bill Clinton: Hillary 'wants time'"

By Katie Glueck

July 21, 2014, 11:30 a.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton still needs "time" to think through her message ahead of a possible presidential run, according to her husband, former President Bill Clinton.

In an interview with CNN published Monday, he said that the former secretary of state — and presumptive Democratic frontrunner if she gets in — needs space to "work through" that. His comments come as Clinton continues on her book tour to promote her new memoir, "Hard Choices," amid questions of what her case would be for 2016.

"We've reached a point in our life when we think you really shouldn't run for office if you don't have a clear idea of what you can do and a unique contribution you can make and you can outline that," Clinton told CNN, according to the news organization's write-up. "Now that the book is done, she wants time to think about that and work through it. "

He added that Clinton "hasn't asked me yet" about his advice on 2016, but called her the "ablest public servant" with whom he's ever worked.

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "Joe Biden is the most interesting politician that has no chance of becoming president"

By Jaime Fuller

July 21, 2014, 12:43 p.m. EDT

The New Yorker's Evan Osnos has been working on a profile about Vice President Biden for months, and it finally published this week -- with a big focus on the vice president's role in the Ukraine crisis. Osnos conducted many interviews with Biden -- and even talked to President Obama. You should read the whole thing -- especially since the New Yorker archives are now open for browsing this summer -- but here's a look at some of the most interesting tidbits.

Obama: "In the foreign-policy front, I think Joe's biggest influence was in the Afghanistan debate."

As the wars in the Middle East have ended, Biden has shifted to smaller foreign policy priorities, although his relationships in Ukraine have also proved invaluable. Osnos sums up his foreign policy role now as "big assignments that may not have a huge political upside" especially for someone who may be eying another presidential bid.

Obama adds, "You know, when I sent him to Ukraine for the recent inauguration of Poroshenko, and he's there, a world figure that people know, and he's signifying the importance that we place on the Ukrainian election," Obama went on. "And then world leaders can transmit directly to him their thoughts about how we proceed. That's not necessarily helping him in Iowa. "

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

However, his political schmoozing skills have proved invaluable in international affairs throughout his career -- and continue to come in handy. Osnos writes, "After so many years, he has an arsenal of opening lines that he can deploy in Baghdad, Beijing, or Wilmington. One of his favorites: 'If I had hair like yours, I'd be President.'" George Mitchell, the Maine Senator who helped bring about the Good Friday Agreement, told Osnos that he "remembers welcoming visiting heads of state to Capitol Hill. 'I'd say, 'Here's Senator Smith, here's Senator Jones.' When I got to Joe, the leader would look out and say, 'Hi, Joe.' "

Joe Biden and Robert Gates do not like each other at all.

In his memoir, "Duty," former Defense Secretary Robert Gates said Biden was "impossible not to like" but he was also "wrong on nearly every major foreign policy and national security issue over the past four decades." When Osnos asked Biden about Gates, the vice president called him "a really decent guy," but ... he went on to add, "You go back, and everything in the last forty years, there's nothing that I can think of, major fundamental decisions relative to foreign policy, that I can think he's been right about!"

Biden ended his soliloquy on Gates by later saying, "I can hardly wait — either in a Presidential campaign or when I'm out of here — to debate Bob Gates. Oh, Jesus."

While we're on the topic of presidential campaigns, Biden's obviously thinking about one.

As you might have already noticed. He talks about it a lot.

But only if Hillary Clinton decides not to start her own campaign. When Osnos "asked John McCain, who is one of Biden's close friends, if Biden would run without Clinton in the race, McCain said,'In a New York minute.' "

Obama doesn't get why either Clinton or Biden would ever want to run again.

"I think that, for both Joe and for Hillary, they've already accomplished an awful lot in their lives. The question is, do they, at this phase in their lives, want to go through the pretty undignifying process of running all over again."

Biden and Obama are pretty surprised they get along so well.

Osnos writes,

"The trials facing the President and the Vice-President, who are separated by nineteen years and a canyon in style, have brought them closer than many expected — not least of all themselves. John Marttila, one of Biden's political advisers, told me, 'Joe and Barack were having lunch, and Obama said to Biden, 'You and I are becoming good friends! I find that very surprising.' And Joe says, 'You're [fing] surprised!'"

However, Biden adds that if he ever had a "fundamental moral disagreement" with Obama,"I'd announce I had prostate cancer and I had to leave."

Bush once said he had gotten "a sense of his soul" after staring into the eyes of Vladimir Putin. Biden later told Putin, "I don't think you have a soul."

Borrowing comedic tactics from "Arrested Development," Biden turned an immortal line from the Bush presidency into a callback.

"To illustrate his emphasis on personality as a factor in foreign affairs, Biden recalled visiting Putin at the Kremlin in 2011: 'I had an interpreter, and when he was showing me his office I said, 'It's amazing what capitalism will do, won't it? A magnificent office!' And he laughed. As I turned, I was this close to him.' Biden held his hand a few inches from his nose. 'I said, 'Mr. Prime Minister, I'm looking into your eyes, and I don't think you have a soul.' '

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"'You said that?' I asked. It sounded like a movie line.

"'Absolutely, positively,' Biden said, and continued, 'And he looked back at me, and he smiled, and he said, 'We understand one another.' ' Biden sat back, and said, 'This is who this guy is!'"

Biden isn't a fan of the more rebellious additions to the Senate.

He told Osnos, "I'll never forget the first time I heard someone on the floor of the Senate refer to the President as Bubba." The profile also notes that "Biden's friendships were so varied that he was the only senator who was asked to speak at funerals for both Strom Thurmond, the former segregationist, and Frank Lautenberg, the New Jersey Democrat, who called Biden 'the only Catholic Jew.' "

There are lots of wonderful descriptions of Biden's inherent Biden-ness.

To wit:

"When he was thirty years old, he became one of the youngest senators in history, and he has parted with youth begrudgingly. His smile has been rejuvenated to such a gleam that it inspired a popular tweet during the last campaign: 'Biden's teeth are so white they're voting for Romney.' At seventy-one, with his hairline reforested and his forehead looking becalmed, Biden projects the glow of a grandfather just back from the gym, which is often the case."

"Biden likes to be candid in such settings. In 1979, on one of his first trips to the Soviet Union, he listened to an argument from his Soviet counterpart, and replied, 'Where I come from, we have a saying: You can't [sh a shter.]' Bill Bradley, then a fellow-senator on the delegation, later asked the American interpreter how he had translated Biden's comment into Russian. 'Not literally,' the interpreter said."

"The full package — the Ray-Ban aviators, the shameless schmalz, the echoes of the Fonz — has never endeared him to the establishment, but it lends him an air of authenticity that is rare in his profession. It has also produced a whiff of cult appeal, such that his image now has more in common with Betty White than with John Boehner."

"Biden rule No. 1: No funny hats."

"Biden held on to his locker at the Senate gym, where he liked to kibbitz."

"Biden is such a close talker that he occasionally bumps his forehead into you mid-chat, a gesture so minor that it's notable only when you try to picture Barack Obama doing the same thing."

Daily Caller: "Republicans Launch New Hillary Attack: PoorHillaryClinton.com"

By Sarah Hurtubise

July 21, 2014, 12:12 p.m. EDT

The Republican National Committee launched PoorHillaryClinton.com Monday to attack the Democrat for claiming that she and Bill struggled financially after leaving the White House.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The website features claims by the Clintons downplaying their wealth and reports on their current earnings, which make Hillary one of the richest individuals in the country. Clinton claimed recently that she and Bill are not “truly well off,” and were “dead broke” when they left the White House in 2000.

Clinton has already earned $12 million in speaking fees since leaving the State Department just 16 months ago, according to a Bloomberg analysis out Monday; President Bill Clinton has amassed a fortune of almost $106 million in speaking fees alone since leaving the White House over a decade ago.

“Is this really what ‘dead broke’ looks like? Seems like the Clintons should be just fine with their two multi-million dollar houses,” the website says. “No need to add the ‘White House’ to the list.”

The site launched Monday with a sampling of links to stories that undercut Clinton’s attempts to connect with Americans that are struggling financially.

Hillary has pulled in hefty speaking fees at public universities. Clinton most notably charged the University of Buffalo $275,000 to be featured in a Distinguished Speaker Series. She has said that she donates speaking fees at public universities to the family’s charity — The Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton Foundation.

As a leading contender for the 2016 presidential race, Clinton’s already received significant pushback for her Wall Street-friendly policies and long history in Washington. Rival Massachusetts Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren has already attracted an intense following — largely because she can be taken more seriously on income inequality issues.

“In the span of just a few weeks, Hillary Clinton made enough out-of-touch comments about her wealth to fill an entire website. So the RNC created one,” RNC chairman Reince Priebus said in a statement. “Here’s the truth Hillary doesn’t understand: you’re not ‘dead broke’ when you can make five times the median household income with a single speech.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "German Marshall Fund" <press@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 1/22/2016 5:37:55 AM
Subject: Transatlantic Take: Moldova Needs Us to Support Reforms, Not Governments

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here.

G | M | F The German Marshall Fund of the United States
STRENGTHENING TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION

Transatlantic Take

Our Organization | Our Work | Our Events | Our Experts | GMFUS.org

Moldova Needs Us to Support Reforms, Not Governments

Alina Inayeh January 22, 2016

BUCHAREST, Romania—History repeats itself, giving us the chance to avoid repeating our mistakes. The Ukrainian story should have taught us a lot about the short-sightedness of supporting a bad government for geopolitical reasons. Now, as protests against Moldova's newly formed government are drawing many thousands, is the moment for political leaders in Europe and the United States to take a deep breath and recall this lesson before showing their support to the Moldovan government, known to be controlled by the country's most powerful oligarch and with little, if any, credible interest in promoting the reforms Moldova needs. The simplifying view that divides Moldovans into pro-Europeans and pro-Russians is not helpful; nor is supporting the first to the disadvantage of the latter. This binary thinking will, again, lead us to forget the essential point: in order to progress, the country needs neither a pro-European, neither a pro-Russian, but a pro-Moldovan government...

FULL ARTICLE

Alina Inayeh is the director of the German Marshall Fund's Bucharest office.

The views expressed in GMF publications and commentary are the views of the author alone.

Policy Leadership Civil Society

Follow

Strengthening Transatlantic Cooperation

Our Organization
About GMF
Career Opportunities
Press Room

Our Work
Leadership
Policy
Civil Society
Research & Analysis
Transatlantic Academy

Our Events
Major Conferences & Forums
Recent & Upcoming Events

Our Experts
Find an Expert

Manage preferences | Forward email | Unsubscribe | Subscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Gary Ritterstein" <info@johndouglassforcongress.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 11/4/2012 8:28:27 AM
Subject: at risk

John --

If the corporate PAC's that bankroll our opponent's swift-boat campaign have it their way on Tuesday, we will pay the price for subsidizing outsourcers, gutting our nation's safety net and making it harder to get a public education. But the only deadline left to stop Corporate Congressman Robert Hurt now is Election Day!

That means less than 48 hours left to raise just $2,012.05 more. So we need your help right away.

Even the corporate media is cautioning voters. "Rep. Hurt seems to have become a different person," says Rappahannock News. C'ville Weekly says, "his priorities lean toward Tea Party territory." "Hurt's platform would make life immeasurably more difficult," The Mecklenburg Sun adds.

A recent Daily Progress report explains why we have so much gridlock in Washington, revealing that Hurt has "sponsored a handful of bills" in his own party-controlled House, "but none have gone on to be passed." Now his failure to get the job done with a federal ban on dangerous uranium mining will let the state legislature get away with putting our air and water at risk of radioactive contamination. That's bad for families and bad for business.

This election is about more than growing corporate profits -- it's about fighting for our lives. Can General Douglass count on you to finish the fight?

We cannot afford another term for another career politician who is bought and paid for by the same corporate interests that took our economy to the brink of collapse. This is the time to help Virginia families get a fair chance at a better future by choosing good over greed.

You have the power! On to victory in Virginia,

--Gary Ritterstein
Campaign Manager
Douglass for Congress

P.S. Since this is the last chance I'll get before Election Day, I just want to personally thank you for supporting our efforts – this race is yours to win by clicking here.

Paid for by John Douglass for Congress

This email was sent to: john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, you can update your information here. We believe that emails are a vital way for the campaign to stay in direct contact with supporters. Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe from these messages.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Verma, Richard R" <VermaRR@state.gov>
To: "Verma, Richard R" <VermaRR@state.gov>
Date: 7/31/2015 4:57:47 AM
Subject: U.S. and India -- An Update

Dear Friends:

Just six months ago, President Obama came to Delhi as the Chief Guest for India's Republic Day celebrations, and 10 years ago this month, the United States and India launched our historic cooperation on civil nuclear technology. Over this decade, our relationship with India has soared. Our partnership is broader and deeper than it has ever been before. We are working on over 80 initiatives coming out of the President's visit, and we've launched or reinvigorated over 30 working groups since Prime Minister Modi visited Washington last September.

In light of this historic cooperation, I am providing you with further background on the growth of the relationship between our countries. I recently co-wrote an op-ed with my friend, Arun Singh, the Indian Ambassador to the United States, explaining how India and the United States, working together, will be a powerful force for peace and prosperity in the 21st Century, available here: http://www.huffingtonpost.com/arun-k-singh-/india-and-the-us-partnering_b_7814248.html

Our Embassy team also prepared a short video blog documenting our last six months of progress and activities here in India. It's been a busy time, as you can see here: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=E1ziTGySLsc

If you want to know our stance on a wide range of issues, from climate change to defense cooperation to commercial matters, you can find a collection of speeches and remarks on our Embassy website: http://newdelhi.usembassy.gov/speeches_and_remarks.html

Finally, my Embassy team and I have reflected on this decade of growth since we launched our negotiations for the landmark U.S.-India civil nuclear agreement, and we collected some facts and figures that might help put in perspective how far the United States and India have come. I would like to share a few of these highlights and illustrative facts and figures:

Business:

U.S. investments in India have grown significantly – from a total of $7.7 billion in 2004 to $28 billion today. Over the past few years, India has become the fourth fastest growing source of foreign direct investment into the United States.

Two-way trade has nearly tripled from $36 billion in 2005 to $104 billion in 2014, as we work towards $500 billion in trade.

Today, there are over 500 U.S. companies active in India, while the number of Indian companies operating in the United States has increased from roughly 85 companies in 2005 to over 200 companies today.

Travel for tourism, business, and education has skyrocketed: We have seen a 152% increase in overall visa applications for Indians wishing to travel to the U.S. from 398,931 in fiscal year 2005 to 1,007,811 since this fiscal year started in October 2014. Visa applications for Indian students have seen the strongest increase, of 202% (30,513 in FY 2005 to 92,156 in FY 2015). U.S. visitors to India have nearly doubled from 611,165 visitors in 2005 to 1,123,444 in 2015.

Defense Cooperation:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ten years ago, the United States and India barely conducted any defense trade. Over the last few years, the United States has signed approximately $10 billion in defense sales to India. Our defense cooperation has helped promote India's role as a security provider in the Indian Ocean region with direct benefit to third countries. For example, the Indian Air Force used C-130s and C-17 aircraft to evacuate Indian and third country nationals from Yemen and speed relief supplies to Nepal after a devastating earthquake.

U.S. and Indian businesses have partnered on the co-development of defense equipment, establishing a base from which to launch new Defense Technology and Trade Initiative (DTTI) co-development and co-production efforts in the future and expand the Indian defense industrial base.

The complexity of military exercises has increased in the last 10 years. The annual bilateral training exercise 'Yudh Abhyas' has grown from a squad and platoon-level exercise to a company/ battalion-level maneuver exercise, including a brigade-level computer simulation exercise where the U.S. and Indian Armies operate together. This year, the U.S.-India naval exercise 'Malabar' will welcome the Japan Maritime Self Defense Force for the second consecutive year, along with other countries.

Agriculture:

In 2015, India-U.S. bilateral agricultural and food trade is on track to quintuple in value compared to 2005, exceeding $6 billion. Due in part to sustained USDA Cooperator marketing activities and USDA programs, U.S. agricultural exports to India are poised to achieve a new record high in 2015.

Since 2005 USDA has sponsored 112 Indian agricultural researchers under the Borlaug Fellowship Program, and 79 fellows under the Cochran Fellowship Program. These figures include 21 participants in the two programs for 2015.

Education:

Indian students account for the second-largest group of foreign students in the United States, with approximately 102,673 students studying in the United States in 2013-14. At the same time, a growing number of Americans are choosing to study abroad in India, with over 4,000 students in India during academic year 2012-13. These students advance innovation and research in our universities and in their communities when they return home.

Fulbright Exchanges:

The Fulbright-Nehru program has nearly tripled in size since 2009, when the program became truly binational with joint funding for exchanges, with approximately 300 Indian and U.S. students and scholars now participating annually. Since 1950, the United States-India Education Foundation (USIEF) has awarded approximately 9,962 Fulbright grants in a full range of academic disciplines. USIEF has also administered 8,634 other awards, including the U.S. Department of Education's Fulbright-Hays and the East-West Center grants, for a total of over 18,500 awards in the last 65 years.

Health:

Since 1993, the U.S. Center for Disease Control (CDC) has assigned experts to World Health Organization's (WHO) regional and country offices in India to support surveillance of vaccine-preventable diseases. Through this active collaboration, in 2014, India was certified as polio-free and the CDC continues to work with Indian researchers to strengthen the national immunization program and accelerate control of measles and rubella.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In 2012, the CDC, through their Global Disease Detection India Center, located at India's National Centre for Disease Control, helped establish the India Epidemic Intelligence Service program (EIS) – a post graduate field training program modeled after the US EIS – which will help promote public health and support the necessary health workforce to prevent, detect, and respond to infectious disease threats.

India is the second largest exporter of pharmaceuticals to the United States. In FY 2014, India held a 13% share of the total 64,170 imported lines of pharmaceuticals.

Space:

Cooperation on space science has soared to new levels - from collaboration on projects that measure aspects of Earth's oceans and global precipitation, to recent success on a mission to Mars, to working jointly on a satellite project that will help scientists understand climate change and natural disasters. Our scientists and space organizations continue to look for new areas on which to collaborate.

Please be in touch with your ideas and suggestions. We would love to hear from you. You can follow us online through these sites:

Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/India.usembassy
Embassy and Ambassador Twitter handles: @USAndIndia and @USAmbIndia
YouTube: http://www.youtube.com/user/USEmbassyNewDelhi
Instagram: https://instagram.com/usembassynewdelhi/
Website: http://newdelhi.usembassy.gov/

As always, please do not hesitate to reach out directly if we can be of any help to you.

Thank you and best wishes,

Rich

Richard R. Verma
US Ambassador India
vermarr@state.gov

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
To: "Eizenstat, Stuart" <seizenstat@cov.com>
Date: 7/14/2015 11:31:44 AM
Subject: Re: Roundup: Iran Deal Analysis

Stu - thanks. We will have the stuff on partners and regional strategy. On options we use the hackneyed phrase but add, including if necessary our military options. I think that is stronger than the sentence you suggest, no?

On Jul 14, 2015, at 6:24 PM, Eizenstat, Stuart <seizenstat@cov.com > wrote:

> Dear Jake,
>
> It appears that Hillary has already spoken. I do hope in a formal statement she will say that as President, NOT just that all options are on the table, which is a hackneyed phrase, but that "As President I will do whatever it takes to assure that Iran never develops a nuclear weapon." There should also be the kind of statement I have suggested of working closely with our allies in the region, especially Israel, to counter Iranian terrorist activity, and to be certain they have the means to fully defend themselves against Iran.
>
> Former Congressman and HFRC Chairman Howard Berman, my partner at Covington, told me that as a result of the 4:00 pm White House telephonic briefing of the Washington Institute group that singed the letter of concern, he believes all five concerns have been taken care of, in one way or another. He said Dennis Ross (my JPPI co-chair) has put out a statement suggesting there is no better option. Howard says he will not join a group of Democrats (e.g. Evan Bayh, Mary Landrieu) opposing the deal.
>
> I am forwarding some comments he has accumulated. He told me in Israel there is wall-to-wall opposition, including Herzog and Livni.
>
> Best wishes,
> Stu
>
> ---
>
> From: Berman, Howard
> Sent: Tuesday, July 14, 2015 5:52 PM
> To: Eizenstat, Stuart
> Subject: FW: Roundup: Iran Deal Analysis
>
> Howard L. Berman
> Senior Advisor
> Covington & Burling LLP
> One CityCenter, 850 Tenth Street, NW, Washington, DC 20001
> T +1 202 662 5658 | HBerman@cov.com
> www.cov.com
>
> <image001.png>
>
> ---
>
> From: David Halperin [mailto:dhalperin@ipforum.org]
> Sent: Tuesday, July 14, 2015 12:30 PM
> Subject: Roundup: Iran Deal Analysis
>
> Dear Friends:
>
> Israel Policy Forum will soon provide conference calls, Insider Briefs, and in-person briefings with American and Israeli perspectives regarding the Iran nuclear deal announced this morning .
>
> I know your inboxes are already inundated with reactions. In this email, I am providing a Roundup of excerpts of analysis / reactions that you can skim / review as you wish.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

While continuing to provide resources, IPF will remain focused on our core mission and the implications for regional security and diplomacy going forward. And, we will continue to call for close US-Israel cooperation , befitting strategic allies.

Clearly, such dialogue is essential to create the kind of assurances that undoubtedly will be needed to advance regional security in the wake of today's announcement.

Best -

David

David A. Halperin
Executive Director
Israel Policy Forum (IPF)
140 West 57th Street, Suite 6C
New York, NY 10019
Direct: 212-315-1742
Cell: 516-355-1300

Nicholas Burns, to the NY Times :

> "The reality is that it is a painful agreement to make, but also necessary and wise," said R. Nicholas Burns, who drafted the first sanctions against Iran, passed in the United Nations Security Council in 2006 and 2007, when he was undersecretary of state for policy. "And we might think of it as just the end of the beginning of a long struggle to contain Iran. There will be other dramas ahead."

Jeffrey Goldberg, Atlantic Columnist :

> "The Iran drama is only beginning. Assuming that Obama can sell this deal to Congress—Chuck Schumer, a nation turns its lonely eyes to you—this will be a multi-year story of implementation. I wish I could believe what Obama seems to suspect, that this deal will set in motion a virtuous cycle in which moderates (relative moderates, of course) gain power in a liberalizing Iran. But I don't think that this is happening soon. For now, I hope that Obama will study the reality of Iranian activity in the region, and begin to push back against Iran's ambitions with more alacrity than he has done so far.

White House Talking Points / Graphics and Resources Page (includes video of President Obama's address):

> After many months of principled diplomacy, the P5+1 -- the United States, the United Kingdom, France, China, Russia and Germany -- along with the European Union, have achieved a long-term comprehensive nuclear deal with Iran that will verifiably prevent Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapon and ensure that Iran's nuclear program will be exclusively peaceful going forward.
>
> This deal stands on the foundation of the Joint Plan of Action (JPOA), achieved in November of 2013, and the framework for this Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), announced in Lausanne on April 2, 2015 that set the requirements for the deal with the P5+ 1 and Iran, alongside the European Union announced today.
>
> Now, with this deal in place, the U.S., our allies, and the international community can know that tough, new requirements will keep Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon. Here's how:

AIPAC Statement :

> "During these negotiations, we outlined five critical requirements for a good deal. We are deeply concerned based on initial reports that this proposed agreement may not meet these requirements, and thereby would fail to block Iran's path to a nuclear weapon and would further entrench and empower the leading state sponsor of terror."

Ilan Goldenberg, via Times of Israel :

> As the fight over the Iran deal gets political, Democrats will be less inclined to oppose the president, explained Goldenberg, a former senior staffer on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee covering Middle East issues.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"The more the question becomes — 'Do you trust Obama or do you support Netanyahu and the Republicans?' — the less likely the Democrats are to vote against the deal."

Rather than confrontation, the Israeli prime minister should seek to make amends with the administration and start a serious dialogue about what Washington and Jerusalem can do together to counter Iran's aggressive actions in the region and to ensure Tehran does not violate the nuclear agreement, Goldenberg suggested.

"The biggest strategic mistake Netanyahu can make is to walk away for the next 18 months and wait for next president," he said. "I don't think Israel can afford that. If he does that, he's only going to further widen the partisanship and turn Israel into a political wedge issue."

Instead of hoping for Congress to shoot down the deal, Netanyahu should encourage it to pass legislation that would support the agreement's vigorous implementation, Goldenberg continued. The Hill has several tools at its disposal: mechanisms to ensure sanctions snap back automatically if Iran violates the deal, more money for international inspectors, the creation of a permanent board with a congressional mandate to oversee the arms control agreement, and so on.

Rep. Steve Israel via website :

"I was skeptical at the beginning of this process, and I remain skeptical of the Iranians. In the fall, there will be a vote on this deal, and my obligation is to review every word, sentence, and paragraph of the deal to ensure it satisfies my continued concerns. Until then, you can continue to count me in the 'skeptical' column.

Ian Bremmer, President, Eurasia Group, via facebook :

The Iran deal is done. It's a historic moment. But as important as it is to defang Iran's nuclear threat, the bigger story is what the deal means for Iran's new standing in a crumbling geopolitical order. Three changes will matter most.

First, the competition between Shia Iran and Sunni Saudi Arabia will heat up, and the balance of power will tip toward Tehran. Saudi Arabia is now pumping the most oil since 1980, but an unsanctioned Iran will cut into Saudi market share. Iran is the holder of the world's fourth-largest proven crude oil reserves and second-largest natural gas reserves, and will soon bring 1 million barrels a day back to the market. Meanwhile, proxy fights in Iraq, Yemen, Syria, and elsewhere will intensify. As the U.S. and Europe look to reduce their presence in the region, the escalation of proxy wars between Saudi Arabia and Iran will heighten the risk of direct conflict.

Next, Iran will open for business. The world will trade again with Iran's $420 billion economy. Trade with the EU could expand as much as 400 percent, from $8.3 billion last year. Economic benefits will spill across the Gulf. Dubai will become a launch pad for foreign investment in Iran. And the investors are coming. Iran is not just another Middle Eastern petro-state; it offers investors a diversified economy with an established capital market. Its population of 80 million, the second largest in the Middle East, promises consumer demand across sectors as varied as travel and logistics to pharmaceuticals and consumer products. By some estimates, the nuclear deal could accelerate growth in Iran to 8 percent over the next three years and motivate the potential return of hundreds of thousands of highly talented Iranians.

Finally, Iran will lead the fight against ISIS. Obama is in no position to put U.S. boots on the ground, but the more battles ISIS wins in the Middle East, the more of a problem it will become internationally. Washington needs someone with the will and resources to deal ISIS a strong blow. And that's Iran. Though economic sanctions and a global arms embargo have limited the sophistication of Iran's military powers (Iran spends a fifth as much as Saudi Arabia on boosting its military assets), the expansion of Iranian influence and economic capabilities will pave the way for greater defense leadership in the Middle East. Iraqi Shia militias, backed by Iran, will offer a desperately-needed counter to ISIS.

Will Iran cheat on the deal? Yes. The U.S. and Iran aren't about to start trusting one other, much less become fast friends. But in the world created by the deal, Iran starts to matter much more than Saudi Arabia and other old-guard U.S. allies.

Today's deal isn't the end of the story. It's only the end of the first chapter.

Ehud Ya'ari, top Arab Affairs Analysts, on Channel 2 news:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"It's not as bad as we thought."

Jane Eisner, editor in chief, Forward :

"The vexing problem for American Jews is that consideration of this deal has become so intertwined with support for Israel that it may be impossible to arrive at an unbiased judgment."

Hillary Clinton, in private meeting with House Democrats

The deal is an "important step in putting a lid on Iran's nuclear program."

MK Isaac Herzog, as reported by the Jerusalem Post:

Herzog will be travelling to the US to "demand a dramatic package of security measures for Israel." ... "In regards to security I am more extreme than Netanyahu."

Tzipi Livni on Iran deal:

"dangerous and destructive"

Benjamin Netanyahu on Iran deal :

"Stunning, historic mistake."

Naftali Bennett, via twitter :

On July 14th, 2015 a terror nuclear superpower is born. Israel will defend itself.

Sen. Joe Lieberman via House Foreign Affairs Committee :

"There is much more risk for America and reward for Iran than there should be in the agreement... This is a bad deal for America, a bad deal for Iran's neighbors in the Middle East and a bad deal for the world."

Dennis Ross via Washington Post :

"Opponents need to explain what happens if the rest of the world accepts this deal, Iran says it is ready to implement it — and Congress blocks it. Will the European Union, which explicitly commits in the agreement to lift sanctions once Iran has fulfilled its main nuclear responsibilities, not do so because Congress says no? Can sanctions really be sustained in these circumstances, particularly if the Iranians don't increase their enrichment and say they will observe the deal? Could we be faced with a world in which the sanctions regime collapses, Iran gets its windfall and is only two months from breakout, and there is little on-ground visibility into its program? Maybe the answer is no, but the skeptics need to explain what we can do to ensure that this is not the outcome."

Aaron David Miller oped- in Wall Street Journal :

"Whether you're about to break open the champagne or don sack cloth over the U.S.-Iran nuclear deal , you may have questions about the agreement. Here are five things to look out for in the coming days, as we all assess the text of the agreement and reactions to it.:"

Abe Foxman, via ADL Statement :

"We are deeply disappointed by the terms of the final deal with Iran announced today which seem to fall far short of the President's objective of preventing Iran from becoming a nuclear weapon state. The thrust of the deal relies substantially on Iran's good faith and the ability of the IAEA to effectively carry out its inspection obligations."

Sen. Chuck Schumer statement :

"Supporting or opposing this agreement is not a decision to be made lightly, and I plan to carefully study the agreement before making an informed decision."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Adam Blickstein" <ablickstein@nsnetwork.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 10/8/2008 4:00:25 AM
Subject: [big campaign] McCain's Debate Performance: An Unsteady Hand at the Tiller

National Security Network

McCain's Debate Performance: An Unsteady Hand at the Tiller

Washington D.C. - Senator McCain's debate performance yesterday did little to reassure voters about his ability to manage a steady and responsible national security policy. Aside from his gaffe referring to General Petraeus as the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, there were serious substantive problems with McCain's approach. He continued to talk about victory in Iraq despite the fact that General Petraeus and the nation's 16 intelligence agencies disagree with his assessment of progress. He is still calling for a surge in Afghanistan despite General McKiernan's statements that a "surge" is not what is needed. He displayed a reckless streak, musing that Russia might be evil and dismissing his irresponsible comments about bombing Iran as a joke. Finally, McCain's policies were at times incoherent. He called for avoiding a Cold War with Russia even as he used overheated rhetoric. He believes that Iran's nuclear program is an immediate danger and yet his best response is a League of Democracies - an institution that most of our allies don't want, would take years to create and may never become effective. Overall, McCain failed to show how his foreign policy would make America safer and stronger.

McCain has shown the same stubbornness as George Bush. When it comes to the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan McCain has continuously displayed that he is set in his ways, and that no expert or conditions could change his mind. He continues to talk about victory in Iraq despite the fact that General Petraeus refuses to use that term and that there are reports that the nation's sixteen intelligence agencies disagree with McCain's assessment of progress. "A nearly completed high-level U.S. intelligence analysis warns that unresolved ethnic and sectarian tensions in Iraq could unleash a new wave of violence, potentially reversing the major security and political gains achieved over the last year." Moreover, when talking about his strategy for Afghanistan, McCain continued his approach of simply transferring our Iraq strategy to Afghanistan saying , "It is the same overall strategy," and "we have to have the same strategy, which Sen. Obama said wouldn't work, couldn't work, still fails to admit that he was wrong about Iraq." Meanwhile, Gen. McKiernan, the U.S. commander in Afghanistan, said that "Afghanistan is not Iraq," and that no Iraq-style "surge" of forces will end the conflict there. Even Gen. Petraeus, who McCain frequently praises, said, "every situation like this is truly and absolutely unique, and has its own context and specifics and its own texture." McCain argues for a "surge" in Afghanistan despite the fact that it did not work in Iraq and that the top generals say it is the wrong strategy. [CNN, 10/7/08 . McLatchy Washington Bureau, 10/7/08 . Washington Post, 10/2/08 . New York Times, 10/1/08]

McCain made reckless and irresponsible comments not befitting a Commander-in-Chief. McCain's rhetoric towards Russia was rash and reckless, especially answering "maybe" when asked if Russia under Putin was "evil." He also brought back his old statements on Putin saying: "Now, long ago, I warned about Vladimir Putin. I said I looked into his eyes and saw three letters, a K, a G and a B." McCain displayed similar carelessness when discussing his policy toward Iran. He dismissed a troubling campaign appearance where he sang "bomb, bomb, bomb Iran" as "joking with a veteran," despite no indication at the time that this act was intended as a joke. [John McCain, 10/07/08 . John McCain, 4/19/07]

On a wide range of foreign policy issues, John McCain's remarks during the debate were inconsistent and incoherent. Whether he was speaking about a resurgent Russia or outlining his policy for dealing with Pakistan, John McCain's positions seemed confused or contradictory. On Russia, McCain said "we're not going to have another Cold War with Russia," but then used cold-war style rhetoric to describe the current Russian government. McCain has proposed a confrontational policy, recommending that the country be thrown out of the G-8 and be diplomatically isolated; contradicting an op-ed today from former Secretaries of State Henry Kissinger and George Shultz commented that "isolating Russia is not a sustainable long-range policy." McCain was also unable to explain the divisions that have emerged between himself and his advisors on the issue of Iran. He blasted Senator Obama for wanting negotiations "without preconditions," yet one of his own advisors, former Secretary of State Kissinger said that he supported negotiations with Iran at a high level "without conditions." McCain acknowledged that a threat of a nuclear Iran is dangerous and urgent yet his response for how to stop Iran from developing a nuclear weapon was to build a new "League of Democracies" - an international institution that is unpopular with its potential members and would take years to create. Finally, on the issue of Pakistan, McCain criticized Barack Obama for stating his intention to conduct strikes to "kill Osama Bin Laden," and "crush Al Qaeda," but then proceeded to take the same position, saying "I'll get Osama bin Laden, my friends. I'll get him. I know how to get him." Despite stating that he would not "telegraph" his punches, McCain's stated position appeared to do exactly that. [John McCain, 10/07/08 . Henry Kissinger and George Shultz, 10/01/08 . Barack Obama, 10/07/08]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCain erroneously called General Petraeus the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs. " Well, let me just follow up, my friends. If we had done what Sen. Obama wanted done in Iraq, and that was set a date for withdrawal, which Gen. [David] Petraeus, our chief -- chairman of our Joint Chiefs of Staff said would be a very dangerous course to take for America, then we would have had a wider war, we would have been back, Iranian influence would have increased, al Qaeda would have re- established a base." [John McCain, 10/07/08]

Adam Blickstein
Press Secretary
National Security Network
202-289-7113 (office)
617-335-0859 (mobile)
ablickstein@nsnetwork.org

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "David Plouffe, BarackObama.com" <info@barackobama.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 7/24/2008 12:30:44 PM
Subject: VIDEO: Barack in Berlin

Obama for America

Dear John --

As you may have heard, Barack has been in Europe, the Middle East, and Asia this week.

Today, he spoke in Berlin, Germany.

In a city where a wall once divided the free from the oppressed, he talked about tearing down the walls that divide all peoples so we can address our common problems -- the threats of terrorism and nuclear weapons, global warming and genocide, AIDS and poverty.

Watch Barack's historic speech and share it with your friends:

Watch Barack's Speech

http://my.barackobama.com/berlinvideo

Please forward this email to your friends, family, and colleagues.

Thanks,

David

David Plouffe
Campaign Manager
Obama for America

Donate

Paid for by Obama for America

This email was sent to: john.podesta@gmail.com

To unsubscribe, go to: http://my.barackobama.com/unsubscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Tara McGuinness" <tara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "big campaign" <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com>
Date: 10/7/2008 4:50:30 PM
Subject: [big campaign] McCain Fact Check on the Second Debate [redacted]

McCain Echoed Bush's Policies From 2000

George W. Bush in 2000	John McCain in 2008
Bush: "It's Important To Cut The Taxes." During a 2000 Republican presidential debate in Iowa, Governor Bush said, "It's important to cut the taxes, Tom, otherwise government's going to spend it. And it's important to cut the taxes to keep the economy growing. And when we cut the taxes it's important to remember, there's a lot of folks who are struggling on what I call the outskirts of poverty. I mentioned it to John in the question, that the single mom with kids — which, by the way, in my judgment's the toughest job in America." [GOP Iowa Debate, 12/13/99]	McCain: "We Have To Keep Americans' Taxes Low." During the second Presidential debate of 2008, Senator John McCain said, "You go to the heart of America's worries tonight. Americans are angry, they're upset, and they're a little fearful. It's our job to fix the problem. Now, I have a plan to fix this problem and it has got to do with energy independence. We've got to stop sending $700 billion a year to countries that don't want us very -- like us very much. We have to keep Americans' taxes low. All Americans' taxes low. Let's not raise taxes on anybody today." [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08]
Bush: "I've Got A Record Of Reform In The State Of Texas, And I'm Going To Take That To The White House." During a 2000 Republican presidential debate in Arizona, Governor Bush said, "I've got a record of reform in the state of Texas, and I'm going to take that to the White House." [GOP Arizona Debate, 12/6/99]	McCain: "I Have Been A Consistent Reformer." During the second Presidential debate of 2008, Senator John McCain said, "And I can see why you feel that cynicism and mistrust, because the system in Washington is broken. And I have been a consistent reformer. I have advocated and taken on the special interests, whether they be the big money people by reaching across the aisle and working with Sen. [Russ] Feingold [D-Wisconsin] on campaign finance reform, whether it being a variety of other issues, working with Sen. Lieberman on trying to address climate change. I have a clear record of bipartisanship. The situation today cries out for bipartisanship. Sen. Obama has never taken on his leaders of his party on a single issue. And we need to reform. And so let's look at our records as well as our rhetoric. That's really part of your mistrust here." [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08]
Bush: "I Would Encourage Exploration. I Mean, It's A Matter Of Supply And Demand." When asked how he would lower the price of oil during a 2000 Republican presidential debate in Arizona, Governor Bush said, "I would encourage exploration. I mean, it's a matter of supply and demand. I would put -- I'd keep plans in place to say to our drillers: We want you to continue exploring." [GOP Arizona Debate, 12/6/99]	McCain Said Increased Exploration Would "Will Reduce The Price Of A Barrel Of Oil." During the second Presidential debate of 2008, Senator John McCain said, "But the point is, also, on oil drilling, oil drilling offshore now is vital so that we can bridge the gap. We can bridge the gap between imported oil, which is a national security issue, as well as any other, and it will reduce the price of a barrel of oil, because when people know there's a greater supply, then the cost of that will go down." [Second 2008

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

	Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08]
Bush: "I've Also Got Great Hope For The Natural Gas Business." During a 2000 Republican presidential debate in Arizona, Governor Bush said, "I've also got great hope for the natural gas business. The natural gas business is immune to OPEC. The natural gas business is hemispheric in nature. The natural gas business is finally recovering from the foolish ways of the Jimmy Carter-era when they tried to nationalize, in essence, the natural gas business with price fixing and demand. The demand for gas has finally come back." [GOP Arizona Debate, 12/6/99]	McCain: We Have To Have Alternative Energy, Including "Natural Gas." During the second Presidential debate of 2008, Senator John McCain said, "We can work on nuclear power plants. Build a whole bunch of them, create millions of new jobs. We have to have all of the above, alternative fuels, wind, tide, solar, natural gas, clean coal technology. All of these things we can do as Americans and we can take on this mission and we can overcome it." [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08]
Bush: "I Brought Republicans Together With Democrats." During a 2000 Republican Debate in Michigan, Governor Bush said, "What is accurate is that I led my state, in 1997, to the largest tax cut in Texas history. The truth is that I laid out a plan that cut a billion dollars of property taxes. I brought Republicans together with Democrats. And I signed that tax cut." [GOP Michigan Debate, 1/10/00]	McCain: "I Have A Clear Record Of Bipartisanship." During the second Presidential debate of 2008, Senator John McCain said, "I have a clear record of bipartisanship. The situation today cries out for bipartisanship. Sen. Obama has never taken on his leaders of his party on a single issue. And we need to reform." [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08] McCain: "I Have A Clear Record Of Reaching Across The Aisle." During the second Presidential debate of 2008, Senator John McCain said, "I know how to do that. I have a clear record of reaching across the aisle, whether it be Joe Lieberman or Russ Feingold or Ted Kennedy or others. That's my clear record." [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08]
Bush: "He Is Going To Grow The Federal Government In The Largest Increase Since Lyndon Baines Johnson In 1965." During the first 2000 presidential debate, Governor Bush said, "The man is practicing fuzzy math again. There's differences. Under Vice President Gore's plan, he is going to grow the federal government in the largest increase since Lyndon Baines Johnson in 1965. We're talking about a massive government, folks. We're talking about adding to or increasing 200 programs, 20,000 new bureaucrats." [Commission on Presidential Debates, 10/3/00]	McCain: "Do You Know That Sen. Obama Has Voted For -- Is Proposing $860 Billion Of New Spending Now?" During the second 2008 Presidential debate, McCain said, "This is the most liberal big-spending record in the United States Senate." He added, "Do you know that Sen. Obama has voted for -- is proposing $860 billion of new spending now?" [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08]
Bush: "I Want To Develop The Coal Resources In America. Have Clean Coal Technologies." While discussing energy policies during the first 2000 presidential debate, Governor Bush said, "I want to develop the coal resources in America. Have clean coal technologies. We better start exploring it or otherwise we'll be in deep trouble in the future because of our dependency upon foreign sources of crude." He later added, "There is an abundant supply of coal in this country. I know we can do a better job of clean coal technologies. I'm going to ask the	McCain: "We Have To Have … Clean Coal Technology." During the second 2008 Presidential Debate, McCain said, "We have to have all of the above, alternative fuels, wind, tide, solar, natural gas, clean coal technology. All of these things we can do as Americans and we can take on this mission and we can overcome it." [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN.com, 10/7/08]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Congress for $2 billion to make sure we have the cleanest coal technologies in the world." [Commission on Presidential Debates, 10/3/00]

The McCain Of 2008 Contradicted The Policies Of the McCain Of 2000

2000 McCain	2008 McCain
McCain On Meeting With Putin: "Yes, I Would Meet With Him." During a 2000 Republican presidential debate in South Carolina, Larry King asked, "Senator, would you meet with -- assuming Mr. Putin is elected in March, would you want to meet with him as a candidate?" McCain said, "I'm not sure that would be necessary. It might be an interesting experience, because I know what's going on in Russia… So, yes, I would meet with him as a candidate, but I think that what I would really like to do is send a message to Mr. Putin, that we expect certain behavior out of the Russians, and particularly what's going in Chechnya today, a cessation of that brutality." [GOP South Carolina Debate via CNN, 2/15/00]	McCain: "I Warned About Vladimir Putin." In the second 2008 presidential debate, John McCain said, "But have no doubt that Russia's behavior is certainly outside the norms of behavior that we would expect for nations which are very wealthy, as Russia has become, because of their petro dollars. Now, long ago, I warned about Vladimir Putin. I said I looked into his eyes and saw three letters, a K, a G and a B. He has surrounded himself with former KGB apparatchiks." [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN, 10/7/08]
McCain Said It Was A Mistake To Propose Massive Tax Cuts, Instead Advocated Saving Social Security & Medicare. During a 2000 debate in Michigan, John McCain said, "I believe we must save Social Security, we must pay down the debt, we have to make an investment in Medicare. For us to put all of the tax cuts -- all of the surplus into tax cuts, I think is not a conservative effort. I think it's a mistake. I think we should put that money into allowing Americans to be sure that their Social Security System will be there when they retire; that Medicare is helped; and most of all, let's pay down that $5.6 trillion debt we've laid on future generations of Americans." [GOP Debate in Michigan, 1/10/00]	McCain: "We Have To Keep Americans' Taxes Low. All Americans' Taxes Low." In the second 2008 presidential debate, John McCain said, "We have to keep Americans' taxes low. All Americans' taxes low. Let's not raise taxes on anybody today. We obviously have to stop this spending spree that's going on in Washington. Do you know that we've laid a $10 trillion debt on these young Americans who are here with us tonight, $500 billion of it we owe to China?" [Second 2008 Presidential Debate via CNN, 10/7/08]

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com> re47@hillaryclinton.com
Date:	2/8/2016 8:19:32 AM
Subject:	RE: Agenda for 5:30 Post NH Messaging Call - TESTING SUGGESTIONS

Some of the hard contrast is stuff from a very long time ago. The second graf makes it sound like he is currently proposing those things. Same for the national security graf.

From: Mandy Grunwald [mailto:gruncom@aol.com]
Sent: Monday, February 8, 2016 3:14 PM
To: re47@hillaryclinton.com
Cc: dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com ; david@db-research.com ; david@dixondavismedia.com ; jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com ; jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com ; jim.margolis@gmmb.com ; jbenenson@bsgco.com ; john@algpolling.com ; john.podesta@gmail.com ; nnayak@hillaryclinton.com ; oshur@hillaryclinton.com ; rich@dixondavismedia.com ; jandrews@jacompany.com
Subject: Re: Agenda for 5:30 Post NH Messaging Call - TESTING SUGGESTIONS

Jim Andrews and I have been pouring through the oppo and have a couple new possible negatives to suggest we test in the poll, since most of our attacks haven't been working. We also proposed language for a split message test between where we've been (ideas that sound good on paper/ can't wait) versus the new no barriers message -- stacked up against Sanders

Hope these are helpful.

YOU PAY FOR SOCIALISM

Bernie Sanders says he wants to restructure America's economy to make it work like it does in the socialist countries of Europe, providing things like free health care for everyone, free college for everyone, and free increases in Social Security for everyone. But Sanders does not mention that the middle class picks up the bill in these countries, paying nearly sixty percent of their income in taxes, three times what middle class Americans pay now.

FREE STUFF FOR EVERYBODY

Bernie Sanders said –quote– "all necessities of life must be provided free for people," and over the years he's proposed a radical restructuring of the entire American economy to make many things free, from the gas for people's cars to telephones and now free college and health care. To do this, Sanders proposed the complete government takeover of all oil companies, gas companies, electric utility companies, phone companies, health care companies, and all television networks. Combined, Sanders proposals would put the government in control of more than half of the American economy, but Sanders has never told anyone who would pay for all of this or how it would work.

SPEND, TAX AND COVER IT UP

Bernie Sanders' spending plans cost at least eighteen trillion dollars, would increase government spending by 50% and equal the size of the current national debt. And it's actually worse. Experts say Sanders health care plan alone is quote –twice as expensive as he says it is and they say Sanders plans would increase middle class taxes by one third, even for people making less than nineteen thousand a year, and Sanders plans would raise the top tax rate to seventy seven percent. The Boston Globe said –quote "Sanders is not leveling with voters" about the real cost of his spending plans.

EXTREME ON NATIONAL SECURITY

Bernie Sanders' extreme views would gut America's national security and make less safe. Sanders ran for Congress calling for the military budget to be cut by more than half and spending the money on a "major electrified rail system" instead. In Washington, Sanders sponsored a law to unilaterally terminate America's entire nuclear weapons program and sponsored another law to cut the nuclear submarine fleet in half. In Congress, Sanders proposed massive cuts in the intelligence budget and earlier said we should shut down the entire CIA because –quote they "might even be able to overthrow the U.S. government if they chose to." Sanders is so ideologically committed to military cuts that just last year he said –quote we shouldn't spend money on the military "even if it does create jobs."

TROUBLING PATTERN ON CAMPAIGNING

Bernie Sanders says he's running a different kind of campaign, but the record tells another story. Last year a Sanders affiliated political action committee was fined by the federal election commission and Sanders staffers were caught hacking into computers and stealing data on political opponents. This year, Sanders got caught running ads that said he was endorsed by newspapers that actually endorsed his opponent and was forced to remove ads from the air. Sanders got caught claiming endorsements from organizations that endorsed his opponent and the American Legion is now threatening to sue him for falsely claiming he has their support.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

TROUBLING PATTERN ON WOMEN

Bernie Sanders says he supports women's rights, but has a pattern of expressing and tolerating extreme views on women. Sanders once wrote that men fantasize about women being on their knees and women fantasize about being raped by three men simultaneously. Sanders wrote another article that connecting women's sexual behavior to breast cancer and said the way parents teach their daughter about sex –quote– "very well determine whether or not she will develop breast cancer." Now Sanders' supporters are flooding the internet with troubling comments about women quote –voting with their vaginas– and calling women who support Hillary Clinton quote –bitches.

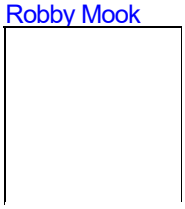
BERNIE VS HRC MESSAGE TEST

BERNIE

Bernie Sanders says we have a corporate establishment whose greed is destroying the economy and a corrupt political establishment beholden to billionaires. Sanders says the billionaire class can't get huge tax breaks and hide profits overseas while the middle class is being hollowed out. Sanders says corporate America and the billionaire class have to start paying their fair share, and that to change things we need a political revolution to undo the power of corporate America and Wall Street. You sure can't change a corrupt system by taking its money. Sanders says one person alone can't change this country, but we can do it together.

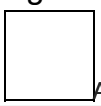
HRC: BARRIERS

Hillary Clinton says we need to break down barriers of social injustice. Clinton says racism and sexism and other forms discrimination are not simply an effect of economic inequality, but are also part of the cause of economic inequality. Clinton says she will hold Wall Street accountable, but Wall Street is not gunning down young African Americans or denying immigrants a path to citizenship. Clinton says we can't move forward when women make seventy eight cents for each dollar men make, when people can be fired just because they're gay or when African American men go to prison at the same rate they graduate college. Clinton says that America can't reach its full potential when you're held back from reaching yours.



HRC CAN'T WAIT

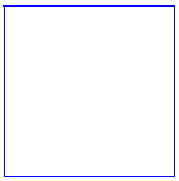
Hillary Clinton says she is not interested in ideas that sound good on paper but will never make it the real world, and she won't make promises she can't keep. Clinton says the single mom who needs raise can't wait for plans that will never happen. The student with a mountain of debt can't wait. The grandmother who has to choose between paying for medicine and paying the rent can't wait. Clinton says she's spent a lifetime making a difference for people and getting results, from winning benefits for the National Guard and Reserve to winning health care for eight million children and she's ready to roll up her sleeves and get to work right now. Clinton says she's ready to tackle our toughest challenges and move our country forward.



Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202-973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: Robby Mook (via Google Docs) <drive-shares-noreply@google.com >
To: gruncom <gruncom@aol.com >
Cc: dschwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >; david <david@db-research.com >; david <david@dixondavismedia.com >; jsullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; jpalmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >; jim.margolis <jim.margolis@gmmb.com >; jbenenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >; john <john@algpolling.com >; john.podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; nnayak <nnayak@hillaryclinton.com >; oshur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com >; rich <rich@dixondavismedia.com >
Sent: Sun, Feb 7, 2016 4:19 pm
Subject: Agenda for 5:30 Post NH Messaging Call

Robby Mook has attached the following document:



Agenda for 4:30 Post NH Messaging Call

Attached is an agenda/guide for our 5:30 call.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Google Docs: Create and edit documents online.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 7/21/2014 12:19:09 PM
Subject: Highlights: Hillary Clinton's Facebook Town Hall

Highlights: Hillary Clinton's Facebook Town Hall

Hillary Clinton visited Facebook headquarters today and participated in a virtual town hall with Facebook users. She took questions from across the country ranging from domestic priorities to foreign policy to personal questions about being an expectant grandmother. Here are some highlights:

Q: If you became president of the United States, what would be your first action item on the agenda?

A: Answering hypothetically... the next President should work to grow the economy, increase upward mobility, and decrease inequality. –Hillary Q: What do you feel about Gaza? Then what will you do?

A: I hope there can be a ceasefire soon to end the conflict. I negotiated the last ceasefire in November of 2012 which I write about in my book and am fully supportive of Secretary Kerry's efforts to work with the Egyptians to forge a new ceasefire. –Hillary

Q : Secretary Clinton: What is your response to President Obama sayin earlier today that Putin has "direct responsibility" for the downing of MH17, and what can we do to bring justice to the families? How can we realistically hold Putin accountable with anything other than sanctions?

A: I agree with the President's comment today and we should do more to ensure a thorough investigation that not only respects those who were murdered in the attack on the plane, but also tries to find answers to who is responsible. In addition, we should work to bring our European allies together with us on tougher sanctions that would make it clear to Putin that there is a price to pay for this kind of behavior and we should encourage Europeans to start immediately to make sure they are less dependent on Russian energy so they are not intimidated. Finally, I would like to see more support given to the Ukrainians to guard their borders and to protect themselves. –Hillary

Q: Are you excited to be a grandmother?

A: I am so excited I cannot wait! –Hillary

Q: I am a school teacher and I love your book...I have not finished yet but so far so good....Will you do us the honor of running for President? Rose Marie

A: Thank you very much for teaching and thanks for the kind words about my book. –Hillary Correct The Record by American Bridge is a strategic research and rapid response team designed to defend potential Democratic presidential candidates from right-wing, baseless attacks.

Correct The Record · http://correctrecord.org/ · Facebook · @CorrectRecord

###

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com>
To: "Jake Sullivan" <Jake.Sullivan@gmail.com>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 4/1/2015 10:15:53 AM
Subject: Iran statement

John, we're working on an Iran statement in anticipation of some kind of deal. Would love your thoughts.
Thanks
Dan

The understanding that the major world powers have reached with Iran is an important step toward a comprehensive agreement that would prevent Iran from getting a nuclear weapon and strengthen the security of the United States, Israel, and the region. Ten years of pressure and diplomacy under both a Republican and Democratic president have gotten us to this point.

Getting the rest of the way to a final deal by June won't be easy, but it is absolutely crucial. The alternative – walking away – would reduce pressure on Iran. There would be no inspections, a fragmented coalition, faltering sanctions, and Iran could resume at full speed a nuclear program that has been frozen by our current efforts.

We're on the right track: a deal extending Iran's breakout time, reducing its uranium stockpiles, dismantling centrifuges in its underground facility, eliminating its effective capacity to produce weapons-grade plutonium, and establishing the kind of aggressive monitoring we need to police Iran's activities.

But I know well that the devil is always in the details in this kind of negotiation. So I strongly support President Obama and Secretary Kerry's efforts between now and June to fill in the details so that we can reach a final deal that verifiably cuts off all of Iran's path to a nuclear weapon.

We have to expect that Iran may try to cheat. That is why tough, unyielding verification is so vital -- the kind of verification that only a negotiated outcome can produce. We should also spell out clearly what the consequences will be if Iran breaches the deal. Sanctions relief should be carefully phased and sanctions should snap back immediately in the event of a violation. If Iran violates the agreement, all options should remain on the table. Any consequences for a breach would be Iran's responsibility.

Even with a successful nuclear deal, Iran will remain a great threats to peace and stability in the Middle East. Its aggression increases instability, fuels terrorism, and threatens the interests of our allies and partners.

So our efforts to deny Iran any pathway to a nuclear weapon has to be part of a comprehensive strategy to check its regional ambitions, strengthen our allies and partners, and revitalize American leadership in the Middle East. That means reinvigorating our partnership with Israel, no matter the recent differences, including increased support for Israeli missile defense systems. It means stepping up efforts to curb Iran's ballistic missile programs and enforce sanctions related to its support for terrorists and violations of human rights. And it means expanding security cooperation with our partners in the Gulf, including new security assurances specific to potential Iranian aggression. We have to push back on Iran's destabilizing actions across the board, confront terrorism, and strengthen the hand of moderate forces in Iraq, Syria, Yemen, and Lebanon. To be clear, none of these problems would be solved by another U.S. ground war in the Middle East. But we have many tools of American power that will help partners prevail: military and economic assistance, humanitarian support, diplomatic pressure, and counterterrorism actions.

There is much to do and much more to say in the months ahead. But with clear-eyed and constant American leadership, we can protect our national interests, keep our people safe, defend our allies and partners, and limit Iran's ability to threaten the region and the world.

Should Congress be able to weigh in on the deal?

Congress, of course, should have a role. But, it is important to let President Obama complete these negotiations. When there is a final, comprehensive deal, Congress and the administration should work out together the appropriate role so that we are maximizing our leverage and flexibility.

Are there things you would change about the deal?

It's not a perfect deal. And I might have approached certainly issues differently -- that's just the nature of this kind of diplomacy. But it's not helpful to be a Monday morning quarterback from thousands of miles away. That's particularly true when the deal that is developing is so much better than any alternatives.

Wouldn't military action do more to stop Iran going nuclear?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The best estimates are that a strike might delay Iran by 3 years. But it would also harden Iran's determination and shatter the international consensus needed for sanctions. So in the short term, it might delay Iran a bit more than a deal. In the longer term, it would ensure that the extreme mullahs harden their grip on power and find a way to break out and go nuclear.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	10/3/2014 2:32:09 AM
Subject:	Correct The Record Friday October 3, 2014 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Friday October 3, 2014 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

Associated Press: "Clinton Feels 'Grandmother Glow' from Charlotte"

"Speaking to a national convention of female real estate professionals, the former secretary of state and potential 2016 Democratic presidential contender called on business and political leaders to close the gap in wages and leadership positions between men and women."

CNN: "New to Hillary Clinton's stump speech: Her granddaughter"

"Hillary Clinton rolled out a new addition to her usual stump speech geared towards women empowerment on Thursday: Her new granddaughter Charlotte."

ABC News blog: The Note: "Hillary Clinton Adds Key Line to Pre-2016 Stump Speech"

"'I think my granddaughter has just as much God-given potential as a boy who was born in that hospital on the same day,' Clinton told the crowd at the Loews Miami Beach Hotel, adding, 'I just believe that. That's the way I was raised.'"

NBC 6 (South Florida): "Hillary Clinton Signs Books in Coral Gables"

"Thousands waited hours in the sun to see Former First Lady and Secretary of State Hillary Clinton Thursday in South Florida."

Fox News: "Hillary Clinton raises $1M for Dem Florida gov candidate Crist at fundraiser"

"Hillary Clinton raised $1 million for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Charlie Crist in a closed-door fundraiser in Coral Gables Thursday night, a

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Crist source confirms to Fox News."

Foreign Policy: "Leave It to Hillary"

"Clinton, who was too centrist for the political swing sought by the public in 2008, may be just right for a public desirous of splitting the difference between the shortcomings of one president who thought he could do it all unilaterally and another who built great coalitions to assist him in postponing problems until his successor could take office."

Politico Magazine: Amb. Christopher R. Hill: "They Sent Me to Iraq. Then They Ignored Me."

"Exhilarated and grateful, I stood on the edge of the landing zone in a line with a few other embassy personnel, all of us waving farewell to our secretary with the expectation she would be back soon. Three months later, Vice President Joe Biden took the lead on Iraq policy and she never returned."

MSNBC: "The sleeper issue of the 2016 Democratic primary"

"Fracking is quickly emerging as an under-the-radar issue likely to influence the Democratic presidential primary in 2016, inflaming passionate opposition among the party's base."

The Week: "Can Bill Clinton save the Senate for Democrats?"

"Whether or not Bill Clinton can pull Pryor or other red-state Democrats across the finish line remains to be seen."

Articles:

Associated Press: "Clinton Feels 'Grandmother Glow' from Charlotte"

By Michael J. Mishak

October 2, 4:05 p.m. EDT

As she weighs another bid for the White House, Hillary Rodham Clinton said Thursday she has a "grandmother glow" that's fueling her campaign for female empowerment and gender equality around the world.

Speaking to a national convention of female real estate professionals, the former secretary of state and potential 2016 Democratic presidential contender called on business and political leaders to close the gap in wages and leadership positions between men and women.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton, who joked that she felt that glow after the recent birth of her first grandchild, Charlotte, said she wanted all women to grow up in a world of "full participation and shared prosperity."

"I think my granddaughter has just as much God-given potential as a boy who was born in that hospital on the same day," she said.

In a speech that drew heavily on her own professional and personal experiences - including several references to her bruising presidential campaign in 2008 - Clinton said women face double standards in business and politics and that governments should work to enact policies that break down barriers to equal opportunity. Her remarks were met with standing ovations.

"These ceilings I'm describing don't just keep down women, they hold back entire economies and countries," she said, "because no country can truly thrive by denying the contributions of half of its people."

Clinton has repeatedly hit those themes as she travels the campaign trail to help Democrats in the midterm elections. On Thursday, she said the U.S. should eliminate what she called the "motherhood penalty" by requiring paid leave for new mothers. The measure, she said, would pave the way for more women to participate in the workforce.

"Laws matter," Clinton said. "I believe 100 percent in women being able to make responsible choices, but it's hardly a choice if you're working at a low-wage job, you get no leave and you can't even afford to bond with your baby because you have to get back to work."

Clinton was also in South Florida to promote her book about her tenure as the nation's top diplomat and to help Democrat Charlie Crist raise money for his gubernatorial campaign. Crist, a former Republican governor, is locked in a tight race with GOP Gov. Rick Scott, who has outspent the Democratic nominee by a 2-1 margin in television advertising.

Clinton has said she expects to make a decision on a White House bid by the beginning of next year. The appearances help increase her exposure to voters in the nation's largest swing-voting state and allow her to reconnect with some of the same big-money donors who supported her and her husband's past political campaigns.

CNN: "New to Hillary Clinton's stump speech: Her granddaughter"

By Dan Merica

October 2, 2014, 6:10 p.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton rolled out a new addition to her usual stump speech geared towards women empowerment on Thursday: Her new granddaughter Charlotte.

"I think my granddaughter has just as much God-given potential as a boy born in that hospital on the same day," the former Secretary of State said at the Commercial Real Estate Women Network Convention in Miami.

Bill and Hillary Clinton became grandparents last week when their only daughter, Chelsea, gave birth to Charlotte Clinton Mezvinsky on Friday, Sept. 26 in New York City.

While it is obvious that that line is new for Hillary Clinton -- the baby was just born last week -- she was more overt in mentioning her granddaughter as a way to drive home her points.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's speech both opened and closed with a mention of her new granddaughter.

When the former secretary of state took the stage, a woman shouted, "You look beautiful!"

Clinton laughed and said, "I think it is a grandmother glow."

"She is doing great," Clinton said of Charlotte. "She is the most perfect, most beautiful, smartest five day old you will ever know."

After delivering a speech that stressed the importance offering an equal playing field to women, Clinton closed her speech stating that with the right policies, her vision of equal pay, paid leave and affordable child care could be attained.

That, Clinton said, is "the kind of country I want my granddaughter growing up in."

Charlotte was also on the minds of many of the attendees -- and participants -- in Thursday's conference. While on stage with Clinton, Judy Nitsch, the president of CREW, asked what advice she will have for Charlotte when she gets older.

"One is do the very best you can at everything you do... but learn from your mistake and your failures," Clinton said. "Second, be kind. Try to find a time for kindness every single day."

Her last piece of advice was something, Clinton said, she hoped to model for her new granddaughter.

"Find something you are passionate about, that you love to do," Clinton said. "And again, pursue it. It can be anything, it can be a sports, it can be the arts, it can be service. Find something that you really feel invested in."

ABC News blog: The Note: "Hillary Clinton Adds Key Line to Pre-2016 Stump Speech"

By Liz Kreutz

October 2, 2014, 3:48 p.m. EDT

Charlotte Clinton Mezvinsky is just five days old and already appears to be a living embodiment of themes her grandmother, Hillary Clinton, could put to use on the campaign trail.

During her prepared remarks at a women's real estate convention in Miami this afternoon, the former secretary of state used a line never heard before on her paid-speaking circuit: one about the future for her new granddaughter.

"I think my granddaughter has just as much God-given potential as a boy who was born in that hospital on the same day," Clinton told the crowd at the Loews Miami Beach Hotel, adding, "I just believe that. That's the way I was raised."

Chelsea Clinton's daughter, Charlotte, was born last week in New York City and is the first grandchild for Bill and Hillary Clinton. Thursday's one-day visit to Miami is the first time Clinton has traveled outside of the state since the baby's birth. Earlier this week, she cancelled her appearance at two other fundraising events in Washington, D.C., because of the new baby.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In addition to her keynote at the CREW convention this afternoon, Clinton is also holding a book signing for her new memoir, "Hard Choices," and campaigning for Florida's Democratic candidate for governor, Charlie Crist.

While Clinton still says she has not made a decision about running for president, equality for women and girls is an issue very close to her and one she will likely bring with her on the campaign trail should she decide to run.

Her comments today indicate that the newest addition to the family is well-positioned to play a role in Clinton 2016 – even if just symbolically.

NBC 6 (South Florida): "Hillary Clinton Signs Books in Coral Gables"

[No Writer Mentioned]

October 2, 2014, 8:39 p.m. EDT

Thousands waited hours in the sun to see Former First Lady and Secretary of State Hillary Clinton Thursday in South Florida.

Clinton was signing copies of her new book "Hard Choices" at Books & Books at 265 Aragon Ave. in Coral Gables.

There, she spoke about her book and about becoming a grandmother just a few days ago, saying, "I highly recommend it!"

Earlier on Thursday, Clinton spoke at the Crew Network Convention & Marketplace at the Loews Hotel in Miami Beach.

Her message for the 1,200 professional women at the event was one of empowerment.

"You can't get tied into knots by what others say and think, because we all know women sometimes get judged by different criteria -- even powerful women in powerful positions," she said.

Karyl Argamasilla, with the Miami Crew chapter, said she took Clinton's message to heart.

"At the end of the day, she's someone who has broken all the glass ceilings," Argamasilla said.

At one point, a woman in the audience shouted out, "2016!" -- the only mention of a possible presidential run during Clinton's Miami stops. But those in attendance said they don't doubt she'll be joining the race.

"She's already been to Iowa," said Steve Sails. "She's running."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Fox News: "Hillary Clinton raises $1M for Dem Florida gov candidate Crist at fundraiser"

[No Writer Mentioned]

October 2, 2014

Hillary Clinton raised $1 million for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Charlie Crist in a closed-door fundraiser in Coral Gables Thursday night, a Crist source confirms to Fox News.

The former secretary of state and potential 2016 Democratic presidential contender headlined the fundraiser for Crist, a former Republican governor who is locked in a tight race with GOP Gov. Rick Scott.

Scott has outspent the Democratic nominee by a 2-1 margin in television advertising.

Clinton also spoke to a national convention of female real estate professionals on Thursday, and said her newborn granddaughter Charlotte is fueling her campaign for female empowerment and gender equality around the world.

Clinton joked that she felt a "grandmother glow" after Charlotte's birth, and said she wanted all women to grow up in a world of "full participation and shared prosperity."

"I think my granddaughter has just as much God-given potential as a boy who was born in that hospital on the same day," she said.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Foreign Policy: "Leave It to Hillary"

By David Rothkopf

October 2, 2014

[Subtitle:] The president arrives at a turning point, but it's unclear whether it means a new Obama or a punt to tomorrow.

There is a scenario that one can imagine is unspooling in the mental multiplexes of the president and his top White House advisors. It is Christmas time. Stockings everywhere are filled to overflowing due to a resurgent U.S. economy. In Iraq and Syria, the Islamic State is beginning to wither under the pressure of the American-led coalition. In Afghanistan, a new government has repaired relations with the United States, and an agreement to leave a smallish U.S. military force in place promises to ensure stability for years to come. And a deal has been reached -- or is within reach -- for the United States and Iran that reduces the threat that Tehran will soon be overseeing a nuclear weapons arsenal.

Sitting by a crackling fire, Barack Obama (who in the late summer of 2014 seemed on the verge of foreign-policy ignominy thanks to a string of lousy policies and bad luck) lifts his mug of eggnog high and toasts his team for engineering a remarkable turnaround. He has regained his mojo, and architects are scrambling to add back the foreign-policy wing to the plans for the Obama presidential library. No more Ditherer-in-Chief or

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hamlet-on-the-Potomac jokes. The most powerful man in the world has re-entered the building!

Of course, in order for this scenario to play out a number of things must go very well, and the public must willingly sets aside two major categories of knowledge: everything they know about the past and everything they might reasonably expect regarding the future.

Setting aside for a moment the economy -- which is actually an area where the president and his team have made huge progress for which they neither give themselves nor receive enough credit -- the obstacles to this scenario on the foreign-policy front are formidable. The bombings that the United States conducts in Iraq and Syria need to do more than blow up the occasional Humvee or armed pickup truck; some capable ground force needs to take advantage of the impact these assaults do have. For such a mobile enemy to be defeated, key elements of its forces need to be in the wrong place at the wrong time and sustain real damage, especially to the enemy's leadership ranks. In Afghanistan, the administration not only needs to cut a suitable deal, but the new government has to gather and maintain support, political enemies need to refrain from undercutting it, and the Taliban and other opposition forces need to sit on their hands. Finally, as far as Iran is concerned, not only does a deal have to be struck, but the political conditions associated with the deal have to be acceptable in both Washington and Tehran. This new deal cannot trigger new sanctions from the United States or new provocations from Iranian hard-liners -- to say nothing of the reactions that might come from America's allies like Israel or those central to the anti-Islamic State coalition.

Experience suggests that all these things will be hard to achieve. It also suggests that other issues may emerge that could overshadow (or call into question) the president's foreign-policy rebound -- whether Vladimir Putin in Ukraine, being linked to protests in Hong Kong, or self-inflicted wounds like the president's ill-considered move to blame his lag in addressing the Islamic State threat on an intelligence community that had, in fact, warned him of the group's rise since it began last year. Experience also suggests that the approach the coalition is taking to defeat the Islamic State -- air power combined with dubious ground-force support -- is not going to work, that forces of instability have the upper hand in Afghanistan (both inside the government and out), and that even if Iran were to truly forswear nuclear weapons, it could still be a big thorn in the side of U.S. interests (as it has been for the past three decades, during which time it has never had, of course, nuclear weapons). All of this means that not only is the happy holiday scenario unlikely to unfold exactly as described, but even the momentary lift Obama's foreign policy is experiencing this fall is likely to dissipate when longer-term historical trends start to regain the upper hand.

But one can hope. And there is no denying that the president has been both bolder in addressing the Islamic State crisis than he appeared just weeks ago and has been pretty stalwart (as has his State Department team) in pursuing the goals in Afghanistan and Iran that have been important goals of his since he took office.

But there is another way to interpret recent moves and foreign-policy initiatives of the administration. They do not represent a change for the president. Instead, they are all really just a continuation of past policies and characteristics of how Obama deals with foreign policy. In each case, scratch the shiny surface rhetoric and one finds that what lies beneath is a common impulse -- to postpone many of the toughest choices associated with addressing major problems until after the president has left office. In short, the goal is to get out of the White House in one piece and leave the hard work to Hillary.

Because hopes and wishes and spin of the White House aside, most of these U.S. policies seem to have been conceived with the idea of doing just as much as is necessary to handle the short-term political needs of the president while creating as little risk as possible for him during the remainder of his term in office. Indeed, you don't have to take my word for it.

The president's own assertion that his primary foreign-policy goal is only to hit "singles" and "doubles" and not "do stupid shit" drives the message home with absolute clarity.

Take the "war" against the Islamic State. First, the president has been resisting action to contain the rising threats associated with the conflict in Syria for three years. Two-hundred thousand people have died there; chemical weapons were used more than a dozen times; foreign fighters flocked to the fractured state; extremist groups flourished with the help of America's "friends"; and still nothing was done. Indeed, action was only taken when, after a series of gaffes and some horrifying videos of beheadings, the president was at the absolute nadir of his foreign-policy standing (doing little to effectively stand up to Putin didn't help). Indeed, the threat he seemed most concerned with came not from the Islamic State but from public opinion.

Wait, you say, don't be so cynical. Obama took action.

Well, did he? And was it designed to actually solve the principal threat to U.S. national security the Islamic State represents? The United States has only really committed to half its "degrade and defeat" formula regarding the extremist group. America may degrade it. But there is not a shred of evidence or even a stated belief on the part of this administration that the United States will, during Obama's term of office, defeat it. The Pentagon's own spokesperson said the effort will take three or four or perhaps five or six or even more years -- in other words, this campaign will continue into the next administration. While we have a coalition, virtually none of its members is committed to what is necessary to defeating the Islamic State -- boots on the ground. (We'll see what Turkey does in the wake of its vote Thursday, Oct. 2, to commit military force to the anti-Islamic State effort.) In fact, the public still doesn't know what the commitments of each of the members is. This is a formula for keeping a lid on a problem, for managing it -- not for solving it.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Think about it from another perspective. Yes, terrorists are tricky and terrible. But the Islamic State is a force of only 20,000 to 30,000 that is roughly the size of the active military in the Dominican Republic. Or, the population of my hometown of Summit, New Jersey. By comparison, say, roughly 20 million people served in the German army during World War II -- which took six years to wage, of which the United States fought for three and a half. The Islamic State has no air force, no navy, no dependable resource base on which to draw; it has had little training and is using lousy equipment. Still we estimate that even if we take 26 of the richest and most powerful nations on Earth, including its sole superpower, and "commit" to fighting Islamic State forces, we will still probably be fighting them six years from now. That's not a commitment. That's an effort to keep a lid on things.

Further, of course, the real problem is not the Islamic State -- it is the spreading, virulent militant extremism that the president has said he has no real desire to address, categorizing it as a "generational" problem for regional powers to handle even though it is clear its spread could destabilize large swaths of Africa, the Middle East, and Asia. Further, even if we beat back the Islamic State, we have no clear plan (or even a coherent policy) for how we will deal with the way that may strengthen the group's extremist enemies in Syria, the Syrian regime of Bashar al-Assad, or forces in Iraq that might not be committed to the Sunni empowerment that is essential to truly stabilizing that country.

As for Afghanistan, literally no one I know in the U.S. government or the NGO community who deals with the country believes the new Afghan government will be able to maintain control without a significant U.S. force (at least 10,000 or so) remaining in country, providing stability that will last precisely until the day they leave. In the meantime, all expect the Taliban to gain ground and political rivalries and corruption to eat away at the government like a cancer. In short, again, the best deals we are striking now are only likely to postpone the big issues until the term of the next president.

When considering the Iran deal, since both sides want to reach an agreement, there are really only two possibilities: Either a deal will be struck by the deadline in November, or both sides will find a way to prolong talks. A permanent breakdown is just not going to happen. The most likely outcome is a phased series of steps to dismantle some of Iran's program to be accompanied by the sanctions relief the Iranians want and need. The first steps will be ones that the U.S. president can do without Congress. If Congress passes new sanctions, the president will veto them. Dealing with the sanctions that require congressional action will likely be delayed until, well, who knows -- maybe after the next president is in place. And of course, that president will have to deal with whether Iran is holding up its end of the deal, whether it is continuing to destabilize the region via Hezbollah, whether reformers can maintain their roles in the face of hard-line pushback, and the hard part of enforcing a deal in which, in all likelihood, the Iranians will get more of what they want (economic normalization) than we get of what we want (delaying their ability to get nuclear weapons -- we've already tacitly accepted the idea of their being able to build them within one year of breaking our agreement).

With Putin, he will get all he wants, and we will not take any steps to preclude him from his next aggressive action. That too will be left for the next president. Dealing with the spread of violent extremism -- for the next president. Re-engaging with the necessary pivot to Asia -- likely left to the person who best championed that pivot in the first place, Hillary Clinton. The list goes on and is too long to cover here. (Also yes, I get it. Hillary may not run, may not be the candidate, may not beat a Republican challenger. But right now, I'll take that bet. She's the one person in the United States of America most likely to be its next president and thus the one person most likely to have to deal with all of Obama's unfinished business.)

And therefore, in all likelihood, President Hillary Clinton's first major foreign-policy challenge will be much like that which faced President Barack Obama -- cleaning up the messes of her predecessor and sending a message to the world that she will not make the same mistakes. Perhaps that is inevitable. We have swung from one extreme to another, too much action to too little, too much appetite for risk to too little, too much of a conviction of America's centrality to world affairs to too little. Clinton, who was too centrist for the political swing sought by the public in 2008, may be just right for a public desirous of splitting the difference between the shortcomings of one president who thought he could do it all unilaterally and another who built great coalitions to assist him in postponing problems until his successor could take office.

Politico Magazine: Amb. Christopher R. Hill: "They Sent Me to Iraq. Then They Ignored Me."

By Amb. Christopher R. Hill

October 2, 2014

It was late April of 2009, and Hillary Clinton was coming to Iraq for her first official trip as secretary of state. Normally, visits by a secretary of state are a logistical nightmare for an embassy. As François Truffaut once said of making films: They start as an effort to create a masterpiece, and end as something you just want to get over with. But Embassy Baghdad was the visitor capital of the world. It had an entire “visits unit” staffed with former military personnel, more political and economic officers for note-taking than any embassy I had ever seen in the world, and logistical strengths in terms of a motor pool that were second to none. Managing the highly choreographed visit of a secretary of state would pose no strain on the embassy. I decided not to worry. After all, I was sure Clinton would be coming every few months.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I had arrived myself in Baghdad only hours before as America’s new ambassador, in what was to be my final posting after a three-decade-long Foreign Service career that had taken me from the front lines of the Balkans conflict and the historic Dayton peace conference to Poland and South Korea. Much of what I saw on my arrival was the the military’s effort to set up the State Department as the successor organization in charge of Iraq. But letting go is hard to do, and the military was clearly uncertain whether the State Department, much less Embassy Baghdad, was ready for the responsibility. The military and its civilian camp followers were used to running everything in Iraq. Iraqi national security meetings held on Sunday nights included U.S. military officials as well as (for civilian sensitivities) the U.S. and British ambassadors, even though the British had pulled their troops out and could not even agree with the Iraqis on a residual maritime patrolling mission. I was appalled by the idea that anyone but Iraqis should be in attendance at an Iraqi national security meeting, but was told to avoid thinking that anything in Iraq should be what is considered normal elsewhere.

I soon learned that the word normal, which I had always thought was on balance a good thing, was taken as a sign that the person did not really understand Iraq.

After she arrived, Secretary Clinton put herself through a grueling day: meetings with Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki and senior Iraqi officials, and women who had lost their husbands to war and violence (alas, sometimes at the hands of our forces). Also, a kind of holdover from her days on the campaign trail: the proverbial town meeting with all sorts of people—young, old, women, men, muftis, seculars in gray suits, sheiks in flowing robes and keffiyehs, women in black chadors and checkered shemaghs, just about everybody.

Finally, at the end of the long day there was a meeting with the U.S. Embassy staff in the large atrium of the half-billion-dollar embassy. Secretary Clinton, seeming to make eye contact with every person in the room, spoke eloquently and passionately, and with a sincerity that brought tears to some eyes. She said how important Iraq was to her, a top-tier issue, and how much she valued the staff at this embassy. She kindly introduced me as the ambassador she would leave behind, and said she would look forward to working with this embassy in the years ahead.

To thunderous applause, she walked the rope line—connecting, it seemed, with everyone she shook hands with or simply touched. She took photos effortlessly with people, waited patiently as employees turned amateur photographers fumbled to find the flash switch on their cell phone cameras. She finally made her exit out of the embassy to the waiting car, her nervous security detail beginning to breathe a sigh of relieve that it was all coming to an end soon. I said goodbye in the car on the edge of the helicopter landing pad, and she made clear that I should call her whenever I needed her help—and I would really need help, she said in mock seriousness.

Exhilarated and grateful, I stood on the edge of the landing zone in a line with a few other embassy personnel, all of us waving farewell to our secretary with the expectation she would be back soon.

Three months later, Vice President Joe Biden took the lead on Iraq policy and she never returned.

***

Soon after I arrived in Iraq, I was asked to produce a weekly memo for the president to update him on what was going on. This request turned into a month-long tug of war between the National Security Council staff and the State Department, because if I was to write a regular memo, surely it should be addressed to my direct boss, Secretary Clinton, first. Finally, in a decision worthy of King Solomon, it was decided that the memo would go to both the president and the secretary, but it would first make its way to the State Department, addressed “Madam Secretary,” so that the secretary could read and reflect on it, then forward it on to the president with her own cover note.

Yet despite the ferocious fight the State Department had put up to make sure these memos did not go directly to the White House, in 15 months of writing them, I never received a single comment on them from anyone in the State Department. President Obama was the only person I ever heard from.

It was increasingly unclear just who was doing what in the first six months of the Obama administration. An embassy, especially a large player like Embassy Baghdad, needs someone in D.C. to watch its back. I had had high hopes that Under Secretary Bill Burns would play that role, but he seemed to have been asked to do everything not Iraq, including taking on the task of ensuring that Iran policy would not be taken over by the White House with the creation of a special envoy position. Although special envoy Dennis Ross, a former Middle East envoy and an internationally respected expert on the region, was to sit at the department, the ease with which he enjoyed relationships in the White House (indeed, all across Washington) made it understandable why the secretary had wanted a crafty operator like Bill to shadow that issue.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The decision to pull Bill away from Iraq meant that our backstop would be Deputy Secretary James Steinberg. Although a political appointee, Jim had had vast experience in the State Department and the White House during the Clinton administration and could be counted on as a steady presence in the interagency process, often a microwave cookbook of bad, half-baked ideas (such as micromanaging what kind of candidate lists to have in the Iraqi election law). Jim had an appetite for facts and figures and a talent for taking any idea, good or bad, and analyzing the perils of it in such a way that soon everyone would want to wheel it back into the garage for further work. Jim saved people from themselves on a daily basis.

But within months, there were rumors that Jim was unhappy with his role at State. Jim was above all a foreign policy realist, especially on China, where he had delivered a thoughtful speech on the need to overcome “strategic mistrust” (during the first term of the Obama administration the word strategic was often married with another word, for example patience, to convey thoughtfulness in foreign policy), but his reflections on China were not necessarily what the administration was looking for at the time. He seemed increasingly unhappy with the more strident tone the Obama administration was taking on China and other issues. I knew he could not be counted on for long to carry water for us back in Washington.

The State Department’s Near Eastern Affairs Bureau leadership was often criticized for being inadequately seized with Israel’s agenda. Many of NEA’s leaders had already done their Iraq time and had no intention of doing any more if they could avoid it. Iraq, so the thinking went, was someone else’s problem—especially the military’s, and rarely did Shia-led Iraq help on any regional issues that NEA was concerned about. Assistant Secretary Jeff Feltman, a veteran Arabist who had had a career in the region in small but important posts, culminating as ambassador in war-torn Lebanon, seemed particularly distressed by Iraq, insofar as it caused him problems with the rest of the region and with the Pentagon suspicions that the State Department lacked commitment.

In the end it was increasingly clear that Iraq remained the military’s problem, not the State Department’s. It is not to say that Iraq was not on people’s minds in Washington. But it was increasingly a legacy issue, a matter of keeping faith with our troops rather than seeing Iraq as a strategic issue in the region.

Iraq got the bureaucratic reputation as a loser, something to stay away from. No question, Shia-led Iraq was the black sheep of the region, with no natural allies anywhere.

Shia-led Iraq also did not fit into any broader theme that the administration was trying to accomplish in the Middle East. The launching of former Senate majority leader George Mitchell’s mission as the Middle East envoy had been grounded almost immediately by the decision to press the Israelis for a settlement freeze as a precondition to the resumption of talks. In June 2009, Mitchell’s team began to consider options for how to approach President Bashar al-Assad in Damascus to explore whether there might be flexibility on the issue of the Golan Heights. CENTCOM commander David Petraeus had taken the view that the Syrians had in fact been helpful on the increasingly peaceful border with Iraq, and that this level of cooperation should be rewarded with a senior U.S. trip to Damascus and discussions with Assad about broader issues. A senior-level trip to Damascus on Middle East peace would be controversial enough, so a cover story was concocted in which the discussion would involve border stability with Iraq.

The department asked me to inform Maliki of our intention to talk with Assad, and to reassure him that the discussions were very preliminary, and that if they went anywhere they would surely not involve any requests made of the Iraqis.

I had already met with Maliki on several occasions in my first few weeks at post. He was intelligent and thoughtful, tending to get down to business faster than the average Iraqi politician. He had a dry sense of humor, and some irony that also eluded many of his contemporaries, not to speak of Washington visitors often frustrated at the lack of any English-language capacity. Apart from saying “very good” excessively to visitors, Maliki appeared to offer very little, though. Extremely thin-skinned, he devoted much of his interpersonal skills to detecting any slights, real or imagined. Fortunately, this extreme sensitivity did not appear to extend to the casual clothing sometimes chosen by Washington visitors to the war zone. Maliki wore dark suits and dark neckties seemingly every day of the year.

He listened to the reassurances I offered on Syria, and thanked me for the heads-up. Then, at first politely, and later not so, he got to the point, “You Americans have no idea what you are dealing with in that regime,” he said. “Everything for those people is a negotiation, like buying fruit in a market.” He gestured at the luncheon table. “If you even mention us [Iraq], Assad will see it as something you are concerned about losing and will make you pay in the negotiation for it. Please do not even say the word ‘Iraq’ to him. Just keep it on your Middle East negotiations. That is your business, not mine.” OK, I thought. That became a typical meeting with Maliki. Not a lot of fun, but at least I know where he stood.

So much, I thought, for the idea that Maliki had some kind of special relations with the Assad regime. I sent the cable in to the department. Within a few days I learned from the embassy’s political-military counselor, Michael Corbin, who was soon to become the Iran-Iraq deputy assistant secretary and briefly visiting Washington in preparation for that assignment, that the proverbial road to Damascus had been closed for permanent repair. Not that I had thought it a particularly good idea to go there in the first place, but I asked Michael why the idea had been shelved, and whether Maliki's skepticism had played any role.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"No idea," he told me, reflecting the chaotic information flow in Washington.

On June 30, 2009, Maliki gave a speech to announce a major development in the U.S.-Iraqi Security Agreement. The occasion was the anniversary of the 2003 assassination of the Iraqi Shia leader Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim. After a few words in memory of the fallen ayatollah, Maliki shifted gears to describe the moment that U.S. forces would withdraw from populated areas as a great victory for the Iraqi people, which did not sit well with those who had backed the war effort. After all, Maliki was suggesting that what had happened was the U.S. forces had in effect been ordered to retreat. But as he talked more about the sacrifice that must attend such a great victory, I began to understand better what he was saying. In essence, Maliki was acknowledging that the Iraqi forces that would soon take over checkpoints and mobile patrols would have their problems doing so. He was bracing people for more casualties to follow.

I understood what he was saying, but it sure didn't win him any friends in Washington. The U.S. commander in Iraq, Gen. Ray Odierno, spoke with him soon thereafter to tell him he needed to make a gesture, suggesting that during his upcoming visit to Washington he visit Arlington National Cemetery and lay a wreath. He did so, but it was too little, too late. Maliki's reputation never recovered in Washington, and complaints about him, whether in matters of human rights or relations with Sunni neighbors, or his attitudes toward Americans, or political alliances within Iraq, all seemed to reinforce each other with the conclusion that Iraq would be better off with a new prime minister, perhaps one who did not seem systematically to upset every conceivable constituent group. Nonetheless, Maliki was a formidable player who could outwork and often outthink his rivals. For years, U.S. officials had looked for a strong Iraqi leader, and having found one they objected to the fact that he didn't do what he was told. As my late colleague from the Bosnian conflict, Amb. Bob Frasure, had once said about a certain Balkan leader, "We wanted a junkyard dog like this for a long time. Why would people expect him to start sitting in our lap?"

The Washington-based concerns about Maliki, reinforced by the complaints from other Arab countries, gave rise to the view that somehow we needed to replace him, as if this were our responsibility let alone within our capability. Foreign ambassadors in Baghdad, having heard the discontent reported by their colleagues in Washington, came to my embassy to ask me, "So, how are you going to get rid of him?" as if I had instructions to do so.

My sense was that these foreign ambassadors were hearing typical Washington grousing and were then pole-vaulting to the conclusion that we were hatching a plan. Obviously that was not the case, but I could tell that the talk was reaching the ever-paranoid Maliki and not helping our relationship with him. I could see that a similar process was unwinding in Afghanistan. Even if the United States were a latter-day Roman Empire as some neocon pundits seemed to want, we still have to work with local leaders like Maliki and Afghanistan President Hamid Karzai. Reports that we were trying to get rid of them didn't help. But even if we wanted to topple Maliki, you can't beat something with nothing, and the Iraqi political landscape was not exactly blooming with new political prospects.

As sparse as that landscape looked to me, I never lacked for advice coming from Washington, where some seemed to think that choosing Iraqi leaders was akin to forming a fantasy football team. People who had served in Iraq, and for whom time froze when they left, increasingly manned Iraq policy. Thus I was treated to suggestions, often in the form of admonishments, as to why I hadn't recently visited such-and-such a politician, who, I was to glean, had been some kind of hot prospect back in 2004 and 2005.

***

The fall of 2009 was a daily grind in Iraq's political corridors as we lobbied the parties for the passage of an election law, on the basis of which there could be an election in early 2010. The Iraqis understood they needed to agree on an election law, but they would do so on their timetable, not ours. Hurrying them, as was Washington's instinct to do, seemed to reinforce in the Iraqi minds that what we really wanted was to get an election, a new government, and pull our troops out.

On Nov. 8, the Iraqi Council of Representatives overwhelmingly approved an election law, but two weeks later Vice President Tariq al-Hashimi, the Sunni representative to the collective presidency—which also consisted of the president, the Kurdish leader Jalal Talabani, and the vice president, the Shia politician Adel Abd al-Mahdi—used the power vested as a member of the presidency to veto the law.

Hashimi's main line of concern with me was the perfidy of the Shia and Kurds, and with Odierno he spent the lion's share of his time seeking the immediate release of nefarious persons inexplicably, in his view, picked up by U.S. forces and held in detention centers. Ray always politely agreed to look into the matter, and would send back his political advisor to Hashimi with the bad news that the individuals in question could not be released at this time. The British-trained Hashimi would take advantage of Ray's British political adviser to give a further spin on how bad things were—and how they were getting worse—due, of course, to the Americans. He then would give her still more lists of persons in detention who in his view had done nothing wrong.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hashimi vetoed the election law based on an issue that was very much a Sunni concern, but which had not played a major role during the parliamentary discussion of the law—the right of out-of-country Iraqis (read: Sunni refugees) to vote. Within weeks, a compromise was worked out. Vice President Biden, Washington's point man on Iraq, and President Obama were pressed into service making telephone calls to senior officials, including offering a Washington visit for Massoud Barzani, the president of Iraqi Kurdistan.

I welcomed Obama's and Biden's direct interest, but I knew that these senior-level phone calls were adding to the perception that the United States was desperate for an election law so that U.S. troops could be withdrawn. By signaling our interest in withdrawal, we began to lose more influence on the ground.

The high-level calls had another unhelpful impact on our efforts. They became part of the toolbox, meaning that whenever there was an impasse on the ground, the idea of ginning up a telephone call quickly emerged on the to-do list. Senior phone calls also had still another negative impact on our efforts: Washington bureaucrats went operational. Thus we began to receive missives offering such nuggets of advice as "Never ignore Hashimi!" Of course, we had been in regular contact with him, but he wasn't the great hope that some of these veterans of the early years had thought. Some of the Washington micromanagement extended to offering me advice as to who from the embassy I should bring along for meetings with Maliki and others. It all added up to an impression that Washington wanted out of Iraq.

The parliamentary election on March 7, 2010, was a peaceful day. U.S. troops, working with Iraqi counterparts, ensured security throughout the country, and the number of incidents was remarkably low. The election results took weeks to tabulate, and when they finally came in they were very close. Ayad Allawi's Iraq National Party, or Iraqiyya, a party that was disproportionately Sunni, won 91 seats, while Maliki's State of Law coalition had 89 seats. A total of 163 seats would be needed to gain a majority of the 325-seat Council of Representatives, and it meant that the two top coalitions would be off to the races. Many of those seats would be controlled by the Kurds, and therefore by Barzani, who mistrusted both Maliki and Allawi.

The difference between Maliki's and Allawi's approaches was striking. Maliki went to work, while Allawi went to CNN. Anytime I visited the prime minister's office I would have to pass a row of tribal chiefs waiting their turn to be wooed with some political favor in return for their willingness to support Maliki. Allawi thought it was enough to get on CNN to accuse Maliki of becoming the "new Saddam." Allawi also thought that what became known as the government formation period was a good occasion to fly around the Middle East and dump on Maliki.

According to a Kurdish leader with good connections to the Egyptian government, Allawi had gone to Cairo to complain to President Hosni Mubarak about Maliki, prompting the Egyptian strongman to respond: "Why are you telling me this? I don't vote in Iraq. In fact, if the situation is as you describe, what are you even doing here?"

In a perfect parliamentary world, the party or coalition that garners the most seats is given the opportunity to form the government. If Iraq were part of that world, Allawi should have been given the right to form the government, having come through the elections with two more seats than Maliki. But the reality of the situation was that with both main coalitions in a statistical dead heat, neither was going to step aside for the other. We knew it would be a long, hot summer. In addition to working harder on the ground for additional seats, Maliki also outpaced Allawi in aggressively challenging the vote count, a decision that opened him to the charge of being a sore loser, and a possible cheater. His recount demands also exposed him to the charge that he was ultimately not going to respect the results of the voting and might, as General Odierno suggested in a teleconference with Washington, try to stage a "rolling coup d'état." Ray surprised everybody with that comment. It was nothing he had ever said to me in private, nor had he taken that tone in any conversation with Maliki. I always tried to make sure we spoke with one voice on the teleconferences with Washington, but I fell silent when he expressed that opinion, especially as he as he hadn't warned me. The effect of his comment on Washington was to heighten concerns about Maliki's intentions.

Indeed, Maliki's tough-minded behavior, his own bitter disappointment at not coming out ahead of Allawi and his increasing feistiness on every issue were making him a thoroughly unlikable and unlikely candidate to replace himself. The foreign press corps was completely against him. Most foreign diplomats were against him, including the U.S. Embassy's own political section.

Maliki was far from my ideal candidate, but I had real doubts whether someone else was going to be able to unseat him. "Can't beat someone with no one," I kept repeating to Gary, Yuri and other members of the political section, who always seemed to fall silent when I asked the question, "If not Maliki, then if you were king who do you suggest for prime minister?" as if it were our choice to make. As the crucial postelection weeks of April and May 2010 rolled by, Allawi spent more of his time traveling abroad, using a jet provided him by the Gulf states, instead of building his political support back home. I also noticed that regardless of Maliki's volatile and at times ugly behavior, there seemed to be no swing from the other Shia blocs toward Allawi.

The process suggested to me that much of what we were seeing from the other Shia was just bluster and an effort to give Maliki a well-deserved hard time, but that whenever Maliki was prepared to show some real respect and humility toward them, he could also gain their support.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Maliki's Shia detractors had plenty of kind words for Allawi, but I could not see that any of them were truly prepared to support Allawi's Iraqiyya. In Erbil, many Kurds describe Iraqiyya as a crypto-Baathist party. I became skeptical that the Shia and Kurds would ever allow Iraqiyya to become the governing party. He seemed to have no chance of increasing the number of seats through coalition-building beyond the 91 he had won in the actual election.

Allawi was a Shia himself, but he was secular. Those foreigners, and especially those foreigners who had not seen these political patterns in other countries, who believed that a Shia without Shia constituents could become prime minister in Iraq's current circumstances didn't understand the game being played. During the hard-fought campaign, Allawi never ventured into southern Iraq, where most of the Shia lived. He did not make the slightest effort to gain Shia votes. I concluded that the government formation period was not going to be even close, but I hedged my comments to Washington, not wanting to seem pro-Maliki or anti-Allawi.

I concluded we needed to focus on making a better Maliki than he had been in his first four-year term, rather than engage in a quixotic effort to try to oust him.

As the summer wore on, Maliki, who unlike Allawi rarely left the country or even, it seemed, his office, started making progress with the other Shia and some small Sunni parties. While no one was overtly committing to him, it was clear that he was building the momentum to expand well beyond the 89 seats he already controlled. Allawi, still stuck at 91 seats, at one point met with the Shia cleric Muqtada al-Sadr in Damascus, a bizarre meeting evidently arranged for Allawi by Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, who probably had tired of Maliki and his public allegations against the Syrians for terrorist attacks in Iraq. Allawi's meeting with Sadr didn't lead to anything.

In the meantime, Barzani, the Kurdish leader, began to say that Maliki might be an acceptable choice after all. Barzani had no interest in a Kurdish-Shia alliance that would isolate the Sunnis, but he had realized, just as I had, that there were no good alternatives to Maliki.

In early August Barzani invited me to his hometown of Barzan, up in Kurdistan. We talked nonstop about the political deadlock and about Barzani's welcome decision to invite Maliki to his palace in Sulahaddin, just north of the Kurdish capital of Erbil, the next day. By prearrangement, at 4 p.m. my cell phone rang and a voice, identified as "Joe," was on the other end of the line. It was Vice President Biden. I gave the phone to Barzani, who sat down on a folding chair cupping his other ear to reduce the roar of the river. He and "Joe" had a good discussion about the importance of the next day. We knew that the upcoming meeting with Maliki would be crucial to forming a government.

I said farewell to Barzani that evening outside the guesthouse. I knew it was my last visit to Kurdistan, and given that I was leaving Iraq a few days later, and my career in the Foreign Service a few days after that, I knew it was my last chance at diplomatic deal making. The odds are often stacked against these deals working out, and when they do they are sometimes short-lived, but the feeling that one has done everything possible is a very good one. And better yet was the appreciation for someone like Barzani, who, unlike a visiting diplomat, has to live with the consequences that any political deal would involve. We performed our awkward hugs and kisses before I headed to the helicopter for the trip back to Baghdad.

I met Maliki in the morning and told him I thought the road was open to a rapprochement with Barzani, provided he was willing to address Kurdish concerns about their oil contracts and previous understandings about disputed territory with Arab Iraq. Much later that day, word came from Erbil that the meeting between Maliki and Barzani had gone well. They pledged to work together for "inclusive" government—i.e., there would be a Sunni component as well.

***

Three days later, I climbed in my last Black Hawk helicopter, strapped myself into the seat next to the window, and rose up from the embassy landing pad. We crossed out over Baghdad, its bright city lights shining in the gathering dusk. In Washington a day later, Secretary Clinton asked to see me in between appointments. She was busy that day, and even though it was my last day in the State Department as a Foreign Service officer, I knew she had other things going. I quickly briefed her on the embassy operations, and said how pleased I was that a very good successor, the U.S. ambassador to Turkey, Jim Jeffrey, had been named to follow me. I told her about my next career as dean of the Korbel School of International Studies at the University of Denver. She warmly said goodbye and thanked me for my 33 years of service. And then she asked me a question as I started walking through the outer door of her office.

"Who could have ever thought Maliki should have a second term?"

"Beats me," I answered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MSNBC: "The sleeper issue of the 2016 Democratic primary"

By Alex Seitz-Wald

October 2, 2014, 4:46 p.m. EDT

Fracking is quickly emerging as an under-the-radar issue likely to influence the Democratic presidential primary in 2016, inflaming passionate opposition among the party's base.

The use of hydraulic fracturing to extract oil and gas has created thousands of new jobs and drastically increased domestic energy production, but it has also raised major environmental and health concerns.

Not unlike the issue of Common Core educational standards among conservatives, fracking touches a nerve with rank-and-file progressives, especially in rural areas, even as it gets less attention from cosmopolitan Democrats, who will likely never encounter a fracking well in their backyard.

Anti-fracking activists on the left have been disappointed by the Obama White House's acquiescence to the technique – it's hard for any president to turn down jobs during a recession – and are pressuring those who might be the Democratic Party's next presidential nominee to draw a harder line.

Activists have already knocked former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and are turning their sights on other potential candidates.

New York and Maryland are the only two states with shale formations that haven't yet allowed drilling. As it happens, both states have popular Democratic governors with major national ambitions.

In New York, Gov. Andrew Cuomo has said that anti-fracking activists are by far the visible pressure group in the state. "I literally see them everywhere I go," he told Capital New York. "One of my daughters joked – we were pulling up to an event – she said, 'We must be in the wrong place. There are no fracking protesters.'"

Last year, anti-fracking activists ran a full-page ad in The Des Moines Register – far from Albany, but close to the Iowa Caucuses – warning Cuomo: "Not one well."

And the pressure is now on Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley. In a letter sent to him Thursday, a coalition of more than 200 environmental, progressive and health groups fired a warning shot across the bow of the nascent O'Malley presidential effort.

If he runs for president —and it's looking increasingly like he will – the governor will want to be the consensus progressive alternative to Clinton. With progressive icon Sen. Elizabeth Warren unlikely to enter the race, O'Malley has a good shot at carrying that mantle, though he may have to compete with others like Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

O'Malley has been working hard to lay the groundwork for a campaign, and he has positioned himself to the left of Clinton on everything from immigration to campaign finance.

Fracking would be another obvious place for him to draw a contrast with the former secretary of state, who has said she will announce her 2016 plans early next year. If O'Malley doesn't do that, however, some activists are warning he could risk his position as a leading liberal alternative.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"If Gov. O'Malley is serious about making a play for progressive 'Warren-wing' Democratic voters in the 2016 presidential primary, he should know better than to do Wall Street's bidding and put the health of millions at risk by allowing fracking to come to Maryland on his watch," said Jim Dean, the chair of Democracy for America, a national organization that grew out of Howard Dean's 2004 presidential campaign.

More than three years ago, O'Malley effectively imposed a moratorium on fracking in Maryland until the completion of a study he commissioned. With the study process wrapping up soon, the anti-fracking activists who sent the letter Thursdaywant O'Malley to take a stand against the practice, both for the remainder of his final term and to influence the next governor of his state.

And they worry privately that if the more progressive O'Malley approves drilling in Maryland, it will give political license for Cuomo to do the same in New York.

"In 2016, Democrats are looking to nominate a presidential candidate who will stand up and fight growing income inequality, not cave to the special interest forces on Wall Street who advocate for fracking at any cost," added Dean, whose group has 20,000 members in Maryland.

While the letter focused exclusively on the potential health and environmental risks fracking may pose to Maryland residents, some of the groups involved – like Dean's – used the release as a means to remind O'Malley of the potential risk to his personal ambitions as well.

Wenonah Hauter, executive director of Food & Water Watch, another member of the coalition, also hinted at 2016. "Gov. O'Malley is traveling extensively throughout the country to places like Iowa, Nevada, and New Hampshire in an effort to raise his national profile and tout his environmental record, but the national movement against fracking is watching what is happening in Maryland closely," Hauter said. "Should Gov. O'Malley open the state to fracking, that is what people will remember about him."

Currently, fracking is regulated on the state level, but many environmentalists and progressives want federal regulation or even an outright ban on the practice. A majority of Democrats (59%) opposed fracking, according to a Pew poll from last September, and the opposition is even higher among liberals (64%).

At the same time, there are many in the party who view fracking as a boon to the economy and U.S. energy independence. And natural gas is much cleaner than other fossil fuels, so many environmentalist view the fuel as an ideal "bridge" to a future when renewable energy is more practical.

That's the balance Democrats hoping to win their party's nomination in 2016 will have to make.

The Week: "Can Bill Clinton save the Senate for Democrats?"

By Matt K. Lewis

October 3, 2014, 6:35 a.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] Liberals certainly hope so

With barely a month to go until the midterm elections, and President Obama's coattails looking more and more like a lead weight, vulnerable Democrats across the country are turning to former President Bill Clinton to appeal to red-state voters. And some analysts are calling on him to do even more. Here's Brent Budowsky at The Hill:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“My advice to the Democratic Party for the close of the midterm elections would be for Clinton to tape a series of 3- to 5-minute videos supporting top Democratic Senate candidates, in addition to personally campaigning for them. [...]

“[T]he party should bring the appealing and optimistic Clinton message to the widest circle of voters in the largest number of states. It could be a decisive advantage for Democrats that the most believable political referee in the nation supports the plays of the home team in the closing minutes of a tie game. [The Hill]”

This isn't the first time Democrats have looked to Bubba to bail them out. After all, it was the "explainer in chief" who seemed to make the argument for President Obama's re-election better than anyone — remember that stemwinder at the 2012 convention? — and if the Democrats are able to preserve their Senate majority in 2014, Bill Clinton will once again deserve much of the credit.

Next week, Clinton will return to Arkansas to headline a series of rallies for several candidates, including Democratic Sen. Mark Pryor, who is attempting to fend off a tough challenge from GOP Rep. Tom Cotton. Mounting evidence indicates that Pryor is in deep trouble, with most polls showing Cotton narrowly ahead. But Clinton's potential appeal in Arkansas is even stronger than elsewhere: After all, he was governor for a dozen years, and the state is home to his presidential library. (And as Patricia Murphy notes, he has an additional incentive: "Winning in November would not only mean victory for his friends, but also for his own legacy, preserving the brand of Southern progressive politics he has championed and installing Clinton allies in important statewide slots ahead of a potential 2016 presidential bid for Hillary Clinton.")

So an all-Bill, all-the-time strategy is a no-brainer for Dems and the Clintons, right? Well, not necessarily.

First, Clinton can't necessarily just deliver Arkansas. He couldn't do it for Al Gore in 2000. And he campaigned hard for then-Sen. Blanche Lincoln in 2010 — even appearing in a hard-hitting campaign ad for her. She got crushed by 20 points.

Look no one believes Pryor will lose by such a wide margin. But Lincoln's loss should put the Clinton visit in context.

Still, as Todd Purdum at Politico Magazine recently noted, "There is more demand for Bill Clinton on the campaign trail than for any other single figure in either party — including President Obama."

And the fact that President Clinton — once mired in scandal himself, once shunned by his own party — has emerged as the most sought after surrogate is quite noteworthy. Today, Mark Pryor might want to distance himself from Barack Obama, but a dozen years ago, he was distancing himself from Bill Clinton.

During his 2002 race, Pryor was benefiting from running against an opponent (then-Sen. Tim Hutchinson) who was plagued by an adultery scandal. Pryor (who is now divorced) was trying to usurp the "family values" mantle. Thus, he sought to keep his distance from (you guessed it!) Bill Clinton.

A 2002 news report noted that Pryor "studiously avoided appearing at any of the Democratic fundraising events that former President and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton has headlined in the state this year, including a get-out-the-vote rally earlier this week." One news report from the time shows Pryor begging off a Clinton appearance, opting instead to do "debate prep." Another notes that Pryor waited to accept a speaking invitation alongside Clinton until after the programs had been printed, so he wouldn't be listed as a speaker. As Jeff Zeleny noted at the time, "In Clinton's home state of Arkansas, a Democratic candidate for Senate declined to appear publicly with him late last month. Clinton's former chief of staff, running for Senate in North Carolina, has also made it clear that he wants his old boss nowhere near his race."

So what's changed? Obviously, the passage of time has healed some wounds. You could also argue that the nation's changing views on social issues and cultural mores helps. And, of course, there's the fact that Bill Clinton is an incredibly gifted and likable politician.

It's strategic, too. I recently interviewed Daniel Halper about his book Clinton, Inc.: The Audacious Rebuilding of a Political Machine. As the title suggests, the Clintons have assiduously plotted this comeback by taking proactive steps, including the building of a post-presidential philanthropic infrastructure, wooing former enemies, and, as Halper puts it, "seducing the Bushes."

Whether or not Bill Clinton can pull Pryor or other red-state Democrats across the finish line remains to be seen. But the very fact that he's the one they now turn to — having shunned him a dozen years ago — is, itself, a big story. Guess we know why they call him the "comeback kid."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· October 6 – Ottawa, Canada: Sec. Clinton speaks at Canada 2020 event (Ottawa Citizen)

· October 8 – Chicago, IL: Sec. Clinton stumps for Illinois Gov. Quinn (Chicago Sun-Times)

· October 8 – Chicago, IL: Sec. Clinton keynotes AdvaMed 2014 conference (AdvaMed)

· October 13 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton and Sen. Reid fundraise for the Reid Nevada Fund (Ralston Reports)

· October 13 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton keynotes the UNLV Foundation Annual Dinner (UNLV)

· October 14 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton keynotes salesforce.com Dreamforce conference (salesforce.com)

· October 28 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton fundraises for House Democratic women candidates with Nancy Pelosi (Politico)

· December 1 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton keynotes a League of Conservation Voters dinner (Politico)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 2/11/2015 1:29:13 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Wednesday February 11, 2015 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Wednesday February 11, 2015 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

New York Times: “Emerging Clinton Team Shows Signs of Disquiet”

"In a statement, Mr. Messina suggested there was little tension with Mr. Brock or his organizations. 'Priorities USA Action works closely and cooperatively with progressive champion David Brock and American Bridge,' he said. 'Both organizations have clear and complementary missions, and we look forward to continuing to work together to build on our shared success.'"

BuzzFeed: “How A Clinton Insider Fight Turned Public”

"A few hours later, the two parities issued twin statements to reporters. Brock said he would consider rejoining the board. And Granholm, the co-chair and former Michigan governor, acknowledged in hers that Priorities took Brock’s concerns 'seriously and are working to address them.'"

Politico: “Hillary Clinton’s best frenemies”

[Subtitle:] “Her likely challengers won’t utter a critical word about the Democratic frontrunner.”

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: “Dukakis: Hillary will be '16 nominee”

“Michael Dukakis, the 1988 Democratic presidential nominee, says Hillary Clinton is going to be the party's 2016 standard-bearer — and he’s okay with that.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Capital New York: “Hillary Clinton’s Brooklyn options are limited”

“It would be hard enough for Brooklyn and Queens to accommodate a 50,000-square-foot tenant. A 100,000-square-foot requirement would further narrow Clinton's options in two boroughs that have, for decades, sent commuters to offices in Manhattan, rather than developing office space themselves.”

Politico: “Hillary Clinton to be in D.C. on same day as Bibi speech”

“Clinton’s spokesman did not respond to a question about whether the two plan to meet, but the convergence of the prime minister and former secretary of state brings together two of the most-talked about figures in politics, at a crucial time for both of them.”

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: “Priebus: Hillary can't 'connect the dots'”

“The chairman of the Republican National Committee says Hillary Clinton is keeping a low public profile because her team knows she can't ‘connect the dots’ for a successful presidential campaign.”

Articles:

New York Times: “Emerging Clinton Team Shows Signs of Disquiet”

By Nicholas Confessore and Amy Chozick

February 10, 2015

Lingering tensions between Hillary Rodham Clinton’s loyalists and the strategists who helped President Obama defeat her in 2008 have erupted into an intense public struggle over who will wield money and clout in her emerging 2016 presidential campaign.

At issue is controlling access to the deep-pocketed donors whose support is critical to sustain the outside organizations that are paving the way for Mrs. Clinton’s campaign. It is a competition that has been exacerbated, many Clinton supporters said, by Mrs. Clinton’s reluctance to formally enter the race and establish a campaign organization with clear lines of authority.

The dispute broke into the open on Monday after David Brock, a Clinton ally, accused Priorities USA Action — a pro-Clinton “super PAC” whose co-chairman is Jim Messina, Mr. Obama’s 2012 campaign manager — of planting negative stories about the fund-raising practices of Mr. Brock’s organizations. Mr. Brock resigned from the super PAC’s board in protest.

Mr. Messina is one of the half-dozen top veterans of Mr. Obama’s campaigns that Mrs. Clinton’s tightknit circle of advisers has hired or courted, vexing some longtime Clintonites seeking more prominent roles for themselves. Other former Obama aides are working with pro-Clinton groups to organize grass-roots volunteers or to fend off attacks on her record, efforts that some Democrats view as the first step toward a place in Mrs. Clinton's campaign when it finally gets off the ground.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

All recognize that Mrs. Clinton's political operation could dominate the Democratic Party for the next decade, controlling the flow of commissions, consulting work and political appointments. But the marriage between the two camps — based to a large degree on mutual interest, if not love — now appears more uneasy than at any time since Mr. Obama asked Mrs. Clinton to serve in his administration after the 2008 election.

"It is 'The Dream Team,' but only five can start," said John Morgan, a Florida lawyer who has raised money for Mr. Obama and hosted fund-raisers with former President Bill Clinton. "Who do you put at guard? Jordan, LeBron, Kobe, Magic, Bird, Derrick Rose? That is where it is."

The list of Obama veterans now working in "Clinton World" includes the New York-based pollster Joel Benenson, whom Mrs. Clinton has settled on as chief strategist over several pollsters with long Clinton ties. A consulting firm founded by two Obama voter-turnout specialists, Mitch Stewart and Jeremy Bird, is being paid $20,000 a month by Ready for Hillary, a super PAC focused on organizing grass-roots Clinton supporters. Jim Margolis, whose firm handled lucrative media-buying contracts for Mr. Obama's campaigns, will also advise Mrs. Clinton, whose campaign will probably raise and spend over a billion dollars in the next two years.

But Mr. Brock's path to the Clinton inner circle is perhaps the most convoluted. Once a conservative journalist whose reporting on President Clinton prompted Paula Jones's 1994 sexual harassment lawsuit against him, Mr. Brock has since emerged as a prominent liberal organizer and one of Mrs. Clinton's chief defenders.

With the tacit blessing of both Clintons, Mr. Brock has maneuvered his $28 million network of media-monitoring and opposition research organizations into the center of the emerging Clinton effort, establishing a new project, Correct the Record, that has defended Mrs. Clinton in the news media and even issued daily emails explaining her positions.

His successful fund-raising has been led by Mary Pat Bonner, whose firm has been paid millions of dollars by Mr. Brock's groups to court donors — some of whom have criticized the arrangement as well as Mr. Brock.

"He is a cancer," said Mr. Morgan, who is close to Mr. Messina.

"If you care about your party and our country, you just do what you are asked," said Mr. Morgan, referring to Mr. Brock's public resignation from Priorities USA, which immediately reignited tales of infighting from Mrs. Clinton's 2008 campaign. "If you care about yourself, you take your toys and go home."

Mr. Brock declined to comment.

Susie Tompkins Buell, a friend of Mrs. Clinton's and a donor from San Francisco who is close to Mr. Brock, said he "is an incredibly important part of the Democratic Party" whose work "protects us from the onslaught and destruction of the Republican attack machine."

Ms. Buell added: "Certain people are trying to destroy David through off-the-record conversations with reporters. They are spineless and devious."

Mr. Messina, now a consultant with a significant roster of corporate and political clients, became co-chairman of Priorities early last year, charged with helping the advertising-oriented super PAC secure hundreds of millions of dollars in contributions. But with the campaign season still a year away, Mr. Messina and his team have encountered some difficulty getting commitments, according to several Democrats involved in helping the group.

Mr. Brock, in turn, has been reluctant to cede turf — or pre-eminence — to Obama veterans like Mr. Messina. "He was never accepted" by the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama camp, said one Clinton loyalist, who like most people interviewed for this article declined to speak on the record for fear of angering either the president or the woman who hopes to replace him.

Months ago, Mrs. Clinton's top advisers encouraged the three pro-Clinton super PACs — Ready for Hillary, Priorities USA and Mr. Brock's American Bridge 21st Century — to combine efforts. Mr. Brock's organization would provide opposition research to Priorities, which would eventually raise high-dollar donations to pay for attack ads. Ready for Hillary would dissolve after Mrs. Clinton officially declared her candidacy.

But Priorities is the only one of the groups founded by Obama operatives, making it the least easiest to fit into the emerging Clinton apparatus. And all outside groups are facing increased competition from official party organizations, like the Democratic National Committee, which are now free to solicit their own million-dollar commitments from big donors, thanks to new campaign finance rules inserted into December's federal spending bill.

In a statement, Mr. Messina suggested there was little tension with Mr. Brock or his organizations. "Priorities USA Action works closely and cooperatively with progressive champion David Brock and American Bridge," he said. "Both organizations have clear and complementary missions, and we look forward to continuing to work together to build on our shared success."

Several donors approached by Priorities in recent months, including some advised by Ms. Bonner, said they had already given generously or otherwise committed to Mr. Brock. Mr. Messina's allies worry that Clinton loyalists will seek to replace him with another strategist closer to Mrs. Clinton, perhaps Guy Cecil, previously a contender for the job of Mrs. Clinton's campaign manager.

When the Priorities board issued a statement on Monday evening asking Mr. Brock to reconsider his resignation, it was signed not by Mr. Messina but by his co-chairwoman, Jennifer M. Granholm, the former Michigan governor and a Clinton supporter in 2008. Ms. Granholm and other Priorities officials have sought to soothe Mr. Brock, Democrats assisting the group said, and he has suggested he would be open to rejoining the super PAC's board.

In an interview, Mr. Messina denied a report in BuzzFeed that he had used the controversy around Ms. Bonner's fees to try to rally donors around a pledge to hold back checks from any organizations paying fund-raisers on commission. Such a campaign could cripple Mr. Brock's groups, which rely entirely on Ms. Bonner's firm to raise money.

"I've never heard of a petition, I don't know anything about it, no one has talked to me," Mr. Messina said. "It's not true."

BuzzFeed: "How A Clinton Insider Fight Turned Public"

By Ruby Cramer

February 10, 2015, 3:22 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] The pro-Clinton groups are a delicate balance of money and power. On Monday, the uneasy alliance between former Obama and Clinton backers saw its first explosion — the big fundraising rift that must be repaired.

Around lunchtime last Thursday, a sense of relief rippled through the tight network of friends, staffers, and donors connected to David Brock, the man at the center of a coordinated, independent effort to elect Hillary Clinton.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For weeks, they'd been bracing for a New York Times story in the works: a critical A1 look at Brock's longtime fundraiser, Mary Pat Bonner, airing complaints that her firm is paid on commission, taking a cut of the donor money she nets for clients, which include a set of pro-Clinton entities founded by Brock.

When the piece ran, the reaction inside Brock's circle was the same: Bonner had emerged largely unscathed. There was no need to respond. The crisis was over.

But that changed four days later when questions about the origins of the Bonner story precipitated an unexpected, deep, and public splintering in the pro-Clinton operation. The rift revealed doubts about the trust between its most central players, namely the officials at Priorities USA Action, the high-dollar super PAC facing a massive task: raising an estimated $300 to $500 million.

On Monday afternoon, Brock resigned from the board of Priorities. In a letter to the co-chairs, Jim Messina and former Gov. Jennifer Granholm, Brock alleged that current and former officials from Priorities were responsible for pushing the story to the Times and waging an "orchestrated political hit job" against Bonner and the research groups that Brock heads, Media Matters and American Bridge.

Brock was placed on the board of Priorities one year ago, along with stakeholders from other groups, as a largely symbolic position, meant to project unity. The super PAC has never convened a full board meeting, one source said.

The central triad of outside Clinton groups — Priorities, American Bridge, and Ready for Hillary, a super PAC building a list of supporters — has worked in lockstep for most of the last year. But the letter, first published by Politico, is the latest example of a repeated claim among members of the pro-Clinton network: that Priorities has tried to wrest control of money and position, even at the expense of allies.

In interviews this week, people close to both sides described a frenzied weekend, as officials traded dozens of phone calls about the Bonner article. Some claimed that the story had "backfired" on current or former Priorities officials: It contained the admission that, in 2012, the super PAC had itself used fundraisers who took commission, upsetting one donor, Irwin Jacobs, according to the Times.

By Sunday, Brock told friends and colleagues he was "confident" Priorities played a role in pushing the story, according to three sources who spoke with him. Priorities officials still deny any involvement with the Times story.

But Brock only decided to resign on Monday after learning about what he believed was a second hit on his groups from Messina, the Priorities co-chair and former campaign manager for President Obama.

In a round of calls to fellow Priorities board members that afternoon, Brock said he had learned over the weekend that Messina and a donor Messina advises were leading an effort to get other donors to sign a pledge vowing not to contribute to groups who employ fundraisers working on commission.

Brock told board members he believed the attacks wouldn't stop unless he took public action, sources said. A Priorities official denied the Messina effort existed.

At least one official involved with the groups raised objections to Brock's public resignation, worrying the move would create bad press for Clinton, whose 2008 presidential campaign fought frequent "infighting" headlines.

When the letter went out to the board, Priorities officials sought to resolve the problem swiftly and reinstall Brock on the board. The matter was described by several as an imperative: His group, American Bridge, is in line to serve as the research clearinghouse for Priorities during the election.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On a 4 p.m. conference call on Monday, Brock spoke with officials from the PAC, including Granholm, senior advisers Paul Begala and Sean Sweeney, executive director Buffy Wicks, and board member Charlie Baker.

A few hours later, the two parities issued twin statements to reporters. Brock said he would consider rejoining the board. And Granholm, the co-chair and former Michigan governor, acknowledged in hers that Priorities took Brock's concerns "seriously and are working to address them."

In interviews this week, officials close to both sides said they believed the problem between Priorities and Brock comes down to one main point: money.

Brock, who works as a fundraising team with Bonner on all 10 of the Democratic entities he runs, maintains relationships with a loyal group of donors. There is a belief among Priorities officials, two sources said, that Brock and Bonner's annual fundraising of about $28 million each year has created a "traffic issue."

In a similar dispute two years ago, Priorities officials tried to shut down Ready for Hillary over concerns it would siphon off high-dollar donations. The smaller super PAC agreed to set a voluntary cap of $25,000 on contributions.

Since the midterm elections, officials working on the pro-Clinton effort have privately worried that Priorities is behind in its goal to raise as much as $500 million. In 2012, when the PAC formed to support Obama's reelection, it was a lean, tight operation with smaller money targets and a more straightforward objective: to define Republican Mitt Romney early with cutting television ads.

But Democrats close to Priorities list a number of concerns ahead of the next race: There is no apparent fundraising or message strategy yet, and some officials believe that Messina, the co-chair who also runs his own consulting firm, is not involved enough. When the Brock resignation letter hit, he was in England, where he is working for the Conservative Party. (A tweet he posted in the midst of talks to get Brock back on the board made the rounds by email among the pro-Clinton officials on Monday: "Great night in London," he wrote.)

Since the midterms, the PAC has raised just around $1,000, and now has about $500,000 cash in the bank, according to recent election filings.

Officials aligned with both groups said they hoped to have the conflict resolved fully, with Brock back on the board of Priorities, in a matter of days.

Politico: "Hillary Clinton's best frenemies"

By Ben Schreckinger

February 11, 2015, 5:32 a.m. EST

[Subtitle:] Her likely challengers won't utter a critical word about the Democratic frontrunner.

What makes Jim Webb a better presidential candidate than Hillary Clinton? "I really don't have an answer for you on that," the former Virginia senator told NPR late last month. Where does Martin O'Malley differ from Clinton as a leader? "My mind is not even in the compare-contrast mode," O'Malley told the New York Times. How does the bombastic Bernie Sanders feel about the candidate he's planning to challenge for the Democratic nomination? "This is a woman I respect, clearly a very intelligent person," Sanders said Monday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

With enemies like these, who needs friends?

Time and time again, when invited to criticize Clinton, her potential Democratic primary rivals have ducked, deflected and dodged. They're trying to present themselves as viable alternatives to the daunting frontrunner without addressing the obvious question of how they stack up against her.

"At the end of [interviews], somebody has to ask me a question about Hillary, and I try not to attack her. Usually, no matter what I say, it becomes 'Hillary Clinton,'" said Sanders, raising his arms in a sweeping gesture as if to indicate that Clinton's name becomes the banner headline. "What I'm running on are the issues … Her name recognition is about 10 times greater than mine, so if I run, it would take a lot of work getting around the country introducing myself to people."

With Elizabeth Warren continuing to resist entreaties to enter the race, liberals are still waiting for a serious challenger to Clinton to emerge — if only to ensure the party's progressive wing gets the attention and respect it believes its views deserve. At this point in 2007, President Barack Obama was declaring his candidacy and drawing a contrast with Clinton on issues like the Iraq War and the politics of triangulation, pioneered by Clinton's husband in the 1990s.

This time around, would-be Clinton spoilers are not so far along.

The outspoken Sanders deflected a question about Clinton posed by POLITICO late last month. "All I know is if I run, I'm not running against Hillary Clinton," protested the Vermont senator, who if he runs, almost certainly would be running against Clinton. Over the weekend, he did engage the prospective match-up more directly, telling MSNBC that it would be a "real clash of ideas" on issues like trade, climate change and infrastructure investment.

But at an event at the Brookings Institution this week, Sanders made it clear he had little interest in going after the former secretary of state.

"It is not my style to trash people," he said.

Clinton's other two most likely rivals haven't even gone that far. Before Webb dodged a Hillary question from NPR's Steve Inskeep ("If I were to run, it would not be sort of as a counterpoint to her") he ducked a similar one put to him by Yahoo's Matt Bai in late December ("I'm not running against Hillary Clinton"). When an O'Malley operative began talking about Clinton to a New York Times reporter last fall, the former Maryland governor's communications director "jabbed him in the side" to make him stop, according to the newspaper's account.

The repeated questions and dodges underscore the unusual nature of the Democratic race. Though Clinton is a private citizen who has not declared she is running, she has cultivated an aura of inevitability so strong that, "She's tantamount to an incumbent," in the words of Democratic consultant Tad Devine.

Naturally, voters will want to know how lesser-known candidates compare to Clinton, but advisers to those candidates argue that talking about the former secretary of state would be a mistake.

"It makes no sense, whether it's Webb, Sanders, or O'Malley, to start a campaign by going on the attack," said an adviser to one Democrat considering a 2016 run who was not authorized to speak on the record about messaging strategy. "It would be putting the cart before the horse a little bit to start lobbing bombs at Hillary Clinton before you even enter the race."

"You need to make an affirmative case before you get to the contrast," said the adviser, who added that Mitt Romney erred in 2012 by focusing on Obama before he had articulated a positive vision of his own candidacy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Devine, a longtime Sanders ally who will advise the senator's presidential campaign should he launch one, conceded that conflict generates coverage, a precious commodity for lesser-known candidates. But he said that the Vermont senator would try to attract attention by targeting the forces of runaway capitalism rather than his primary opponents. "It's a huge challenge," said Devine. "It's a different kind of conflict than the press is used to covering and perhaps than voters are used to hearing."

"Governor O'Malley is looking forward to introducing himself to Democrats outside of Maryland and talking about his own affirmative ideas for the future," wrote O'Malley spokeswoman Lis Smith in an email.

Candidates on the livelier Republican side of the presidential fieldhave been a lot more willing to snipe at both Clinton and each other. Jeb Bush and Florida Sen. Marco Rubio have both characterized Clinton as old news, with Rubio calling her a "20th century candidate." Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul regularly trolls his presidential rivals on social media and recently released a gag audio recording of a Jeb Bush impersonator conspiring with a Hillary Clinton impersonator.

But the Democratic field faces something of a Catch-22. Because no challenger has gained traction, Clinton feels little pressure to campaign and is reportedly considering postponing an announcement until July. But the longer Clinton stays out of the race, the longer she can avoid taking positions that opponents can attack to gain traction.

"They don't know what she's going to say," said Democratic strategist Bob Shrum, who worked on the presidential campaigns of John Kerry and Al Gore. "And it's hard to define yourself without knowing what contrast you want to draw."

Webb, Sanders and O'Malley are all planning to travel to early primary states in the coming weeks and months, and the pressure to define themselves in contrast to Clinton will only intensify.

For now, though, they're content to play nice.

"The Beltway media might want a food fight right now," said Smith, the O'Malley adviser, "but that won't do anyone — let alone Democrats — any good."

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: "Dukakis: Hillary will be '16 nominee"

By Kevin Cirilli

February 10, 2015, 2:29 p.m. EST

Michael Dukakis, the 1988 Democratic presidential nominee, says Hillary Clinton is going to be the party's 2016 standard-bearer — and he's okay with that.

"Look, I consider myself part of that liberal base. I'm very comfortable with her as a candidate, as a nominee and as the president of the United States," Dukakis said Monday on Fox Business Network's "Cavuto." "Hillary is going to be the nominee and I'd like to see as many of us as possible get behind that effort now."

Many progressives have raised concerns about Clinton's ties to Wall Street, a relationship they see as too cozy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But Dukakis pushed back against that idea, suggesting that Clinton's views are more skeptical of Wall Street than progressive critics would suggest. That being so, he asserted that she will likely not have to change those opinions to rebuff a primary challenge from the left.

"I don't think she will be forced to vary her view dramatically. ... She's a very progressive Democrat and one who's not soft on the kinds of financial fooling around that virtually sucked the country dry," Dukakis, a former governor of Massachusetts, told Fox Business Network.

Liberal groups such as Democracy For America and MoveOn.org are trying to move Clinton to the left and in some cases draft candidates such as Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.), who has insisted she's not running.

"I don't think these folks have anything to worry about and frankly — I'd feel a lot better if they were out organizing 200,000 precincts in this country and getting ready for what is going to be a very tough contest in 2016," Dukakis told Fox Business Network.

Capital New York: "Hillary Clinton's Brooklyn options are limited"

By Dana Rubinstein

February 11, 2015, 5:31 a.m. EST

In recent days, people who pay close attention to the undeclared presidential campaign of Hillary Clinton have been wondering about her real estate plans, which could, reportedly, involve setting up shop in Brooklyn or Queens.

"A base in gentrifying Brooklyn or Queens could help give Clinton's campaign a youthful feel, and would likely be a relief for Democratic operatives dreading a relocation to the suburb, or a daily commute from New York City," explained MSNBC.

In the ensuing days, two pertinent details leaked out.

First, the Daily News reported that Clinton's team, which is believed to include brokers from CBRE, checked out One Pierrepont Plaza and MetroTech, both owned by Forest City Ratner. Bruce Ratner, the company's executive chairman, is a big Democratic donor.

Then, the News reported that Clinton was seeking 100,000 square feet of office space. That's a quite a lot.

For comparison, 100,000 square feet is twice the amount Barack Obama's campaign occupied in 2012. It's also roughly twice the space Clinton's campaign occupied in 2008.

It would be hard enough for Brooklyn and Queens to accommodate a 50,000-square-foot tenant. A 100,000-square-foot requirement would further narrow Clinton's options in two boroughs that have, for decades, sent commuters to offices in Manhattan, rather than developing office space themselves.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Brooklyn is “a borough of churches and houses,” said Chris Havens, the vice president of commercial real estate at the Brooklyn-based aptsandlofts.com .

“I’m skeptical,” he said. “This is a very tight market. There’s a lot of space available in Manhattan.”

Roy Chipkin, a Queens commercial real estate broker at CBRE, described the Queens market as “very thin,” because “nothing’s been built in 100 years,” and most of what has been built is residential.

Given the slim pickings, what are Clinton’s realistic options, should she indeed decide to headquarter in the outer boroughs instead of Manhattan?

The contours of her former presidential endeavor may provide some guidance.

The last time Clinton ran for president, in 2008, she ran her campaign from a drab office building at 4420 North Fairfax Drive in Arlington, VA. It had roughly 50,000 square feet, five floors, an elevator.

According to former staffers, the space was aggressively utilitarian. (Before Clinton, the Immigration and Naturalization Service ran a detention center there.)

It was also quite spacious.

There was a floor devoted to ping pong and debate prep. Mold flourished on a war-room wall.

The headquarters were close to the Metro line, and 20 minutes from D.C. by car. There was ready access to mid-market food options, like Cosi, not to mention a hamburger joint called Big Buns.

It’s not clear how much Clinton paid per square foot in Arlington, but commercial real estate database CoStar indicates that asking rents at her old headquarters are now $36 per square foot.

Clinton’s office didn’t respond to any questions about the real estate requirements of her campaign-to-be.

Interviews with several real estate experts in both boroughs suggested a few potential options.

If Clinton wants to cultivate a pioneering vibe, she could venture out to Industry City, the creative-industry beehive on the Sunset Park waterfront.

Michael Phillips, president of Jamestown Properties, which owns part of the complex, said it could accommodate a new, 100,000-square-foot tenant.

To get there, staffers could take the N or D trains one stop past Atlantic Avenue. Or drive. There are some good food options on site, but not that many of them. It would offer her space and some distance from the ravenous media crowd.

“That’s definitely a place where they’d be able to find chunks of space and have a lot more flexibility,” said Ofer Cohen, president of TerraCRG, a Brooklyn-based commercial real estate brokerage.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cohen also said, “The cost would be significantly, significantly less [than other parts of Brooklyn], in the 20 dollar per-square-foot range."

There isn't much of anything available in North Brooklyn. The Walentas family's DUMBO properties are not believed to have the necessary space.

“DUMBO Heights,” the old Jehovah’s Witnesses complex now partly controlled by Jared Kushner, has some room. But it's thought to be on the pricey side, with asking rents in the $50s per square foot, according to Cohen.

Nor is it clear that the complex, which Kushner is renovating, is imminently available.

“From what I understand, the building’s not really open for occupancy yet,” said Tucker Reed, president of the Downtown Brooklyn Partnership. “They’re a year or two away, so the timeline might not match up.”

Kushner wouldn't comment for this story.

Finally, and most obviously, there’s Downtown Brooklyn proper, a neighborhood where high demand and a paucity of office space have created a very low vacancy rate.

Sources say that Forest City could make about 170,000 square feet available at One Pierrepont Plaza, the building the Daily News said Clinton’s people had visited.

But some wonder whether the asking rent—which sources say is at least in the $40s per square foot—is too high.

From a symbolism standpoint, Brooklyn isn’t necessarily all upside either.

"Brooklyn has the advantage and the disadvantage of having cache,” said Seth Pinsky, a real estate executive and the former president of New York City’s Economic Development Corporation. “The advantage is that you can attract a lot of young, talented people and it links you to a new, very highly desirable urbanism. At the same time, there are also a lot of stereotypes—good and bad—that come with both of those and it's unclear whether she wants to be associated with those as she's campaigning for president."

Queens, which is often cheaper than downtown Brooklyn, appears to offer Clinton more options.

“If she's looking for something that's funkier and that's close to Manhattan, then certainly a place like Long Island City would be the most logical place,” said Pinsky.

Last week, at Capital's request, Evan Daniel, the executive vice president of the ModernSpaces real estate group, sent Capital a list of properties 50,000 square feet and greater in the western Queens submarket.

There's a 1930s-era Astoria factory on 36th Street down the street from the Museum of the Moving Image called “Offices at the Square.” Sixty-three thousand square feet are available there, it’s close to the M, R, N and Q trains and there’s a beer garden downstairs

There’s hundreds of thousands of square feet available at the Factory, on 47th Avenue in Long Island City, according to the report. The nearby

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Falchi Building could also accommodate a 100,000-square-foot tenant.

There's 90,000 square feet at an old industrial building on Austell Place, and more than 100,000 square feet at 30-30 Northern Boulevard and One MetLife Plaza. There's nearly that much at 3430 Steinway Street.

There's also Queens Boulevard in Kew Gardens, home to borough hall and the Queens district attorney's office, though that market's not believed to have to have enough space.

And, should she more inclined to maintain her distance from Midtown, there's Jamaica.

It's accessible by subway and Long Island Rail Road, but not too accessible. It's also close to the airport and some of her donors on Long Island. It's pre-trendy.

"If she wanted to show she was more a 'woman of the people', then a place like Jamaica, with a feel similar to where her husband is in Harlem, would send an interesting signal and it's certainly transit accessible as well," said Pinsky.

(It's not clear that there's supply there either, though. Justin Rodgers, managing director of real estate and economic development at the Greater Jamaica Development Corporation said he couldn't think of anything off the top of his head.)

Certainly, Queens leaders would love to have her.

"Queens is the gateway to the city, the nation and the world, with its unparalleled transportation connections including bridges, tunnels, rail and airports, and has a population to match," said Elizabeth Lusskin president of the Long Island City Partnership. "While space is tight, I'm sure Queens would find room for any national candidate wise enough to chose the World's Borough for her home base."

Politico: "Hillary Clinton to be in D.C. on same day as Bibi speech"

By Gabriel Debenedetti

February 10, 2015, 1:39 p.m. EST

When Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu heads to Washington to deliver a controversial address to Congress on March 3, he won't be the only big name in town who might soon be facing an election.

Hillary Clinton is also scheduled to be in the capital city on that day, to be honored by EMILY's List, the group supporting female Democratic candidates.

Clinton's spokesman did not respond to a question about whether the two plan to meet, but the convergence of the prime minister and former secretary of state brings together two of the most-talked about figures in politics, at a crucial time for both of them.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

While Clinton's all-but-certain 2016 campaign will be nearing its likely launch, Netanyahu's speech will generate major attention after drawing condemnation from many Democrats who are critical of him, and of House Speaker John Boehner's invitation of the prime minister despite the White House's disapproval.

Neither President Barack Obama nor Vice President Joe Biden will attend the speech, which will address the Iran nuclear deal. While Biden will be out of the country, Obama has ruled out meeting with Netanyahu before Israel's March 17 election. Secretary of State John Kerry is also expected to avoid seeing Netanyahu.

Clinton has repeatedly spoken about her role in Middle East policy since leaving the State Department in 2013, but she has not commented on Netanyahu's upcoming address. Her Washington event is sure to draw the attention of many political observers, as it will be one of her first public events in months. The former senator and first lady has been busy building her campaign team.

And while Clinton is the presumptive frontrunner for the Democratic nomination in 2016, a potential rival – Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders – grabbed headlines on Monday by becoming the first senator to announce he would boycott the speech.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "Priebus: Hillary can't 'connect the dots'"

By Jesse Byrnes

February 10, 2015, 7:44 p.m. EST

The chairman of the Republican National Committee says Hillary Clinton is keeping a low public profile because her team knows she can't "connect the dots" for a successful presidential campaign.

"She's certainly proven in the past she somehow can't manage to connect the dots in the world of presidential politics," Reince Priebus said Tuesday in an interview with conservative radio host Hugh Hewitt.

"Her team knows it and that's why they're keeping her out of the public eye."

It's not the first time Priebus has questioned Clinton's readiness for the 2016 campaign if she decides to run. In October, the RNC chief said Clinton was "not really good at politics."

To pressure the likely Democratic frontrunner, the RNC on Tuesday also launched a campaign to document instances they see as Clinton "hiding" from the media.

The RNC pointed out that Clinton hasn't visited the early voting states of Iowa and New Hampshire in more than 100 days and her only public appearance this year was a speech last month in Canada.

At the same time, a number of potential Republican candidates have made trips to Iowa and New Hampshire to lay the groundwork for their own presidential bids.

"This is a person preparing to run for president," Priebus said. "She hasn't done an interview with The New York Times."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Priebus noted that Clinton has "nothing to gain" and "everything to lose" by jumping into the 2016 race anytime soon.

For example, last week while likely Republican presidential candidates Sen. Rand Paul (Ky.) and Gov. Chris Christie (N.J.) took fire for comments they made on vaccinations during exchanges with media members, Clinton weighed in on the topic with a tweet.

Priebus said that Clinton's lack of public engagement isn't "all that bad" for Republicans, but "the problem is for her in the general election."

It's unclear when the former Secretary of State plans to enter the race, with some insiders saying she may do a pre-launch in April followed by a formal campaign announcement in July.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· February 11 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton meets with London Mayor Johnson (Independent)

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

· March 3 – Washington, DC: Sec. Clinton honored by EMILY's List (AP)

· March 4 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton to fundraise for the Clinton Foundation (WSJ)

· March 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton to keynote Irish American Hall of Fame (NYT)

· March 19 – Atlantic City, NJ: Sec. Clinton keynotes American Camp Association conference (PR Newswire)

· March 23 – Washington, DC: Sec. Clinton to keynote award ceremony for the Toner Prize for Excellence in Political Reporting (Syracuse)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Backbone Campaign" <info@backbonecampaign.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 9/2/2014 7:43:12 AM
Subject: [ACTION ALERT]: Oil Train Halted - Mother suspended above tracks!

If you aren't seeing our pictures then PLEASE... Click Here to View Online

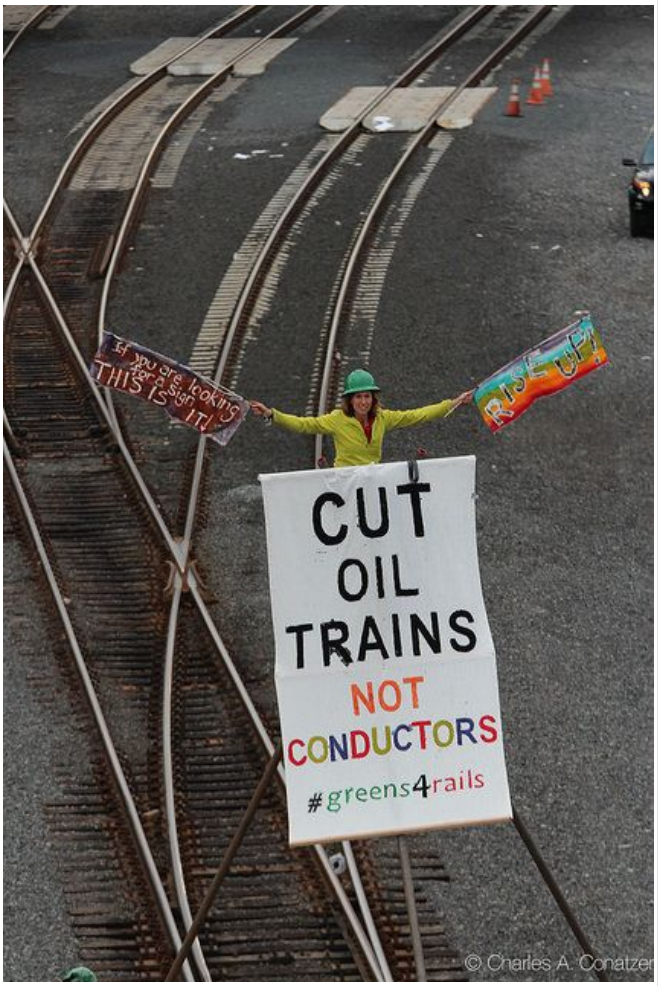
~~~~~~

Rising Tide Seattle along with participants who attended Backbone Campaign's Localize This! Action Camp launched a technical blockade action early this morning effectively halting both Oil and Coal Trains!!

Tired of inaction by politicians?

Call Govenor Inslee to tell him actions like this inspire you not his foot-dragging.

Demand Govenor Inslee Stops Stalling and Declares a Moratorium on all Fossil Fuel Infrastructure Projects - 360-902-4111



~~~~~~

Action Alert Oil Train HALTED!

RIGHT NOW, suspended above oil-by-rail train tracks, this courageous mother and climate justice activist is compelled to risk life and limb to protect our communities' and our children's future. Her righteous actions offers a stark contrast to the reckless actions by billionaires Warren Buffett and transnational corporations whose only allegiance is to profit.

It is the fearless defense of what we love by ordinary people that will bend our society towards justice, not the inaction of politicians embedded in the establishment.

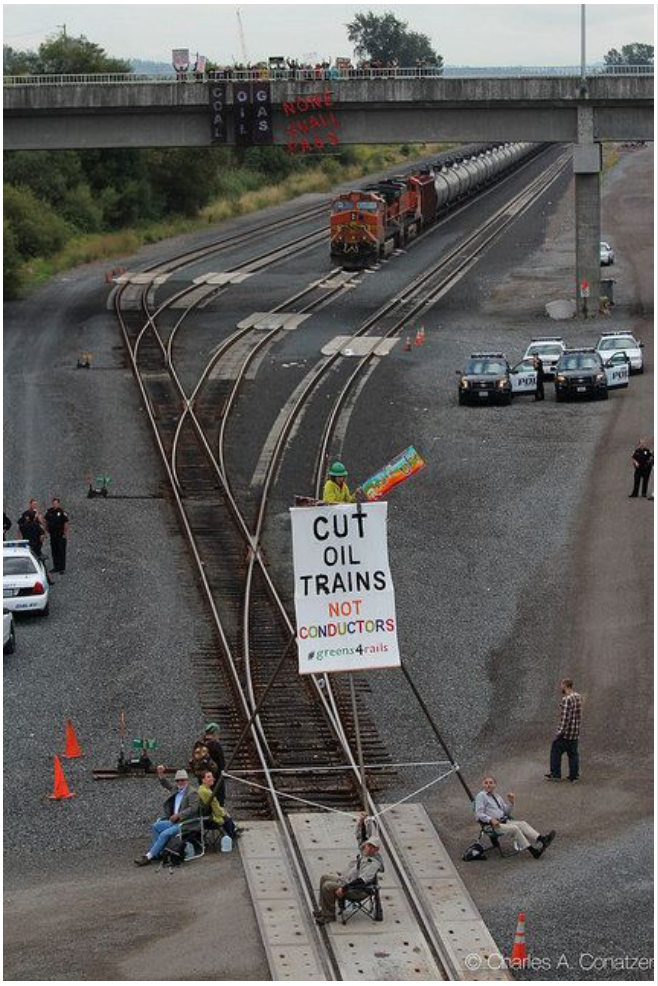
Are you ready to take meaningful action?

The blockade continues strong! #noneshallpass

Donate to their action fund: bit.ly/1uxxN5q

EVERETT: Five local residents have stopped work at a Burlington Northern Santa-Fe Rail Yard in Everett by erecting a tripod structure on the outbound railroad tracks, directly in front of both a mile-long oil train and a coal train. Seattle resident Abby Brockway - a small business owner and mother - is suspended from the structure 18 feet above the tracks while four other residents are locked to the legs of the tripod. The group is demanding an immediate halt to all shipments of fossil fuels through the Northwest and calling on Governor Inslee to reject permits for all new fossil fuel projects in Washington, including proposed coal and oil terminals.

"People in the Pacific Northwest are forming a thin green line that will keep oil, coal and gas in the ground," said Brockway, "Just one of these proposed terminals would process enough carbon to push us past the global warming tipping point - we won't let that happen."



Today's protest has shut down work at BNSF's Delta Rail Yard in Everett. With the increase of fossil fuel transport in recent years the yard has become a crucial staging ground for coal trains headed to Canadian export terminals and oil trains bound for Washington refineries. An oil train carrying explosive bakken crude oil sat stalled while the protest continued.

"Exploding oil trains running through my town are just a reminder of how out of control the fossil fuel industry really is," said Jackie Minchew an Everett resident and retired educator locked to one of the tripod's poles.

In a controversial move, Burlington Northern Santa Fe recently announced a tentative deal with union leaders to reduce train crews from an engineer and conductor to a single engineer. The oil train that derailed and exploded in Lac-Megantic, Quebec was crewed by a single engineer. BNSF claims that oil trains will continue to have two-person crews, but critics point out that nothing in the proposed contract binds the company to that statement. Under the proposed deal, coal trains would be operated by a single crew-member.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"BNSF is endangering workers, communities and our environment. They should keep the conductors and lose the oil trains," said Brockway.

The surge in oil train traffic is already impacting passenger rail and agricultural shipments. Farmers from the Midwest to Washington State have faced what they call "unprecedented" delays in moving Wheat and other products to West Coast ports. Amtrak service through fossil-fuel train corridors has also suffered significant disruption, and officials have expressed concern that the problem will only get worse as more terminals come online.

"Railroads can be part of the solution, transporting crops and people or part of the problem with coal and oil. We should make that decision, not the fossil fuel companies," Said Patrick Mazza, a longtime climate activist also locked to the tracks.

Mazza says he is taking this action for his daughter, who will turn 18 tomorrow.

"My last act as a father before my daughter reaches full adulthood tomorrow is to put my body on the line today," Said Mazza, "It is up to us of the parental generation to do our absolute best to leave the least climate disrupted world we can, to put our bodies on the line to give our kids a fighting chance to deal with what we have left them."

Development of extreme energy projects--like the Alberta tar sands, Bakken Shale oil and coal from the Powder River Basin--has fueled an explosion in proposed fossil fuel infrastructure in the Northwest. More than twenty new or expanded coal, oil, and gas terminals are proposed between British Columbia, Washington, and Oregon. In both states and British Columbia, these proposals have been met with fierce local resistance. Local communities have challenged both the safety of transporting coal, oil, and volatile gas through their communities and the role of fossil fuel export in fueling catastrophic climate disruption. Proposed coal terminals in Longview and Bellingham, and oil terminals in Vancouver and Gray's Harbor, would lead to more carbon emissions than produced in the state of Washington each year.

"We could pass every climate initiative proposed by Governor Inslee, but if we let these terminals be built our future is on the chopping block," said Liz Spoerri a Seattle middle school teacher also locked on the tracks.

While proposed coal and oil terminals have been controversial for years, climate activists in the Northwest have significantly intensified their tactics this summer. In Montana, residents sat on the tracks to block a coal train last April, and again on August 16,. In early July a woman locked herself to a 55-gallon barrel filled with concrete, blocking oil-trains at a Portland facility. In a similar action on July 28, three people blocked oil-trains at the Tesoro refinery in Anacortes by locking themselves to concrete filled barrels. Most recently, three Seattle residents, including state legislative candidate Jess Spear, were arrested blocking oil and coal trains near the Seattle Waterfront.

"People in the Northwest are not going to allow this region to become a fossil fuel superhighway," said Mike LaPoint, an Everett small business owner locked on the tracks. "This is just a sample of the resistance that will happen if any large fossil fuel project is permitted."

Despite controversy, the number of fossil fuel trains on Washington's rails continues to rise. While larger coal and oil terminals are undergoing lengthy environmental reviews, projects at Washington's refineries have brought approximately two oil trains per day to communities like Seattle and Everett. While the Department of Ecology conducts a study on the safety of oil-by-rail construction continues on a new terminal at the Phillips 66 refinery in Ferndale, and local officials are attempting to fast-track an oil train terminal at Shell's Puget Sound Refinery without environmental review. Each of these projects could add up to six oil trains per week to the rails. Expansions at the Fraser Surrey Docks coal export facility in Vancouver, Canada, would increase the number of coal trains moving through Washington. Activists are demanding an immediate moratorium on all new fossil fuel terminals.

"Politicians play a blame game and talk about safety, but new terminals keep getting rubber stamped and built," said LaPoint, "If elected officials won't stop the fossil fuel takeover, we'll have to do it for them."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Rising Tide Seattle is a grassroots, all-volunteer collective dedicated to taking direct action to confront the root causes of climate change, and support communities on the frontlines of extractive industries.

~~~
~~~

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Nandi Robinson" <nrobinson@hillaryclinton.com>
To: hrcrapid@googlegroups.com
Date: 4/14/2015 12:00:17 PM
Subject: Marco Rubio on CNN's The Lead w/ Jake Tapper (4/14/15) http://mms.tveyes.com/ClipEditor.aspx?hl=&StationID=100&ClipDateTime=04/14/2015+16:34:45

(4:34:45pm)

Tapper: You came up to Washington today to participate in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on Iran, specifically a bill to get some sort of congressional oversight.

Rubio: Right.

Tapper: When your colleague Senator Tom Cotton, whose letter to the mullahs you signed a few weeks ago- was on the show last he said surgical strikes against the Iranian nuclear sites would be preferable to this deal. Do you agree?

Rubio: First of all, I think that military action should only be taken when it's the best option available and we would hope there would be leadership shift in Iran at some point that would make them realize that either you're going to have an economy, a modern economy, a prosperous one, or you're going to have a nuclear weapon but you can't have both and at that point if they don't realize that, then certainly military strikes are something that are on the table.

Tapper: You would go for greater sanctions before anything like that?--

Rubio: Absolutely because I think first of all, the sanctions are what allow us the opportunity and brought us to this point and not only are the sanctions important in terms of preventing the nuclear capability it also has an impact on their ability to sponsor terrorism all over the world. But look there may come a point when military action is necessary because anything is preferable to them having a nuclear capability akin to what you have in North Korea. I wouldn't say its something we would do tomorrow and its definitely something we wouldn't announce but it need to be clear that that is an option available to us if all else fails.

Tapper: Let's talk about your presidential candidacy. What do you say to people out there, Republican voters, shopping around who say I like him but I really think we need a president with executive experience?

Rubio: Well, a couple of points: I do have a record that extends before I even got here to Washington. I've been here now almost 4 1/2 years but before that I was a state legislator for nine years and I was in leadership almost the entire time, including being speaker of the house where I ran the Florida house both as an institution and from a policy perspective and I've also served in local government so I have the unique experience of having been a local, state and federal office holder. I've also dedicated significant amount of time on foreign policy and on the intelligence committee issues that we just today spent an hour reading intelligence briefings and catching up on since we haven't been in D.C. for a week and haven't had access to that. So the point being, I think there are real distinctions between, for example others that have run in the past who are senators and are where I am today.

Tapper: Since being elected to the Senate in 2010 you've been the primary sponsor on 219 items: bills, amendments, resolutions. None of them have been signed into law. How can you convince American voters, Republican voters that you can govern effectively given that legislative record?

Rubio: You could actually say that about almost any senator that served as me over the last four years. When Harry Reid was the majority leader, the Senate virtually did nothing. In fact we've taken more votes over this year than we did all of the last 2 years, maybe 3 years and the point being that Harry Reid basically brought the Senate to a standstill. Not only could you not get bills voted on, you couldn't even get amendments voted on. And in fact there were Democrats running for reelection last time that couldn't even point to their legislation they had passed and they were in the majority. We hope that's going to change now and It's begun to change under Senator McConnell. I would point out the fact that, for example, the veterans accountability act, which is a bill we filed, that allowed the VA to fire senior executives in the VA that weren't doing their job- that was a stand-alone bill that we got worked into as part of being on the conference that negotiated the final deal and we got that put into the VA bill. So that's an example of a legislative achievement that happened and was signed by the president, as part of a larger bill but it was a bill we filed along with Jeff Miller of Florida.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Tapper: One bill that you are very well known for is a bill that passed the Senate but did not become law because it didn't get through the House, and that was comprehensive immigration reform. I know you've said, you don't think it should be comprehensive in the future it should be piece-meal, you need to convince voters --

Rubio: I don't think it can pass as a comprehensive piece of legislation

Tapper: That's the issue?

Rubio: Yea. And I have evidence- we tried it. And in fact, if you recall during that time, I warned during that time as that process was ongoing that if we didn't do more on the security part of it, I thought it would have no chance of passage in the House. But now, I think we've proven, we've learned that, in fact, a massive piece of legislation especially on something like immigration just really has no realistic chance of passing.

Tapper: There are a lot of conservative Republicans out there who, when I asked on twitter what should I ask him, they said does he still support amnesty and that is something you'll hear when you go into Iowa and New Hampshire, South Carolina.

Rubio: Well, here's the process I support and I've outlined this both in my book and multiple times that I've been asked: I think the first thing we have to do before anything else because it's the only way you're going to be able to do anything else, is we have to prove, not tell, prove to the American people that future illegal immigration is under control. That means securing that one sector of the border that remains unsecure. That means an entry/exit tracking system to prevent visa overstays and that means an e-verify system. If we did those things, then I believe we will have the support politically and policy wise to do very important things: first modernize our legal immigration system, make it a merit based system as opposed to simply a family based system and then we have to deal with the fact we have 12 million people in this country who are here illegally, who have been here longer than a decade or more and I've outlined the process for dealing with that and i think it's well established one. They come forward, they pay a fine and start paying taxes. They get a work permit and thats all they can have for a substantial period of time and after they completed this probationary period they would be allowed to apply for permanent residency just like anybody else would-- Tapper: a lot of Republican voters say that's amnesty.

Rubio: well, I think its amnesty in their mind if the law is not being enforced. What people's main complaint about all this is, you're going to go ahead and legalize 10 or 12 million people, but they're never going to do the enforcement and you're going to have another 10 or 12 people here in another ten years. That's a legitimate concern especially given what's happened with the migratory crisis last summer.

Tapper: I want to ask you about another issue, you are casting yourself as a candidate of a new generation, but there is an issue where you are very out of step with younger voters, even younger Republican voters. According to a pew poll, 61% of republican voters under the age of 30 I believe support same-sex marriage. In that issue, same-sex marriage, Senator, you're the candidate of yesterday.

Rubio: Well, a couple of points: number one, that is an issue that will largely be determined at the state level since marriage laws have always been defined by the states. I'm not, for example, ever supported a federal constitutional amendment to define marriage because I believe states define marriage in their laws and if in fact people feel that way as that poll says then they can petition their state legislature to change the law. The second point I would make is, I think there's still a significant number of Americans that believe that the definition of marriage should be that of one man and one woman as it has been for thousands of years. And that continue---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Tapper: but they are a minority.

Rubio: Well, they are a large minority and that's because there are still parts of this country that believe that way but irrespective of it, we're in a republic. If you want to change the marriage laws of your state, go to your state legislature and get you legislators to change it. I don't believe the court system is the appropriate way to do it and I don't believe Washington and the Supreme Court is the appropriate way to do that. Beyond it I would say when i talk about the future, what I'm really pointing to is not those issues necessarily but the fact we are living through a massive transition into a post-industrial era where millions of people are being left behind because America is who longer globally competitive as it once was and because they do not have the skills required to succeed in the 21st century and we have political leaders in this town and across the country, they're still whetted to an outdated 20th century higher education model that no longer works.

Tapper: I want to ask about a man who's been described as your mentor. Jeb Bush. Is that a fair description?

Rubio: yeah.

Tapper: So, you have said you're not running against him. He's a friend, you're just simply competing for the same job. I'm wondering what that means in practical terms. Does that mean that your campaign won't do opposition research on Jeb Bush, that you won't run any negative ads against Jeb Bush? What's the difference between that and running against a Rand Paul.

Rubio: What it means is, there are six or seven other people in this race who i believe have a legitimate chance to be a nominee as well. We're blessed as Republicans to have six or seven people running that going to be credible candidates. The democrats can barely come up with one. And we're going to have a robust competition in which voters in the Republican primary are going to be able to hear from all of us and decide who they want not just to lead our party but lead our country. Nothing that's going to happen over these next few months, I believe, will change my feelings towards Gov. Bush as a person or what he's done in the past to serve our country. I just honestly believe that I have a vision for America's future and a plan to get us there and i think that i can serve this country at this moment in history better than anyone else who's running.

[Commercial Break]

Tapper: You mentioned when i talked about the candidate of tomorrow, you mentioned that you meant that more in terms of economic issues than you did in terms of social issues. Do you think it's a mistake, do you think it's a trap by people in the media to ask Republicans about social issues?

Rubio: No, these are important issues. People was to know what you feel and think about them. I think they're very important issue to a lot of people in this country and I recognize that we're a country that has people on both sides of these issues that feel very strongly about it. i owe people where I stand, I'll tell you where i stand but ultimately – and I'm not saying these aren't important issues to have the highest office in the land opine on or give opinions on—but ultimately, i want all Americans to succeed economically. Independent of what they may feel like on a social issue, I want all Americans to be more prosperous, to be able to leave their children better off than themselves, to have better jobs, to have businesses that are successful. i want America to be globally competitive so we're big enough country and a free enough country to debate these issues robustly and work through them as we have always done as a society but we still have to grow economically and be secure militarily.

Tapper: You're a man that has two daughters. I have a daughter myself and I know that having a daughter opened my eyes to a lot of things that probably i never would have realized if i didn't have a daughter. Hillary Clinton, her historical candidacy, the historical nature of it- is going to be compelling for a lot of women.

Rubio: right.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Tapper: Republican women too. Who like the idea of, well, 43 men have been president, now one woman, Do you think that that's going to make it more difficult for you to win the women's vote and do you think that the Republican Party should have a woman on the ticket no matter what?

Rubio: Well let me just tell you this…I think ultimately when it comes to being president, vice president or anything else, you want the best people there because that's going to have an impact on the future of our country and on your future irrespective of your age, your ethnicity, your gender. i would never assume that every Hispanic in America has to vote for me because I'm Hispanic, because my last name is Rubio. I have to earn their support. That may intrigue them about my candidacy, but ultimately, i have to prove i'm the right person for the job and the same is true for her or anyone else who's running. I think the important point to make is we live in a country so vibrant that in fact you have a diverse field that includes a very legitimate candidate for president who's a woman. You have two Latinos running in the Republican side of the equation. If Dr. Carson gets in, an African American who's running. So, and I think that's not just a testament to the vibrancy of our country, but true to our heritage is a nation where people from everywhere have been able to achieve extraordinary things.

Tapper: Do you pledge to support the Republican nominee whoever it is even if it is somebody that you disagree with so strongly on foreign issues like Senator Rand Paul-- just as an observation, i think you probably agree with Hillary Clinton on more matters pertaining to foreign policy than you do with Rand Paul.

Rubio: well we'll have plenty of time for that sort of comparison. let me just say that i am confident that the Republican nominee whoever that may be and i expect it to be me and i hope it will be me and i'll work hard to make it me but i'm confident that the Republican nominee is someone who will believe that America needs to be engaged globally and that the world is a safer and better place when America is engaged and exerting global influence. i'm pretty confident that at the end of this process our nominee will be someone like that whether its because they change positions to adapt that view or because that's who they really are.

Tapper: Senator Marco Rubio, we will see you out there on the campaign trail. Thank you so much, we appreciate it.

Rubio: thank you.

--

You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
To view this discussion on the web visit https://groups.google.com/d/msgid/hrcrapid/CA%2Bs%2B6pU0ZTHrJyESNj8XCZuxKdx1f5yj8kEfThMG7vsx8EabsQ%40mail.gmail.com.
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Common Good" <patriciaduff@thecommongood.net>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/16/2015 4:19:31 PM
Subject: New News! (10/16/2015)

de·moc·ra·cy di-ˈmä-krə-sē

noun - a system of government by the whole population or all the eligible members of a state, typically through elected representatives.

Week ending October 16th, 2015

Weekly roundup about our democracy and The Common Good community

- Obama will keep US troops in Afghanistan. No end to that war as he had hoped.
- GOP split on Paul Ryan in hunt for Speaker
- Hillary gives strong debate showing; Sanders too.
- Tensions rise in wake of knife attacks and troop reactions in Israel.
- Suicide bombings in Turkey rattle the nation

Polls

2016 Republican Presidential Nomination: Trump 24, Carson 23, Rubio 9, Fiorina 5, Cruz 10, Bush 8, Huckabee 5, Paul 3, Kasich 1, Christie 1, Jindal 1, Pataki 1 [FOX News]

Carson gains momentum: While the status quo was maintained, with Trump first, Ben Carson second, and so on, Trump's lead over Carson was only one percentage point — the smallest lead Trump has seen in Fox polling and down from an 8-point lead in September.

President Obama Job Approval: Approve 45, Disapprove 50 [Gallup]

Congressional Job Approval: Approve 9, Disapprove 69 [The Economist/YouGov]

2016 Campaign

Clinton and Sanders reveal their differences in Dem debate: "The first debate will be defined by two moments: When the topic turned to Sen. Bernie Sanders' (I-Vt.) chief vulnerability, Hillary Clinton jumped at the opportunity to draw a sharp contrast. When the roles were reversed, Sanders threw her a lifeline. Those two exchanges -- the first on gun control and the second on Clinton's use of a private email account as secretary of state -- exemplified not just the different political DNA of each candidate, it underscored the brewing intensity of a Democratic primary that few thought would be competitive." Sam Stein and Amanda Terkel, The Huffington Post [More]

Clinton invokes Obama to lend credence to record: "Clinton's positions on Iraq, Syria and Libya were a prime target for her Democratic rivals, as Senator Bernie Sanders hammered her 2002 Iraq War vote as "the worst foreign policy blunder in the history of this country," and warned that her support for a Syria no-fly zone could drag America into another Middle Eastern "quagmire." Clinton seemed energized by the back-and-forth on global affairs, making no apologies for her record." Michael Crowley, POLITICO [More]

Did the media get the Dem debate wrong?: "In the media coverage of Tuesday's Democratic debate, there was almost universal agreement that Hillary Clinton came out on top. In online polls, several focus groups, and much of social media, though, the story was rather different. Many people insisted that Bernie Sanders was the victor… But we won't get a reliable reading of public opinion until we see some scientifically conducted surveys based on random samples of

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Democratic voters." John Cassidy, The New Yorker [More]

Grassroots anger in the Republican Party: "Establishment and conservative figures see a new GOP taking shape in the tumult of the speaker election in Congress and on the presidential campaign trail. [E]stablishment party figures … worry an unguided fury will keep the GOP from reclaiming the White House next fall. But that same turmoil is eliciting cheers from many in the party's grass roots, who, far from fearing the turbulence, think it serves their burning desire to force changes in the government." Janet Hook and Patrick O'Connor, Wall Street Journal [More]

Money and power - the families funding the 2016 election: Special report how 158 families are providing almost half of the early funding for the presidential election campaign. Nicholas Confessore, Sarah Cohen, and Karen Yourish, New York Times [More]

The Economy

Report finds U.S. economic freedom decreasing: "The Economic Freedom of the World report seeks measures of five key indicators of economic freedom: security of property rights, soundness of money, size of government, freedom to trade globally, and the extent of regulation...Relative to other countries, listed most free to least free, the US has slipped from the number 3 spot all the way to number 16." Jeffrey A. Tucker, Foundation for Economic Education [More]

Treasury warns Congress of default risk: "Treasury Secretary Jacob Lew said on Thursday that if the debt ceiling isn't raised by Nov. 3, it will have to fund the government solely using daily cash flow, and that it could run out of cash to pay its bills soon after that." Nick Timiraos, Wall Street Journal [More]

Fed Vice Chair finds it appropriate to raise rates: "[Stanley] Fischer added that there were "considerable uncertainties" surrounding the pace of activity and that Fed policymakers could not be certain about how quickly headwinds holding back the domestic economy would fade. He highlighted America's poor export performance, which has been held back by slowing demand overseas and the 15 per cent appreciation in the trade-weighted dollar." Sam Fleming, Financial Times [More]

Consumer confidence rebounds in October: "The University of Michigan preliminary consumer sentiment index for October, jumped to 92.1 from a final September reading of 87.2. "The rebound in confidence signifies that consumers have concluded that the fears expressed on Wall Street did not extend to Main Street," said Richard Curtin, the survey's chief economist. Mr. Curtin said consumers are adapting their spending to an up-and-down economy. Low inflation and continued job growth, meanwhile, are supporting renewed confidence." Jeffrey Sparshott, Wall Street Journal [More]

Sachs: The Japan Syndrome comes to China: "China is now experiencing what Japan went through a generation ago: a marked slowdown in economic growth after demands by the United States that it restrict its exports. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, Japan was criticized by the US as an "unfair trader" by virtue of its soaring manufacturing exports. The US succeeded in pushing Japan to overvalue the yen, which helped to bring Japanese growth to a screeching halt. That may be happening again, with China's growth slowing markedly under the weight of an overvalued currency urged by the US." Jeffery D. Sachs (TCG Speaker), Project Syndicate [More]

Foreign Affairs/National Security

Iraq withdrawal looms over Obama's decision in Afghanistan: "Whether keeping a residual American force in Iraq would have made a difference is a point of contention, but the president chose not to take a chance this time. In seeking to avoid a repeat of the Iraq meltdown by keeping 9,800 troops in Afghanistan next year and 5,500 after he leaves office, he abandoned his hopes of ending the two wars he inherited." Peter Baker, New York Times [More]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington Post* correspondent convicted in Iran: "Washington Post* correspondent Jason Rezaian, imprisoned in Tehran for more than 14 months, has been convicted following an espionage trial that ended in August, Iranian media reported Monday. The verdict — belated and opaque — was strongly condemned by the journalist's family and colleagues, as well as the U.S. government." Carol Morello and William Branigin, The Washington Post [More]

Suicide bombings in Turkish capital worsen political divide: "Weekend suicide bombings...killed at least 97 people in the Turkish capital. No group has claimed responsibility for the bombings, which threatened to further destabilize a key U.S. and NATO ally already reeling from months of civil strife between Kurdish separatists and security forces. Security officials said the attack bore the hallmarks of two other recent strikes that authorities blamed on Islamic State-linked militants from Turkey." Emre Peker and Ayla Albayrak,Wall Street Journal [More]

Zakaria: Stop swooning over Putin: "Washington's foreign policy elites have developed a mind-set that mistakes activity for achievement. They assume that every crisis in the world can and should be solved by a vigorous assertion of U.S. power, preferably military power. Failure to do so is passivity and produces weakness. By this logic, Russia and Iran are the new masters of the Middle East. Never mind that those countries are desperately trying to shore up a sinking ally." Fareed Zakaria, The Washington Post [More]

Ignatius: U.S surprises allies in Syria: "A Syrian Kurdish militia that was initially seen by U.S. commanders as a sideshow has emerged as the strongest U.S.-backed force against the Islamic State -- forcing a hasty re-evaluation of U.S. strategy after the collapse of a $500 million plan for training and equipping Syrian rebels." David Ignatius, The Washington Post [More]

Is a Third Intifada inevitable?: "Call it the Third Intifada, a "wave of terror," or the "Jerusalem Awakening" — perhaps the best way to describe the violence is, simply, "the future." Netanyahu has ruled the land for six years and seems to have no aspirations beyond indefinitely prolonging the status quo. Abbas is exhausted and isolated, and while he succeeded in raising the Palestinian flag outside the United Nations, that symbolic gesture brings Palestinians no closer to raising it over a capital in East Jerusalem." Gregg Carlstrom, Foreign Policy [More]

Domestic Affairs

GOP establishment stands by amidst anti-Ryan criticism: "As the right continues to beat up Paul Ryan, hoping to preempt a bid for speaker, much of the GOP establishment is letting him twist in the wind. Their thinking: Any public display of affection for Ryan from D.C. players would be his kiss of death — handing ammunition to activists to use against the Ways and Means chairman...The establishment's "say nothing" strategy is a stark contrast to the active role that conservative groups such as Tea Party Patriots are taking. The group launched a "call to action" on Tuesday, urging members to meet with lawmakers over the Columbus Day recess and tell them not to vote for Ryan." Anna Palmer, POLITICO [More]

Bipartisan effort revises Obamacare's small business rules: "President Obama signed legislation that makes a significant change in the health law's small business rules. The revision updates the definition of what constitutes a small employer so that companies with 51 to 100 workers won't become subject to the small group insurance reform provisions next year. Instead, the law allows those companies to continue as large group plans , unless states step in to define them differently. Lawmakers from both parties argued that classifying these companies as small businesses would increase their health insurance premiums significantly..." Michelle Andrews, NPR [More]

GOP now reaching consensus on how to replace Obamacare: "After years of trying, Republicans are coalescing around the outlines of a plan to repeal and replace ObamaCare. Jeb Bush unveiled an ObamaCare alternative on Tuesday that is similar to the proposals from Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.), his presidential rival, and former 2016 hopeful Gov. Scott Walker. The Bush plan overlaps significantly with proposals from congressional Republicans. The plans all center on a tax credit intended to help people afford health insurance, along with more limited protection for people with preexisting health conditions and a cap on federal payments to states for the low-income Medicaid program." Peter Sullivan, The Hill [More]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Books

Review: "The Last of the President's Men" by Bob Woodward (TCG Speaker): "Forty-one years after Richard Nixon's disgraceful resignation over the biggest political scandal in American history, one of his closest former aides says the former president had more secrets. Nixon's former deputy assistant Alex Butterfield shared detailed memos from his White House days with the legendary Washington Post reporter, Bob Woodward . These memos and 40 hours of interviews are the basis of Woodward's new book, "The Last of the President's Men," which reveals more of Nixon's lies, crimes, and even his most petty obsessions throughout his presidency." Rebecca Lee, CBS News [More]

Good shows

For thoughtful entertaining fare, here are some film recommendations: He Named Me Malala, The Diplomat, and Bridge of Spies.

UPCOMING EVENTS

Congressman Joseph P. Kennedy III

Monday, November 9, 2015

Lunch & remarks: 12:00-1:30pm
Executive Members only.

RSVP

Ambassador Melanne Verveer

Wednesday, December 9, 2015

Reception & remarks: 6:15-7:45pm; Dinner & conversation: 8:00-9:30pm

RSVP

The Rt. Honorable David Miliband

Wednesday, January 27, 2016

Reception & remarks: 6:15-7:45pm; Dinner & conversation: 8:00-9:30pm

RSVP

Thank you TCG Digest contributors: TCG Staff: Isabelle Lehner, Isaac Getlan and our interns Samar Nadi, Robin Silver, Tracey Pennito and Justin Vacura.

Visit our website www.thecommongoodusa.org, Facebook, and our Twitter @TheCommonGood. JOIN IN by sending us your ideas, news, and reactions to admin@thecommongood.net.

###

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This email was sent to podesta@law.georgetown.edu
why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences
The Common Good · 115 East 57th St · Suite 1010 · New York, NY 10022 · USA

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara DuBois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 8/5/2008 1:35:15 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Tele-Town Hall for PA Voters 08/05/08

Hello All,
I just got off of listening to McCain's tele-town hall, which McCain conducted from WV for PA voters. Below are my notes from that call.

BIG HIGHLIGHTS:

- Says he agrees with Obama's / Auto Association's suggestion to inflate our tires but "that doesn't serve as a plan"
- Jokes that voter should vote for him rather than Obama "because I'm a great American"; lavishes praise on Hillary
- Changes language but repeats claim that "independent petroleum producers" (previously known as "oil drillers") assure that we can get oil w/in months; enviro groups are wrong
- Explains he was based on USS Enterprise so he's "familiar" with nuclear power - it's clean
- Says he'd love to tell you that there's a parade down Broadway, but "that's not what success is": it's effective government, economic stability; Says we're better off now that Saddam & sons are out

- Repeats promise that next toy from overseas (esp China) that hurts Americans will be last
- Promises that when he's President, Congress won't be taking these "disgraceful" "vacations"
- Other main topics: school choice, replacing govt workers w/ computers, Obama's "most liberal" voting record

Tele-Town Hall for Pennsylvania voters: 08/05/08
(Disclaimer: The following are notes, not direct quotes. If you'd like a quotable transcript or video of any part below, please email us.)

Background Details

- Live town hall, conducted via phone
- 2 short surveys conducted in course of call: (1) on your most important issue and (2) how likely you were to vote in Nov [Results not given]
- Lindsey Graham gives introductory remarks: friends for a long time; we need someone who can win wars, reach across the aisle (esp on energy)

Speech Highlights

- we're in WV
- just came in from Fermi nuclear power plant
- I believe in nuclear power
- price of oil gone down in past few days - we're happy - it affects the lowest-income Americans
- Lexington Project
- nuclear power is one way to help - we can store and reprocess nuclear power - the French do it
- I am very familiar w/ nuclear power - my squadron was based on USS Enterprise
- we've never had a nuclear accident on Navy ships - it's clean
- we send $700B a year
- offshore drilling - we need to do it and do it now
- i met w/ a group of "independent petroleum producers" the other day and they said we can do it in a couple of months
- i agree w/ Auto Assoc - we should all inflate our tires - but that doesn't serve as a plan
- on Iraq- we are proud and pleased at lowest # of casualties since war started happened in July - it's been a long hard struggle - we will be able to withdraw, as you do whenever a counterinsurgency strategy succeeds
- i'd love to tell you there's a parade down Broadway, but that's not what success is - it's a

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

govt that can govern effectively and econ stability is back
- a friend of mine commented, what do you think would happen if Saddam were still in charge and oil were $120/ barrel - i think we're a lot better off now that saddam and his sadistic sons are out
- i don't see how you can go and meet these last 5 brigades that are coming home and tell them, great job but the surge didnt succeed
- it's gonna be a tight race - i realize i'm the underdog, though the polls are getting better
- i was in sturgis last night w/ 50k harleys, adn i'd rather have 50k harleys than all those Berliners, like my opponent had
- all those harleys made me all the more proud to carry the banner of the GOP, which needs a lot of reforming leading up to the eleciton

- 1Q) How can we become more dependent on domestic oil? How can we get around enviro oppo?
    - MCCAIN: States ought to give their approval. Crist said he wanted it off the coast of FL and that's probably what the majority of FL voters think. And CA says they don't want it. It can be done more quickly than enviro groups are saying. And that's not just my opinion - as I said, I met with a group of "indep. petroleum producers" and they said it could be done. And I'll remind you LA and TX both have offshore oil rigs and they've both withstood significant hurricanes. So we have to drill here and drill now.
    - FOLLOWUP: I hope so. The American people deserve it.

- 2Q) We've had problems with products from China and from Mexico. will you erase some of those free trade incentives and bring jobs back to America?
    - MCCAIN: Americans are hurting badly in PA, OH, MI. And were hurting before this last downturn. We have to strengthen these agreements we've made. The next problem toy that comes from China will be the last toy - we need to strengthen the regulations. Our exports are probably the bright spot in our economic picture. And we need to do more w/ education and training programs to give workers another chance for jobs, esp if it's an older worker, in which case they should receive compensation.
    - MCCAIN: I understand you're hurting badly, and we have to keep your taxes low - Obama wants to raise your taxes- i think we need more $ in your hands. And health care should be in your hands rather than in govt's.
- FOLLOWUP: In other countries, they don't have the FDA and other rules and regs in terms of what goes into products and that's concerning.
    - MCCAIN: The next time that products come into the US and endanger the health and wellbeing of citizens, that'll be the last. If that means them having us over there to oversee the manufacturing process then so be it. The prob is we haven't enforced the agreements taht we've made - I will enforce them.

- Quick survey: What issue is most imp to you: (1) energy [?] (2) natl security (3) immig (4) pocketbook, e.g. housing mkt, (5) health care

- 3Q) Any role in the govt aiding us to conserve, e.g. incentives for solar panels, etc?
    - MCCAIN: I do, I do. Can I mention that Obama said we ought to inflate our tires and I don't disagree with that. But I also don't think that's a way to become energy independent. We ought to give tax and other incentives to homeowners and builders to make them more energy efficient. As you know, Detroit is starting to move forward with hybrid cars and flex-fuels, and if you bought one of those cars the govt should give you up to $5k. So anything we can do to make US conserve more energy, we should do so and do it actively as a govt. I believe we can see a rebirth of the Big 3 in Detroit thru this innovative technology.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

  - MCCAIN: I'd also like to see Cong, who decided to take a 5wk vacation while youre paying $4 for gas, and they've done nothing - they should provide ways to reduce our dependency on foreign oil. When I'm POTUS, they're not taking vacations like this. It's disgraceful. I wish the POTUS would call them back and make sure they do something about this.

- 4Q) Education - What's your stance on NCLB and what would you do to improve quality of education?
  - MCCAIN: TY for being a part of 1 of the most honorable vocations one could have. NCLB should be fixed - we shouldn't scrap it completely. It was the first attempt to engage students acrpss USA and see what programs are succeeding. And it was a bipartisan effort. It needs to be fixed after a period of time, and I think there's been enough time to go back to it. We need choice and competition in our schools. I addressed Urban League, NAACP and La Raza and said now we have equal opportunity and access to schools but how does that help if they don't have choice of school. Schools are better in high-income vs. low-income. Charter schools are a viable alternative - they're not the answer but they're viable. Home schooling is another option. We ought to reward good teachers and find failing teachers/principals/schools other lines of work. NYC has reformed its schools. NOLA school system now has 32 charter schools and education is improving. Charter schoools aren't answer but they're a choice. I want my kids to have the same chioce--pardon, I want all kids to have the choice that Obamas and we had when we chose to send our kids to other schools. should be a bipartisan effort.
- FOLLOWUP: With NCLB, we need to involved schools in decision-making process - they have great input. What woudl you do to involve the school district?
  - MCCAIN: I think it's our job as legislators and then as POTUS to go out and get input. It'd be terrible not to hear from the ppl we are impacting. I will urge Congress to talk to ppl out in the field and sit down together and fix it. I have a record of doin that. And I think it's the civil rts issue of this generation that every child should grow up and have a quality education. BTW, I have a duaghter named Meghan.

- OPERATOR- Quick survey w/ touchstone phone: how likely are you to cast a ballot in Nov? Scale 1-5

- 5Q) Neither GOP or Dem have reduced size of fed govt. We're all facing layoffs, but not in fed govt. Can you reduce budgeting or change rqmts to justify their continued existence?
  - MCCAIN: I agree. Mostly under GOPs we've presided over largest growth in govt since Great Society. And it's a great burden on the next gen. (1) We should make every bureaucracy and make them justify their existence. It won't be easy. (2) a lot of fed govt is nearing retirement - and I'm sure they don't deserve it- but instead of replacing them, we should use technology and replace them w/ computers. (3) we have to stop the spending - it's disgraceful. It's bred corruption and increased the size of bureauracracy. We've gotten into this 'gateway drug' that are earmarks. I've never asked for or received them; Obama has requested approx $1M / day in office. I will veto all and make them famous, which is obviously different from Obama's approach.
  - FOLLOWUP: TY for your refreshing ideas.
  - MCCAIN: TY, and if you have some, send them. [laughs]

- 6Q) In the beginning I was more for Obama, now more towards you. Why should you get my vote over Obama?
  - MCCAIN: B/c i'm a great American [laughs]. We've got 93 days and I hope independents will look at our positions. I respect and admire Obama. He won the nomination over a very talented competitor, I respect HRC. Different views of govt- lower vs. higher taxes, govt- vs indiv-handled health care. And then there's Iraq. And I asked Obama to join me in town halls and I would've loved to, but he's not gonna do that. And there's one other area: judges- there will be 2-3 vacancies. I believe in qualified but strict-constructionist judges. They've I'm proud of Alito and Roberts but Obama voted ag/ both of them.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

    - FOLLOWUP: I think you're great but I think you got my vote.

- Operator- last question.
- MCCAIN: Can we do 2 more?

- 7Q) I'm concerned over partisanship in DC, concerned w/ security and that we're not guarded ag/ this. What's your plan to bring country together?
    - MCCAIN: Cong approval at 9% and they decided to take vacation when ppl are paying at the pump - it's reprehensible. I have a history of working with Dems--Lieberman, Kennedy, Feingold. Americans want us to work together to fix these problems. And it's really sad- I never thought we'd be down like this at 9%. 80% of ppl think we're on the wrong track. Obama has the most liberal voting record in Senate and that's just his record. I assure you I'll reach acorss the aisle. And if they want the credit, they can have the credit.

- 8Q) As POTUS, you can use the bully pulpit to get info to public in a way that Cong has not been doing lately. 1 issue is the $53T deficit in Social Security and teh $2-3T interest accruing. Would you be open to bring in someone like David Walker?
    - MCCAIN: Funny you mention him b/c he's the most articulate person on this issue. It's a stark picture but I believe a true one. I wouldn't only bring him in but would commit to tell the American people the truth. I believe I'm the nominee of my party b/c I told ppl the truth. That's the beauty of town hall mtgs. I'm not a friend of his or anything, but I saw his work when he was head of GAO. We also need other people who are highly repsected adn regarded, GOP or Dem, e.g. Fiorina, Whitman, that need to go out and tell Americans the truth that we need to stop handing off these burdens to the next generation. It's not America. If they knew what we are doing, they wouldn't let us pass this on. The Concord Coalition has been very helpful to a lot of us b/c they're a veritable treasure trove of info. And we're going to have to pay the fiddler. And I'll sit down w/ Dems and tell them I'm against tax increases. In a bipartisan fashion, they will come around to my position and we will solve Social Security and solve Medicare.
- TY for taking your time. This is going to be an interesting election. On election night, we're going to be up late and we're going to be looking at PA. Every vote counts. I'm glad I got one tonight.

- OPERATOR: Please visit our website, johnmccain.com for more info.
- Recorded msg from McCain: if you have any questions, please leave your name and # after the tone. Or you can call our campaign HQ at [gives #] or visit our website.
- Recorded msg (woman): paid for by John McCain.

--
Sara DuBois
Tracking / Communications Manager
ProgressiveAccountability.org
sara@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Lauren Peterson" <lpeterson@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 7/31/2015 6:04:07 AM
Subject: Re: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

ok by me

On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 1:02 PM, Lauren Peterson <lpeterson@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

I vote for just replying directly with no period before the @ - people will see this and it will get pickup. We do need to shorten though - here's my attempt:

@ marcorubio That's backwards—engagement's a threat to the Castros, not a gift. Embargo hasn't worked for 50 yrs. Cuban ppl deserve better -H

On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 12:41 PM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

+ Nick and Lauren.

From: Brian Fallon [mailto:bfallon@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:39 PM
To: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >; Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Subject: Re: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

Like this (w the handle). Lets do it

On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 12:35 PM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

I like including his handle.

.@marcorubio you've got it backwards: Engagement isn't a gift to the Castros -- it's a threat to the Castros. Embargo hasn't worked for 50+ years. Cuban people deserve better.

On Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 12:26 PM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Dan/Brian, would love your input on this.

From: Christina Reynolds [mailto:creynolds@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:18 PM
To: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Re: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Love hitting him back. Will defer to the policy experts on which one, but I like mixing it up when we have the high ground.

On Jul 31, 2015, at 12:16 PM, Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

I like that. Another option:

@marcorubio I'm for the Cuban people. Time to stop helping the Castros through failed policies. Going back to those would be the mistake.

From: Jake Sullivan [mailto:jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:14 PM
To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: RE: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

Adding Reynolds.

Perhaps an HRC tweet along the lines of:

Those who seek to lead our country should focus on the future, not try to pull us back to the past. Embargo hasn't worked for 50+ years. Let's try something new.

From: John Podesta [mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com]
Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 12:05 PM
To: Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Laura Rosenberger <lrosenberger@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: RE: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

I'm good with either. Whatever is faster.

On Jul 31, 2015 8:00 AM, "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Adding Laura and Fallon. John, did you have in mind having HRC hit back, or campaign?
>
> From: Dan Schwerin [mailto:dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com]
> Sent: Friday, July 31, 2015 10:57 AM
> To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >
> Subject: Fwd: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Here we go...

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Jeremy Massey <jmassey@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Fri, Jul 31, 2015 at 10:31 AM
Subject: TWEET | Rubio Hits HRC On Cuba, Russia
To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >

User Actions

Following

Marco RubioVerified account @ marcorubio

After Clinton's failed 'reset' with Putin, now she wants to do a 'reset' with Castro. She is making another mistake.

https://twitter.com/marcorubio/status/627124174495055872

--

Jeremy Massey

Research Department

847 736 9211

JMassey@HillaryClinton.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Margolis, Jim" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
To: "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
Date: 5/3/2015 3:54:20 PM
Subject: Re: Clinton Cash and Week Ahead issues to discuss tomorrow am

I would add at end of last sentence: "...is absurd and never happened."

Jim Margolis
Sent from my iPhone.
Please excuse typos.

On May 3, 2015, at 5:17 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:

Here's a first stab:

The Foundation does life-saving work around the world, including getting HIV drugs to 8 MM people, getting nearly 28,000 African farmers to grow better crops to feed hungry people and it has helped get healthier food for American kids into 6000 schools. As for time as Sec of State --- I have represented the United States all over the globe, challenged world leaders over women's rights and human rights and defended our national interest every day. The notion that that anyone donating to the foundation was going to influence me in my job is absurd. (or "ludicrous")

From: Jake Sullivan [mailto:jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Sunday, May 03, 2015 2:31 PM
To: Jennifer Palmieri
Cc: Jim Margolis; Joel Benenson; Huma Abedin; Mandy Grunwald; Robby Mook; John Podesta; Kristina Schake; Dan Schwerin; Teddy Goff
Subject: Re: Clinton Cash and Week Ahead issues to discuss tomorrow am

I agree with Jen we should try to avoid Tuesday if that is possible. I like having her do it Wednesday, if we can make it til then -- saying a couple declarative sentences rejecting the basic premise [and expressing pride in Foundation's work], pointing to website, and then pivoting to positive message.

On Sun, May 3, 2015 at 1:33 PM, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
Friends - I wanted to lay out some issues to consider related to Clinton Cash and making news next week for discussion on Monday morning's call. Hope you are enjoying great weather in the meantime. JP

HRC ENGAGEMENT ON CLINTON CASH

The biggest question for this group is if and how HRC engages on Clinton Cash this week and what are the "two lines" she would deliver.

Reminder on this week's events for her. WJC on Today show on Monday; HRC in Vegas on Tuesday in front of the pool for an immigration event; fundraiser and lunch with the Mayor in SFO on Wednesday; LA fundraisers on Thursday; Bay Area fundraiser on Friday. All of the fundraisers are closed. To restate what we all discussed on Thursday and Friday - I would rather she not engage with press while we are in Vegas. Like to keep her on immigration and we handle response.

Below is a written statement Dan had drafted when we thought she might engage on this last week - so gives folks something to react to:

Statement from Hillary Clinton:
The suggestion that I or President Obama or any other senior official in this administration would ever allow decisions about national security to influenced by personal considerations – let alone some charitable donations – is absurd. Anyone who's had to sit in the Situation Room and make life and death choices would understand that. And if anyone ever donated to the Clinton Foundation in the hopes of influencing official government policy, they'd be a fool. Even the author himself has now admitted that he found zero evidence of any wrong-doing or quid pro quo. Unfortunately, the incredible life-saving work of the Clinton Foundation has gotten lost in these attacks. More than 9 million people with HIV/AIDS around the world have benefited from more affordable medicine because of the Clinton Foundation. Millions of American children have access to healthier food. Farmers in Africa are growing better crops. Women entrepreneurs are starting businesses. I'm so proud of the work that Bill, Chelsea, and all the professionals at the Foundation have done and continue to do. And I hope that people will judge the Foundation on that record of accomplishment, not on baseless conspiracy theories

CLINTON CASH RESPONSE/LAUNCH OF "THE BRIEFING"

On Tuesday morning we will launch The Briefing page on our website. This page will be where supporters and others can get information and points on what she is for, but also where we would post pushback on the book. Below is what we currently plan to post on Tuesday related to the book.

We are also considering a Podesta post that we would put on Medium and our site that unveils the concept of The Briefing, debunks the book a bit, and notes that while we will respond aggressively to attacks - we know that they are just designed to stop her bc R's know that she has right vision/policies to win and will not be distracted from our main highway of selling the positive. John and I discussed yesterday and think it is important that supporters and press know that we will deal aggressively with unfair attacks, but our real focus and her's is her proactive vision. Important that we do not appear beleaguered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton Cash Content for The Briefing:

1) a comprehensive post that debunks the book with all of our attacks in one place;

2) a short video narrated by Brian Fallon highlighting most egregious errors (we will need more time to do comprehensive version we discussed with HRC on Friday, but think it is worth doing short one for the book release on Tuesday);

3) a number of social media products that our supporters can share and are designed to get buzz with press and supporters and further discredit the author and the book;

4) the products we have already put out over the course of the last week.

This email is intended only for the named addressee. It may contain information that is confidential/private, legally privileged, or copyright-protected, and you should handle it accordingly. If you are not the intended recipient, you do not have legal rights to retain, copy, or distribute this email or its contents, and should promptly delete the email and all electronic copies in your system; do not retain copies in any media. If you have received this email in error, please notify the sender promptly. Thank you.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"John Graham" <jgraham@fairviewinsurance.com>
To:	"John Graham" <jgraham@fairviewinsurance.com>
Date:	9/29/2015 9:37:58 AM
Subject:	Putin and Obama clash over Syria as Russia calls for 'anti-Hitler' type alliance against Isil - Telegraph/ Is that Putin`s real intent? THE IRANIAN AGREEMENT CONTINUES ITS INFLUENCE ON U.S. MID EAST POLICY/ PUTIN NOW TAKES THE LEAD..

http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/11895857/Vladimir-Putin-and-Barack-Obama-speak-at-UN-General-Assembly-live.html
Instead of reading the N.Y.Times , let`s take a look at what world opinion , especially Europe , thinks of U.S. Leadership within the Middle-East. It is quite evident that Russian President Putin has seized the day. Only a few short years ago, the U.S. Middle -East Syrian strategy was to pursue the ouster of Syrian President Assad by supporting the anti- Assad insurgents with weapons and training. There was a significant equivocation from the White House since the Iran Nuclear negotiations remained a priority of the Administration`s legacy. The pursuit of the Iranian Agreement has obviously changed the venue within U.S Middle -East relationships away from our allies ,Israel, Saudi Arabia, Turkey , and Jordan toward Iranian influence within the region. Jordan and Saudi Arabia were prepared to eliminate the ISIL threat however that role was relinquished to Iran with their new found ally, Russia . Since that decision, Iran, the biggest supporter of Assad in Syria as well as the protagonist for International terrorism against the U.S. AND Israel, has aligned with the ever opportunistic Vladimir Putin . Therefore we have today , hundreds of thousands Syria immigrants fleeing a dictator who chemically kills his own people while being protected by Russia and Iran . Putin will be economically exporting his vast military wares to the Ayatollah Khamenei ,who will be replenished $150 B. for 10 years of nuclear self- restraint. Russia, Iran, Syria and Iraq will be sharing intelligence . Russia has military bases established in Syria in support of Assad. The intrigue concerning Putin`s motive is that his real intent is to eliminate ISIL from Syria or a more sinister goal of destroying the all of ASSAD `s opposition forces from all sides. Anyway you analyze it, the U.S. / Middle East policy has changed forever .Who are our trusted allies if any? Now you must ask yourself , was this Iran agreement really in our best interest?
YOU DECIDE!

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Alexandria Phillips" <aphillips@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Alexandria Phillips" <aphillips@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	5/20/2015 12:40:37 AM
Subject:	H4A News Clips 5.20.15
Attachments:	H4A 5 20 15 Clips.docx

H4A Press Clips

May 20, 2015

SUMMARY OF TODAY'S NEWS

Hillary Clinton was in Cedar Falls, Iowa yesterday and spoke with small business owners about small business growth in America, the economy and American families. She also took questions from members of the press corps in attendance. The Iowa press coverage focused on her commitment to small businesses while the national coverage focused on the Q&A.

The campaign released information about campaign trips to Missouri, Texas and Florida where Hillary Clinton will campaign and the stories ran in those markets before fundraising invitations leaked about those trips.

NBC News Latino and La Opinoin are reporting that Hillary for America hires DREAMer Lorella Paeli to be the campaign Latino outreach director. Praeli, who was undocumented for almost 13 years and became an outspoken advocate during that time, will be the Clinton campaign's main point person with Latino communities around the country.

USA Today did a profile piece about the Hillary for America strategy saying that the early phase of the campaign has worked while the AP has a story about the campaign strategist sticking to plans or structure of the campaign and not changing after most recent news.

LAST NIGHTS EVENING NEWS

All three networks had segments on HRC's trip to Iowa and answering questions from reporters. ABC focused on how HRC could relate to voters despite her vast wealth and went on to discuss her State Department emails, including the clip of HRC stating that she wants her emails to be released as soon as possible. CBS focused on the State Department emails noted HRC urged the State Department to speed up its timeline; said HRC kept the emails on her home server for two years before Republicans on the Benghazi Committee demanded them; reported HRC had been avoiding answering questions about emails she deleted and foreign donations to The Clinton Foundation. NBC had a short segment on HRC's Iowa roundtable and taking questions from the press reported Republicans slammed HRC for her use of private emails; showed Christie's comments from The Kelly File last night in which he said her use of a private email server was "incredible"; shifted into HRC's answer on Iraq.

SUMMARY OF TODAY'S NEWS..... 1
LAST NIGHTS EVENING NEWS..... 1
TODAY'S KEY STORIES..... 4

Iowa shrugs off Clinton controversies // CNN // Eric Bradner - May 19, 2015..... 4

Clinton touts small business in Cedar Falls, Independence stops // WCF Courier // Christinia Crippes - May 19, 2015..... 6

Clinton campaign aims for style, substance points amid scrutiny // USA Today // Martha T. Moore - May 19, 2015..... 9

Hillary Clinton Taps DREAMer Lorella Praeli As Latino Outreach Director // NBC News Latino // Sandra Lilley – May 20,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2015..... 12

Hillary Clinton will host an Atlanta fundraiser next week // AJC // Greg Bluestein - May 19, 2015. 13

Hillary Clinton to travel to Florida, Texas and Missouri // MSNBC // Alex Seitz-Wald - May 19, 2015 14

SOCIAL MEDIA..... 14

Joshua Green (5/19/15, 11:53 AM) Elizabeth Warren on @BloombergTV asked about Hillary's refusal to take position on TPP: "I'd like to see her be clearer on that"..... 14

Speaker John Boehner (5/19/15, 2:49 PM) Revealed: “Hillary Received Memo Describing #Benghazi As Planned Terror Attack Within Hours,” reports @DailyCaller http://j.mp/1HsrfLo 15

Howard Kurtz (5/19/15, 4:09 PM) Hillary's pal & Clinton foundation guy Sid Blumenthal emails about Libya while trying to do business with Libya. Will discuss w @megynkelly..... 15

Charlie Mahtesian (5/19/15, 4:04 PM) Hillary Clinton will hit the fundraising trail June 5 in Greenwich, CT, at a $29.7 million Roman villa http://blog.ctnews.com/politics/2015/05/19/hillary-clinton-to-hit-fundraising-trail-in-greenwich/ …..... 15

Correct the Record (5/19/15, 4:00 PM) @woodhouseb will join @erinburnett on @outfrontcnn tonight to talk about @HillaryClinton's visit to Iowa..... 15

Martin Chavez (5/18/15, 8:05 PM) Hillary to join us in Albuquerque June 3rd for a fundraiser breakfast! We've got to raise money early to make... http://fb.me/6DtQ396Xa..... .. 15

Martin O'Malley (5/19/15, 6:20 AM) I've got exciting news to share about my upcoming announcement on May 30th. Follow me on Snapchat at GovernorOMalley to find out @ 12pm ET!..... 15

Jonathan Topaz (5/19/15, 5:45 PM) Hm: @BernieSanders: "I don't think six debates are enough...we will be interacting with the DNC to try [for] as many debates as possible"..... 15

Michael Barbaro (5/19/15, 6:19 AM) Possible explanation for why Christie wouldn't address immigration for months? Was preparing to change his position: http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2015/05/19/chris-christie-citizenship-for-undocumented-immigrants-extreme/ …..... 15

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 15

Howard Dean urges NH Democrats, progressives to back Hillary Clinton // WMUR // May 19, 2015 15

New report claims al-Qaeda-Benghazi link known day after attack // USA Today // Oren Dorell - May 19, 2015..... 16

GOP fumbles latest attack on Hillary Clinton's email use // CBS News // Jake Miller - May 19, 2015 17

Hillary Clinton on her emails: I want them out, too! // Politico // Josh Gerstein and Gabriel Debenedetti - May 19, 2015..... 19

Clinton's "Second Email Address" Was Explained Months Ago, But Fox Missed The Evidence // Media Matters // Hannah Groch-Belgey - May 19, 2015..... 21

Hillary Clinton says her Iraq war vote was a 'mistake' // Politico // Adam Lerner – May 19, 2015... 23

Hillary Clinton’s State Department Staff Kept Tight Rein on Records // WSJ // Laura Meckler - May 19, 2015..... 24

Hillary talks tough on Wall Street regulation // CNN // MJ Lee - May 19, 2015..... 28

Republicans Very Troubled By Clinton Donors See No Conflict With Their Own Dark Money // Huffington Post // Paul Blumenthal - May 19, 2015..... 29

Half of Hillary Clinton’s Speaking Fees Came From Groups Also Lobbying Congress // TIME // Philip Elliott - May 19, 2015..... 30

From ‘dead broke’ to multimillionaires // WaPo // Kennedy Elliott, Alexander Becker, Philip Rucker, Tom Hamburger, Peter Wallsten, and Rosalind Helderman - May 19, 2015..... 31

Hillary Clinton’s hypocrisy // WaPo // Dan Milbank – May 19, 2015..... 31

Hillary Clinton downplays Sidney Blumenthal's influence // Politico // Adam Lerner – May 19, 2015 33

Hillary Clinton Tamps Down ‘Third Term’ Chatter // NYT // Maggie Haberman - May 19, 2015..... 34

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary's launch delay // Politico // Annie Karnia - May 19, 2015..... 37

Hillary Clinton vows help for small business // McClatchy DC // Anita Kumar - May 19, 2015..... 38

Clinton pops in on small business owners // Des Moines Register // Tony Leys - May 19, 2015..... 40

Iowans wonder: How long can Clinton's big campaign stay small? // CNN // Eric Bradner - May 19, 2015 41

The 6 questions Hillary Clinton answered in Iowa // Des Moines Register // Jennifer Jacobs - May 19, 2015 44

After media drought, Hillary Clinton takes some questions in Iowa // WaPo // Robert Costa and David Fahrenthold - May 19, 2015..... 47

Hillary Clinton finally takes questions, defends speech income // WaPo // Robert Costa - May 19, 2015 49

Hillary Clinton Talks to Small-Business Owners in Iowa, Then Gives Reporters a Turn // NYT // Amy Chozick - May 19, 2015..... 50

Hillary Clinton Finally Takes Reporters' Questions in Iowa // National Journal // Emily Schultheis - May 19, 2015..... 53

In Iowa, Hillary Clinton Takes A Question About Her Questions // Buzzfeed News // Ruby Cramer - May 19, 2015..... 54

After A Month, The 7 Questions Hillary Clinton Answered From The Media // NPR // Amita Kelly – May 19, 2015..... 57

Even when flying with the public, Hillary Clinton keeps it private // MSNBC // Alex Seitz-Wald - May 19, 2015..... 60

Rand Welcomes Hillary to the Felon Voting Rights Cause–But She's Been There for Years // Bloomberg // David Weigel - May 19, 2015..... 61

On Trade Deal, Hillary Sits on the Fence // US News // David Catanese - May 19, 2015..... 63

Clinton finds problems with Obama TPP trade proposal // CNN // Eric Bradner - May 19, 2015..... 64

Clinton, White House spar over trade as fast-track vote looms // Reuters // Amanda Becker - May 19, 2015 65

Hillary Clinton Is Pitching Herself To Millennials // Huffington Post // Howard Fineman - May 19, 2015 66

Hillary Clinton's top campaign aides in Nevada // Ralston Reports // Jon Ralston - May 19, 2015. 67

Hillary Clinton to hit fundraising trail in Greenwich // CT News // Neil Vigdor - May 19, 2015..... 68

Nurtured by Clinton Network, O'Malley Now Becomes 2016 Rival // ABC News // Lisa Lerer and Ken Thomas, Associated Press - May 19, 2015..... 70

Clinton Super PAC Executive Director Exits Amid Shake-Up // BuzzFeed // Ruby Cramer –May 21, 2015 72

Iowa Democrats: Flawed Clinton Our Only Hope // Bloomberg // David Knowles – May 20,2015.. 73

Amid criticism, Clinton sticks to low-key campaign strategy // AP // Julie Pace – May 20, 2015.... 74

Fundraiser puts spotlight on Clinton Foundation finances // Politico // Gabriel Debenedetti..... 76

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 78

O'Malley announces 2016 launch details // Politico // Jonathan Topaz - May 19, 2015..... 78

O'Malley picks Federal Hill to announce next move // Baltimore Sun // John Fritze - May 19, 2015 79

Elizabeth Warren Wants Hillary Clinton To 'Weigh In On Trade' // Huffington Post // Dana Liebelson - May 19, 2015..... 80

GOP..... 81

Marc Lasry Says Jeb Bush Would Be 'Reasonable' President // Bloomberg // Saijel Kishan - May 19, 2015 81

Marco Rubio Coming To Nevada Later This Month // CBS Local // May 19, 2015..... 81

Seth Meyers Mocks Marco Rubio's 'Bumpy Sunday' on Iraq // Mediaite // Matt Wilstein - May 19, 2015 82

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CNN Asks Rand Paul What He Would Do If ISIS Entered Baghdad // Real Clear Politics // Tim Hains - May 19, 2015..... 82

Carly Fiorina coming to Palm Beach County; Rand Paul cancels to fight Patriot Act // Palm Beach Post // George Bennett - May 19, 2015..... 83

TOP NEWS..... 84

DOMESTIC..... 84

White House Says Would Veto Trade Bill If Currency Amendment is Added // TIME // Maya Rhodan - May 19, 2015..... 84

Lenny Curry defeats incumbent Democratic Mayor Alvin Brown in Jacksonville // Tampa Bay Times // Alex Leary - May 19, 2015..... 84

Beau Biden, vice president's son, hospitalized // USA Today // Gregory Korte - May 19, 2015..... 85

Upgrades finalized for Roaring Brook Road rail crossing // Lohud // Hoa Nguyen - May 18, 2015.. 85

Senate outmaneuvers hard-line abortion foe in passing 20-week ban with exceptions // Post and Courier // Cynthia Roldan - May 19, 2015..... 86

SC Republican: Abortion Ban Doesn't Keep Rape Victims Pregnant Enough // Jezebel // Anna Merlan - May 19, 2015..... 88

INTERNATIONAL..... 89

Iraq's Sunni Strategy Collapses in Ramadi Rout // NYT // Tim Arango - May 19, 2015..... 89

U.N. chief: North Korea cancels visit // CNN // Steve Almasy - May 19, 2015..... 92

Gay Marriage on Ballot Shows Shift in Irish Attitudes // NYT // Douglas Dalby - May 19, 2015..... 92

OPINIONS/EDITORIALS/BLOGS..... 95

Markos Moulitsas: Clinton a true liberal // The Hill // Markos Moultisas - May 19, 2015..... 95

Hillary Clinton's Iraq Dilemma // New Yorker // John Cassidy - May 19, 2015..... 97

I Don't Believe Hillary Clinton // National Journal // Ron Fournier - May 19, 2015..... 99

Hillary Clinton wants to allow felons to vote. That could mean a lot in a state like Florida. // WaPo // Philip Bump - May 19, 2015..... 100

Ohio Gov. John Kasich is right to "ban the box": editorial // Cleveland // Editorial Board - May 19, 2015 102

What I Told College Graduates // Medium // Vice President Biden - May 19, 2015..... 102

Lifelong Republican Turns On His Party, Embraces Obamacare // Think Progress // Tara Culp-Ressler - May 19, 2015..... 105

MISCELLANEOUS..... 107

Upgrades finalized for Roaring Brook Road rail crossing // Iohud // Hoa Nguyen – May 19, 2015. 107

TODAY'S KEY STORIES

Iowa shrugs off Clinton controversies // CNN // Eric Bradner - May 19, 2015

Cedar Falls, Iowa (CNN) The parallel universes of Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign collided Tuesday.

In one world, four Iowans who'd all been invited by Clinton's team saddled up to a table to talk with her about what she might do to ease regulations on small banks and whether she'll support a Pacific Rim free trade deal.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In the other world, reporters who hadn't gotten Clinton to respond to a single query in nearly a month threw her questions about her private email server, her personal wealth gained from exorbitant speaking fees, her family foundation's acceptance of foreign contributions, the 2003 invasion of Iraq and the influence old friends who now represent business interests have on her decision-making process.

By taking five minutes' worth of questions, Clinton appears to have released some of the pressure that has built in the national press recently over her desire to focus on the policy matters that she views as central to her 2016 bid for the Democratic nomination without being sidetracked by the ever-present questions about her personal ethics and the day's news.

Disconnect

But if the strategy is frustrating reporters, it's not having much impact here. A disconnect between Washington and the heartland crystallized Tuesday as many Iowans — including the Democratic activists who will drive the state's caucuses in early 2016 — seemed to meet Clinton's interactions and non-interactions with the press with little more than a shrug.

"I don't think that's a widespread concern by most voters," said Tom Henderson, the Democratic chairman in Polk County, which is Iowa's most populous.

In interviews after Clinton's events, no one who attended raised any concerns about her handling of emails, her finances or her family's foundation.

"Most of us think it's a pretty moot point. Lots of us have tons of emails," said Brad Magg, the owner of Goldie's Ice Cream Shoppe and Magg Family Catering and a participant in a Cedar Falls, Iowa, roundtable on Tuesday. "I care about what she's going to do for policy and what she's going to do for our communities, for our counties, for our state, and that's all I think most of us care about."

"I'm here today because I care about small business, point blank," said Denita Gadson, owner of i-Gus Consulting and another participant Tuesday.

But Clinton's take on policy? That, she said, is another matter — and she'll need to hear more before endorsing the Democrat.

"I don't know that I'm jaded or cynical enough to say one way or the other," she said. "Things have to play out."

Like Gadson, who quizzed Clinton on Tuesday about the Trans-Pacific Partnership, some Democrats who are most likely to participate in the early-state nominating process say they are less interested in the personality-driven controversies that constantly surround Clinton and are more keen to get her take on issues like free trade, which has pitted two other prominent Democrats — President Barack Obama and Sen. Elizabeth Warren — against each other.

'Absolutely perfect'

Dean Genth, who hosted a Clinton house party Monday in Mason City, Iowa, said he loves the way Clinton has launched her campaign.

"I think it is absolutely perfect," he said. "She needs to have the small events first. With her resume and her viability and the Secret Service protection she requires, she will definitely be doing the big rallies at some point. But I think she is right to start with small events in a grassroots way."

Genth added that the big events will come, "but now is not the time."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"We are thrilled she is giving a signal to Iowans that she understands the importance of this state and wants to interact with us," he said.

Despite some of the ambivalence here about Clinton's press strategy, there are signs that she pays at least some price for leaving questions unanswered. An NBC/Wall Street Journal poll found only a quarter of registered voters said they viewed her as honest and straightforward, down 13 percentage points from last summer.

Henderson recalled the 2007 Democratic primary with Clinton running against then-Sens. Barack Obama and John Edwards — where Clinton's vote in favor of the 2003 war in Iraq, and her refusal to fully retreat from that vote, damaged her.

"Sometimes she tends to dance, and I think people have been frustrated with that in the past," Henderson said.

He said that at this stage in the presidential race, candidates like Clinton are still focused on adding field organizers, making contacts with activists and making their first few trips into states. But Henderson also noted that unlike Clinton, former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley -- a likely Democratic challenger — has already held open events in Iowa, mingling with anyone who walked in.

"Those are the type of events where Iowans can get engaged and start to touch the candidate," he said.

There, he said, Democrats can start to get a sense of what really matters to them: "What is your vision? Why do you want to be president of the United States? That's one thing that everybody is waiting to hear from her."

Clinton touts small business in Cedar Falls, Independence stops // WCF Courier // Christinia Crippes - May 19, 2015

INDEPENDENCE | "Go in. Buy something. Help small business," Hillary Clinton urged the media pool preceding her into Laree's Independence gift shop.

Clinton, the former first lady, U.S. senator, secretary of state and odds-on favorite to win the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination, was in Northeast Iowa Tuesday to continue a conversation with small business owners.

She held a roundtable with four regional business leaders at Bike Tech in Cedar Falls on Tuesday morning, which included about a dozen invited guests including three Democratic state lawmakers and several more media, before traveling to Independence to meet business owners in their shops.

“I’m running for president because everyday Americans and their families need a champion, and I want to be that champion,” Clinton said at Bike Tech. “I want to make the words ‘middle-class’ mean something again.”

Clinton said she wants to be the president of small business and pointed to four areas she wants to address, if she’s elected next fall.

Those objectives are to cut red tape for small business, simplify their tax filing, increase targeted tax credits and make it easier for them to get financing. That latter goal was her main focus during the roundtable at Bike Tech, which featured the business’ owner Brent Johnson.

Clinton criticized Republicans for their “cynical attempt to game the system for those at the top” by supporting a full repeal of the Dodd-Frank financial reform bill.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton said the country “ought to be able to walk and chew gum at the same time” by keeping the majority of Dodd-Frank in place to regulate big banks while not over-burdening small banks that help small businesses.

Donna Sorensen, Cedar Rapids Bank and Trust board chairwoman, agreed with Clinton that the federal government ought to be able to regulate big banks and community banks differently. She noted other industries regulate based on size. She said that all banks need to be regulated but that the standards should be different.

The Republicans offered their own critiques of Clinton.

The Republican National Committee issued a press release criticizing Clinton’s professed championing of small business where she said in New Hampshire she was “very surprised’ to learn how small businesses are struggling.

The Republican Party of Iowa criticized a lack of transparency so far in Clinton’s campaign.

“What difference, at this point, does it make if Hillary Clinton answers one or two more questions? There are hundreds of unanswered questions about her decades of scandal, which explains why more Iowans than not find her untrustworthy,” Iowa GOP spokesman Charlie Szold said in a statement.

Clinton fielded five media questions following her Cedar Falls event, but iGUS Consulting owner Denita Gadson of Waterloo, was not shy during the roundtable about asking Clinton about some of the hot topics currently making news.

Gadson asked Clinton a question from one of her clients about helping young entrepreneurs get started, specifically those who have a criminal past but are aiming now to get on the right track.

“It hasn’t taken their dreams away, but it has made it more difficult for them to pursue those dreams," Gadson said.

Clinton said that’s a fair question. She agreed that some communities have to overcome much more to have small business growth, and supported finding ways for those communities to have access to tools to start to grow.

She also backed voting rights restorations for people with criminal backgrounds.

Gadson also asked about whether Clinton supported the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade agreement.

Clinton essentially that it depends on what is in the agreement. She laid out some specifics of what she would want to see in a trade deal before she would accept it, including addressing currency manipulation by other countries, environmental and health regulations, and protecting jobs in the United States.

The Americans for Democratic Action - Iowa protested outside Clinton’s roundtable on just that issue. About a dozen activists across the street from Bike Tech expressed their opposition to the proposed trade agreement and urged Clinton to give her opinion on it.

On the other end of the political spectrum, Judd Saul, a conservative activist with Cedar Valley Patriots for Christ, and a few other conservatives also came out to protest the event, though they focused on opposition to Clinton in general.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

While Clinton's Cedar Falls event focused on issues, her Independence stop was more about celebrating and supporting small businesses.

Her first stop was Em's Coffee Co., where Clinton ordered an espresso and placed an order for a sandwich before heading to Laree's. Em's Coffee Co . is run by Emile Hillman, 26, with help from her mother Tami Fenner.

Clinton, a new grandmother, followed her own shop-local admonishment to reporters and picked up some gifts for her granddaughter Charlotte.

Clinton bought a 2-in-1 talking plush ball and a farm animal plush barn that made farm noises. She also purchased a book titled "Theories of Everything" by Brian Andreas, an Iowan, which left her cracking up laughing and ultimately reading a passage to reporters.

"This was a great stop," Clinton said as owner Laree Randall totaled up Clinton's purchases.

Before heading to Laree's, Clinton met owner of the local Hardware Hank store, Shirley Tekippe and her son Terry Tekippe.

"I think it was wonderful. I think it was great she took time to stop in our small community," Terry Tekippe said.

Shirley Tekippe said she'd met the former first lady during her 2008 campaign for president. She remembers Clinton praised her pink sweater.

"She didn't have to do that," Shirley said.

"Hopefully, she remembers Main Street," Tekippe said of Clinton. "Main Street is important.

Clinton campaign aims for style, substance points amid scrutiny // USA Today // Martha T. Moore - May 19, 2015

In the weeks since she formally, finally announced her campaign for the presidency in April, Hillary Clinton has sought to score points for style and substance.

Style, to convince Democratic voters that she won't run like an incumbent who views the primaries as a mere formality — a complaint about her 2008 presidential campaign. Substance, to signal her liberal bona fides to Democrats who long for the bank-bashing Sen. Elizabeth Warren to get into the presidential nominating contest.

So Clinton took a road trip halfway across the U.S. from New York to Iowa in a van nicknamed Scooby Doo and stopped to grab a bite at a Chipotle in Ohio. She met with small groups of voters for "roundtable discussions" in which she nodded and listened — much as she did when she began running for the Senate in 2000, breaking ground as the first first lady to run for office.

Early reviews say Clinton has achieved what she set out to do when she launched her campaign on April 12. However, as she looks ahead to the next phase of her presidential bid and tries to continue to avoid the missteps that cost her in 2008, she will be challenged to put forward a clear rationale for her candidacy while dueling with scrutiny from press she has largely kept at bay.

Clinton "cleared a couple of important hurdles," says Democratic consultant Ben LaBolt, press secretary for President Obama's 2012 campaign. "The first is, showing that she's relatable and down to earth."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

So far, Clinton's campaign staff seems to be functioning smoothly, without the internal turmoil that marked her 2008 effort, says Charlie Cook, editor of the nonpartisan Cook Report. "Her campaign may make new mistakes but certainly seems like they won't be making the same mistakes as last time. The arrogance seems to be gone."

APPEALS TO THE LEFT

On the issues, she's staking out ground that should appeal to liberal primary voters. She has said she favors citizenship for illegal immigrants, supports same-sex marriage, and suggested a constitutional amendment to reform campaign finance. When she said in an April speech in New York that economic success should be measured "by how many families get ahead and stay ahead," she added a jab at Wall Street, calling family income a "far better measure (of prosperity) than the size of the bonuses handed out in downtown office buildings."

Her call for "an end to mass incarceration" in a speech on criminal justice reform April 29 was an implicit acknowledgment of flaws in President Bill Clinton's 1994 crime initiative, which funded thousands of police officers during a tough-on-crime era that sent prison populations soaring.

Her campaign says Clinton's policy statements so far haven't been aimed at the party's left wing in particular. Immigration, criminal justice reform and same-sex marriage have "a common theme of justice, fairness, equity, social justice. The thematic that runs through them is consistent to her and her life's work," spokesman Jesse Ferguson says.

Her willingness to articulate positions on important issues to Democrats hasn't cost her in polls of New Hampshire voters, says Neil Levesque of the New Hampshire Institute of Politics at St. Anselm's College. "Sometimes incumbents or people who have big leads tend to equivocate because they don't want to lose anybody," he says. "She didn't do that."

However, Clinton still faces pressure from the Democratic left wing over President Obama's Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) trade proposal, which many in her party oppose .

Clinton backed the NAFTA deal negotiated during Bill Clinton's administration and supported the Pacific pact while secretary of State. Now she says she wants to wait until a final agreement on TPP is reached before taking a position. .

Like Jeb Bush's efforts to differentiate himself from President George W. Bush, Clinton's policy statements, while early in the campaign, are a way to distinguish herself from her husband, LaBolt says. "She showed in the crime speech that they're not the same candidate."

However, the scattershot policy pronouncements have yet to reveal what her campaign is all about, says Dennis Goldford, a political scientist at Drake University in Iowa. What's needed, he says, is a clear rationale for her candidacy. "She still, I think, has not solved that problem. Other than the fact that she desperately wants to be president … what would Hillaryism mean to the country?" he says.

Too soon, LaBolt says, given that the first primaries are still seven months away. "Voters don't really engage until a lot closer until Election Day and you don't want to go out and talk about your signature initiatives until you're sure voters are tuned in."

THE NEXT PHASE

Her campaign insists that the slow rollout in the opening weeks was all about letting Clinton learn what voters want and need. But it also provides an opportunity for a handful of primary-state residents to get near a woman who has been demonized, as well as idolized, for decades.

"If she can continue to have those conversations (with voters), then that process is valuable both ways," Ferguson says.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"A candidate who has not been in the mix in a while needs to find out what the big issues are and what people are dealing with," says Levesque. "I think that she played it right ... You really need to know how much a gallon of milk is before you get into New Hampshire and Iowa."

Clinton's campaign has also designed her fundraising activity to appear low-key — though she will be the beneficiary of the super PAC Priorities USA. She has kept a busy schedule of fundraising at events where individual donations are capped at $2,700. The events are hosted by bundlers called "Hillstarters," supporters who promise to recruit 10 donations of $2,700 each — a relatively low bar in the world of political finance.

Clinton has agreed to participate in six primary debates. Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders is the only other announced Democratic candidate, but former Maryland governor Martin O'Malley has an announcement set for May 30. Lincoln Chafee, a former Rhode Island governor, and former Virginia senator Jim Webb are also considering runs.

Clinton needs more opponents, not fewer, to succeed, Goldford says. "She desperately needs some top-tier competition to keep her sharp."

Clinton will complete her tour of the primary states with another trip to New Hampshire later this week, then a May 27 visit to South Carolina; she was in Iowa on Monday and Tuesday. Her campaign says it will be "a continuing process where she's going to be on the road, continuing to listen to voters," Ferguson says. "Then we are going to turn to a more concrete polished rollout phase of the campaign. We're still in the phase where the first priority is making sure she has those conversations."

All of her initial campaign activity has taken place against a backdrop of continued controversy: over donations to the Clinton foundation from foreign donors, over her use of personal email while secretary of State and over the 2012 Benghazi attack on American diplomats, including a report from The New York Times this week about memos on Libya she received from Sidney Blumenthal, a friend who worked for the Clinton Foundation, while Clinton was at the State Department.

News organizations, as well as Republicans, have hammered Clinton for not giving interviews while campaigning. On Tuesday, she fielded questions from reporters for the first time in weeks.

Clinton should make that issue go away, Cook says, if only by holding off-the-record sessions as her top campaign staff did with journalists prior to her announcement. "Have them over to the house and make nice, just to get them off her back," he says.

But it will be larger campaign themes that determine Clinton's success, Cook says, rather than the running undercurrent of media snubbing or scandal stories.

"It will be about bigger things. If Clinton can project herself as fresh ideas and future oriented, generating energy and excitement, she will do very well," he says.

Hillary Clinton Taps DREAMer Lorella Praeli As Latino Outreach Director // NBC News Latino // Sandra Lilley – May 20, 2015

Democratic presidential hopeful Hillary Clinton has named prominent immigrant DREAMer activist Lorella Praeli as Latino Outreach Director, a Clinton campaign official told NBC News. Praeli, who was undocumented for almost 13 years and became an outspoken advocate during that time, will be the Clinton campaign's main point person with Latino communities around the country. She will also be one of the campaign's surrogates with the press on Latino issues, including immigration.

Praeli's appointment sends a strong signal that the Clinton campaign recognizes immigration reform as a key issue for many of the nation's Hispanic voters. It also sends a message to Republican candidates to take a clearer position on immigration - a contentious issue for the GOP - as they court Latino votes. Recently Clinton said she supported full and equal citizenship for undocumented immigrants, saying that anything less is "code for second-class status."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In a statement obtained by NBC News, Hillary for America National Political Director Amanda Renteria stated "We are thrilled to have Lorella Praeli, a DREAMer, join our team because of her courage and perspective in the fight for Latino families across the country."

"Bringing Lorella into our campaign is the next step in making sure families aren't living in fear of deportation, all students have the chance to go to college, and that any comprehensive immigration reform ensures full and equal citizenship," stated Renteria.

Praeli has been Advocacy and Policy Director for United We Dream, one of the country's largest immigrant youth organizations, pushing the Obama administration and both parties to take action on immigration issues and legislation.

Born in Peru, Praeli was brought to the U.S. by her family at age 10 to provide her with better opportunities; Praeli lost a leg in an accident when she was 2. The family moved to Connecticut and her mother, who was a psychiatrist in Peru, worked as a housekeeper. Praeli attended Quinnipiac University, where she graduated summa cum laude and where she also came out as undocumented and became active as a young DREAMer.

Though Praeli obtained a green card in 2012, members of her family still lack legal status, as is the case with many immigrant families. Praeli's mother is currently undocumented, while her younger sister Maria obtained deferred action status through DACA and made headlines after confronting President and Mrs. Obama on immigration, also stating DREAMers were looking at the positions of potential candidates, including Hillary Clinton.

Praeli's new role as Latino outreach director - she starts in mid-June - is one of several high-profile Latino appointments in the Clinton campaign, including Amanda Renteria as national political director and Jose Villarreal as campaign treasurer. Clinton also named two Latinos in Nevada, Emmy Ruiz and Jorge Neri, as state director and organizing director.

Hillary Clinton will host an Atlanta fundraiser next week // AJC // Greg Bluestein - May 19, 2015

Democratic presidential front-runner Hillary Clinton is headed to Atlanta next week to raise some cash and shake some hands, her first visit to Georgia this campaign season.

Two Democratic insiders say hosts are being lined up for the May 28 visit, which is likely to be a breakfast event. A Clinton aide later confirmed the report.

The trip comes a day after the former Secretary of State stops by South Carolina for her first visit since 2007, though details of that trip are still in the works.

While Hillary hasn't yet visited Georgia this campaign season, her husband Bill talked to an architect convention in Atlanta last week. He didn't mention her name during the lengthy talk, though.

The Clinton trip would cap a busy month of visits from White House hopefuls to Georgia. New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and Sens. Marco Rubio and Ted Cruz stumped at the Georgia Republican convention over the weekend, and Ohio Gov. John Kasich has a date for a May 26 GOP barbecue in east Georgia.

Still, all the attention pales in comparison to the love presidential candidates are showing neighboring South Carolina.

Update 6:07 p.m.: Republican National Committee spokeswoman Ali Pardo responded to news of the Clinton visit by attacking her for hobnobbing with donors instead of commoners:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Hillary Clinton’s campaign has been full of hypocrisy, flip-flops, and scandals, so it’s no surprise she would prefer to avoid interacting with real voters. The truth is that Clinton is more comfortable schmoozing with millionaire donors than pretending to relate to average Americans.”

Hillary Clinton to travel to Florida, Texas and Missouri // MSNBC // Alex Seitz-Wald - May 19, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa – Hillary Clinton will travel to Florida, Texas and Missouri in the coming weeks to build support for her presidential campaign beyond the early primary and caucus states, a campaign aide tells msnbc.

In addition to building robust campaign teams in the four early voting states – Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada – Clinton’s campaign has hired organizers in dozens of other states as part of a 50-state organizing program they call the “Ramp Up Organizing Program.”

The goal is to lay the groundwork and organize grassroots support that will help her in later primaries and caucuses in those states. And it’s an effort to show that Clinton will fight for every vote, including in red states like Texas.

Clinton’s campaign has had organizers on the ground for weeks in a number of states, and it has sent surrogates or senior campaign aides on her behalf. But now Clinton will personally travel to three of these states for campaign events and fundraisers.

Clinton will visit Florida next week on Thursday, May 28 and Friday, May 29. Then she’ll head to Texas on Wednesday, June 3 and Thursday, June 4. And later, she’ll travel to Missouri on Tuesday, June 23.

In the 2008 Democratic primary contest, Clinton won Florida and Texas, while Barack Obama upset her in Missouri.

It’s an “effort to continue building for primary states beyond the early four,” said a campaign aide, who requested anonymity to discuss Clinton’s travel plans. “These local grassroots volunteer infrastructures will help the campaign be ready to compete and win the 2016 Florida, Texas and Missouri primaries.”

Clinton will hold a variety of campaign events in each state, including roundtable discussions, speeches and tours of local institutions and businesses.

The events will be held around fundraisers in each state.

The former secretary of state is in Iowa Tuesday for an event on small businesses. On Wednesday, she heads to Chicago for three fundraisers. And on Friday she returns to New Hampshire.

SOCIAL MEDIA

Joshua Green (5/19/15, 11:53 AM) Elizabeth Warren on @BloombergTV asked about Hillary's refusal to take position on TPP: "I'd like to see her be clearer on that"

Speaker John Boehner (5/19/15, 2:49 PM) Revealed: “Hillary Received Memo Describing #Benghazi As Planned Terror Attack Within Hours,” reports @DailyCaller http://j.mp/1HsrfLo

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Howard Kurtz (5/19/15, 4:09 PM) Hillary's pal & Clinton foundation guy Sid Blumenthal emails about Libya while trying to do business with Libya. Will discuss w @megynkelly

Charlie Mahtesian (5/19/15, 4:04 PM) Hillary Clinton will hit the fundraising trail June 5 in Greenwich, CT, at a $29.7 million Roman villa http://blog.ctnews.com/politics/2015/05/19/hillary-clinton-to-hit-fundraising-trail-in-greenwich/ …

Correct the Record (5/19/15, 4:00 PM) @woodhouseb will join @erinburnett on @outfrontcnn tonight to talk about @HillaryClinton's visit to Iowa

Martin Chavez (5/18/15, 8:05 PM) Hillary to join us in Albuquerque June 3rd for a fundraiser breakfast! We've got to raise money early to make... http://fb.me/6DtQ396Xa

Martin O'Malley (5/19/15, 6:20 AM) I've got exciting news to share about my upcoming announcement on May 30th. Follow me on Snapchat at GovernorOMalley to find out @ 12pm ET!

Jonathan Topaz (5/19/15, 5:45 PM) Hm: @BernieSanders: "I don't think six debates are enough...we will be interacting with the DNC to try [for] as many debates as possible"

Michael Barbaro (5/19/15, 6:19 AM) Possible explanation for why Christie wouldn't address immigration for months? Was preparing to change his position: http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2015/05/19/chris-christie-citizenship-for-undocumented-immigrants-extreme/ …

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE

Howard Dean urges NH Democrats, progressives to back Hillary Clinton // WMUR // May 19, 2015

MANCHESTER, N.H —Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean spoke to progressive activists in New Hampshire late Sunday in support of Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton.

A Clinton campaign official told WMUR.com that listeners on the call were a mix of Clinton supporters and uncommitted Democrats. Former New Hampshire House Speaker Terie Norelli was also on the call and asked Dean questions emailed by listeners.

Clinton on Friday will make her second visit to New Hampshire since announcing her candidacy for president.

Dean, after running for president in 2004, founded the progressive grassroots group Democracy for America. Now headed by his brother, Jim Dean, DFA is working with MoveOn.org on the “Run Warren Run” campaign to try to recruit Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren to run for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Howard Dean, however, announced his support for Clinton shortly after DFA and MoveOn unveiled their pro-Warren campaign. As both a progressive leader and a former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Dean is key surrogate for Clinton who appeals to both liberals and more moderate, “establishment” Democrats.

Sen. Bernie Sanders, who is also a Vermonter, has announced his candidacy for president and is attempting to appeal to the progressive wing of the party. Sanders is scheduled to return to the state on May 27 for a town hall meeting in Portsmouth and possibly other events.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's current national campaign manager, Robby Mook, was the Deputy Field Director for Dean's presidential campaign 11 years ago.

According to a listener on the call, Dean said he has known Clinton for 25 years and believes she is sincere and pragmatic. The listener said Dean made it clear that Clinton understands the importance of having a U.S. Supreme Court that does not make political decisions. And, according to the listener, Dean said it is time for a woman president.

Dean, the listener said, told the group income inequality is the most important domestic issue facing the country and maintained that Clinton understands the next president must deal directly with it.

Norelli, a long-time Clinton supporter, said Clinton has worked on behalf of children, women and the middle class in general.

New report claims al-Qaeda-Benghazi link known day after attack // USA Today // Oren Dorell - May 19, 2015

One day after the deadly Sept. 11, 2012, attack on the U.S. compound in Benghazi, Libya, the Defense Intelligence Agency concluded the assault had been planned 10 days earlier by an al-Qaeda affiliate, according to documents released Monday by conservative watchdog group Judicial Watch.

"The attack on the American consulate in Benghazi was planned and executed by The Brigades of the Captive Omar Abdul Rahman," said a preliminary intelligence report by the Defense Intelligence Agency, obtained through a lawsuit following a Freedom of Information Act request.

The group, which also conducted attacks against the Red Cross in Benghazi, was established by Abdul Baset Azuz, a "violent radical" sent by al-Qaeda to set up bases in Libya, the defense agency report said.

The attack was planned on Sept. 1, 2012, with the intent "to kill as many Americans as possible to seek revenge" for the killing of a militant in Pakistan and to memorialize the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, the report said.

Four Americans were killed in the Benghazi attack, including U.S. Ambassador Chris Stevens.

The incident became politically controversial because the White House initially described the attack as the result of a spontaneous protest. Republican critics said the White House intentionally played down that it was a terrorist attack, because it occurred so close to President Obama's re-election.

Then-Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, who's now seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, was to appear this week before the House Select Committee on Benghazi, but the hearing was canceled after Clinton and the committee chairman, Rep. Trey Gowdy, R-S.C., failed to agree on whether all the documents Gowdy requested had been given to the panel.

GOP fumbles latest attack on Hillary Clinton's email use // CBS News // Jake Miller - May 19, 2015

WASHINGTON --Republicans are still firing away at Hillary Clinton's use of a private email account as secretary of state, but their latest shot seems to have missed the mark.

On Monday, the New York Times published several emails Clinton sent to an advisor in 2011 and 2012, while she was still secretary of state. Republicans noticed that Clinton's email address in the messages (hrod17@clintonemail.com) was not the same email she told congressional investigators she used during her time at the State Department (hdr22@clintonemail.com).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In a press release sent Monday afternoon, the Republican National Committee cried scandal.

"This is the latest example of how Clinton has attempted to mislead the public about her use of secret email for public business and raises further questions about where else she is attempting to hide the truth on this and other matters," the release exclaimed.

But Clinton's presidential campaign had a quick explanation - After Gawker published Clinton's old address when she left the state department, she changed her email address to hrod17@clintonemail.com . Any messages printed after that time, even if they were several years old, reflected the new address.

It wasn't a new explanation. They'd made it several times before. Here's what Clinton's personal office said in a Q&A document after Clinton's use of a private email account first became an issue in March:

"At the time the printed copies were provided to the Department last year, because it was the same account, the new email address established after she left office appeared on the printed copies as the sender, and not the address she used as Secretary. In fact, this address on the account did not exist until March 2013. This led to understandable confusion that was cleared up directly with the Committee after its press conference."

And when the GOP chairman of the House Benghazi committee, South Carolina Rep. Trey Gowdy, said in March that Clinton had "more than one private email account," here's what Clinton's lawyer told the committee:

"Secretary Clinton used one email account when corresponding with anyone, from Department officials to friends to family. A month after she left the Department, Gawker published her email address and so she changed the address on her account. At the time the emails were provided to the Department last year this new address appeared on the copies as the 'sender,' and not the address she used as Secretary. This address on the account did not exist until March 2103 [sic], after her tenure as Secretary."

Republicans on the panel weren't willing to accept that explanation from Clinton's lawyer on faith, however. They pressed Clinton to hand over her email server to clear up any lingering confusion about whether she used one address or two.

"Without access to the relevant electronic information and stored data on the server -- which was reportedly registered to her home -- there is no way the Committee, or anyone else, can fully explain why the Committee uncovered two email addresses," Jamal Ware, the Benghazi panel's communications director, explained in a press release in March.

The general case Republicans are building against Clinton is that she's being secretive - why did she use a private email account as Secretary of State, sidestepping the federal system that would automatically archive her messages? And why did she and her team get to decide which messages to hand over to archivists after her she left the job?

Clinton has said she used the private account for convenience - the government email wouldn't work on her mobile device, and she didn't want to carry two phones.

She's said she handed over every work-related email sent from her private account. But the problem, Republicans say, is there's no way to verify that. Clinton says she deleted the personal emails, and she won't hand over the server that housed the account to see whether they can be recovered.

Voters are split on the matter, according to a CBS News poll taken in March - 62 percent said it wasn't appropriate for Clinton to use a private server, and 38 percent said she did it to keep some work-related information from becoming public. But 49 percent believed Clinton's explanation that she used a private account because it was convenient.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A House Select Committee is probing the 2012 terrorist attack in Benghazi, Libya that killed four Americans, and investigators have asked the State Department to submit copies of all of the Benghazi-emails Clinton sent during her time as secretary of state. On Monday, in response to a Freedom of Information Act request by Vice News' Jason Leopold, the State Department said it "plans to produce releasable portions of Secretary Clinton's emails...by January 15, 2016." Clinton has agreed to testify before the committee, but Republicans say they need a full account of her emails before that can happen.

Hillary Clinton on her emails: I want them out, too! // Politico // Josh Gerstein and Gabriel Debenedetti - May 19, 2015

Hillary Clinton and the State Department on Tuesday insisted they are not slow-walking the public release of her emails during her time as secretary of state, while a federal judge ordered up a plan for a rolling release of the hotly anticipated documents.

“Nobody has a bigger interest in getting them released than I do,” Clinton said to reporters in a rare instance of fielding press questions on the campaign trail.

The 55,000 pages of emails have become the source of much heartburn, speculation and bureaucratic man-hours since news emerged earlier this year that Clinton used a private email server during her time as secretary of state.

The controversy has complicated the roll-out of Clinton’s presidential bid and played into criticism that she and her husband are unduly secretive.

Clinton said in March that she wanted the State Department to release the emails, and since then, the agency has assigned 12 staffers full-time to reviewing the Clinton emails, according to an official.

The State Department on Monday night proposed a deadline of January 2016 to complete its review and publicly release the whole set of documents, but a federal judge on Tuesday rejected such a plan.

U.S. District Court Judge Rudolph Contreras on Tuesday said in a written order State must propose a new schedule by next Tuesday that involves disclosing the records batch-by-batch on a regular basis and updating the court every 60 days on the releases.

With the email controversy freshly swirling around her on the campaign trail, Clinton took a few questions from reporters on Tuesday — the first time she had done so since April 21, much to the jeers of her Republican opponents.

“Anything that they might do to expedite that process I heartily support,” she said to reporters after a roundtable in Cedar Falls, Iowa. “I want the American people to learn as much as they can about the work I did with our diplomats and our development experts.”

She contended she has limited say over the timetable.

“They’re not mine,” Clinton said about her emails. She turned over copies of them to her former department last December. “The State Department has to go through its process, but as much as they can expedite the process, that’s what I’m asking them to do.”

State spokesman Jeff Rathke said Tuesday that the agency will abide by the judge’s order.

“I don’t have anything to add to what was in the court papers,” Rathke told reporters at a daily briefing. “Clearly, the court has issued an order, and

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

we'll comply with it."

Asked if State was "slow-rolling" release of the records in order to benefit Clinton politically, Rathke said, "No."

Rathke reiterated State's position that its initial proposal to release most of the records in a single batch was driven by a desire to ensure all the emails are handled appropriately.

"We have a large volume of records that cover the entire span of Secretary Clinton's time at the department. I'm sure you could imagine this would cover pretty much any topic. It could cover any topic on our foreign policy agenda," the spokesman said.

"If certain things were released early and there were other records pertinent to the same topic that that might not have been finally processed, there was a desire to do them all at once so they'd be processed in their entirety."

The emails have also been a subject of intense interest from a House committee investigating the Benghazi attacks, and documents unearthed as part of that probe have slowly leaked out.

Some of the emails revealed that Clinton forwarded unsubstantiated intelligence on Libya from Sidney Blumenthal, a family ally, to top officials at the State Department, according to documents obtained by The New York Times.

Blumenthal, a longtime Clinton family counselor and, according to the Times, an employee of the Clinton Foundation at the time, sent the intelligence reports based on information he had gathered while working as an adviser to Constellations Group, a private consultancy.

Clinton's habit of forwarding the memos to top advisers like Jake Sullivan and Chris Stevens, the ambassador who was killed during the 2012 attacks, raised questions among committee members about the extent of Blumenthal's influence at State — considering that aides cast doubt on the credibility of the memos in several emails.

At a brief hearing on Tuesday on a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit brought by Vice News, Contreras did not set a specific date by which State must begin releasing the emails.

However, the judge gave the government one week to provide a schedule for the periodic release of records, Vice News lawyer Jeffrey Light said after the session.

Contreras also gave State one week to say exactly when it plans to release a portion of the records relating to the deadly attack on U.S. facilities in Benghazi, as well as other Libya-related issues. State officials have previously pledged to release those emails "soon" but have never offered a specific date.

The State Department has said the release is taking a while because it must thoroughly review the Clinton emails for sensitive information typically removed from records before they are released under FOIA. State official John Hackett said in the declaration filed Monday night that the agency wanted to post the bulk of the records online at once in order to make sure the FOIA rules and policies are consistently applied.

"The Department intends to post the releasable portions of the collection at the conclusion of its review process, which will facilitate consistency in the application of FOIA exemptions and the public's access to and understanding of the documents," Hackett wrote in the Monday document.

Clinton has said she turned over all messages that were arguably work-related but decided to delete a roughly equal number of messages that her lawyers determined were personal or private in nature.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The State Department could also face deadlines to disclose portions of the records in other FOIA suits. Last week, a judge ordered State to release records from Clinton's top aides on specific topics by September. It's unclear whether the requests in that case, brought by conservative group Citizens United, would encompass some of the Clinton emails.

Clinton's "Second Email Address" Was Explained Months Ago, But Fox Missed The Evidence // Media Matters // Hannah Groch-Belgey - May 19, 2015

Fox News selectively quoted a statement from Hillary Clinton's lawyer to suggest that she lied about having a "second email account" during her time as secretary of state. But the network ignored in several segments that the supposed discrepancy was explained months ago.

On May 18, The New York Times published selected emails from Clinton's time at State, which appeared to show her sending emails from two private addresses: HDR22@clintonemail.com and hrod17@clintonemail.com. Right-wing media immediately jumped on the story to claim that it contradicted Clinton's previous statement that she only used one email address while at State.

Fox went so far as to suggest Clinton "was lying" about her use of email, missing key context in several of their segments on the topic. On the May 19 edition of America's Newsroom, guest co-host Gregg Jarrett asked: "Either she forgot, or she was lying. What do you think?" Fox reporter Doug McKelway also claimed that the "second email" was a "direct contradiction" to Clinton's previous statements, noting those remarks were "not made in testimony, nor was it made under oath, so perhaps there's some wiggle room there, but I'm not sure how she gets out of that."

Later on Happening Now, McKelway highlighted a letter sent from Clinton's lawyer that stated "hrod17@clintonemail.com is not an address that existed during Secretary Clinton's tenure as Secretary of State."

However, this seeming discrepancy was explained in the same letter McKelway selectively quoted from.

As Clinton's lawyer noted back in that March 2015 letter -- and which Fox News ignored in these segments -- Clinton changed her email address when she left State because Gawker had published emails that revealed the "HDR22" address. That was when she changed the address to "hrod17."

According to her office, when this change occurred, the new address replaced the old address on the digital records of her previous emails. Thus, as explained in a release several months ago, when her emails were printed out and provided to the State Department, the new email address "appeared on the printed copies as the sender."

While this context was missing from Jarrett and McKelway's morning reports, Fox Chief White House Correspondent Ed Henry reported the Clinton campaign's explanation in a separate segment on America's Newsroom, saying that "when she printed out all the emails to turn over back to the government, that second account came up, even though that was not the one she was using months earlier."

The old "HDR22" address still appears in some of the documents the Times highlighted, but seems to only occur in the text of the body of emails that were replies or forwards from other individuals. For example, a printed email from Clinton aide Jake Sullivan which was published by the Times still shows "HDR22" in the text of his email, because he was replying to her original message.

The backdating of the email addresses "led to understandable confusion" for the congressional Select Committee on Benghazi earlier this year, prompting Clinton's office to issue this explanation in March.

The original Gawker report, which highlighted emails sent to Clinton during her time at State, also includes screenshots of those emails. The emails shown are all clearly sent to Clinton's original email account, HRD22, in keeping with Clinton office's explanation for the email address confusion.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton says her Iraq war vote was a 'mistake' // Politico // Adam Lerner – May 19, 2015

INDEPENDENCE , IA - MAY 19: Democratic presidential hopeful and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton visits Laree's The Shoppe of Favorites store on May 19, 2015 in Independence, Iowa. Earlier in the day Clinton hosted a small business forum with members of the business and lending communities in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

During her 2008 campaign, Clinton defended her vote as a way to give President Bush authority to deal with Iraq. | Getty

After days of Republican presidential candidates wrestling with questions on the Iraq war, Hillary Clinton weighed in Tuesday, telling reporters that her vote in favor of the war in 2002 was a “mistake.”

“I made it very clear that I made a mistake, plain and simple. And I have written about it in my book, I have talked about it in the past,” Clinton told reporters at an event in Cedar Falls, Iowa, adding that “what we now see is a very different and very dangerous situation.”

During her 2008 campaign, Clinton defended her vote as a way to give President George W. Bush authority to deal with Iraq, which she said he then abused. She frequently followed up this statement by saying that if she had known what Bush would do with the authority she would not have voted the way she had, but declined to call the vote a “mistake.”

Then-Sen. Barack Obama hammered her over the vote during the campaign, citing his opposition to the war while he was serving in Illinois’ state senate. Many experts believe the Iraq war issue was a major reason she ultimately lost in the primaries to Obama.

But since losing that election she wrote in her 2014 book “Hard Choices” that she “got it wrong.”

In her comments Tuesday she made clear that she viewed her past vote as a mistake, with no qualifications.

She then pivoted to talking about Iraq’s current political situation. In the last year much of western Iraq has been overtaken by ISIL, a terrorist group whose successes many analysts attribute to the decade of instability following Saddam Hussein’s ouster.

“The United States is doing what it can but ultimately this has to be a struggle that the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people are determined to win for themselves,” said Clinton. “And we can provide support, but they’re going to have to do it.”

Questions over the Iraq war have divided the early Republican field ever since former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush said that he would have invaded Iraq had he been put in his brother’s situation in 2003, in response to a question from Fox News’ Megyn Kelly over whether he would have made the decision knowing what he knows now. Bush shifted his answer multiple times during the week before finally saying that, with 20/20 hindsight, he would not have invaded.

Bush has been lambasted for the fumbling, including by Sen. Rand Paul who said in an interview on Meet the Press Sunday that he didn’t view the question as a “hypothetical,” but is rather “a recurring question in the Middle East.” He equated President Bush’s decision to invade Iraq with Hillary Clinton’s support as Secretary of State for a military campaign in Libya in 2011 that led to the toppling of Muammar Qaddafi.

“The same question, to be fair, ought to be asked of Hillary Clinton, if she ever takes questions,” he said. “Was it a good idea to invade Libya? Did that make us less safe? Did it make it more chaotic? Did it allow radical Islam and ISIS to grow stronger?”

Gabriel Debenedetti contributed to this report

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton's State Department Staff Kept Tight Rein on Records // WSJ // Laura Meckler - May 19, 2015

WASHINGTON—When Hillary Clinton was secretary of state, her staff scrutinized politically sensitive documents requested under public-records law and sometimes blocked their release, according to people with direct knowledge of the activities.

In one instance, her chief of staff, Cheryl Mills, told State Department records specialists she wanted to see all documents requested on the controversial Keystone XL pipeline, and later demanded that some be held back.

In another case, Ms. Mills's staff negotiated with the records specialists over the release of documents about former President Bill Clinton's speaking engagements—also holding some back.

The records requests came under the Freedom of Information Act, or FOIA, the public's main tool to get information from the government. Decisions on what to release belong with each agency's FOIA staff, say experts on the law, to guard against the withholding of documents for political or other inappropriate reasons.

Questions about the transparency of Mrs. Clinton's State Department tenure have been bubbling ever since it was revealed that she exclusively used a private email account to conduct her work as secretary. The existence of that private system, which is being investigated by a House special committee probing the 2012 attack on a U.S. diplomatic outpost in Benghazi, Libya, meant the department didn't have access to her emails when public requests to see them came in.

Mrs. Clinton has since given the State Department 55,000 pages of emails she deemed to be about official business. On Tuesday, at a brief news conference in Iowa, she reiterated that she wants the department to release them.

Also on Tuesday, a federal judge ordered the State Department to release these emails on a rolling basis, not wait until they are all ready. The State Department, which had planned to release them next January, said it would comply.

In the background of the controversies is a culture at the State Department of delay and inefficiency in meeting public requests for records, both during and predating Mrs. Clinton's tenure, according to open-government advocates, investigative reports and government officials.

An email exchange between State Department staffers in October 2012, while Mrs. Clinton was secretary of state, points to the role played by her political staff in records requests.

An official dealing with potential document releases described one of them as being "of interest on the 7th Floor"—a reference to the secretary's office. A colleague replied that the records were set for release but added: "I believe, though, that this is still pending with Cheryl Mills' office…. The real action, for now, is with Cheryl's office." The focus of the request is unclear.

A spokesman for Mrs. Clinton, Nick Merrill, said, "The State Department takes FOIA requests very seriously, and has a rigorous process in place for handling the thousands of requests that come in. Secretary Clinton's State Department took that process seriously and made it a priority, and to suggest otherwise would be wrong."

Later, on Tuesday evening, Mr. Merrill added that Ms. Mills—a longtime aide to the Clintons who is on the board of the Clinton Foundation—"did not inappropriately interfere with the FOIA process" and "has spent her career contributing to the greater good."

State Department spokesman Alec Gerlach said documents aren't withheld unless they fit under exemptions spelled out in the public-records law.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

These include avoiding harm to national security, trade-secret exposure or privacy violations.

"It is entirely appropriate for certain Department personnel to be made aware of documents that could potentially respond to Freedom of Information Act requests," and these people may be asked for guidance, Mr. Gerlach said, adding: "This is not unique to any Secretary's tenure."

The Clinton political staff's scrutiny of Keystone documents arose after a document request that succeeded. In it, the environmental group Friends of the Earth obtained emails that were sent to Paul Elliott, a lobbyist for the company seeking to build the pipeline, by an official of the U.S. embassy in Ottawa—which is part of the State Department.

Mr. Elliott had worked on Mrs. Clinton's 2008 presidential campaign. Friends of the Earth, a foe of Keystone, suspected that this connection gave him influence with the State Department, whose approval the proposed border-crossing pipeline needs.

In one email, the embassy official sent Mr. Elliot a message saying "Go Paul!" after he circulated some potentially positive news on the pipeline plan. She also complimented an appearance by the CEO of the company seeking to build Keystone XL.

In a blog post, Friends of the Earth called the email a "smoking gun" showing "definitive evidence of bias." A State Department spokeswoman said at the time that the emails weren't evidence of any bias.

After the episode, Ms. Mills insisted on reviewing all Keystone-related documents being prepared for release, and flagged as problematic a few that the department's records-law specialists felt obligated to release, said the person with knowledge of the situation.

Ms. Mills, this person added, told a records specialist that if he released records she wanted held back, Mrs. Clinton's office wouldn't comply with any future document requests on any topic.

The Keystone documents Ms. Mills objected to were all either held back or redacted, the same person said. After Ms. Mills began scrutinizing documents, the State Department's disclosure of records related to Keystone fell off sharply, documents that include a court filing show.

Two others with knowledge of State Department records procedures said political appointees were allowed greater say than the FOIA experts thought was appropriate. It was hard to push back against the political staff, one said.

The pipeline project was so sensitive that an expert on FOIA was invited to a State Department policy meeting to advise on how to prospectively shield documents from disclosure, such as by marking them as involving the "deliberative process," said a person who attended.

Documents relating to ex-President Clinton's speeches also sparked scrutiny, said a fourth person familiar with State Department records releases.

Mr. Clinton had agreed, when his wife became secretary of state, to submit proposals for his paid speeches to the department for review. Some document requests related to the reviews. On this matter, too, Ms. Mills's office sometimes objected to the release of records FOIA specialists thought ought to be handed over, this fourth person said.

Asked who had final say, the person said, "We negotiated it out," and some documents were withheld or redacted.

Experts on FOIA said it might be acceptable for records reviewers to seek the views of political appointees, but there should be no negotiation. "Ultimately, the career people have to be the ones who make the final call," said Miriam Nisbet, who recently retired as director of the federal FOIA ombudsman office at the National Archives and Records Administration.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FOIA experts said they suspect political interference happens more than they know. Asked for examples, some cited a case at the Department of Homeland Security, or DHS, in 2010.

In that instance, the Associated Press reported on political interference in records releases at DHS. The House Oversight Committee later investigated and issued a report saying DHS redacted embarrassing information it should have released, after political staffers insisted on reviewing records requests. DHS, which modified its practices following the AP story, told the House committee it didn't make substantive changes in document releases for political reasons.

The State Department faces a great volume of records requests, nearly 20,000 in the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, according to federal data. It processed more than 18,000 requests that year but still ended with a backlog of nearly 11,000.

A department manual outlines the FOIA process. It says in-house analysts should collect documents from various bureaus of the department, to be examined by two FOIA reviewers to see whether they fall under any disclosure exemptions. Those that don't are to be released.

In 2012, a State Department inspector general's report said the departmental unit that processes records requests had serious leadership and management problems. It called the agency's FOIA process "inefficient and ineffective," saying requests were prone to delay and bureaus didn't treat document requests as a priority.

A later IG report, in March 2015, found problems in the department's system for storing emails. Only messages whose senders had marked them as "record email" were kept in archives and therefore were easily available to FOIA researchers looking for documents responsive to records requests.

Of more than a billion emails sent in 2011, only 61,156 had been marked this way, the IG found.

A person knowledgeable about the department's records process said that there is no pressure on bureaus or embassies to respond to document searches in a timely fashion; that FOIA specialists hold little stature; and that there are no consequences for people who don't produce documents requested.

In March, the AP sued the State Department to force the release of some documents, including emails during Mrs. Clinton's tenure. The AP said it sued after its requests went unfilled.

The State Department had no comment on that action because it is in litigation, a department official said, adding: "We face significant challenges with the increasing burden of FOIA and other requests. But we are working to get better. I think our progress through collaboration with the IG shows our commitment to improving."

Hillary talks tough on Wall Street regulation // CNN // MJ Lee - May 19, 2015

(CNN) Hillary Clinton wants one thing to be crystal clear: she is not afraid to stand up to Wall Street.

Speaking with small business owners in Cedar Falls, Iowa, the Democratic presidential frontrunner on Tuesday offered a full-throated defense of a law that's served as a thorn in the side of big banks: Dodd-Frank.

"It's not the big banks that need relief from Washington -- it's small banks and small businesses," Clinton said. "We should be doing more to rein in risky behavior on Wall Street and 'Too Big to Fail.'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The former secretary of state also scolded what she said were attempts by congressional Republicans to roll back consumer protection provisions and regulations aimed at big banks in Dodd-Frank, calling them "a cynical attempt to game the system for those at the top."

The populist remarks could have easily come from Elizabeth Warren, the liberal Massachusetts senator who has vaulted to national fame by railing against Wall Street.

Coming within weeks of the launch of her second White House bid, Clinton's comments were also the latest example of the former New York senator's aggressive appeal to progressive skeptics who believe she is too cozy with Wall Street and have balked at the sweeping deregulation of the finance industry during her husband's presidency in the 1990s.

It's a concerted effort Clinton has been making since her first day back on the trail.

Her campaign roll-out sought to present Clinton as a champion for the middle class and she has since publicly taken aim at hedge fund managers for paying too little taxes and pledged to get big money out of politics.

Clinton's Republican foes were quick to accuse her of hypocrisy.

"It's hard to take Hillary Clinton seriously when she's constantly taking huge sums of money from the same people she's attacking on the campaign trail," Republican National Committee spokesman Michael Short said in an email. "No wonder Elizabeth Warren is holding out on an endorsement."

Meanwhile, Vermont Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders, currently the only other declared candidate seeking the Democratic Party's nomination for president, expressed a degree of skepticism of Clinton's support for banking regulations.

"I opposed the deregulation of Wall Street and pretty much predicted what would happen in terms of the Wall Street crash," Sanders told CNN's Wolf Blitzer. "I certainly disagree with her husband on that. She hasn't been clear about where she's coming from."

In recent days, Clinton has also come under scrutiny from liberal activists on the controversial Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal. TPP, a significant second-term agenda item for President Barack Obama, has drawn widespread opposition from Democrats, and Clinton has faced pressure to take a firm stance against it.

Warren said on Bloomberg TV on Tuesday that though Clinton has criticized some aspects of the current trade proposal, she'd like to see her take a "clearer" position.

Republicans Very Troubled By Clinton Donors See No Conflict With Their Own Dark Money // Huffington Post // Paul Blumenthal - May 19, 2015

WASHINGTON -- For four months, the Republican Party and its many presidential hopefuls have laid into likely Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton over donations to a family foundation. That these attacks contradict the GOP's broader stand on campaign finance -- and call into question their own weighty burden of donor conflicts -- hasn't troubled them at all.

Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) called contributions to the nonprofit Clinton Foundation “thinly veiled bribes.” The nation can’t afford the “drama” represented by those donations, according to Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.). Former Hewlett-Packard CEO Carly Fiorina asked Clinton to explain why contributions to the foundation “don’t represent a conflict of interest.” And the Republican National Committee has made the donations a central part of its campaign against Clinton.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In embracing this critique of the Clinton Foundation, Republicans are investing in a view of money in politics that they have otherwise rejected in recent years: that spending money to gain influence over or access to elected or appointed officials represents a conflict of interest or an appearance of corruption or could even lead to outright corruption.

Since 2010, the conservative Supreme Court majority has rejected this argument as a reason to regulate campaign finance in their Citizens United, McCutcheon and Williams-Yulee decisions. Most leading Republican federal officeholders now take the view that spending of any sort on campaigns should not be impeded by legal restrictions as fears of corruption are overblown.

So the critical piling on Clinton Foundation donations creates a problem for Republicans, especially those running for president. If contributions to the foundation, a 501(c)(3) entity not involved in political campaigns, create a valid source of corruption concern, then what are we to make of the hundreds of millions of dollars in undisclosed donations to 501(c)(4) nonprofits that have worked to elect Republicans over the past three elections?

Since the Supreme Court's Citizens United decision opened the door for unlimited corporate, union and, ultimately, individual spending on elections, Republicans have maneuvered to use so-called dark money nonprofits to fund large portions of their electoral efforts. Dark money spending on federal races exceeded $400 million in the 2012 presidential election and $200 million in the 2014 midterms with the vast majority of those dollars going to aid Republican candidates, according to previous analysis by The Huffington Post.

Where the Clinton Foundation is concerned, the public knows who the donors are and, thus, the press can report on the mutually beneficial relationship between Bill Clinton and billionaire donor Frank Giustra or point out that a majority of those also lobbied the Hillary Clinton-led State Department or note that both Clintons have been very supportive of the Moroccan government, a foundation donor, as it occupies the disputed territory of Western Sahara.

The public is not privy, however, to the sources of funds fueling a large part of the Republican electoral apparatus and a smaller part of Democratic efforts. Party leaders and wealthy donors have increasingly worked through nonprofits that are not required to disclose their funding sources.

Republicans, including those now running for president, defend dark money groups as a means to protect what they argue is the First Amendment right of donors to engage in political activity without "retaliation." Perhaps, that retaliation would come in the form of stories informing the public about how those donors are seeking to influence public policy.

Half of Hillary Clinton's Speaking Fees Came From Groups Also Lobbying Congress // TIME //
Philip Elliott - May 19, 2015

Almost half of the money from Hillary Clinton's speaking engagements came from corporations and advocacy groups that were lobbying Congress at the same time.

The Democratic presidential candidate earned $10.2 million in 2014, her first full calendar year after leaving the State Department. Of that, $4.6 million came from groups that also spent on lobbying Congress that year, according to data compiled by the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics.

In all, the corporations and trade groups that Clinton spoke to in 2014 spent $72.5 million lobbying Congress that same year.

Asked Tuesday if there were conflicts of interest in speaking to these groups, Clinton was curt with reporters in Cedar Falls, Iowa. "No," she said.

"Obviously, Bill and I have been blessed and we're very grateful for the opportunities that we had but we've never forgotten where we've come from," she added.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But the speaking fees were more about where they were going next.

For critics, the arrangement shows that many of people who booked an appearance saw it as another way to gain influence with a leading contender to become the next President.

“It’s big money. They’re spending it because they have far greater sums riding on those decisions that they’re trying to shape,” said Sheila Krumholz, executive director of the Center for Responsive Politics. “Corporations or associations must justifiably make these investments because everyone knew for many years that Clinton would always remain a power broker. Every man or woman on the street thought Hillary Clinton would run again.”

As with routine political donations, it’s hard to suss out a direct cause-and-effect from the speaking fees.

Take the Pacific trade deal being negotiated by President Obama. In all, groups and corporations that are pushing for the Trans-Pacific Partnership to be approved spent almost $3 million to hear from Clinton. The signatories to one pro-trade letter, dated March 2014, paid more than $1 million in speaking fees in 2014.

From ‘dead broke’ to multimillionaires // WaPo // Kennedy Elliott, Alexander Becker, Philip Rucker, Tom Hamburger, Peter Wallsten, and Rosalind Helderman - May 19, 2015

A Washington Post analysis of the Clinton's federal financial disclosures found that Bill Clinton was paid $104.9 million for delivering 542 speeches around the world between January 2001 and January 2013, when Hillary Clinton stepped down as secretary of state.

Since then, both Clintons have hit the lecture circuit. They have not released information about their speaking in 2013. But according to a disclosure by Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign, Bill and Hillary Clinton together earned nearly $25 million for delivering 104 speeches between January 2014 and May 2015.

Hillary Clinton’s hypocrisy // WaPo // Dan Milbank – May 19, 2015

In a private meeting last week with 200 of the Democratic Party’s top financiers, Hillary Clinton drew vigorous applause when she said any of her nominees to the Supreme Court would have to share her desire to overturn the Citizens United decision.

Clinton also, as reported by my Post colleagues Matea Gold and Anne Gearan, put in a plug with the fundraisers (all of whom had hauled in at least $27,000 for her) for a constitutional amendment overturning the ruling, which allows unlimited spending by super PACs.

Dana Milbank writes about political theater in the nation’s capital. He joined the Post as a political reporter in 2000. View Archive

Nice sentiments, to be sure, but the fact that she was unveiling her Citizens United litmus test with party fat cats at an exclusive soiree (four days later, she mentioned it to voters in Iowa) tells you all you need to know about Clinton’s awkward — and often hypocritical — relationship with campaign-finance reform.

Even as she denounces super PACs, she’s counting on two of them, Priorities USA Action and Correct the Record, to support her candidacy — a necessary evil, her campaign says. She’s also chin-deep in questionable financial activities, ranging from the soft-money scandals of her husband’s presidency to the current flap over contributions by foreigners and favor-seekers to the Clinton Foundation. Then there’s the matter of her plans to continue President Obama’s policy of opting out of the public-finance system; Obama’s abandonment of the system did as much as the Citizens United ruling to destroy the post-Watergate fixes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Her advisers claim campaign-finance reforms will be at the top of her agenda, a sensible choice because of the deep resentment in the populace toward a political system rigged in favor of the wealthy. But she gives supporters little evidence that she's genuine. Asked by The Post last month about the role of the pro-Clinton Priorities USA Action, Clinton shrugged her shoulders and said, "I don't know."

If she really thinks money is corrupting politics, she can take concrete steps right now. She could pledge to return immediately to the public finance system and call on pro-Clinton super PACs to cease and desist — if her Republican opponents will do the same. The Republicans won't, of course, but then Clinton would have gained the moral high ground she now lacks.

She could also vow to enact four pieces of legislation if elected: reviving the public-finance system with matching funds for small contributions; curtailing candidate super PACs by drafting strict rules prohibiting coordination; forcing the disclosure of anonymous "dark money" contributions; and creating a new enforcement agency to replace the impotent and perpetually deadlocked Federal Election Commission.

"We have a history of candidates making commitments to campaign finance reform during the campaign and then walking away from it, in particular with Bill Clinton and Barack Obama," says Fred Wertheimer , a longtime campaign-finance reformer. "We're going to need a lot more than what Mrs. Clinton has said in order for this to be treated seriously."

There's a chance she'll find some Republican support for legislation to restore public financing of elections — if only because the absence of such a system effectively means presidents are elected to eight-year terms, because their ability to raise virtually unlimited sums as incumbents all but guarantees reelection.

Stuart Stevens, who ran Mitt Romney's 2012 campaign, notes that only one incumbent president in the past 125 years who was not in the public-finance system lost his bid for reelection — and that was Herbert Hoover. Stevens says the 2016 winner, Democrat or Republican, "is going to be almost impossible to defeat" in 2020. (Super PACs won't completely offset that incumbent advantage, he figures, because the funds are at least theoretically outside the candidate's control.) The prospect of a de facto eight-year term for a Democratic president could persuade Republicans to support a revival of public finance even if it isn't "normally in their DNA," Stevens argues.

If she's serious in her commitment to campaign-finance reform, Clinton doesn't have to wait until the election. Stevens suggests she challenge her opponents to join her in opting into the moribund public-finance system (though its matching funds would be absurdly low). To keep the super PACs from filling the void, she could propose both sides disavow them, as Republican Scott Brown and Democrat Elizabeth Warren did in their 2012 Massachusetts Senate race, pledging to pay a penalty if outside groups ran ads in their race.

Such an arrangement is probably unworkable, even in the unlikely event Republicans took her up on it. But this and other tangible steps could reduce the demoralizing gap between Clinton's professed commitment to clean elections and her dubious record.

Hillary Clinton downplays Sidney Blumenthal's influence // Politico // Adam Lerner – May 19, 2015

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Rodham Clinton speaks to small business owners, Tuesday, May 19, 2015, at the Bike Tech cycling shop in Cedar Falls, Iowa. (AP Photo/Charlie Neibergall)

AP Photo

Hillary Clinton on Tuesday downplayed Sidney Blumenthal's influence on her Wednesday, saying she passed his emails to State Department deputies to "make sure [she wasn't] caught in a bubble" with only information coming "from a certain small group of people."

"He sent me unsolicited emails which I passed on in some instances and I say that that's just part of the give and take," Clinton told reporters Tuesday at an event in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The comments came the day after a New York Times report revealed that Blumenthal, a longtime family ally, sent multiple unsubstantiated intelligence reports to Clinton's private email while she was secretary of state. Clinton then forwarded these emails to top staff, sometimes with commentary about their veracity, but often solely with instructions to pass them along to others in the department.

The emails relied largely on unnamed sources and often contained information known to be false or misleading.

Blumenthal was working at the time for Constellations Group, a company with business interests in Libya, leading to further concerns about his motivations in sending the intelligence. Constellations Group planned to secure contracts with Libya's transitional government that would have required State Department-approved permits, giving Blumenthal a direct financial stake in the ouster of Qaddafi and subsequent U.S. policy in Libya.

The emails published by the Times predate the attack on the American consulate in Benghazi that killed Ambassador Chris Stevens, but according to a ProPublica report, Blumenthal sent Clinton a report from a "sensitive source" the day after the bombing saying that the attack was inspired by an anti-Muslim video. This information was later determined to be false.

"I have many, many old friends and I always think that it's important when you get into politics to have friends you had before you were in politics and to understand what's on their minds," Clinton said Tuesday. "And he's been a friend of mine for a long time."

Clinton did not comment on whether or not she felt she misrepresented the information's source when she sent it on to staff.

Rep. Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.), chairman of the House Select Committee on Benghazi, plans to subpoena Blumenthal for a private transcribed interview to discuss his influence on Clinton during her time at the State Department, committee sources confirmed to POLITICO Monday.

Blumenthal had been barred from working in Clinton's State Department because of his role in pushing negative stories about Obama during the 2008 presidential campaign, but continued his personal and professional relationship with the Clintons, which eventually consisted of sending intelligence reports about Libya which Clinton then forwarded on.

Outside of his work for Constellations Group, he was employed by the Clinton Foundation and consulted for Media Matters and American Bridge, two organizations supporting Hillary Clinton's 2016 presidential bid.

A Clinton spokesperson told ProPublica in March that all of the messages sent to Clinton from Blumenthal had been turned over with the 30,000-pages of content given to the State Department by Clinton earlier this year. The spokesman did not comment on whether or not Clinton responded to Blumenthal's messages and whether these responses were contained in the emails given to the State Department for analysis.

Gabriel Debenedetti contributed to this report.

Hillary Clinton Tamps Down 'Third Term' Chatter // NYT // Maggie Haberman - May 19, 2015

Hillary Rodham Clinton has started to address a critical issue about her candidacy — the loaded "third term" question.

After months of questions about how she would handle the tenures of President Obama and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, Mrs. Clinton has begun telling supporters that she is not running to serve either man's third term in office.

At a donor meeting in the Red Hook, Brooklyn, last week, Mrs. Clinton raised the topic as she addressed more than 250 people who had helped raise at least $27,000 for her 2016 presidential campaign, according to three people who attended the gathering.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“We’re going to make clear, I’m not running for my husband’s third term or for President Obama’s third term,” one person recalled her saying. “I’m running to make history on my own.”

Later, all three attendees said, she talked about the campaign being not about her, but about voters, and said she wanted to build on the successes of both Mr. Obama and Mr. Clinton.

A campaign spokesman declined to comment.

Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Obama share several advisers, and Mrs. Clinton served as the president’s secretary of state in his first term. Mr. Obama’s team has long been prepared for Mrs. Clinton to seek to distinguish herself from him — and she has, although primarily by edging to his left, as she has gone further than he did in support of executive actions on immigration and on policing reforms.

Mrs. Clinton has generally embraced Mr. Obama and his policies, although she is likeliest to seek distance from him on foreign policy. As for Mr. Clinton, whose record she alluded to repeatedly in her 2008 presidential campaign, Mrs. Clinton has rarely mentioned him so far in this race.

Just to be clear, the Supreme Court, even amidst its deregulatory frenzy, has said that public disclosure of contributions to campaigns and independent groups is both constitutional and vital to fair elections.

The very limited record on dark money shows that those funding these groups -- just like those funding super PACs, which must identify their donors -- include many high-powered corporate and individual interests with well-connected lobbyists in search of favors. HuffPost reports have found that dark money groups tightly connected to congressional and party leadership, both Democratic and Republican, have received large sums from pharmaceutical, insurance, banking and online payday lenders seeking specific policy changes while retaining lobbyists previously employed by those very leaders.

This year, GOP presidential candidates are copying this model on an individual level, by launching their very own dark money groups to rake in secret contributions.

Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush has his Right to Rise Policy Solutions, which is playing an increasingly important role in his not-yet-declared, super-PAC-centered presidential campaign. Rubio's advisers run the Conservative Policy Solutions group in collaboration with an affiliated super PAC. And potential candidates like former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum and Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal are all running around the country fueled by funding from undisclosed nonprofit groups.

Then there is the case of Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, currently running another not-yet-announced presidential campaign.

In 2012, Walker faced a recall election after labor unions in his state rebelled over legislation gutting public employee union rights. His recall campaign coordinated with a band of nonprofit political groups, led by the Wisconsin Club for Growth, to promote Walker and his policies in a positive light. Walker aides worked closely with the outside groups, and the governor directly raised undisclosed contributions for the effort.

A bipartisan investigation by district attorneys into Walker’s coordination with those outside groups revealed some of their funding sources, including a $700,000 contribution to the Wisconsin Club for Growth from Gogebic Taconite at the exact time the company was seeking a rewrite of state mining and environmental laws.

John Menard Jr., considered the wealthiest man in Wisconsin, was another big donor to the save-Walker effort. The billionaire owner of the chain store Menards gave $1.5 million to the Wisconsin Club for Growth, according to a report by Yahoo News. During Walker’s term in office, Menard’s company received $1.8 million in tax credits from an economic development corporation led by the governor. He also received help in his battle with the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources as Walker defanged the watchdog agency.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Others who gave to the coordinated Walker effort include billionaires Charles and David Koch, Sheldon Adelson, Paul Singer, Bruce Kovner, Donald Trump, Ken Langone and Steven Cohen.

As Hillary Clinton has done with contributions to her family's foundation, Walker denies any conflict of interest involving donors to his coordinated recall effort. But the full list of contributors is unknown.

The same failure to see their own conflicts applies to candidates elected since the Citizens United decision precipitated the dramatic rise in dark money. Both Paul and Rubio were elected to the Senate in 2010 with $2.3 million and $2.7 million, respectively, in allied spending by groups that do not disclose their donors, including the Karl Rove-founded Crossroads GPS and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Thanks to its bankruptcy filings, it is known that for-profit Corinthian Colleges made contributions to Crossroads GPS. While the dates and amounts of those donations are still hidden, Rubio's strong support for Corinthian is well-established. In 2014, he pleaded with the Department of Education for leniency for the company as it faced a fraud investigation.

No one doubts that huge sums of dark money will again be spent supporting presidential candidates in the 2016 election. While the public will be able to consider whether the corporations, billionaires and foreign governments that contributed to the Clinton Foundation would hold undue sway over a Clinton White House, they will not even know the identities of those pouring in the secret donations.

Hillary's launch delay // Politico // Annie Karnia - May 19, 2015

Hillary Clinton's official entry into the presidential race on April 12 came in the form of a slick YouTube video and a series of choreographed roundtable events in Iowa, where Clinton asked more questions than she answered and listened more than she spoke. A more traditional big-picture speech and rally outlining Clinton's vision for the country's future and her reason for running, the campaign said, would follow in May.

But the formal roll-out is now being delayed indefinitely, pushed back at least until June, for largely political reasons: a desire to spend more time on fundraising and fleshing out policy positions before inviting more public scrutiny.

"If they had their druthers, they would basically get off the front pages, let the Republicans eat themselves alive, and let her do what she needs to do: raise the money and not have to be part of the debate right now," said one Clinton donor who's familiar with the campaign's thinking. "She has 100 percent name recognition, and is in a good place vis a vis the primary. Why put your foot on the accelerator?"

In place of a formal launch, Clinton is spending the remainder of May traveling to Iowa and New Hampshire this week, and South Carolina next week, where she is scheduled to engage in private meetings with activists and more of the same staged roundtable discussions. Next week, Clinton heads to Florida for a handful of fundraisers.

In memos to donors, campaign operatives have compared the low-stakes early-state events to the exploratory phase of a campaign, before the candidate officially enters the race. And Clinton's camp appears in no rush to leave that protected space.

A few factors, campaign insiders said, are driving the delay. Fundraising worries trumped the need to emerge with a big rally, partly because of the prospect of Jeb Bush's fundraising juggernaut. Clinton was forced to hit the money circuit earlier than planned, attending intimate events with donors in New York, Washington, and California. "She will not be able to do fundraising at people's houses for a few hundred thousand dollars when the campaign is in full speed," the donor said. "She'll have to do higher ticket and bigger events."

At the same time, important planks of Clinton's policy platform are still being fleshed out. A source said that initiatives surrounding student loans — which she plans to make an important part of her platform, in part due to pressure from the left — are still months out.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Tuesday, at a roundtable in Iowa, Clinton's trademark caution was on display as she again avoided taking any position on President Obama's contentious trade deal. "I've said I want to judge the final agreement," she said. "I've been for trade agreements, I've been against trade agreements."

There's been no single moment in May that would have been a clean time for a big kick-off speech. She's been fending off allegations about Clinton Foundation donors seeking to curry favor with the State Department; faced the prospect of a testifying in front of a Congressional hearing on Benghazi; and contended with publicity surrounding the release of personal financial disclosures showing the Clinton's made at least $30 million since 2014 — the month was clouded with the kind of stories Clinton has called "distractions."

Her Iowa trip this week might have afforded an opportunity for a formal launch event but Clinton appears to be enjoying the small, manageable roundtable settings, which allow her to talk about issues she wants to address on her own terms. In Las Vegas, for instance, Clinton used the roundtable setting to make real news: she called for a path to citizenship and more protections for parents of DREAMers, moving beyond Obama on immigration reform.

The slow walk-up to the campaign isn't necessarily a problem, Iowa activists said, because she's not starting from zero. "This has been a very slow emergence … but I have not felt that we, as Iowans, don't know who this person is," said Kurt Meyer, chair of the Tri County Democrats in Iowa. "We have a full file folder on Hillary Clinton. This is not like we walk into class, and there's a blank whiteboard."

But some Iowans are ready for the campaign's next phase. "Clearly there are some important issues — not the least of which is trade — that we'd like to have a pretty solid answer on," said Ken Sagar, president of the Iowa Federation of Labor, AFL-CIO. "If you want to be the leader of the country and the free world, now would be a good time to step up and let us know what your position is on important issues that are in the process of being debated, discusses and determined."

Iowans want details on raising wages and relieving student loan debt, among other issues, Sagar said.

On Tuesday, a campaign aide said Clinton was expanding her travel schedule beyond the early voting states, with trips to Florida, Texas and Missouri in the coming weeks. But it was still not clear when the traditional launch event might take place, signaling the transition into the next phase of her campaign.

"The early focus of the campaign is on directly interacting with voters, answering their questions and discussing their ideas," a campaign spokesman said. "Our next steps will be announced soon."

Hillary Clinton vows help for small business // McClatchy DC // Anita Kumar - May 19, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, IOWA — Hillary Clinton promised Tuesday to be "a small business president" who would help by cutting bureaucracy and securing more loans.

"I want to be a small business president, a president who does make it easier to start and run a small business in this country, so it seems less like a gamble and more like an opportunity," Clinton said at a roundtable discussion at a bike shop.

Clinton is spending the week in Iowa and New Hampshire focusing on small business, reminding voters of her humble start in life. She told participants about her father, Hugh Rodham, the owner of a small drapery business in their hometown of Park Ridge, Ill., just outside Chicago.

"He had a very small business, printing drapery fabrics and then went out and sold them. My mother, my brothers and I, and occasionally a few day laborers, would help out with the actual printing process," she said. "That's what put food on the table and gave us a solid middle-class home."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Critics mocked Clinton, a millionaire who along with her husband earns hundreds of thousands of dollars for her speeches and millions of dollars for her books.

“During her last campaign, Clinton never once mentioned small business during one of her 19 debates and never put forth a small business plan,” said Jeff Bechdel, a spokesman for America Rising, an opposition research group. “Her sudden focus on these issues rings hollow for the millions of small business owners who are facing challenges from policies she supports.”

After the event, in a rare response to a question from a reporter about how she could relate to the middle class, Clinton downplayed her wealth.

“Obviously Bill and I have been blessed. And we’re very grateful for the opportunities we’ve had,” she said. “But we’ve never forgotten where we came from. . . . That means we are going to fight to make sure everyone has the same chances.”

Clinton told the four small business owners that her plan to assist them has four key elements: cutting red tape, expanding access to capital, simplifying taxes and providing tax relief for small business, and expanding access to new markets.

She spent most of the nearly hourlong event asking questions of the entrepreneurs, but she answered a few of her own, including one about the ground rules for a contentious trade agreement Congress is debating.

Clinton declined again to say whether she supports or opposes the 12-nation deal called the Trans-Pacific Partnership, which is backed by her former boss, President Barack Obama, but opposed by many liberal Democrats, including two presidential rivals, Sen. Bernie Sanders, a Vermont independent, and former Maryland Gov. Martin O’Malley. She supported the proposed agreement when she was secretary of state.

Clinton said any deal must increase jobs and wages, be strong on health and environmental rules, be in the U.S.’s national security interests and address currency manipulation.

“I’ve said I want to judge the final agreement,” she said. “I’ve been for trade agreements. I’ve been against trade agreements.”

Outside the bike shop in downtown Cedar Rapids, three members of Americans for Democratic Action, which supports liberal candidates, held signs that asked Clinton to take a stand on the agreement.

“We’re really troubled that she’s been silent on it so far,” said Chris Schwartz, one of the group’s organizers. “And she’s playing politics with this issue that is critically important to Iowa jobs, worker safety and human rights around the world.”

Clinton was on her second trip to Iowa since she announced she was running for president in mid-April.

Later Tuesday, she stopped at a local coffee shop, a hardware store and a gift shop in Independence, Iowa, where she spoke to the owners. At Hardware Hank, she spoke to the son of the owner, Terry Tekippe, whose family has owned the shop for more than five decades.

“We just did a small business thing, so I’m really focused on what we can do to make it even better,” Clinton told him. “Keep us in focus,” Tekippe responded.

On Monday, she spoke to about 60 people at the Mason City home of Dean Genth and Gary Swenson, major Democratic organizers in Iowa who were among the first gay couples married in the state. They supported Obama in 2008.

“I am going into this race with my eyes wide open about how hard it is to be the president. I have a little experience with that,” she said. “We need a president who has both the experience and understanding to deal with the complexity of the problems we face. I believe I can go into that office on the very first day and do what is required."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton pops in on small business owners // Des Moines Register // Tony Leys - May 19, 2015

Independence, Ia. – Hillary Clinton made a quick stop here Tuesday morning to show appreciation for small business owners.

"I want to be the small-business president," she said to Terry Tekippe, who was standing in the doorway of the Hardware Hank's store his family owns.

The Democratic presidential candidate had appeared earlier in the morning in Cedar Falls, where she'd talked about ways to help small businesses thrive. In her unannounced stop in Independence, she walked up and down the sidewalk of the town's shopping district. She stopped in Em's Coffee Co., where owner Emilea Hillman made her an espresso and posed for photos with the candidate as photographers snapped and filmed away.

Clinton then walked down to "Laree's, the Shop of Favorites," which sells children's books and toys on one side, and pottery, glassware and artwork next door. "Careful, careful guys," she told the herd of journalists packed around her. "Lots of breakable things."

Clinton bought a humor book, "Theories of Everything," plus a ball and a farm toy for her granddaughter before bidding owner Laree Randall goodbye.

Walking back up the street, Clinton once again passed Tekippe, who was standing in the hardware-store doorway with his mother, Shirley Tekippe.

Terry Tekippe said he was glad to see the famous candidate take a little bit of time to tour small-town businesses. "Hopefully she remembers Main Street," he said. "Main Street's important."

After about a half hour, Clinton and her entourage piled back into several vans and headed back out onto the campaign trail.

Iowans wonder: How long can Clinton's big campaign stay small? // CNN // Eric Bradner - May 19, 2015

Cedar Falls, Iowa (CNN)Hillary Clinton isn't buckling under mounting pressure to abandon the comfort of her presidential campaign's small, carefully-choreographed events to answer lingering and politically sensitive questions.

But the clock on the former secretary of state's ramp-up into full campaign mode — with the accountability that comes with regular interaction with the press — is ticking louder by the day.

Even Iowa Democrats who are friendliest to Clinton's cause appear to have set it to expire this summer.

By then, they say, she'll need to have shifted her campaign into a higher gear by rolling out major policy proposals, fielding questions and allowing more voters access to her through larger rallies.

"People are going to start paying attention here pretty soon — it's just kind of in the air out here," said Iowa AFL-CIO President Ken Sagar.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Others aren't as forgiving. It's been three weeks since Clinton publicly answered questions from anyone who her campaign hadn't invited to an event — prompting more coverage of what she isn't doing than what she is saying, and triggering editorials like one that ran in the Las Vegas Review-Journal.

"If she can't handle a tough question from a journalist, how can she handle the duties of the highest office in the land?" the newspaper, in the key early-voting state of Nevada, opined Monday.

Questions about Clinton's past are dogging her quest for a fresh start headed into 2016, and voters appear to be taking notice. An NBC/Wall Street Journal poll found only a quarter of registered voters said they viewed her as honest and straightforward, down 13 percentage points from last summer.

The Democratic front-runner in the 2016 race for the White House returned to Iowa this week for her campaign's second swing through the state that casts the first ballots in the presidential nominating process. On Tuesday she'll visit Bike Tech, a small business in Cedar Falls, where she's set to lead another in her series of small roundtable discussions.

The small roundtable events, Clinton has said, have offered her insight into issues like the drug scourge, a rash of young suicides and mental health challenges that she said she now realizes must be part of her campaign.

But she has left most of them without taking any questions from the journalists tracking her campaign. She also hasn't sat for an interview with a major news outlet since officially entering the race.

Such a closed-off approach from the press could help Clinton avoid the mistakes of her unsuccessful 2008 campaign, which struggled at times to stay on course in a bitter battle with then-Sen. Barack Obama and Sen. John Edwards.

It has also, though, increasingly made her a target for Republicans who, needing attention to fuel their candidacies in a much more competitive nominating battle, have laid into Clinton during their much more frequent media appearances.

Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush estimated over the weekend that he's answered 800 to 900 questions — multitudes more than the 13, by the most generous counting, that Clinton has answered since launching her campaign.

"For those that really follow TV, 33,000 minutes is two times the number of 'Simpson's' shows that existed in the [past] 25 years," Bush said.

Clinton still hasn't fielded questions herself about her family foundation's acceptance of foreign donations or the $30 million she and Bill Clinton made giving paid speeches since the beginning of 2014. And on Monday evening, another issue popped up in a New York Times report: Her relationship with long-time ally Sidney Blumenthal, who was offering Clinton advice on Libya while she was secretary of state at the same time he did business with clients that operated in Libya.

Democrats are clamoring, meanwhile, for Clinton to tip the scales in a battle over international trade that has pitted President Barack Obama against firebrand liberal Sen. Elizabeth Warren — the champion of a coalition that resembles some of the forces that lifted Obama past Clinton in their 2008 battle.

"I think she should take a good look at it, and I think it would be very helpful," Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California said Sunday on ABC's "This Week."

For as much criticism as Clinton's small-ball approach has met, it's also allowed her to avoid the errors of GOP contenders like Bush, who needed at least four tries at answering a question about Iraq last week, and Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul, whose testy interviews with female journalists led to a round of inquiries about whether he has a personal problem with being challenged by women.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's remarks at a Mason City house party on Monday, where she mingled with guests for about an hour, were laced with implicit criticism of her Republican rivals. She mentioned none by name, but made a pointed reference to her experience.

"I am going into this race with my eyes wide open about how hard it is to be president of the United States. I have a little experience about that and I have to tell you, I find it very reassuring because I do have that experience to know what is possible and how best to proceed, Clinton said.

"But I also know that we are living in an incredibly complicated time in American history," she said, winding up for a jab at the entire GOP field of White House aspirants.

"It is not a time for easy answers, for glib answers, or one liners, or applause lines," Clinton said. "Those are all great, that is part of campaigning, but at the end of the day, we need a president who has both the experience and the understanding to deal with the complexity of the problems we face."

So far, Clinton has visited Iowa twice, Nevada and New Hampshire, where she'll return for her second visit later this week. She'll complete the superfecta of early-voting states by swinging through South Carolina next week.

Once those visits are concluded, Clinton is expected to change gears, beginning to hold large rallies and deliver major policy speeches.

In Iowa, Democratic insiders and activists say they'd like to see her campaign more actively — but unlike 2008, there isn't a strong challenger within Clinton's party to force the sorts of multiple daily packed-high-school-gymnasium events that candidates then needed to showcase the strength of their support.

Instead, the lack of a well-known and well-financed challenger has allowed Clinton to take a more humble approach — doing as much listening as talking — that showcases humility in what could easily be viewed as a Democratic coronation. It also affords her to tap into one of her greatest strengths as a candidate: a lifetime of wisdom on the wonkiest of subjects that pop up in question-and-answer sessions with those invited to her roundtables.

Sagar, the labor leader, said Clinton's low-key approach has been a welcome reprieve for a state fresh off a bruising Senate race, and already seeing an influx of Republican contenders in that party's packed presidential field.

"Everyone is burned out, honestly, from having these large events constantly," said Molly Monk, a soon-to-be Simpson College senior and student government president.

Still, Monk, who's also seen former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley in person but said she wants to volunteer to help Clinton, said college students are trying to decide whether Clinton is the kind of candidate they can actively embrace and work for, or one who they'll support for lack of alternatives.

And Monk, whose Irish Catholic family is filled with U.S. Army veterans, already has several issues she's waiting for Clinton to address — including student debt and particularly foreign policy.

"I'm willing to wait like two months or so," Monk said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Others said they expect a similar timeframe for a Clinton ramp-up.

"A couple months from now — about when we're going back to school — that's when people are going to start to say, 'All right, it's time to tell us what you're really going to do,'" said Anna Schierenbeck, a Grinnell College sophomore and one of the leaders of the College and Young Democrats of Iowa.

"I think that for now, she's doing a good job channeling this excitement and being really folksy," she said.

"I do think that as we go forward, it's going to be important for her to do the more traditional rallies," Schierenbeck said. "Young people love yelling and screaming about a candidate, and that's going to be important."

The 6 questions Hillary Clinton answered in Iowa // Des Moines Register // Jennifer Jacobs - May 19, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, Ia. –Breaking a long, much-scrutinized dry spell, Hillary Clinton allowed herself to be quizzed by reporters Tuesday in Iowa.

"Okaaaay," she said as she approached the mass of waiting reporters, all bristling with questions. She had just finished an invitation-only roundtable talk with four Iowans at Bike Tech, a small business in Cedar Falls.

FIRST QUESTION: Do you regret the way the Clinton Foundation handled foreign donations when you were U.S. Secretary of State? Your opponents say the donations and your private email account are examples of the Clintons having one set of rules for themselves and another set of rules for everyone else. (The donations raised questions about conflicts of interest if they were coming from foreigners trying to influence Clinton, the nation's top diplomat.)

CLINTON: "I am so proud of the foundation. I'm proud of the work that it has done and is doing. It attracted donations, from people, organizations, from around the world, and I think that just goes to show that people are very supportive of the life-saving and life-changing work that it's done here, at home and elsewhere. I'll let the American people make their own judgments."

SECOND QUESTION: Given the situation in Iraq, do you think we're better off without Saddam Hussein in power?

CLINTON: "Look, I know that there have been a lot of questions about Iraq posed to candidates over the last weeks. I've been very clear that I made a mistake plain and simple. And I have written about it in my book. I've talked about it in the past and you know what we now see is a very different and very dangerous situation. The United States is doing what it can, but ultimately this has to be a struggle that the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people are determined to win for themselves. We can provide support, but they're going to have to do it."

THIRD QUESTION: On your income disclosure, you are in the top echelon of income earners in this country. (Clinton and her husband, Bill, made least $30 million in the last year and four months, mostly from paid speeches, according to a financial disclosure that the Federal Election Commission requires be made public.) How do you expect every day Americans to relate to you?

CLINTON: "Well, obviously, Bill and I have been blessed and we're very grateful for the opportunities that we've had, but we've never forgotten where we came from, and we've never forgotten the country that we want to see for our granddaughter, and that means that we're going to fight to make sure that everybody has the same chances to live up to his or her own God-given potential. So I think that most Americans understand that the deck is stacked for those at the top, and I am running a campaign that is very clearly stating we want to reshuffle that deck. We want to get back to having more opportunities for more people so that they can make more out of their own lives. And I think that's exactly what America's looking for."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FOURTH QUESTION: Can you explain your relationship as secretary of state with Sidney Blumenthal? There's a report out this morning that you exchanged several emails. Should Americans expect that if elected president that you would have that same type of relationship with these old friends that you've had for so long? (The New York Times reported that Blumenthal wrote her memos about Libya, even as he advised for private business associates with financial interests in Libya, which blurred the "lines between business, politics and philanthropy that have enriched and vexed the Clintons and their inner circle for years.")

CLINTON (laughing): "I have many, many old friends, and I always think that it's important when you get into politics to have friends that you had before you were in politics and to understand what's on their minds. He's been a friend of mine for a long time. He sent me unsolicited emails, which I passed on in some instances, and I see that that's just part of the give-and-take. When you're in the public eye, when you're in an official position, I think you do have to work to make sure you're not caught in the bubble and you only hear from a certain small group of people, and I'm going to keep talking to my old friends, who ever they are."

FIFTH QUESTION: We learned today that the State Department might not release your emails until January 2016. A federal judge says they should be released sooner. Will you demand that they are released sooner, and to follow up on the question about the speeches, was there a conflict of interest in your giving paid speeches into the run-up of your announcing that you're running for president?

CLINTON: "The answer to the first is: No. And the answer to the second is: I have said repeatedly, I want those emails out. Nobody has a bigger interest in getting them released than I do. I respect the State Department. They have their process, as they do for everybody, not just for me, but anything that they might do to expedite that process, I heartily support. You know, I want the American people to learn as much as we can about the work that I did with our diplomats and our development experts. Because I think that it will show how hard we worked, and the work we did for our country during the time that I was secretary of state, where I worked extremely hard on behalf of our values, and our interests and our security. And the emails are part of that. So I have said publicly — I'm repeating it here in front of all of you today — I want them out as soon as they can get out."

SIXTH QUESTION: But will you demand their release? (In March, the New York Times revealed that Clinton used a private email account tied to a home-based server to conduct business as secretary of state, which shielded her correspondence from the public eye and raised security questions. The State Department's proposal to release 55,000 pages of the emails, which Clinton turned over to the agency in December, comes in the wake of a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit, Politico reports. The proposed Jan. 15 release date would fall just a couple weeks before the Iowa caucuses, the first voting in the nation in the presidential selection process.)

CLINTON: "Well, they're not mine. They belong to the State Department. So the State Department has to go through its process and as much as they can expedite that process, that's what I'm asking them to do. Please move as quickly as they possibly can."

Clinton then said: "Thank you all very much" and walked away with a wave, ignoring other questions shouted at her, such as "Do you regret deleting 32,000 other emails, Mrs. Clinton?"

THE BACKGROUND: Since Clinton announced on April 12 that she is running for president of the United States again, she has carefully, smilingly side-stepped grillings by press gaggles and avoided sit-down interviews with reporters, saying that she wants to keep her focus this time on voters and their ideas for the country — not on herself.

Her GOP presidential rivals have criticized her, and news outlets have begun tracking her question avoiding. The New York Times posted queries "we would have asked Mrs. Clinton had we had the opportunity." The Washington Post's clock showed that before her Iowa Q&A, 40,150 minutes passed since Clinton had last answered a question posed by the press.

Near the end of her chat with three Iowa small-business owners and a local banker, Fox News reporter Ed Henry called out to ask if she'd entertain questions from reporters. "I might. I have to ponder it. I will put it on my list for due consideration," she answered, to laughs. A few minutes later, she said she'd pose for photos with her invited guests, then "if I can learn something, I might come over and take a few questions from the press."

Clinton is on day two of a two-day swing through Iowa on her second trip here of her 2016 presidential campaign. She was in Mason City on Monday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

IOWA GOP RESPONSE: "What difference, at this point, does it make," said Republican Party of Iowa spokesman Charlie Szold in a statement, "if Hillary Clinton answers one or two more questions? There are hundreds of unanswered questions about her decades of scandal, which explains why more Iowans than not find her untrustworthy."

After media drought, Hillary Clinton takes some questions in Iowa // WaPo // Robert Costa and David Fahrenthold - May 19, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa — “Hillary! Hillary!” they yelled at the distant figure, from across the parking lot and across the street, at the edge of the Secret Service’s protective zone.

She waved. Then she started walking over, trailed by a phalanx of aides, cops and agents.

“Thank you for standing out here!” Hillary Rodham Clinton said Tuesday, shaking hands with the 10 or so Iowans who had waited in the chilly wind, hoping to see her come out the back door of a bike shop after a campaign event here. “I need your help! I want you to caucus for me!”

This kind of face-to-face interaction isn’t unusual for campaign season in Iowa, of course. But Clinton’s protective detail makes her a different kind of candidate: The cluster of people waiting for her spoke about how the Republicans coming through the state these days are easier to talk to, mingle with.

It was a morning defined by Clinton’s reengagement — with voters beyond those handpicked to meet her and with the traveling press — after nearly a month of closely controlled appearances.

In taking a few questions from reporters, Clinton rapidly addressed a series of controversies swirling around her and her campaign. She expressed regret for voting in favor of the Iraq war, dismissed criticism of her family’s foundation, and defended the millions of dollars she and her husband have made giving speeches.

Clinton also was noncommittal on President Obama’s proposed Asian free-trade agreement and, in response to a reporter’s question, said she favors having the State Department release e-mails from her time as secretary of state as soon as possible: “I want those e-mails out.”

The news conference — which featured six questions from five reporters — was impromptu and marked a turning point for Clinton, who so far in her young campaign has stuck mostly to tightly scripted events with small groups of voters in Iowa and New Hampshire, and no substantive questions from the media.

Late in her dialogue with Iowans at the bike shop, Fox News’s Ed Henry asked during a break in the conversation whether Clinton would take questions. The candidate — apparently taken aback by what she saw as an interruption — waved him off but did not say no.

“Maybe when I finish talking to people here. How’s that?” Clinton replied, to chuckles from attendees and groans from some reporters. When pressed again, she said: “I might. I’ll have to ponder it. I will put it on my list for due consideration.”

Later, on Fox News, Henry explained his query: “We had been through one of these campaign events after another, getting monotonous, one city after another. Roundtables. All candidates, Democrats and Republicans, are able to do their talking points, but we’ve gone 27, 28 days without a question. That’s why I just jumped in.”

Once she finished and posed for some pictures and selfies near polished mountain bikes and rows of athletic gear, Clinton approached the waiting crowd of reporters, who thrust forward audio recorders and hoisted boom microphones above her.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

She defended the Clinton Foundation's practice of accepting foreign donations — "I'm proud of the work it has done and the work it's doing" — and defended her friendship with former Bill Clinton aide Sidney Blumenthal, who offered what she characterized as "unsolicited" advice on Libya while she was secretary of state.

"I have many, many old friends, and I always think that it's important when you get into politics to have friends you had before you got into politics, to understand what's on their minds," Clinton said.

She also repelled a question about whether regular Americans will be able to relate to her because of her wealth; she and her husband have made $25 million since early 2014 giving speeches.

"Bill and I have been blessed, and we're very grateful for the opportunities we had," Clinton said. "But we've never forgotten where we came from, and we've never forgotten the kind of country we want to see for our granddaughter, and that means that we're going to fight to make sure that everybody has the same chances to live up to his or her own God-given potential."

She also fielded a question on the Iraq war, a topic that has bedeviled Republican presidential contenders in recent days. Clinton, who as a senator from New York voted to authorize the war in 2003, reiterated that she now believes that decision was wrong.

"I've made it very clear that I made a mistake, plain and simple," she said.

Clinton's initial remarks at Bike Tech struck an optimistic tone about the future of the national economy and the Obama administration's efforts. But she also decried the ability of powerful financiers to use tax loopholes to their advantage.

"Our economy and our country are in much better shape today," Clinton said. "But the deck is still stacked for those at the top. People aren't getting a fair shake."

Stepping outside after the reporters' questions, Clinton made small talk with a crowd that had grown since she entered the shop. One woman was from Pennsylvania; Clinton said she goes to Scranton often. Ronald "Ronzie" Zuehlke told Clinton that he'd met her husband back in the 1990s.

Then she was gone, ducking into a van that had crept up as she greeted them, so the walk back would be shorter.

Zuehlke, 65, of Cedar Falls, was literally hopping with excitement. "I got to shake her hand!" he said. "Wow!"

"I'm just having shakes, I'm so excited," said Linda Bodell, of Cedar Falls.

"I shook her hand!" repeated Zuehlke, a former farmer who had stocked the pet aisle at Target for 13 years and was now retired. "I didn't think she'd come out. Face to face! Holy smokes!"

Hillary Clinton finally takes questions, defends speech income // WaPo // Robert Costa - May 19, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa -- Hillary Rodham Clinton broke a long drought to take a few questions from the traveling press here Tuesday, distancing herself from President Obama's trade pact and defending the millions of dollars she and her husband have made from giving speeches.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the end of an event focused on small-business issues at a bicycle shop, Clinton also said in response to a reporter's question that she favors having the State Department release e-mails from her time as secretary of state as soon as possible: "I want those e-mails out."

Clinton's second swing through Iowa comes amid new revelations about foreign donations to her family's foundation and speech income for her and Bill Clinton, who together brought in $25 million by giving paid addresses since early 2014.

During the short exchange with reporters after the event at Bike Tech, Hillary Clinton defended the work of the Clinton Foundation -- "I'm proud of the work it has done and the work it's doing" -- and dismissed questions about her wealth.

"Bill and I have been blessed and we're very grateful for the opportunities we had," Clinton said. "But we've never forgotten where we came from and we've never forgotten the kind of country we want to see for our granddaughter, and that means that we're going to fight to make sure that everybody has the same chances to live up to his or her own God-given potential."

She also fielded a question on the Iraq war, a topic that has bedeviled Republican presidential candidates in recent days. Clinton, who voted to authorize the war in 2003 as a New York senator, reiterated that she now believes the decision was wrong.

"Look, I know that there have been a lot of questions about Iraq posted to candidates over the last week. I've made it very clear that I made a mistake, plain and simple," Clinton said. "And I have written about it in my book, I've talked about it in the past, and what we now see is a very different and very dangerous situation. The United States is doing what it can, but ultimately this has to be a struggle that the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people are determined to win for themselves."

Before the brief press gaggle, Clinton made remarks distancing herself from an Asian free-trade deal that Obama is pushing and that she supported while serving in his cabinet.

But Clinton said Tuesday that "any trade deal that I would support must increase jobs, must increase wages, must give us more economic competitive power" and that she was waiting to know more before taking a firm position.

"There are questions being raised about this current agreement," Clinton continued. "It hasn't been fully negotiated yet, so I don't know what the final provisions are yet... So, I have said I want to judge the final agreement. I have been for trade agreements, I have been against trade agreements. I've tried to make the evaluation dependent on what I thought they would produce, and that's what I'm waiting to see."

Hillary Clinton Talks to Small-Business Owners in Iowa, Then Gives Reporters a Turn // NYT //
Amy Chozick - May 19, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa — For close to an hour on Tuesday, Hillary Rodham Clinton talked with owners of small businesses here about the issues on their minds, like whether they would enjoy better access to credit if small local banks were given regulatory relief and whether a major trade deal up for debate in Washington could wind up hurting American workers.

Then Mrs. Clinton, who is seeking the Democratic Party's nomination for president, took a handful of questions from reporters, and the topics were sharply different, and sharper in tone: her personal wealth, her use of a private email while she was secretary of state, her family foundation's acceptance of foreign donations and the 2003 invasion in Iraq. She called her own vote in the Senate to authorize the invasion "a mistake."

Mrs. Clinton is adhering to a campaign schedule dotted with regular round-table sessions as she delves into the concerns of voters in Iowa and New Hampshire. More often than not, though, she avoids engaging with the journalists covering her campaign, a practice that has drawn criticism in recent weeks from Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor, who is a likely Republican presidential candidate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Tuesday's event and the question-and-answer session after it — her first since April 21 — underscored the tension between Mrs. Clinton's desire to establish a comfortable rapport with voters on issues she believes they care about and journalists' intent to question her about stories that have dogged her nascent campaign, threatening to throw her off message. All candidates face that push and pull for control of their campaign narrative, but it is more pronounced in Mrs. Clinton's case because of the way she dominates the Democratic field so far.

Mrs. Clinton opened the round-table discussion here, at a specialty bike shop, with a call to help small businesses expand their access to credit — and hire more workers — by relieving small community banks of some regulatory hindrances. "Isn't that doable?" she asked to nods of approval. "Am I right about that?"

She said community banks had been hard hit by the 2010 Dodd-Frank financial regulation law.

Donna J. Sorensen, chairwoman of the Cedar Rapids Bank and Trust, agreed. "We are losing those at a rapid rate, about 10 every year in Iowa," Ms. Sorensen said. "We exist to support small businesses. Small businesses are our bread and butter."

Another participant, Brad Magg, the owner of an ice cream shop and catering business, said he had opened his first restaurant at age 20 "with a bank loan from my local bank across the street because the bank president knew me, knew my work ethic."

Mrs. Clinton drew a distinction between relieving the pressure on smaller banks and deregulating big Wall Street banks, a policy that she faulted some Republicans for supporting.

"What was meant to rein in 'too big to fail' has actually fallen harder on them," she said of community banks. "That's why they need relief, because they were not part of the problem but in some ways are paying a disproportionate price."

One of the participants asked Mrs. Clinton about the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal, which the Obama administration is negotiating and which liberals have pressed her to oppose. She acknowledged that "this is obviously a very hot topic right now" but avoided saying whether she would come down for or against it.

"Any trade deal I would support must increase jobs, must increase wages, must give us more economic competitive power," Mrs. Clinton said, repeating her earlier contention that it was too early to tell whether the pact would meet her threshold.

"I have been for trade agreements. I have been against trade agreements," she said. "I try to make a valuation dependent on what they would produce."

Mrs. Clinton was equally coy after a reporter for Fox News called out to her with a request to take questions from reporters.

"I might," she said, smiling. "I have to ponder it. I will put it on my list for due consideration."

When she began to answer a handful of questions, Mrs. Clinton made a modicum of news. She said she hoped the State Department would release her personal emails as soon as possible. ("As much as they can expedite the process, that's what I'm asking them to do.") She defended her family's philanthropic foundation. ("I'll let the American people make their own judgments" about foreign donations.)

Asked about current conflict in Iraq, which has stumped Mr. Bush and some other Republican contenders lately, and whether the world would be better off had Saddam Hussein remained in power, Mrs. Clinton demurred.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“I made a mistake, plain and simple,” in voting to authorize the 2003 invasion, she said.

She defended her relationship with Sidney Blumenthal, a White House adviser to former President Bill Clinton and a longtime confidant, who was paid by the Clinton Foundation and offered advice to Mrs. Clinton about the situation in Libya while she was secretary of state.

“I always think that it’s important when you get into politics to have friends you had before you were in politics and to understand what’s on their mind,” she said.

At every step in her campaign so far, Mrs. Clinton has voiced a populist message about helping ordinary Americans, saying the “deck is stacked” against them and in favor of the very wealthy. Tuesday was no different: “Something is wrong when C.E.O.s earn more than 300 times what the typical American worker earns,” she said in the round-table discussion.

But for the first time, Mrs. Clinton was asked afterward how she could relate to voters struggling to get by, given the $25 million that she and her husband reported in income from paid speeches since the beginning of last year.

“Obviously, Bill and I have been blessed, and we are very grateful for the opportunities,” she said. “I’m running a campaign that is very clearly stating we want to reshuffle the deck.”

Hillary Clinton Finally Takes Reporters' Questions in Iowa // National Journal // Emily Schultheis - May 19, 2015

Hillary Clinton found out Tuesday what happens when a presidential candidate goes almost a month without taking questions from the press: a feeding frenzy of reporters.

The former secretary of State faced a barrage of questions after a campaign event in Cedar Falls, Iowa, and answered questions on topics ranging from Iraq to the Clinton Foundation to her family's wealth.

The brief Q&A came after reporters have focused on their lack of access to Clinton in recent weeks—before Tuesday, Clinton had answered just 13 questions during the campaign, by NPR's count. That relative silence from Clinton has allowed a spate of news stories, ranging from questions about the Foundation's financial dealings to the release of her emails, to pass by without comment from the candidate herself.

That tension was apparent earlier Tuesday, when a reporter shouted out during the event to ask whether she would take questions afterward. "I might. I'll have to ponder it," Clinton replied, adding that it would only be "when I finish talking to the people here."

Clinton also got a tough question during the event itself, when one of the roundtable participants asked her to clarify her position on the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal. Trade has divided the Democratic Party: President Obama supports the deal, but progressives—including Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, Clinton's sole official primary opponent thus far—have vehemently opposed it. Clinton had previously commented on what it would take for her to support the deal, but had not taken a stance either way.

"I've been very clear on this," Clinton said, reiterating her previous statements that any trade deal she supports must increase jobs and wages, increase the United States' competitiveness globally, and be good for U.S. national security. But she expressed concern over several provisions in the potential deal, saying she will wait to decide until the proposed agreement has been finalized.

"I have said I want to judge the final agreement," she said. "I have been for trade agreements, I have been against trade agreements. I've tried to make the evaluation depending upon what I thought they would produce, and that's what I'm waiting to see."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Here's what she said in response to the five press questions she answered:

On the release of her emails by the State Department: Clinton said she hopes the State Department—which said this week that it will not have completed its review of her emails until January 2016—can "expedite the process" however possible. "I want them out as soon as they can get out," Clinton said, adding that she has asked the department to "please move as quickly as they possibly can."

On her relationship with Sidney Blumenthal: Clinton also answered a question about her relationship with Blumenthal, whom The New York Times reported sent her numerous memos about the security situation in Libya before the Benghazi attacks occurred. She defended her relationship with Blumenthal, saying, "I have many old friends. … I'm going to keep talking to my old friends no matter who they are."

On the Clinton Foundation and questions about its donors: "I am so proud of the Foundation. I'm proud of the work that it has done and that it is doing," she said, adding that she would "let the American people make their own judgments about that."

On whether the invasion of Iraq was a mistake: Clinton has previously said her 2002 vote to authorize the Iraq war was a mistake, and she reiterated that Tuesday as the issue has come back into the headlines in recent days. "I've made it very clear that I made a mistake, plain and simple, and I have written about it in my book, talked about it in the past, and you know, what we now see is a different and very dangerous situation."

On her personal wealth and whether regular Americans can "relate" to her: Clinton, asked about her wealth after personal financial-disclosure forms revealed that she and her husband made $25 million in speaking fees since 2014, said both of them remember their roots. "Obviously, Bill and I have been blessed and we're very grateful for the opportunities that we had, but we've never forgotten where we came from and never forgotten the kind of country we want to see for our granddaughter," she said. "And that means that we're going to fight to make sure that everybody has the same chances to live up to his or her own God-given potential."

In Iowa, Hillary Clinton Takes A Question About Her Questions // Buzzfeed News // Ruby Cramer - May 19, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa — At a bicycle shop here in northeast Iowa, Hillary Clinton was taking questions from the audience — a handful of local officials who'd come to watch her roundtable discussion with small business owners — when a voice rang out from the other side of the room.

"Secretary Clinton, will you take questions from the media as well?" said one of the few dozen reporters crowding the rope line at Bike Tech on Tuesday morning.

Clinton is now one month into the presidential race. Since her campaign announcement, a number of negative stories have followed Clinton to Iowa and New Hampshire and Nevada: There's the use of her personal email at the State Department, the foreign contributions to the Clinton Foundation, and the new book, Clinton Cash, which investigates whether those donations, and domestic ones, were used as tools of influence.

From these varied matters, one common question has emerged for the media covering her campaign: How many questions, about these questions, has Clinton answered since her launch — and when will she take more? (Last week, one news outlet published a story saying she had taken nine. Another counted 13.)

On Tuesday in Cedar Falls, the press got seven more.

The reporter who yelled his question to Clinton, appearing to startle some in the audience, also remarked on the candidate's recent silence.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“We haven’t heard from you in a month,” he told her, setting off a somewhat strained exchange, which the crowd of press and attendees observed in silence.

“Maybe when I finish talking to the people,” Clinton said.

“Thank you.”

“How’s that?” she asked.

“Thank you,” he replied. “Will you come over?”

Clinton paused. “I might.”

“Thank you.”

“I’ll ponder it,” she said, prompting some laughter.

“I appreciate that.”

“I’ll put it on my list.”

After another question from the audience, Clinton took pictures with the participants at the roundtable event — where she vowed to serve as the “small business president,” eliminate “red tape,” and ease regulations on community banks.

Then she came over to the reporters.

The shouting happened all at once.

One voice, booming above the rest, could be heard asking multiple times, “WHAT MAKES YOU SO SPECIAL?”

When the din quieted, Clinton took her seven questions.

First, the foreign donations:

I am so proud of the foundation. I’m proud of the work that it has done and keeps doing. It attracted donations from people, organizations, from around the world, and I think that goes to show that people are very supportive of the life-saving and life-changing work it’s done here, at home, and elsewhere.

Her vote as senator for the war in Iraq:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I've made it very clear that I've made a mistake, plain and simple … what we now see is a very different and very dangerous situation. The United States is doing what it can but ultimately this has to be a struggle that the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people have to win for themselves — and we can provide support, but they're gonna have to do it.

Her personal wealth:

Bill and I have been blessed. And we're very grateful for the opportunities that we've had. But we've never forgotten where we came from.

Her relationship with a friend and adviser, Sidney Blumenthal, who, after being barred from serving in the Obama administration, still advised her on matters pertaining to Libya while he pursued business interests there, as reported on Monday in the New York Times:

I have many, many old friends. I always think it's important, when you get into politics, to have friends you had before you were in politics … He's been a friend of mine for a long time. He sent me unsolicited emails, which I passed on in some instances, and I see that [as] just part of the give-and-take.

Her paid speeches — did they amount to a conflict of interest?

No.

The emails from the State Department — will she "demand" they be released sooner than January 2016, as is expected?

I have said repeatedly I want those emails out. Nobody has a bigger interest in getting them released than I do. I respect the State Department. They have their process that they do for everybody, not just for me. But anything that they might do to expedite that process, I heartily support.

But would she demand it?

As much as they can expedite that process, that's what I'm asking them to do — to please move as quickly…

Clinton was cut off. The yelling started again.

"Secretary Clinton?"

"Did you take official actions from the Clinton Foundation donors?"

"Secretary Clinton?"

"Why did you delete the email server?"

"Secretary Clinton?!"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

More voices rang out — but Clinton was done, exiting the Cedar Falls bike shop alongside her press aide to head to another campaign stop. A chyron on MSNBC summarized the “breaking news”: “CLINTON TAKES QUESTIONS IN IOWA.”

There was another question that went out to Clinton on policy — and it was from a voter on the roundtable, who raised the topic of the Trans-Pacific Partnership, the trade deal President Obama is negotiating that has become an immense source of tension within the Democratic Party.

“What’s your stand?” asked Denita Gadson, the owner of i-Gus Consulting, a small digital signage company based in Waterloo, Iowa.

Clinton, in this case, had plenty to say — except exactly whether she will support the deal.

“There are questions being raised about this agreement. It hasn’t been negotiated yet … I have said I want to judge the final agreement.” In the past, Clinton said, “I have been for trade agreements; I have been against trade agreements.”

She would, she said, back a deal that increases jobs, wages, and protects national security. And she would oppose one, she said, that “gives corporations more power to overturn health and environmental and labor rules.”

“I’ve been very clear on this,” Clinton told Gadson.

After A Month, The 7 Questions Hillary Clinton Answered From The Media // NPR // Amita Kelly – May 19, 2015

Until Tuesday, it had been almost a month since Hillary Clinton had answered a question from the press.

After taking questions from Iowans in Cedar Rapids, where she spoke about small business, the former secretary of state then answered six questions from reporters. She also took an awkwardly timed one about whether she'll answer questions from media in the middle of the event. The questions after the event ranged from the release of her emails when she was secretary of state and criticism over foreign donations to the Clinton foundation to the state of Iraq and more.

That brings the total number of questions Clinton has answered since she launched her campaign, by NPR's count, to 20. As NPR's Tamara Keith reported recently, Clinton had answered only 13 questions from the media since launching her campaign. That count included a few substantive answers, and many versions of "How are you liking Iowa?"

It's also something Republicans, like Jeb Bush and Rand Paul, had started to use against her, noting that they were answering questions.

During Tuesday's event, Fox News reporter Ed Henry asked if Clinton would be taking questions from the media. (We guess that counts.) "We haven't heard from you in a month," he said. Clinton said to laughs that she would. "Maybe when I finish talking to the people here," she said. "How's that? I might. I'll have to ponder it, but I will put it on my list for due consideration."

Here are the six other questions Clinton answered Tuesday, along with her responses:

1. "Secretary Clinton, do you regret the way that the Clinton foundation handled foreign donations when you were secretary of state? And your opponents say that the foreign donations and private emails are examples of the Clintons having one set of rules for themselves and one for everyone else. Do they have a point?"

Clinton: "I am so proud of the foundation. I'm proud of the work that it has done and it is doing. It attracted donations from people, organizations from around the world and I think that just goes to show that people are very supportive of the lifesaving and life-changing work it's done here at home and elsewhere.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"And I'll let the American people make their own judgments about that."

2. "Secretary Clinton, given the situation in Iraq, do you think that we're better off without Saddam Hussein in power?"

"Look, I know that there've been a lot of questions about Iraq posed to candidates over the last weeks. I've made it very clear that I made a mistake, plain and simple. And I have written about it in my book; I've talked about it in the past. What we now see is a very different and very dangerous situation; the United States is doing what it can but ultimately this has to be a struggle that the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people are determined to win for themselves, and we can provide support but they're going to have to do it."

3. "On your income disclosure recently, that just came out on Friday, you are in the tip-top echelon of earners in this country. How do you expect everyday Americans to relate to you?"

"Well, obviously, Bill and I have been blessed, and we're very grateful for the opportunities that we had, but we've never forgotten where we came from. And we've never forgotten the kind of country that we want to see for our granddaughter, and that means that we're going to fight to make sure that everybody has the same chances to live up to his or her own God-given potential.

"So I think that most Americans understand that the deck is stacked for those at the top — and I am running a campaign that is very clearly stating we want to reshuffle that deck, we want to get back to having more opportunity for more people so that they can make more out of their own lives. And I think that's exactly what America's looking for."

4. "Can you explain your relationship as secretary of state with Sidney Blumenthal? There was a report out this morning that you've exchanged several emails. Should Americans expect that if elected president you would have the same type of relationships with these old friends you've had for so long?"

[Laughing] "I have many, many old friends, and I always think it's important, when you get into politics to have friends you had before you were in politics. And to understand what's on their mind. And he's been a friend of mine for a long time. He sent me unsolicited emails which I passed on in some instances. And I see that's just part of the give and take. When you're in the public eye, when you're in an official position, I think you do have to work to make sure you're not caught in a bubble and you only hear from a certain small group of people and I'm going to keep talking to my old friends whoever they are."

5.-6. "Secretary Clinton, you learned today that [the] State Department might not release your emails until January of 2016. A federal judge says they should be released sooner. Will you demand they are released sooner? And to follow up on the questions about the speeches, was there a conflict of interest in your giving paid speeches into the run-up of your announcement that you're running for president?"

"The answer to the second is no. And the answer to the first is I have said repeatedly that I want those emails out. Nobody has a bigger interest in getting them released than I do. I respect the State Department; they have their process that they do for everybody, not just for me. But anything that they might do to expedite that process, I heartily support.

"You know, I want the American people to learn as much as we can about the work that I did with our diplomats and our development experts, because I think it will show how hard we worked and what we did for our country during the time that I was secretary of state, where I worked extremely hard on behalf of our values and our interest and our security, and the emails are part of that. So, I have said publicly, I'm repeating it here, in front of all of you today, I want them out as soon as they can get out."

Follow-up: "But will you demand it? Will you demand it?"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Well, they're not mine. They belong to the State Department. So the State Department has to go through its process, but as much as they can expedite that process, that's what I'm asking them to do, please move as quickly as they possibly can to get them out."

Bonus Question: Trade Deal

It is worth noting that Clinton has not been avoiding questions completely. She has been answering questions from participants at her events — but many are pre-selected supporters of her campaign.

On Tuesday, however, one participant did ask her a potentially thorny question, about the Trans-Pacific Partnership, a major trade deal that she supported as secretary of state but has hedged on as a candidate. She said she wanted to "judge the final agreement" and expressed concerns over parts of the deal.

Even when flying with the public, Hillary Clinton keeps it private // MSNBC // Alex Seitz-Wald - May 19, 2015

CHICAGO, Illinois – Hillary Clinton has traded private jets for seats on commercial airlines as she embarks on her second, humbler presidential run. But even in this relatively more democratic mode of transit, the former secretary of state is mostly kept apart from the everyday Americans her campaign wants to champion.

Clinton does not fly the commercial the way you fly commercial. Thanks to strict security concerns, Clinton is insulated from the public from the moment she arrives at one airport to the time she leaves the second one. And even when trapped in a metal tube in the sky with fellow passengers, there are few opportunities for public interaction.

While the insulation is largely outside of Clinton's control and determined by the Secret Service, it underscores the logistical difficulties Clinton will have in connecting with ordinary voters on her second campaign.

Hillary Clinton boarding her plane, May 19, 2015. (Photo by Alex Seitz-Wald/MSNBC)

On Tuesday afternoon in Dubuque, Iowa, a few dozen passengers waited for their routine American Airlines flight to Chicago, one of only three flights scheduled from the tiny airport that day. Suddenly, a small motorcade pulled up, just outside the floor-to-ceiling windows that separate the airport's only gate from the tarmac.

Secret Service agents piled out, followed by aides. And then Hillary Clinton emerged from a red minivan. On the tarmac, she shook hands and chatted with a woman in a red jacket and her campaign's state director. Inside, passengers rushed to the windows and raised their smartphones to snap pictures.

After wrapping up her five minute conversation, Clinton walked into a small corridor that leads from the terminal to the plane, putting her just feet away from passengers inside, with only a glass door in between.

An older man knocked on the glass like he was tapping on a fish tank and Clinton turned to give a big, enthusiastic wave. She made an "OK" sign with her thumb and ring finger and smiled. A moment later, she was lead onboard and took a window seat in the first row. The small commuter plane had only one class.

She did not pass through TSA screening, though some of her campaign aides did.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

With a bulkhead in front of her, a window to her right, and trusted aide Huma Abedin between her and the aisle, Clinton donned sunglasses and looked at her BlackBerry as passengers boarded.

The seats around were filled by Secret Service agents, and then campaign staff further back. No one approached her during the short flight.

Upon arrival, Clinton and her entourage were quickly whisked off the plane. Inside, Chicago's O'Hare airport, she was almost immediately surrounded by onlookers and fans. She paused for a few selfies and to shake some hands, but an aide told fans they were in a rush and Clinton got moving.

The former secretary of state pulled her own black wheeled suitcase with a pink purse balanced on top. Over her should hung a green tote bag from Lardee's, a small gift shop she visited earlier in the afternoon where she purchased a book and two toys.

Clinton had only to travel about 50 feet across the terminal and into a secure area, where she disappeared from view before the other passengers on her flight had even collected their gate-checked luggage.

There were no opportunities for a reporter who happened to be on her flight to speak with her. Earlier in the day, she had taken questions from the press for the first time in 28 days.

It's a routine Clinton will likely repeat often as she ramps up her travel. On her way to Las Vegas this month, Clinton paused for a group shot with a JetBlue ground crew, presumably after being driven to the plane like she was in Iowa.

Ditching the private jets that Clinton used frequently since stepping down as secretary of state was an obvious move for a candidate trying to reintroduce herself to the American people as a more modest version of her 2008 campaign self.

But the candidate's commercial flying is about more than symbolism.

In her many years in public life, Clinton has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on private jets, sometimes at taxpayer or campaign donors' expense, causing controversy on more than one occasion.

For instance, her 2006 Senate campaign, when she faced limited Republican opposition, was famously spendthrift, dolling out $160,000 on private airfare. Her 2008 presidential campaign, meanwhile, ran out of money thanks in part to liberal use of private charters.

This time, Clinton's campaign – and especially her proudly frugal campaign manager Robby Mook – have vowed to be more careful with funds. That means many more American Eagle flights from Iowa to Chicago.

Rand Welcomes Hillary to the Felon Voting Rights Cause–But She's Been There for Years // Bloomberg // David Weigel - May 19, 2015

Before she took her first questions from reporters in four weeks, Democratic presidential front-runner Hillary Clinton took a little time Tuesday to undercut Rand Paul.

"Many people in the community, because of where they live, because maybe they did make a mistake and they don't get their voting rights back, which I totally disagree with," Clinton told a potential voter at a forum in Iowa. "I think if you've done your time, so to speak, and you've made your commitment to go forward you should be able to vote and you should be able to be judged on the same basis. You ought to get a second chance."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Just as she had done in April, in a speech at Columbia University, Clinton had talked about criminal justice reform in the same manner as the Republican senator from Kentucky. Just as it had then, Paul's presidential campaign sarcastically welcomed Clinton to the party.

"Glad to see her once again joining Senator Paul in undoing some of the damage the Clinton administration did," Paul's political adviser, Doug Stafford, told Bloomberg. "There are certainly enough people who served time because of their policies."

That barb stung when Clinton was talking about over-criminalization. When it came to felon voter rights, she actually had a lead on Paul. In 2005, two years before announcing her first presidential bid, Clinton co-sponsored the Count Every Vote Act. It was a package of reforms that grew out of Democratic anger at the 2000 and 2004 elections, coming weeks after Senator Barbara Boxer of California had actually challenged the official electoral vote count on the Senate floor. And it would have restored voting rights for felons.

Clinton took heat for that. "Should convicted murderers be allowed to vote?" the Washington Times asked in a 2005 editorial. "If the federal Count Every Vote Act of 2005 passes, they will be." Other conservative taste-makers latched on to data from Jeff Manza and Marcus Britton of Northwestern University and Christopher Uggen of the University of Minnesota, about the Democratic leanings of felons. "Thirty percent of felons would vote if Hillary's law was passed," wrote a reporter for Newsmax in 2005. "With 85 percent of felon voters statistically likely to vote Democrat, that could add up to 1.2 million votes to presidential candidate Clinton's tally in 2008."

The Count Every Vote Act went nowhere in 2005, and didn't become a priority when Democrats took the Senate–and when Clinton was actually running for president. But Paul has made voting rights restoration a theme of his campaign, and as a Republican, he's more able to portray it as something that's right for America even if it looks bad for his party.

"I've been a louder voice for criminal justice than any Democrat has been out there so far, and I'll continue that," Paul told reporters Monday at a news conference in Philadelphia. "I think the Democrats have taken the African-American vote for granted. Every time I go into our big cities and talk to black leaders, I hear them say, haven't talked to my congressman in years, because they think my vote is automatic. I'm going to be a Republican who says no one vote anywhere in America is automatic for either party."

On Trade Deal, Hillary Sits on the Fence // US News // David Catanese - May 19, 2015

Hillary Clinton is still not taking a position on the Trans-Pacific Partnership currently being pushed by President Barack Obama and Republicans in Congress.

When asked about the trade proposal during a small business round-table in Cedar Falls, Iowa, on Tuesday morning, Clinton said she had been "very clear" on the issue, before dodging it again.

"There are questions being raised by the current agreement. I don't know what the final provisions are yet," she said. "I want to judge the final agreement. I have been for trade agreements, I have been against trade agreements."

Clinton has only outlined broad provisions that any trade deal should include, citing increased wages and jobs as requirements.

As secretary of state, she touted the TPP as "the gold standard in trade agreements." But her reluctance to wade into the boiling fight between business and labor interests as a presidential candidate pinpoints the political divisiveness around the issue.

"This is obviously a very hot topic right now," Clinton acknowledged.

Prominent Democrats like Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., have led the opposition to the deal, citing the lack of enforcement of labor provisions in past agreements.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And even some Republicans – like former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee – are against it, saying it would allow bad-acting countries to cheat Americans out of jobs.

During the visit, Clinton also said she supported granting convicted felons the right to vote ("You ought to be able to get a second chance") and accused the GOP of using a "Trojan horse idea" of advocating for the rollback of broad financial regulations to help community banks. She said lawmakers could work to ease regulations on the smaller outfits without eliminating the oversight of those banks commonly deemed "too big to fail."

Afterward, Clinton also addressed reporters for the first time in weeks, defending the work of her family's foundation and claiming it's in her interest for her emails as secretary of state to be released sooner rather than later.

"I want them out as soon as they could get out. They're not mine. They belong to the State Department," she replied.

Clinton finds problem s with Obam a T PP trade proposal // CNN // Eric Bradner - May 19, 2015

Washington (CNN)Hillary Clinton took aim Tuesday at two core components of a massive free trade pact that President Barack Obama is negotiating — signaling some agreement with the deal's liberal critics.

The Democratic front-runner in the 2016 presidential race said she wants to see rules included in the Trans-Pacific Partnership that would penalize countries for driving down the value of their currencies in order to give their exports a price advantage in the U.S. market.

And she said she's concerned about a provision that would give "corporations more power to overturn health and environmental and labor rules than consumers have."

"I think that is a problem," Clinton said during a roundtable event in Iowa, when one woman participating in the event asked her about the deal.

It's as close to staking out a clear position on the trade deal that Clinton has come — though she left wiggle room Tuesday.

"I want to judge the final agreement. I have been for trade agreements; I have been against trade agreements," she said.

Her comments come as the Senate prepares to vote on trade promotion authority, a measure that would allow Obama to finalize the Pacific Rim deal and submit it to Congress for a vote with limited debate and no amendments. That authority, negotiators say, is crucial to getting other countries to sign off on a final deal.

Those two items are central to the critique that trade unions, environmental and public health groups have made against the 12-country Pacific Rim pact, which would link 40% of the world's economy, including Japan, Australia, Canada and Mexico.

Currency manipulation is not part of the talks. U.S. trade negotiators have instead said currency issues are best left to the Treasury Department, and that including them in the trade talks could be a deal-breaker for other countries.

Democrats are pushing to amend the trade promotion authority bill to force Obama to address currency in the trade deal.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The amendments being pushed, Clinton said, have "some merit."

What is part of the negotiations, though, is a wonky item known as an "investor-state dispute settlement" mechanism.

It would give corporations the right to challenge, to an independent, international arbiter, whether countries' rules and regulations meet their free trade obligations.

Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts has raised that issue as the key reason she wants to see the Trans-Pacific Partnership rejected.

Clinton, White House spar over trade as fast-track vote looms // Reuters // Amanda Becker - May 19, 2015

Democratic U.S. presidential contender Hillary Clinton set up a potential clash over sensitive trade legislation with the White House on Tuesday, urging steps to prevent currency manipulation and lawsuits by foreign companies against governments.

The White House also ratcheted up pressure on lawmakers, threatening to veto legislation that could help seal a Pacific trade pact if Congress forced sanctions against trading partners who artificially weaken their currencies.

The Trans Pacific Partnership (TPP) has pitted Obama against some fellow Democrats, including leading liberal, Massachusetts Senator Elizabeth Warren.

Clinton, the leading Democratic presidential contender, made her first substantial statement on the issue on Tuesday. Her intervention could strengthen Democratic opposition to the deal, which is part of Obama's diplomatic pivot to Asia and a centerpiece of his second-term legislative agenda.

"It needs to try to address directly or indirectly the manipulation of currency by countries that would be trade partners," Clinton said at a roundtable during a campaign stop in Iowa.

"That's been a big source of us not being as competitive as we want to be."

Clinton also said rules allowing companies to sue foreign governments over health, environmental and other policies, which would be part of the TPP, were "a problem," echoing concerns raised by Warren.

Obama is trying to build support in Congress for the TPP and Treasury Secretary Jack Lew said in a letter to senators that U.S. officials are reaching out to TPP partners to establish "new approaches to addressing unfair currency practices."

The Senate is to vote this week on the measure to streamline trade talks that will move Obama closer to enacting the TPP, which would cover 40 percent of the global economy that is seen as a counterbalance to China's rising economic and diplomatic clout.

If fast-track authority is granted to the White House, then Congress must vote yes or no on any trade deal that is negotiated, without the chance to make any amendments.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Supporters of sanctions against currency cheating say many trading partners in Asia such as Japan, Singapore, Malaysia and Vietnam run substantial trade surpluses with the U.S. that may be a result of undervalued currencies.

The administration argues that approach would lay the United States open to charges that Federal Reserve policies were aimed at reducing the value of the dollar.

"An enforceable currency provision in our trade agreements could give our trading partners the power to challenge legitimate U.S. monetary policies," Lew said in the letter. Lew and a White House spokesman warned that Obama might veto a bill that included enforceable currency provisions.

Clinton, under pressure from the party's left wing to take a definitive stand on the TPP, said she wanted to see what amendments to trade legislation were adopted in the Senate before deciding whether to throw her support behind the Asia Pacific deal.

"I want to judge the final agreement," Clinton said. "I have been for trade agreements, I have been against trade agreements. I try to make the evaluation on what I thought they would produce."

Clinton made the comments during her second visit to Iowa, the state that kicks off the presidential nominating battle in early 2016.

Hillary Clinton Is Pitching Herself To Millennials // Huffington Post // Howard Fineman - May 19, 2015

WASHINGTON -- Is Hillary Clinton actually moving left, and if so, why?

The answer is yes, though not on every topic. And the reason is to push young voters' turnout and grassroots organizing enthusiasm as close as possible to the levels that President Barack Obama enjoyed in 2008.

“After two terms of President Obama, it won’t be easy, but our challenge is to again excite the passion of the youngest voters,” Clinton campaign chairman John Podesta told fellow Georgetown Law Center alums at a luncheon last week.

The campaign aims to fire up millennials with both a tailored approach to the issues and innovative use of technology. For the latter, the team recently brought aboard a former high-ranking Google manager to push new initiatives in social media and big data-guided outreach.

As for issues, Clinton advisers and Democrats close the candidate say she will focus on matters of particular appeal to those voters ages 18 to 33. The idea is that she will go strongly to the left on social issues, move somewhat less left on economic issues, and remain a centrist on foreign policy, military affairs and terrorism.

The target areas include climate change and other global environmental concerns, and social issues broadly defined -- including support for same-sex marriage; a path to citizenship for most undocumented immigrants; and criminal justice reforms such as changing harsh sentencing rules, reducing the current reliance on incarceration and opposing "militarization" of local police forces.

Clinton also plans to take a measured, big-picture approach to dealing with the overbearing influence of corporate wealth and the resulting public cynicism. She will advocate a higher minimum wage and support a constitutional amendment to overturn the Citizens United decision. But she's not about to become an all-out, rail-against-the-banks populist in the manner of Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.). And as she did this week, Clinton will talk up the role of small business and innovation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Especially on climate and social issues, the calculation is that the entire electorate has rapidly moved left, led by the youngest voters, whose views on the full range of these topics is starkly more liberal than those of the oldest voters. It's become almost too easy to ridicule Republicans speaking to young audiences as "out of the mainstream."

"On climate change, some of the Republicans remind me of Alfred E. Neuman," said Podesta last week. "What, me worry?"

Economics are a closer question among millennials. Their distrust of big-government solutions is robust; their doubts about the efficacy of programs such as Social Security is deep. They believe in entrepreneurship, if for no other reason than that the old pyramid of lifetime hiring is gone.

So far, Hillary Clinton has avoided taking firm stands on the Keystone XL pipeline or the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade pact. If and when she is forced to do so, she'll flat-out reject the former, one adviser predicts, and look for less-than-sweepingly ideological reasons to temporarily oppose the latter.

If the goal is to instill passion in millennials, however, there is little reason to dwell on foreign policy, or so it seems. A recent poll shows that the current crop of youngest voters is noticeably less worried about terrorism than the previous cohort.

The overwhelming American consensus is that the Iraq War was a mistake and that the bomb-and-drone approach to ending terrorism and making the U.S. safer hasn't worked. But that doesn't necessarily mean voters want the U.S. to withdraw from the world. It's more likely to mean that voters, especially millennials, don't see the "Global War on Terror" as central to the 2016 contest. So even though Clinton's tenure as secretary of state is her top official on-the-job experience, she isn't going to make it the centerpiece of her campaign.

Republicans will still dwell on what she did and didn't do at the State Department. But it's doubtful young voters will care.

Hillary Clinton's top campaign aides in Nevada // Ralston Reports // Jon Ralston - May 19, 2015

Hillary Clinton's top campaign aides, including her campaign manager, are in Nevada this week to meet with supporters, community leaders and reporters, yet another sign that the Silver State is critical to the presumptive Democratic nominee's strategy.

Robby Mook, who ran Clinton's 2008 effort in Nevada, is here along with Marlon Marshall, who is overseeing all of her state campaigns. They were in Reno on Monday evening meeting with Obama and Clinton backers from '08. They plan to be in Carson City today and will also travel to Las Vegas.

Their visit comes after the candidate made national news this month and laid down a marker for her White House race on immigration in a Las Vegas stop during which she indicated she would go further than the president on immigration reform.

Mook's return coincides with the assembling of a team that helped Clinton win Nevada by 5 points over Obama in the 2008 caucus (he eventually won the delegate fight, 13-12), including new state director Emmy Ruiz, who worked for the president here in 2012.

Hillary Clinton to hit fundraising trail in Greenwich // CT News // Neil Vigdor - May 19, 2015

Hillary Clinton is harvesting campaign cash in her backyard — Bush family roots be damned.

The prohibitive favorite for the Democratic presidential nomination will hit the fundraising trail June 5 in Greenwich, huddling with deep-pocketed contributors at a $29.7 million Roman villa in the hometown of Bush family patriarch Prescott Bush Sr., Hearst Connecticut Media has learned.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bush was the grandfather of prospective Clinton 2016 rival Jeb Bush, who in January embarked on his own White House exploration at Greenwich fundraiser where he poo-pooed the Clinton mystique and told fellow Republicans that running a campaign based on “90s nostalgia” would fail.

Now, Clinton is trying to one-up Bush just a stone’s throw from where the former Florida governor gave Clinton bulletin board material.

The former secretary of state, U.S. senator and first lady will greet contributors at the Indian Harbor compound of retired financial trader and philanthropist Malcolm Wiener and his wife, Carolyn Wiener, according to an invitation obtained by Hearst.

The couple’s seven bedroom, and 11.5-bathroom mansion is steeped in history. Built in 1889 on a property developed by Boss Tweed for his Americus Club shoreline retreat, the home was once owned by Commodore Elias C. Benedict. The couple’s annual real estate taxes are about $227,000. There is a even a private island named after Tweed just off the promontory.

The ask for an audience with Clinton is $2,700 per person and $5,400 per couple. To be a co-host of the event and snag an invite to a VIP reception with Clinton and membership in her Hillstarters Program, individual supporters must raise $27,000. Hosts are being asked to raise $50,000, which would qualify them for Clinton’s Hillraisers Program.

The Hillstarters and Hillraisers bundlers programs are Clinton’s answer to former President George W. Bush’s Pioneers and Rangers designations.

Democrats relished the spotlight of Clinton’s upcoming visit to the state where Hillary and Bill Clinton met as Yale Law students.

“I am optimistic that Hillary Clinton will be back in the state again and not just for money,” said Nancy DiNardo, a former state Democratic chairwoman. “I think in Greenwich you seeing more Democrats coming in having fundraisers because they can be just as successful as Republicans there.”

Republicans renewed questions about Clinton’s transparency as secretary of state and her fundraising activity for her family’s foundation.

“Instead of answering serious questions about shady foreign donations and her secret email server, Hillary Clinton continues to opt for closed-door fundraisers and staged campaign events,” said Jerry Labriola Jr., chairman of the state GOP. “With new concerns raised each day, it is clear why Connecticut voters can’t trust her.”

Labriola’s criticism of Clinton came on the same day that the state’s top Republican endorsed Marco Rubio for president, becoming the first state GOP chairman to endorse the Florida senator. Rubio, who is scheduled to give the keynote at a Connecticut GOP fundraiser on the eve of Clinton’s visit, thanked Labriola on Twitter. Democrats panned the endorsement.

“By being the first state party to line up behind Rubio, the Connecticut GOP is sending a clear message that they agree with Marco Rubio that immigration reform isn’t a priority, that the country was better off with George W. Bush’s Iraq war, and that it’s okay to discriminate against the LGBTQ community,” said Leigh Appleby, a state Democratic Party spokesman.

Like George W. Bush, brother Jeb Bush has kept somewhat of an arm’s length from Greenwich, identifying more with Florida than Connecticut. Greenwich is just 13 miles from the Clintons’ adopted home of Chappaqua, N.Y., and is a requisite fundraising destination for both Republicans and Democrats.

The GOP registration advantage has eroded over the last decade, with Barack Obama in 2008 becoming the first Democratic presidential candidate to win Greenwich since Lyndon Johnson in 1964. The town went for Mitt Romney in 2012.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Drew Marzullo, the town's top Democratic office holder and a selectman, said he is hoping Clinton can replicate Obama's success in Greenwich.

"I hope to get the chance to meet her on June 5 and say to her, President Obama won Greenwich in 2008 and I have no doubt she can too," Marzullo said.

Nurtured by Clinton Network, O'Malley Now Becomes 2016 Rival // ABC News // Lisa Lerer and Ken Thomas, Associated Press - May 19, 2015

More than a decade ago, Bill Clinton spotted a political star in the making, someone he predicted would go from a big-city mayor to a national leader — maybe even to the White House. "I won't be surprised if you go all the way," Clinton wrote in a 2002 letter to Baltimore's mayor, Martin O'Malley.

In the years that followed, Bill and Hillary Rodham Clinton showed up time and again as their young ally gained stature as governor of Maryland, hosting fundraisers, headlining rallies and connecting him to their sprawling network of political donors.

Now, O'Malley is just days away from walking down the path Clinton laid out for him more than a decade ago, as he prepares to announce his presidential campaign in Baltimore on May 30. And that means transforming himself from one of Hillary Clinton's most loyal supporters into her chief adversary for the Democratic nomination.

"It's certainly been a long and friendly relationship," said Steve Kearney, a former O'Malley aide. "Times change. He clearly thought she was the best candidate in 2008. We'll find out whether that remains true today."

O'Malley quickly endorsed Clinton in her nomination contest with Barack Obama, raised at least $500,000 for her from Maryland donors when he was governor, defended her on cable news and traveled to New Hampshire to campaign for her.

"If I can, I will help her, wherever I can, whenever I can," O'Malley said then.

Today, O'Malley says that while he maintains "tremendous respect" for the Clintons, Democratic voters deserve more than a coronation. "What would be more awkward is if no one were willing to compete for the Democratic party's nomination for president," he told NPR last month. "That would be an extreme poverty indeed."

Hillary Clinton, who last spoke to O'Malley in October at a Maryland campaign rally, and her advisers remain reluctant to comment on O'Malley's candidacy. But some longtime supporters see his bid as an opportunistic maneuver to remain relevant, after his hand-picked Democratic successor lost the governor's race last year in heavily Democratic Maryland.

"Martin O'Malley is certainly not the first person who has turned against her and who she helped enormously," said Stella O'Leary, a Democratic activist whose relationship to O'Malley dates back to the early 1990s when she hired the young man — who fronts a Celtic folk band — to perform at a birthday party for former Minnesota Sen. Eugene McCarthy. "I don't know how she doesn't lash out and start screaming."

Some who question his motives also think the challenge could benefit Clinton by giving her a debate sparring partner — as long as O'Malley avoids tough hits on her finances, family foundation and character.

In the waning days of the Clinton administration, O'Malley was starting his first term as mayor. During one of their earliest meetings, at the 2000 NAACP Convention in Baltimore, the Irish-American mayor asked to be included in a White House delegation going to Northern Ireland later that year. He scored a last-minute invite, joining many of Clinton's top political aides and fundraisers on the trip.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Others in that delegation remember O'Malley for his musical talents. At one stop, as they waited in a pub for the notoriously late president, O'Malley and New York Rep. Joe Crowley pulled out their guitars and entertained the group with renditions of traditional Irish songs.

"Next thing I know we almost forgot all about the president," said Brian O'Dwyer, a New York lawyer and Clinton friend who's active in Irish-American issues. "It was a terrifically warm trip."

Years later, O'Malley would tap the connections he made on that trip to aid his political rise. During his first campaign for governor, Elizabeth Frawley Bagley, a top Clinton donor who met O'Malley on the Ireland trip, held a fundraiser for him at her Georgetown home. In Manhattan, lawyers at O'Dwyer's firm started a group called New York Irish for Martin O'Malley. And O'Leary's political action committee, Irish American Democrats, made campaign contributions.

O'Malley's relationship with the Clintons deepened as he became more involved with the Democratic Leadership Council, a centrist group that helped craft much of Bill Clinton's policy agenda. After the 2001 terrorist attacks, he worked with Hillary Clinton, then a New York senator, on homeland security issues.

When O'Malley faced a tough race for governor in 2006, the Clintons held fundraisers and starred at rallies for him. In the final days of that race, Bill Clinton answered pleas from O'Malley aides to appear in a campaign ad — stopping in an airport to tape an endorsement of his "good friend."

While Hillary Clinton served as secretary of state, Bill Clinton returned to Baltimore four years later to help O'Malley win re-election.

O'Malley maintained his ties to Bill Clinton as he prepared for a presidential run. Last year, O'Malley tweeted a photo of himself with the ex-president at a New York book party, and flew to Denver solely to appear with him at the Clinton Global Initiative.

Some friends of all three don't see malice in O'Malley's ambitions, but also don't feel conflicted. "It's not that I love Martin any less but I love Hillary more," said O'Dwyer. "She was a partner in bringing peace to in Ireland. That type of loyalty is hard to ignore."

Clinton Super PAC Executive Director Exits Amid Shake-Up // BuzzFeed // Ruby Cramer –May 21, 2015

Buffy Wicks, a leading Democratic operative and former senior aide to Barack Obama, will leave her post as executive director of Priorities USA Action, the super PAC working to raise millions in support of Hillary Clinton's campaign.

Wicks, now in the process of arranging her exit from Priorities, is expected to stay inside the larger Clinton operation, three sources familiar with the move said.

She is in discussion with Clinton aides about a senior role on the "coordinated side" — which could include a position inside the campaign or at the Democratic National Committee, where officials would work closely with Clinton should she become the nominee.

A Clinton aide confirmed the talks on Tuesday evening.

"We are recruiting Buffy for a senior-level role on the coordinated side of the campaign," the Clinton official said.

The departure comes about three weeks after the news that Guy Cecil, the political director on Clinton's last campaign, would join the super PAC in a senior role.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the time, many Democrats viewed the move as a means to minimize another Priorities official, Jim Messina, the former Obama campaign manager. Messina was installed as the super PAC's co-chair, but has never been fully embraced by the longstanding circle of aides and advisers around Clinton.

It was never clear, though, what Cecil's entry would mean for Wicks.

Wicks, a widely respected and well-liked figure in the party, served as the national director of get-out-the-vote efforts on Obama's reelection campaign.

She is close with senior members of the Clinton team, including the campaign manager, Robby Mook. The two met working for Howard Dean in 2004 — an operation that famously trained much of its field staff in organizing techniques from the labor and protest movements of the '60s and '70s. Wicks and Mook both emerged from that race as part of an ascendant new class of field organizers.

Wicks was largely new to fundraising when she joined Priorities last January.

She took the helm along with Messina and his co-chair, former Michigan governor Jennifer Granholm, amid a relaunch by the pro-Obama super PAC into a paid-media effort backing a Clinton bid in 2016. The leadership team was formulated as a meld of the Obama and Clinton worlds ahead of the next election.

Priorities was inactive throughout the 2014 midterms. After the election, the super PAC struggled to solicit pledges and outline a clear fundraising strategy. With the campaign now underway, Priorities has had more success — but the group spent much of early 2015 dealing with negative stories over fundraising and leadership.

Originally, in late 2013, existing Priorities officials hoped that John Podesta, now the Clinton campaign chairman, would join the PAC as a co-chair. But Podesta, who served as a senior official in Bill Clinton's administration, took a job at the White House instead. Cecil, most recently the head of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, comes to the PAC as an ally of Podesta and Bill Clinton. (He was also reportedly considered as a choice for campaign manager.)

Cecil also used to work at Dewey Square Group, the consulting firm whose officials have informally advised the campaign and outside efforts leading up to it.

A Dewey Square founding partner, Charlie Baker, recently joined the Clinton campaign as chief administrative officer. His role, in part, was described by two sources as a liaison of sorts between the campaign and outside officials.

With Wicks's departure, it's likely that Cecil will take the lead role at Priorities — though his position has not been acknowledged or outlined by the PAC. Cecil's move to Priorities was first reported by the Washington Post.

Neither Wicks nor a spokesman for Priorities immediately returned a request for comment.

Iowa Democrats: Flawed Clinton Our Only Hope // Bloomberg // David Knowles – May 20,2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A Bloomberg Politics/Purple Strategies focus group finds Democrats resolved over their presidential frontrunner

Iowa Democrats see Hillary Clinton as a presidential candidate who, despite her flaws, represents what they see as their only chance of keeping control of the White House in 2016.

During a Bloomberg Politics/Purple Strategies focus group conducted Monday in Des Moines, 10 Iowa Democrats were asked what thoughts they had about Clinton as a leader and a person.

"She's a bad mama jama. She's a strong, competent woman," said Kiendra, a 33-year-old librarian. "She knows what she's doing. She's not afraid to step up. She's not afraid to take advice and she's not afraid to say no, I don't want to do it that way. I'm going to do it this way."

A school teacher named Al cited Clinton's political drive as positive.

"A lot of it, in fact, is made that, oh, she's so ambitious," Al said. "Well, you know what? If you're going to be a politician, if you're going to set yourself up to be elected to any office, you have to be ambitious. You have to have one big ego. And if you're going for the higher offices, you've got to have an absolutely ego."

While the consensus among those who participated in the focus group was that Clinton possessed the experience and policy positions required to be elected president, the group was less confident when it came to naming the former secretary of state's actual accomplishments.

"I really can't name anything off the top of my head," said Ryan, a 38-year-old event planner.

Following an awkward silence, a 22-year-old student named Amanda added, "I honestly can't say I followed along everything that was going on."

While some took issue with Clinton's ties to Wall Street, secrecy, and foundation contributions, the group, by and large, seemed resolved that she represented the party's best chance at fending off a Republican challenger.

"She's been at a high level in numerous offices for about 25 years now," Charlie, 24, who works as a graphic designer, said. "I mean it's either going to be that or it's going to be Scott Walker, you know, taking away, destroying America's unions. And there's just, you know, she's not perfect. But she's been in the eye for a long time, in the public's eye, and you're going to have some stuff on her. But she has great policies and she knows how to get stuff done."

Bloomberg Politics, in conjunction with Purple Strategies, conducted two qualitative focus groups in Des Moines, IA, one of Democratic caucus participants and one of Republican caucus participants. Each group consisted of ten participants, both men and women, and from a variety of ages and socio-economic and educational backgrounds. Qualitative research results cannot be statistically analyzed or projected onto the broader population at large. As is customary, respondents were compensated for their participation.

Amid criticism, Clinton sticks to low-key campaign strategy // AP // Julie Pace – May 20, 2015

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa (AP) — During two days of campaigning this week in Iowa, Hillary Rodham Clinton didn't make a formal speech. She answered questions from reporters, but only for five minutes. Pressed by a moderator at her own event to say where she stood on a trade pact that's dividing her party, she steered clear.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It was the kind of trip that infuriates her Republican critics, yet gives them fodder to keep up their argument she's a candidate dodging tough issues and avoiding taking positions that could haunt her politically. That's started to worry some Democrats, who are publicly prodding Clinton to wade deeper into the political fray and pick a side on the Trans-Pacific Partnership free trade deal.

Clinton and her team are unmoved. They're sticking to their plans for a low-key start to her second presidential campaign, displaying an early level of discipline that was lacking when Clinton sought the White House in 2008 and struggled with campaign infighting over strategy.

It's an approach they've crafted to show voters Clinton isn't taking the Democratic nomination for granted. Yet by not taking a stand on issues of the day and dismissing some of the traditional trappings of presidential campaigns, some political operatives say Clinton risks appearing as if she's doing just that.

"There is a demand if you are a candidate to signify a lack of entitlement by submitting yourself to questions from the news media on a regular basis," said David Axelrod, a longtime adviser to President Barack Obama. "There is risk to that, but it is a risk that comes along with the task of running for president."

Before a brief exchange with reporters Tuesday, Clinton hadn't taken questions from the press in nearly a month. Republican presidential hopefuls seized on her reluctance to engage with reporters and repeatedly mocked her for ducking questions.

"You can't script your way to the presidency," said Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor.

So far, Clinton's campaign does have the appearance of a carefully choreographed operation. Each of her stops in the early-voting states has looked similar to her two-day swing through Iowa this week, where she attended a meet-and-greet with local officials and campaign volunteers at a home in Mason City, discussed economic policy with small business owners at a bicycle shop in Cedar Falls, and dropped by a coffee shop in Independence for an espresso and sandwich.

The house party she attended in Mason City was invitation-only and, as with her past policy roundtables, participants at the small business event were selected by the campaign.

Even when unexpected moments arise, Clinton sticks to her script. When a small business owner asked her Tuesday to state her position on the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade pact, Clinton politely refused.

"I want to judge the final agreement," she said.

Clinton's advisers intended her campaign to start slowly. She will hold a more formal campaign kick-off next month, likely with a major speech and a series of one-on-one interviews. But even as the campaign enters that phase, aides say Clinton will still do the smaller events like those she's held so far.

Though she never mentioned her critics directly, Clinton pushed back this week at those who say she should be taking a different approach.

"Somebody asked me the other day, 'Well, you're going to these events where you're taking time to actually talk and listen to people, is that really what you're going to do?'" she said Monday. "And I said, 'Well, yes it is.'"

Clinton's advisers also dispute the notion she is avoiding taking positions on policy, pointing to her backing of Obama's executive actions on immigration and her call to outfit police departments with body cameras. On Tuesday, she voiced her opposition to Republican-backed legislation that would revamp the 2010 Dodd-Frank financial regulation law.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But each was unveiled as part of a careful rollout by Clinton's campaign. She's been far less willing to weigh in on issues that don't fit with her campaign schedule, including the fall of Ramadi to Islamic State militants in Iraq over the weekend.

Clinton's sidestepping on the Asia-Pacific trade pact has been most notable, given that Congress is currently debating whether to give Obama the ability to seek faster ratification of a final deal.

While Clinton called the pact the "gold standard" of trade agreements while serving as secretary of state, she has refused to take a position on the deal since announcing her candidacy.

As Clinton spoke to small business owners in Cedar Falls on Tuesday, a small group of protesters stood outside demanding she clarify her stance on the trade pact. Chris Schwartz, an Iowa organizer with the liberal group Americans for Democratic Action, said Clinton's silence was "troubling."

"People in Iowa and people across the country want to know the specifics on all of these issues, including TPP," Schwartz said, referring to the Trans-Pacific Partnership. "We have a right to have our questions answered."

Fundraiser puts spotlight on Clinton Foundation finances // Politico // Gabriel Debenedetti

CEDAR FALLS, Iowa — The Chicago media executive hosting Hillary Clinton at his home for an afternoon fundraiser Wednesday ranks in the elite category of those who have given at least $25 million to the Clinton Foundation.

But the Clinton Foundation's own public records on Fred Eychaner's contributions illustrate the problems the organization has had with disclosing its donations, bringing it under harsh scrutiny and causing Clinton political trouble as she ramps up her presidential campaign.

Story Continued Below

The foundation's website lists Eychaner's Alphawood Foundation as a donor of somewhere between $10,001 and $25,001, but an examination of the Alphawood Foundation's Form 990 tax documents reveals that it in fact contributed $7.25 million between 2003 and 2007. That's not the only point of confusion: the low-profile Eychaner, a major Democratic fundraiser who started Alphawood, is listed by the Clinton Foundation as one of only seven donors of over $25 million.

But it's not certain that Eychaner personally gave more than $25 million. The Clinton Foundation confirmed that the Alphawood Foundation's $7.25 million is included in Eychaner's total, and Alphawood executive director James McDonough told POLITICO that his "understanding is that they've lumped all our donations under Fred Eychaner's name." It remains unclear if Eychaner would still be above the $25 million threshold if the Alphawood donations were not included in his donation total.

While the Clinton Foundation discloses its donors voluntarily and faces no legal consequences for unclear listings like this one, the organization's finances have has become a political flash point for Clinton in the early days of her campaign for the White House — and the lack of clarity in Eychaner's gifts could raise further questions about the Clinton Foundation's transparency.

The foundation told Reuters in April that it would refile five of its own tax reports after the discovery of errors in its reporting of donations from foreign governments — though the foundation did not say on Tuesday whether it would update its site to reflect that some of the money attributed to Eychaner actually came through his foundation.

Clinton and her family have repeatedly defended the philanthropic work of the Clinton Foundation, but it has faced tough scrutiny as she has kickstarted her political operation in the last two months. Clinton insisted she was “proud” of the group on Tuesday, saying its wide range of donors is a testament to its work. But the foundation has been criticized for accepting money from foreign governments and for not properly disclosing some of its contributions. Critics have said the group has been a vehicle for foreign interests to influence Bill and Hillary Clinton, allegations the foundation and campaign have swiftly and forcefully rebutted.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Nonetheless, Eychaner’s filing status on the website is unusual. Some foundation backers whose names are disclosed on the site are explicitly listed alongside their foundations, such as “Cheryl and Haim Saban & The Saban Family Foundation,” who have together given the Clinton Foundation between $10 million and $25 million. Like Eychaner, the billionaire Haim Saban hosted Clinton for a campaign fundraiser at his home in Los Angeles earlier this month.

But in Eychaner’s case his connection to the Alphawood Foundation — which says it works with organizations that focus on “architecture and preservation, the arts and arts education, promotion and protection of the rights of LGBT citizens and people living with HIV/AIDS, and other human and civil rights” — is not noted on the Clinton Foundation site, and the group’s listed donation total is far lower than what is accurate.

The only other individual reported as having given over $25 million to the Clinton Foundation — Frank Giustra, who has himself been the subject of intense scrutiny in news reports and a new book because of his own relationship with the foundation — is listed alongside his Radcliffe Foundation, making Eychaner the only individual listed at that high level without a disclosed institutional tie.

Eychaner is a longtime Democratic donor who supported Clinton in 2008 before becoming a prominent backer of President Barack Obama — he gave Obama’s foundation $1 million in its first year of operation, tax forms revealed on Monday, and a December POLITICO analysis showed he was the country’s fifth-biggest donor in the 2014 election cycle.

His political representative did not respond to a request for comment.

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE

O'Malley announces 2016 launch details // Politico // Jonathan Topaz - May 19, 2015

Martin O’Malley’s likely presidential launch will occur on the morning of May 30 in Baltimore’s Federal Hill Park, the Democrat said Tuesday.

The former Maryland governor and Baltimore mayor, who is all but assured to announce a bid at the event beginning at 10 a.m., revealed his plans on Twitter and in a Snapchat video released at noon. The park, near the city’s Inner Harbor, overlooks downtown Baltimore. The short video, which didn’t have any audio, showed various scenes of downtown Baltimore, ending with a sign at Federal Hill Park.

The likely presidential hopeful also linked to a website advertising a “special announcement.” If he enters the race, O’Malley will become the third declared Democratic candidate in a field that includes Hillary Clinton and Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

O’Malley supporters view the two-term governor as the most electable liberal alternative to Clinton, the establishment front-runner. The potential candidate held an off-the-record meeting in New York City last week with about 30 progressives, telling the group that he’s the most viable option for progressives who support liberal icon Elizabeth Warren, the Massachusetts senator who has said repeatedly that she won’t run in 2016.

Last Thursday, O’Malley held a 13-minute call with donors, supporters and activists from the first three presidential nominating states, pointing to a May 30 announcement in Baltimore and telling them “he is inclined to run for president.” On the call were O’Malley’s political director Karine Jean-Pierre, an alum of Barack Obama’s 2012 reelection campaign, and senior advisor Bill Hyers, who was New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio’s 2013 campaign manager. O’Malley didn’t mention Clinton by name, only saying, as he has in the past, that “history is full of times where the inevitable front-runner is inevitable until they’re no longer inevitable.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

His campaign headquarters will be located near Baltimore's Penn Station.

O'Malley, 52, has been the most active Democratic hopeful in the early nominating states, spending a significant amount of time in Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina since the 2014 election cycle. Still, he has yet to show much traction in the polls — recent national and Iowa and New Hampshire polls show O'Malley in the low single digits, behind Sanders, who announced last month, and far behind Clinton.

O'Malley's team views him as a liberal insurgent in the mold of Gary Hart, who rose from the bottom of the polls and nearly defeated establishment front-runner and then-Vice President Walter Mondale in 1984. (O'Malley worked on that campaign as a 20-year-old staffer, and Hart has said that he bought O'Malley his first legal beer when he turned 21.)

O'Malley, though, has faced challenges to his record in recent months. In perhaps the most stunning upset in the 2014 election cycle, his lieutenant governor, Anthony Brown, lost in his gubernatorial race against Republican Larry Hogan, which many took as a repudiation of O'Malley's record in solidly Democratic Maryland. In light of the recent civil unrest in Baltimore, his team has intensely defended his data-driven, tough-on-crime record as mayor — which critics say contributed to the incarceration of a large number of young, black men and hindered economic opportunity in the city.

The former mayor has recently gone on offense on the issue, criticizing Democrats for failing to invest in American cities over the past several years and calling for a more robust plan to deal with income inequality and urban poverty.

Though he has largely refrained from attacking Clinton, O'Malley has taken several implicit jabs at the former secretary of state on several issues, including her ties to Wall Street. Recently, he has written op-eds, posted online videos and stayed active on Twitter to push progressive issues, including his opposition to the Trans-Pacific Partnership and fast-track trade authority, which Clinton has yet to weigh in on.

O'Malley picks Federal Hill to announce next move // Baltimore Sun // John Fritze - May 19, 2015

Martin O'Malley is expected to announce his presidential campaign in Federal Hill Park -- using the city where he got his start in politics as his backdrop, his campaign said Tuesday.

The former two-term governor and mayor of Baltimore provided new details about his announcement on Twitter and Snapchat. The event, in which O'Malley is widely expected to announce he will seek the Democratic nomination for president, is scheduled for 10 a.m. on May 30.

O'Malley, 52, would become the third Democrat to enter the contest, behind former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders. O'Malley has been aggressively traveling in early primary states since his second term ended in January, but he has not made significant headway in early polling.

O'Malley has used the park for political events before, including a rally the night before his 2006 gubernatorial election.

Elizabeth Warren Wants Hillary Clinton To 'Weigh In On Trade' // Huffington Post // Dana Liebelson - May 19, 2015

WASHINGTON -- As the fight over a massive international trade agreement heats up on Capitol Hill, Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) said on Tuesday that she wants to see Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton "weigh in on trade."

In an interview with The Huffington Post, Warren declined to say whether she would endorse Clinton. "Right now I think it's important for her to have a chance to lay out her views on a whole host of issues, including trade," she said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Warren has emerged as a champion for Americans who oppose the Trans-Pacific Partnership, a trade deal that the Obama administration is seeking to negotiate with 11 other nations. The Senate is preparing to vote on legislation that would grant President Barack Obama the authority to "fast-track" TPP and other trade deals with no amendments and limited debate.

When asked who she thought was the best 2016 presidential contender on the issue, Warren said that "we need to hear from all of our presidential contenders about trade."

She added, "I will say that Hillary Clinton said in her book that she was opposed to these arbitration panels that could override domestic regulations," referring to a controversial TPP provision that would allow corporations to sue governments over regulations that inhibit their investment profits.

In her book Hard Choices, Clinton discussed the panels, writing that in trade agreements, "we should avoid some of the provisions sought by business interests, including our own, like giving them or their investors the power to sue foreign governments to weaken their environmental and public health rules."

Earlier on Tuesday, Warren spoke with Bloomberg about Clinton's opposition to the panels, adding, "I'd like to see her be clearer on that." When asked by HuffPost to elaborate, Warren said, "Look, she's already said what she said in her book about the arbitration panels and I'd like her to weigh in on trade, I think it's important."

According to CNN, Clinton came closer to taking a position on trade at a round-table event in Iowa on Tuesday, noting some concerns about the deal but ultimately hedging once again. "I want to judge the final agreement. I have been for trade agreements; I have been against trade agreements," she said.

Michael McAuliff contributed reporting.

GOP

Marc Lasry Says Jeb Bush Would Be 'Reasonable' President // Bloomberg // Saijel Kishan - May 19, 2015

Marc Lasry, the investor who's raising money for Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign, said potential Republican candidate Jeb Bush would be a "reasonable" president.

"He would be reasonable, he'd be a good president," Lasry said in an interview Tuesday with Mark Halperin and John Heilemann on Bloomberg Television's "With All Due Respect." "I think I would look at it very differently with some of the other candidates."

Lasry, the billionaire co-founder of Avenue Capital Group, is close to Clinton, the former U.S. secretary of state who's seeking the Democratic nomination. He also backed ex-President Bill Clinton, and once employed their daughter, Chelsea, as an analyst at his New York-based firm.

Lasry, who told Bloomberg in April that he sought to raise $270,000 during the first week of Clinton's campaign, said Tuesday that a fundraiser at his Manhattan townhouse was oversold. He said Clinton's politics have moved to the left and that the vast majority of donors "won't have an issue with that."

The Democrats will probably raise just more than $1 billion, with the party's super-Pac's gathering less than those supporting Republicans, Lasry said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He said that along with Bush, Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker and Florida Senator Marco Rubio are the strongest contenders for the Republican nomination.

Avenue manages $13.3 billion, according to its website. Lasry is also co-owner of the National Basketball Association's Milwaukee Bucks.

Marco Rubio Coming To Nevada Later This Month // CBS Local // May 19, 2015

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Republican presidential candidate Marco Rubio is planning to visit Nevada at the end of the month to celebrate his birthday with the star of the TV show "Pawn Stars."

A fundraising reception for the Florida senator is scheduled for May 28 at the Las Vegas home of Rick Harrison, who co-owns the famous Gold and Silver Pawn Shop.

The event is co-hosted by Nevada Lt. Gov. Mark Hutchison, who is chairing Rubio's campaign operations in Nevada.

Rubio has roots in Nevada after spending some of his childhood in Las Vegas. He is also the cousin of Democratic Nevada state Sen. Mo Denis.

He's the latest presidential candidate or potential candidate to visit Nevada this month. Democrat Hillary Clinton and Republicans Jeb Bush, Rick Santorum and Ben Carson visited in May.

Seth Meyers Mocks Marco Rubio's 'Bumpy Sunday' on Iraq // Mediaite // Matt Wilstein - May 19, 2015

After breaking down Jeb Bush's problematic handling of questions about the Iraq War last week, Seth Meyers turned his attention Monday night to Marco Rubio, who had some struggles of his own during an interview with Chris Wallace on Fox News Sunday.

"Conventional wisdom was, Marco Rubio was the candidate who benefitted the most from Bush's stumbles," Meyers said. "And after seeing Bush's clumsy handling, there was no way Rubio was going to make the same mistake."

Of course, what followed was a back and forth between Wallace and Rubio full of circular logic and short of concrete answers to rather direct questions. "Were Wallace and Rubio even in the same room?" Meyers asked. "Because it seemed like one of them was on a five-second delay. There's less over-talking when my grandpa orders at the McDonald's drive-thru."

"How low is the question bar right now?" the host continued. "'Knowing what we know now' is the easy Iraq question, no one should be getting that wrong. The better question is 'knowing what we knew then, would you have invaded Iraq?'"

While Jeb Bush, Marco Rubio and even Hillary Clinton all can agree that based on the intelligence presented at the time, they would (or did) authorize the invasion. But, as Meyers made clear, there were a few people who felt differently.

CNN Asks Rand Paul What He Would Do If ISIS Entered Baghdad // Real Clear Politics // Tim Hains - May 19, 2015

CNN QUESTION: What about Baghdad? What would you do if Baghdad were in danger of falling?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SEN. RAND PAUL: Yeah. I'm all for the U.S. helping and supporting the Iraqis, and we have been. And I'm all for the air power and continuing to help the Iraqis and the Kurds with arms and with air support.

Ramadi is different, it is not a Kurdish region, you are now talking about a Sunni region. This is ultimately why Iraq has devolved into a failed state. What we got is a government that is almost entirely Shi'ite, aligned with Iran, and the Sunnis feel left out. It is also why Americans or Shi'ites can retake the cities, but we can't ultimately have a lasting peace unless the Sunnis are involved.

It is a very complicated situation with many different players. But if the Sunnis are not involved there will not be a lasting peace.

CNN QUESTION: But if you were president, and you saw ISIS encroaching on Baghdad, what would the U.S. role be?

SEN. RAND PAUL: Right now, air support, but the one thing I would be doing in addition to that would be arming the Kurds. To a much greater extent then we have been. And to recognize the Kurds as a nation.

The other thing I would do, is one of the things we did during the surge. People talk about American troops during the surge, one of the other things we did was put a lot of money into assistance to the Sunni chieftains to encourage their support. If you weigh that amount of money worth what we're spending on other things, I think it would be money well spent to try to encourage the alliegence of the Sunni chieftains again.

Carly Fiorina coming to Palm Beach County; Rand Paul cancels to fight Patriot Act // Palm Beach Post // George Bennett - May 19, 2015

Republican presidential hopeful Carly Fiorina will appear at the Palm Beach County Convention Center in West Palm Beach on Wednesday, then attend a ribbon-cutting at the Place of Hope foster care agency in Boca Raton.

Another GOP White House aspirant, Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul, has cancelled plans to appear at a Palm Beach County Tea Party rally in Jupiter on Thursday because he'll be in Washington fighting against reauthorization of the Patriot Act.

Fiorina, the former CEO of Hewlett-Packard who announced she's running for president this month, will appear at a public rally at the convention center at 5:15 p.m. on Wednesday. Doors open at 4:30 p.m.

Before the public event, Fiorina will meet with about three dozen donors who have given at least $1,000 to the county GOP.

After the West Palm Beach event, Fiorina is scheduled to appear at a ribbon cutting for new facilities at Place of Hope's Boca Raton campus at 21441 Boca Rio Road. That event begins at 6:30 p.m.

Also expected at the Place of Hope: State Attorney Dave Aronberg; Palm Beach County Commissioner Steven Abrams; state Sen. Joseph Abruzzo, D-Boynton Beach; state Rep. Gayle Harrell, R-Stuart; Boca Raton Mayor Susan Haynie and City Commissioner Robert Weinroth.

TOP NEWS

DOMESTIC

White House Says Would Veto Trade Bill If Currency Amendment is Added // TIME // Maya Rhodan - May 19, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

White House Press Secretary Josh Earnest said Tuesday the President would consider vetoing the entire trade authority bill if an amendment co-sponsored by Sens. Rob Portman and Debbie Stabenow were to pass.

A vote an amendment that would target countries that manipulate the value of their currency to improve the prices of their exports could come as soon as this week in the Senate, Politico reports. Under Portman's amendment, countries would be held to standards set by the International Monetary Fund.

The amendment, Earnest said during Tuesday's briefing, would "undermine the ability of the Federal Reserve" and if it were to come across the president's desk he would "even take the extraordinary step of vetoing the TPA bill."

"The president would certainly not support that kind of provision," Earnest said Tuesday, though he said there are additional amendments the administration is open to considering.

Lenny Curry defeats incumbent Democratic Mayor Alvin Brown in Jacksonville // Tampa Bay Times // Alex Leary - May 19, 2015

Lenny Curry defeated incumbent Democratic Mayor Alvin Brown of Jacksonville tonight, the latest set back for Democrats in Florida.

"Soak it in with me. Just soak it in," Curry told supporters at top of his victory speech. He pledged to work with Brown on "one Jacksonville."

Curry, the former head of the state GOP, was boosted by a determined Republican effort to recapture the seat, strong fundraising and the help from Jeb Bush, Marco Rubio and other top officials.

He also got the endorsment of the Times-Union, which said Curry has "the financial and management background to lead Jacksonville out of its fiscal morass."

Brown won the seat in May 2011, becoming the first Democrat to hold the position in two decades and the first African-American. Democrats saw the former Bill Clinton aide as future statewide candidate.

"I congratulate my friend Lenny Curry, the new Mayor of Jacksonville," Gov. Rick Scott said in a statement. "I look forward to working with Lenny to continue to grow economic opportunities in one of Florida's greatest cities. I also want to thank outgoing Mayor Alvin Brown for his service to the people of Jacksonville and I wish him well in his next endeavor."

Beau Biden, vice president's son, hospitalized // USA Today // Gregory Korte - May 19, 2015

WASHINGTON — Beau Biden, the son of Vice President Joe Biden and a Democratic candidate for governor of Delaware in 2016, has been hospitalized at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center for an undisclosed illness.

The vice president's office confirmed Tuesday that Beau Biden was undergoing treatment at the Bethesda, Md. military hospital, but did not go into further details.

The 46-year-old former Delaware attorney general has a history of health problems. He suffered what was described as a mild stroke in 2010. And in 2013, he became disoriented while on family vacation and later underwent a procedure to remove a small brain lesion at the University of Texas

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MD Anderson Cancer Center.

Upgrades finalized for Roaring Brook Road rail crossing // Lohud // Hoa Nguyen - May 18, 2015

More than three months after the deadliest train crash in its history, Metro-North is working with other agencies to finalize upgrades to a nearby railroad crossing in New Castle.

Roaring Brook Road is about eight miles from the Commerce Street grade crossing in Valhalla where a commuter train and sport utility vehicle collided Feb. 3, killing the motorist and five passengers.

"There's no question that Valhalla has motivated everyone to look and try to do what we can do immediately," said New Castle supervisor Robert Greenstein, who has been pushing for the upgrades.

Next week, crews are expected to begin the milling and repaving of the road on both sides of the crossing and add new signs and improved pavement markings.

"These are improvements that needed to be done really yesterday," Greenstein said.

But while the Valhalla crash may have expedited these short-term fixes, Greenstein said ideally, officials will eventually approve construction of a new bridge over the railroad tracks that would eliminate the grade crossing and still allow traffic to pass by but he didn't believe the financing of such a bridge project would be feasible anytime soon.

"Let's face it — the bridge is not being built tomorrow," he said.

The crossing has had a history of close calls. Earlier this month, the railroad gate at Roaring Brook Road came down on a school bus, trapping it only seconds before a passenger train passed by. The bus driver, who was charged with stopping in the railroad right of way, a misdemeanor, stopped about 15 feet further than she should have and tried to back up but stopped when the gate caught on some brackets, New Castle police said. No one, including two students on the short-style bus, were injured in the incident.

As part of the planned work, Roaring Brook Road will be closed at the crossing in both directions for three days starting 7 p.m., May 29.

In Mount Pleasant, Supervisor Carl Fulgenzi, who has been petitioning the Department of Transportation to close the Cleveland Street crossing where Federal Railroad Administration records show there have been six accidents, said he is still awaiting a decision from state officials.

Fulgenzi said he has heard the closing of the Commerce Street grade crossing also may be a possibility but state and Metro-North officials have not updated him on their plans if there are any.

"They did admit that they are two crossings they are paying attention to," he said.

A few days ago, Fulgenzi said he was at the crossing with lawyers from the town's insurance carrier and the town police chief inspecting the site when a motorist approached the crossing, drove around the gate and crossed to the other side just as the lights began flashing, signaling the near arrival of a train.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"God forbid there wasn't a train (passing by at the time)," Fulgenzi said.

MTA police chief Michael Coan said during a Monday Metro-North committee meeting that his agency is monitoring grade crossing safety and have issued 97 violations — or about a third of all 293 summons issued through April.

Senate outmaneuvers hard-line abortion foe in passing 20-week ban with exceptions // Post and Courier // Cynthia Roldan - May 19, 2015

COLUMBIA — South Carolina lawmakers voted Tuesday to tighten restrictions on abortions — prohibiting the procedure after 20 weeks of pregnancy — overcoming a leading abortion foe's vow to block exceptions for rape, incest and severe fetal abnormalities.

Sen. Lee Bright, R-Roebuck, had threatened a filibuster to block a vote on the bill, but senators outmaneuvered him by voting, instead, to end debate on the bill. Sen. Larry Grooms, R-Charleston, another abortion foe, said that strategy was adopted after the state's largest anti-abortion advocacy group, South Carolina Citizens for Life, threw its support behind the bill rather than have it defeated because of the dispute over adding exceptions.

The bill passed the Senate 37-7. If approved on a third vote, the ban heads back to the House, which already has passed the bill without the exceptions. The differences would have to be ironed out in a conference committee for the bill to go to Gov. Nikki Haley for her signature.

Bright had earlier held a news conference in the Statehouse at which he was joined by several national activists who, like him, opposed exceptions to restrictions on abortions. Two of the women who backed his objections said they were conceived through rapes, and a third gave birth after she was raped as a young teenager.

The only exception Bright said he was willing to allow was to save the life of the mother.

Afterward, a frustrated Bright chastised his colleagues for spending months on an environmental bill but only hours on the abortion measure.

"We spent probably eight hours on this bill," said Bright. "We spent two months on the Pollution Control Act. It is very rare that a contentious special order bill goes this quickly."

Grooms called the bill a partial victory for abortion foes even with the exceptions.

"Everything about this bill is tough," Grooms said. "Even with the exceptions passed out of (the Senate), a number of lives will be saved."

Abortion-rights supporters planned to try to block the bill if the exceptions hadn't been included. Sen. Brad Hutto, D-Orangeburg, said he'd prepared more than 170 amendments, which would've taken days to get through with less than two weeks remaining in the legislative session this year. Hutto was among the seven senators who voted against the 20-week abortion ban.

South Carolina's American Civil Liberties Union Executive Director Victoria Middleton denounced the Senate's action, issuing a statement saying the second-trimester abortion ban is governmental interference in a private matter.

"Today's debate showed that the goal of some South Carolina politicians is to limit a woman's access to abortion as a legal medical option," Middleton said. "The measure does nothing to improve health outcomes for families and could have a chilling effect on doctors seeking to give their patients the best medical care possible. "

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Before the vote, another opponent, Sen. Marlon Kimpson, D-Columbia, reminded colleagues they are not doctors and they could be infringing on constitutional rights.

“Politics should not drive medical decisions,” Kimpson said. “We are not medical experts. If we pass this bill, I suspect that we will have a legal challenge on our hands.”

Bright’s hard line was supported by national activists Rebecca Kiessling, a 45-year-old Michigan lawyer, and Juda Myers of Texas, who founded Choices For Life, which assists rape victims who want to deliver their babies.

Kiessling, president of Save the 1, an abortion-rights opponent, said her mother twice sought an illegal abortion after being raped and becoming pregnant, but ultimately decided to give birth to her.

“I did not deserve the death penalty for the life of my father,” Kiessling said. “You punish rapists and not babies.”

SC Republican: Abortion Ban Doesn't Keep Rape Victims Pregnant Enough // Jezebel // Anna Merlan - May 19, 2015

A South Carolina State Senator is filibustering a bill that would make abortion illegal for 20 weeks, not because he doesn’t hate abortion—he totally, loudly does—but because the bill makes an exception for victims of rape and incest. Those rape and incest victims had 20 whole weeks, State Senator Lee Bright, says, and now they’re just going to have to give birth.

As The State reports, in a story we saw via the Huffington Post, Bright, who is a Republican, began his filibuster on Thursday, arguing that the ban simply didn’t go far enough. As HuffPo’s Laura Bassett reports, he thought 20 weeks was plenty long enough, and besides, aren’t women just going to lie about getting raped anyway? Don’t they do that?

“We’re not talking about a woman that was assaulted that goes into the emergency room— which, I would argue, that child still has a right,” Bright said. “We’re talking about somebody that had 20 weeks.”

Bright said he worried that women would falsely claim they were raped in order to qualify for the exemption. “After 20 weeks if you wanted to get an abortion you could go and say you were raped and you could have the abortion,” he said. “You wouldn’t be denied. There’s no police report.”

There’s nothing a woman likes better, in a conservative Republican’s imagination, than to sit around, dreaming up ever-more complex ways to get a late-term abortion.

Bright came in for some criticism, even from fellow anti-abortioneers: Holy Gatlin of Citizens for Life told The State, “He does not seem to understand the strategy that will save babies’ lives. We do not agree with these exceptions, but this isn’t the end game. Sometimes, you have to concede a battle to win a war.” In response, Bright shared a press release on Facebook from the South Carolina Pastors Alliance, which called him “a consistent and stalwart advocate for the pre-born,” and added, “this is a prime example of his commitment.” He also called a press conference with women who were conceived from rape and who supported his filibuster.

Despite his best efforts, Bright failed: the bill passed this afternoon, with exceptions for victims of rape and incest and for the loosely defined “fetal abnormality.”

INTERNATIONAL

Iraq’s Sunni Strategy Collapses in Ramadi Rout // NYT // Tim Arango - May 19, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

AMIRIYAT FALLUJA, Iraq — More than a thousand Iraqi Sunni fighters stood at attention, dressed in camouflage but holding no weapons, as the tribal leader began exhorting them to fiercely battle the militants of the Islamic State, taking up rhetoric tinged with Arab notions of vengeance.

“It is now time for revenge for our martyrs,” said the sheikh, Falih al-Essawi, who was dressed in a military uniform. He checked off the destruction wrought in their lands by the Islamic State, or, as he called them, “the rats of ISIS”: 25,000 homes leveled, he said, bridges burned, the economy devastated.

He and other speakers made an explicit plea to the Shiite prime minister in Baghdad, Haider al-Abadi: Arm and support our men, and we will take the fight ourselves to the Islamic State.

That event was 11 days ago at a military base here in Amiriyat Falluja, one of the last cities of Anbar Province in government hands. It was billed as the beginning of a government program to arm and train local Sunni tribesmen to battle the Sunni extremists of the Islamic State — a critical gesture to show that Shiite and Sunni Iraqis could unite in the fight, and to put Sunni residents at ease with defenders from their same communities.

Now, the fall of Anbar’s capital, Ramadi, to the Islamic State has illustrated the failure of that strategy.

The government’s effort to foster Sunni fighters, always a seemingly halfhearted program, now feels almost incidental as thousands of Shiite militiamen are flooding into Anbar to take up the fight against the Islamic State, also known as ISIS or ISIL.

A ceremony for a group of Sunni tribal fighters stationed at a base in Habbaniya, a lakeside town in Anbar, to receive new American-supplied weapons had been scheduled for Monday, but was canceled because of the Ramadi crisis. Instead, nearly 3,000 Shiite militiamen arrived at the outpost.

The collapse of Anbar has also set in sharp relief the continuing tragedy of Iraq’s Sunnis, beginning with the American invasion in 2003, which almost instantly upended the old social order of Sunni prominence. With the majority Shiites thrust into power, the Sunnis were sidelined, many banished from public life for good because of their ties to Saddam Hussein’s Baath Party.

Some of those Sunnis joined the insurgency, and many fight today for the Islamic State. Other Sunnis boycotted elections. A great number even deny the demographic fact that they are a minority in Iraq.

Most, though, wanted to get on with their lives and find a place within the new order.

Now, with the rise of the Islamic State, that has become nearly impossible. The Sunni militants of the Islamic State have declared war on those it considers apostates — Shiites, Christians, Yazidis — but it is Iraq’s Sunni Arabs who have arguably suffered the most.

As Islamic State militants seized control of Ramadi in recent days, their rampage was as grim as it was familiar. Through mosque loudspeakers, they assured the remaining civilians that they would provide them with food and security, and open roads and bridges that had been closed. Those promises belied what actually came with their arrival: vast destruction, summary killings of those believed sympathetic to the government — militants went door to door with lists of names — and the displacement of thousands of people.

The militants immediately opened two Shariah, or Islamic law, courts in Ramadi, according to an official, and freed prisoners who had been held in the city by Iraq’s counterterrorism forces.

The failure of Mr. Abadi to marshal a Sunni-led force to save the city has deepened the grievances of some Sunnis toward the central government that began with the leadership of the former prime minister, Nuri Kamal al-Maliki.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Abadi is a liar just like Maliki,” said Subhi al-Khaliani, a retiree in Diyala Province. “He won’t arm the Sunnis, but will weaken them instead.”

Bilal al-Dulaimi, 45, who works as a nurse in Diyala, said, “Sunnis are the prisoners of ISIS, which beheads tens of them daily.” He added, “The Sunni future is unknown and painful.”

Even Sunni officials in Anbar Province have called upon Mr. Abadi to send in the Shiite militias, some of them linked with Iran, to help fight the Islamic State. But many citizens of Anbar are fearful, given the Shiite armed groups’ role in sectarian atrocities of the past decade.

“The Shiite militias going to Anbar are a nongovernmental force, they are undisciplined and uncontrolled, and even the prime minister doesn’t control these militias,” said Amir Abdul, a 38-year-old resident of Anbar. “These militias are directly connected to Iran.”

Nearly three million Iraqis are now displaced, according to the United Nations, reaching a level not seen since the height of Iraq’s sectarian civil war in 2006 and 2007. Then, many Iraqis fled to Syria. But with Syria convulsed by its own civil war, Iraqis on the run from the Islamic State have few safe places to go. Nearly 85 percent of the displaced are Sunnis, according to a United Nations official.

The United Nations, in a statement released Monday, warned that the humanitarian crisis that is unfolding in Sunni areas has almost overwhelmed it. “The U.N. is rushing assistance to help people fleeing Ramadi, but funds are running out and stocks are almost done,” the statement said.

Lise Grande, the United Nations humanitarian coordinator in Iraq, said in the statement: “Nothing is more important right now than helping people fleeing Ramadi. They are in trouble and we need to do everything possible to help them. Thousands of people had to sleep in the open because they don’t have places to stay. We would be able to do much more if we had the funding.”

The displacement crisis has been made worse by Iraq’s sectarian divisions. Civilians fleeing Anbar have often been treated almost as foreign citizens when they arrive at the gates of Baghdad. Many are denied entry, especially young men, because the government considers them a security threat. After an influx of Ramadi residents several weeks ago, several car bombs struck Baghdad — a common occurrence at any time — and government officials blamed the displaced people.

Some of the displaced Sunnis have been let into the capital, but many have had their identification cards confiscated and have been housed in Sunni mosques, prevented from moving freely around the city.

Many Iraqi Sunni leaders were either killed — especially tribal leaders who once fought alongside the Americans against Al Qaeda in Iraq, the predecessor group to the Islamic State — or pushed into exile under the previous government of Mr. Maliki. As a result, many Sunnis today feel they have no legitimate leaders, partly because so many were unable to vote in last year’s elections because of poor security.

The Sunni leaders that have remained in Baghdad are openly mocked as “Green Zone politicians,” with only a tenuous connection to any constituency and little influence that extends beyond their offices and homes in the fortified government center of the capital.

Rafe al-Essawi, a Sunni from Anbar who was Iraq’s finance minister under Mr. Maliki, left the country in 2013 under threat of arrest on terrorism charges that Western diplomats said were false.

Speaking recently at the Brookings Institution in Washington, Mr. Essawi spoke about the pressures the Sunnis faced under Mr. Maliki’s government, including mass detentions and trumped-up terrorism charges, and the continuing struggles to incorporate Sunnis into the security forces.

This environment, he said, “makes the society of Sunnis ask the question: Is it justifiable to be part of the political process? Are we part of Iraq? If the answer is yes, the government should be an Iraqi-inclusive government for all Iraqis."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

U.N. chief: North Korea cancels visit // CNN // Steve Almasy - May 19, 2015

(CNN)U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said his planned visit Wednesday to a joint industrial complex has been canceled by North Korean authorities.

In a speech in Seoul, the secretary-general said there was no explanation given by the North Koreans for the last-minute change.

"This decision by Pyongyang is deeply regrettable. However, I, as the Secretary-General of the United Nations, will not spare any efforts to encourage the DPRK (Democratic People's Republic of Korea, or North Korea) to work with the international community for peace and stability on the Korean peninsula and beyond," Ban said, according to a U.N. statement.

The Kaesong Industrial Complex lies north of the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) that divides the two Koreas. More than 100 South Korean factory owners employ about 50,000 North Korean laborers to manufacture products such as clothing and shoes.

The complex was established more than a decade ago at a time when a previous government in South Korea was pursuing a "sunshine policy" of friendship with its reclusive northern rival.

Its creation allowed South Korean companies to benefit from the low cost of North Korean labor. Meanwhile, North Korea gained a valuable stream of hard currency revenue by appropriating an undisclosed amount of salary from its citizens working in Kaesong.

Gay Marriage on Ballot Shows Shift in Irish Attitudes // NYT // Douglas Dalby - May 19, 2015

DUBLIN — If there was any doubt about the pace at which acceptance of gay rights is taking root in societies around the world, consider Ireland.

On Friday, voters in this once deeply Roman Catholic country will decide whether the Constitution should be amended to add a tersely worded declaration: "Marriage may be contracted in accordance with law by two persons without distinction as to their sex."

If the amendment passes, Ireland will become the first country to legalize same-sex civil marriage by popular vote.

The referendum's very consideration, and the relative civility of the discourse, are a measure of the waning power of the church, which has seen its pews empty after the clerical pedophile scandals and amid rising secularism.

But it is also a reflection of a surprisingly swift shift in attitudes in many societies, where religious teachings and conservative values are giving way to acceptance of laws that support the privacy of individuals and expand marital and other rights.

Unlike the vitriolic fights here in the past over abortion and divorce, the referendum is stirring about as much excitement as might surface during a local council election.

Gaggles of campaigners hand out leaflets in shopping malls and in housing estates. Lamp posts are wrapped with colorful posters bearing catchy slogans. Talk radio chatters away, trying desperately to stir up debate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The outcome is by no means certain. Though polls are showing greater support for a yes vote than for a no, there is widespread acknowledgment that this is the kind of issue that polls cannot always accurately gauge.

Until the last few weeks, the church held whatever moral firepower it still possesses, preferring to leave the public battles to a variety of Catholic groups.

In what many interpret as a sign of their concern over alienating those still in the middle ground, church leaders waited until two weeks before the vote to distribute pastoral letters to Sunday worshipers.

“Should the amendment be passed, it will become increasingly difficult to speak any longer in public about marriage as being between a man and a woman,” said Bishop Brendan Leahy of Limerick in the letter to congregations in his diocese. “We also ask: ‘What will we be expected to teach children in school about marriage? Will those who sincerely continue to believe that marriage is between a man and a woman be forced to act against their conscience?’ ”

But in a country where about 80 percent of people are still identified as Catholics, though largely not practicing, no ballot initiative can pass without Catholic votes. And those most likely to go to church on Sundays, and receive the pastoral letter, are older, live in rural areas and are most likely to vote.

Supporters of the measure also fear that a largely silent middle group could turn out and tip the vote to the referendum’s defeat.

Still, the amendment has wide support from all the main political parties, trade unions, business organizations and various social groups, as well as from sports stars and celebrities. Of 226 members of Parliament, only six have indicated that they will personally cast their ballots against the measure.

Parliament adopted civil partnerships for same-sex couples in 2010, but supporters of the amendment say such arrangements do not go far enough.

“This is not equality, and for many gay people, civil partnership, while it was a step in the right direction, does not give the relationship they have and the commitment they have made to the person they love the same recognition as the relationship of a heterosexual couple,” wrote former Justice Minister Alan Shatter in a recent opinion article in The Irish Independent. “They feel discriminated against, regarded as second-class citizens, and they are hurt by it.”

Opponents have broadly defined the implications of the amendment, saying it could affect issues like surrogacy, adoption and education, as well as morality and family values.

“We are not against equality, but this is about changing the primary, natural, fundamental unit of society,” said Ben Conroy, a spokesman for the Iona Institute, a conservative advocacy group. “It is about obliterating the right of a child to a mother and father.”

While many states and other countries have moved to broaden equal rights for gays, resistance lingers, even in the West. France faced strong opposition and angry protests before it allowed same-sex marriage. In many places, including the United States, many of the rights questions are being decided in the courts.

In the Irish Republic, opponents of the measure have been careful to distance themselves from events in Northern Ireland, where religiously conservative Protestant politicians have blocked proposals to allow same-sex marriage that would put it in line with the rest of Britain.

However, the courts have stepped in there as well, and on Tuesday a judge in Belfast County Court ruled that a baker was guilty of discriminating against a customer, Gareth Lee, because of his sexual orientation when the bakery refused to provide a cake inscribed with the words “Support gay marriage.” The owners of the bakery said they refused because of their “genuine deeply held religious beliefs.” Mr. Lee agreed to accept 500 pounds, or about $775, in damages.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ireland has been reluctant to tinker with its 1937 Constitution, particularly on social issues. Nevertheless, it has taken on two previous battles over teachings that are abhorrent to the church.

The legalization of abortion has been on the ballot three times in the past 30 years. The last time a referendum was considered, in 2002, it was rejected by a little less than a percentage point of the voters: 50.4 percent to 49.6 percent. Successive governments have done everything in their power to avoid another vote.

Divorce was legalized in 1995 after another vitriolic ballot, but only by the thinnest of margins.

Polls published on Sunday in three national newspapers showed that support for the amendment was still comfortably ahead, but the wide gap has been narrowing. The Millward Brown poll for The Irish Sunday Independent found a 13-point drop-off in support from the month before, to 69 percent of people polled. Polls in the Irish edition of The Sunday Times and The Sunday Business Post also put the support vote well ahead.

Still, opponents have been encouraged by the way the pollsters were so wrong about this month’s British election. And the closeness of the vote on divorce, which was not predicted in the polls, has given them hope that voters are simply not expressing their views on a matter that many may find overly personal.

Gay rights groups are relying heavily on the support of the former Irish president Mary McAleese, a canon lawyer who is a respected scholar of the church and whose son Justin is gay.

“Will a yes vote affect my heterosexual marriage or any heterosexual marriage?” Ms. McAleese asked in a speech on Tuesday, noting that she has been married to her husband for almost 40 years. “Not in the least. But it will greatly affect my life and the lives of all parents of gay children. It will give us peace of mind about our children’s future and pride in our country’s commitment to true equality. It will right a glaring wrong.”

Prime Minister Enda Kenny, a churchgoing Catholic, is also supporting the proposal, first championed by his coalition partner, the left-leaning Labour Party.

Mr. Kenny, who had vacillated on the issue, said he was convinced after learning of the difficulties many gay people faced in recent years. His government includes elected representatives who are gay; Health Minister Leo Varadkar recently went public about his homosexuality.

OPINIONS/EDITORIALS/BLOGS

Markos Moulitsas: Clinton a true liberal // The Hill // Markos Moultisas - May 19, 2015

At the State of the Union address early this year, President Obama delivered the most explicitly liberal speech of his presidency, a genuine call to arms that expands on the past successes of Democratic policies. It was Democrats, indeed, who enacted “worker protections, Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid, to protect ourselves from the harshest adversity.” It was Democrats who “gave our citizens schools and colleges, infrastructure and the Internet — tools they needed to go as far as their effort will take them.”

The speech included none of the middle-of-the-road, centrist Third Way pablum that has infected the party for a generation. It was, in short, exactly what liberal activists had spent years calling for. And the architect of that speech? John Podesta. The same John Podesta who now chairs Hillary Clinton’s presidential campaign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That simple connection suggests Clinton is shedding her husband's ideological baggage and aiming for a truly progressive presidency. Why, after all, would Podesta help craft such an explicitly liberal State of the Union address if he was then going to help take it all back with Clinton? That address might have been the beginning of a rhetorical bridge spanning the Obama and future Clinton presidencies.

If you oppose Clinton from the left, you might scoff at such logic. But the actions of her nascent campaign certainly support that theory.

For example, there is her choice of Robby Mook as her campaign manager. In 2013, Mook helmed Terry McAuliffe's successful gubernatorial run in Virginia — the first time the same party occupying the White House has won the state since 1973. Sure, Mook justly gets a lot of credit for winning with a candidate as flawed and unappealing as McAuliffe. But the real beauty of that victory was that McAuliffe won by running an explicit base turnout election.

Traditionally, Virginia Democrats focus heavily on rural white voters with gimmicks like sponsoring NASCAR cars. Mook instead focused heavily on the ethnically and racially diverse D.C. suburbs in Northern Virginia and African-American communities in places like Richmond, and delivered an elusive off-year electoral victory for Democrats. In fact, Mook was so successful, there was no African-American voter drop-off between 2012 and 2013.

If Clinton was interested in another tepid I-stand-for-nothing campaign, she could've brought back Mark Penn for another losing effort. But you don't hire Mook to depress your best supporters. Quite the opposite, in fact.

On actual substance, Clinton's early speechifying is also cause for optimism. On immigration, she now supports measures far beyond anything Obama has proposed, generating enthusiastic support from the Hispanic community. She's been saying all the right things on police brutality and criminal reform (as her husband admits the mistakes of his get-tough-on-crime policies). And on income inequality, where even her staunchest liberal supporters can be skeptical, Clinton is striking a populist tone — and her lack of support for the president's lobbying efforts on behalf of his Pacific trade deal hasn't gone unnoticed.

Indeed, for those hoping to generate a genuine primary challenge against Clinton, she's provided very little ammo for them to work with. When Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) entered the primary with a stirring call for a stronger middle class, Clinton tweeted in response, "I agree with Bernie." The old Clinton wouldn't have been caught dead anywhere near those words.

So for those hoping that Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) or Sanders would push Clinton to the left, it appears it's too late. She's already there.

Hillary Clinton's Iraq Dilemma // New Yorker // John Cassidy - May 19, 2015

A week after it began, the flap over Jeb Bush and Iraq still hasn't fully died down. With his changing answers to the question that Megyn Kelly first posed to him, last Monday on Fox News, about whether he would have ordered an invasion in 2003 knowing what he knows now, the former Florida governor has provided campaign reporters with something juicy to write about, and Republican fretters with something to fret about.

If Dubya's younger brother can't avoid friendly fire in the confines of a Fox News interview, how will he handle it when the campaign proper begins? * The benign explanation is that he's ring-rusty—thirteen years since his last election, and all that. But, on Capitol Hill and elsewhere, darker suspicions are lurking. Perhaps Bush isn't up to speed on international issues, or, worse, he's too tied to his younger sibling to give the obvious answer to Kelly's question: "No, no, no—a thousand times, no."

In Democratic circles, the sight of Bush floundering was a welcome one. Barely had he emerged from the Fox interview when the Democratic National Committee put out a video, entitled "Don't Get Fooled Again," which intersperses his comments to Kelly with some footage from 2002 of George W. saying "Fool me once, shame on me. … You can't get fooled again." The jabs keep coming. In Monday's Times, Paul Krugman, one of the few commentators in the mainstream press who expressed skepticism in the run-up to the March, 2003 invasion, took the opportunity to get in another dig at George W. Bush, Don Cheney, Donald Rumsfeld, et al, reminding his readers, "We were lied into war."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Since 2007 or thereabouts, opinion polls have consistently showed that a sizable majority of Americans regard the Iraq invasion as a mistake. If the Democrats were likely to field a candidate in 2016 who opposed the war all along, they'd be in a position to exploit the issue for all it's worth, just as Barack Obama did in 2008. But, unless something unexpected happens, the Democratic nominee will be Hillary Clinton, who, in October, 2002, voted for a congressional resolution that authorized the use of force against Iraq, and whose current take on the decision to go to war isn't terribly easy to distinguish from the one that Jeb Bush has stumbled into.

Bush's position, as he explained it in his second clarification last week, is the following: " 'Knowing what we know now, what would you have done?' I would've not engaged; I would not have gone into Iraq. That's not to say that the world is safer because Saddam Hussein is gone—it is significantly safer. That's not to say that there was a courageous effort to bring about a surge that created stability in Iraq—all of that is true. … But we've answered the question now."

Clinton's public statements, like Bush's, have gone through several iterations. In September, 2007, she argued that she hadn't, in fact, voted for a preëmptive war, and said, "Obviously, if I had known then what I know now about what the President would do with the authority that was given him, I would not have voted the way that I did." Since many people regarded the resolution, at the time it passed, in October, 2002, as a blank check (twenty-one Democratic senators voted against it), this explanation didn't do Clinton much good, but she stuck with it throughout her 2008 Presidential campaign, refusing to describe her vote as a mistake. In her 2014 memoir, "Hard Choices," Clinton changed tack, fessing up and saying that she had relied heavily on prewar intelligence about Saddam's programs to build weapons of mass destruction. "I should have stated my regret sooner and in the plainest, most direct language possible," she wrote. She went on, "I thought I had acted in good faith and made the best decision I could with the information I had. And I wasn't alone in getting it wrong. But I still got it wrong. Plain and simple."

That language was commendably clear. It means that Clinton and Bush are now agreed upon the proposition that, knowing what we know now, invading Iraq was an error. The two of them also agree that, once Saddam had been overthrown, the U.S.-led occupation bungled things by not providing adequate security inside Iraq. In her book, Clinton wrote that the United States "went to war in Iraq with only half a strategy." In his interview with Kelly, Bush said, "Once we invaded and took out Saddam Hussein, we didn't focus on security first, and the Iraqis in this incredibly insecure environment turned on the United States military because there was no security for themselves and their families. By the way, guess who thinks that those mistakes took place as well? George W. Bush."

It was pretty rich of Jeb to cite his brother's post-White House ruminations in an effort to exculpate the tragic errors of the Bush Administration. Nonetheless, Jeb's statements to Kelly, in which he also included a direct reference to Clinton's 2002 vote, highlighted the dilemma facing the Democratic front-runner. If she tries to use the Iraq issue against the Republicans, by, for example, warning that a G.O.P. President could end up blundering into another war, she will open herself to criticisms, counterattacks, and endless rehashings of her 2002 vote.

Is there a way around this problem? I think that perhaps there is. Rather than apologizing and complaining about faulty intelligence, Clinton could say that we all make mistakes, but the key thing is what we learn from them. In the case of the Republicans in general, and Jeb Bush in particular, she could argue convincingly that the learning process has hardly begun.

Despite Bush's claim, during the big foreign-policy speech that he delivered in Chicago in February, that "I'm my own man," it has been widely reported that he's been consulting with some of his brother's former advisers, including Paul Wolfowitz, who famously said that the Iraqis would "welcome us as liberators." The speech itself relied on standard G.O.P. boilerplate—"Weakness invites war. Strength encourages peace"—and was devoid of novel ideas. Setting aside Rand Paul, who has virtually no chance of winning the nomination, there is precious little evidence of new thinking elsewhere in the Republican field, either. Indeed, Marco Rubio's speech last week at the Council on Foreign Relations suggests that the candidates are trying to outdo each other in bellicosity.

Clinton, for her part, still has work to do to explain what she learned from the Iraq disaster. Clearly, it didn't turn her against the concept of overseas military intervention. In 2011, as Secretary of State, she helped orchestrate air attacks on Libya that aided in bringing down Muammar Qaddafi, unleashing a civil war that is still raging. In 2013, after she left office, she supported U.S. military action against the Syrian regime, a course that President Obama eventually backed away from. In "Hard Choices," however, she struck a cautious note. "As much as I have wanted to, I could never change my vote on Iraq," she wrote. "But I could try to help us learn the right lessons from that war … I was determined to do exactly that when facing future hard choices, with more experience, wisdom, skepticism, and humility."

As the 2016 campaign unfolds, Clinton might want to say more about how her views have changed, and how, as President, she would reconcile her urge to exercise American power—both to protect U.S. interests and to do some good in the world—with the harsh realities of experience. Such a discussion would help shift attention away from her 2002 vote and allow her to draw a contrast with the Republicans' empty rhetoric. More importantly, it would focus the campaign debate on the question that, ever since March, 2003, has been hovering over practically everything: Whither America after Iraq?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In his measured responses to international crises and his occasional flip-flops, President Obama has provided one answer, which harkens back to the cautious realism of the former national-security advisers Zbigniew Brzezinski and Brent Scowcroft. Would Clinton stick to Obama's "Don't do stupid stuff" philosophy? Based on her history, some analysts suspect that she remains, at heart, a neo-liberal interventionist, à la Tony Blair, or even, perhaps, an old-school Democratic hawk from the Scoop Jackson school. Understandably enough, given the controversy that followed critical remarks that she made last summer about the U.S.'s cautious policy in Syria, Clinton hasn't said much during the past nine months that would help voters place her on the foreign-policy spectrum. Now that she's officially a candidate for President, it's time she helped them out a little.

I Don't Believe Hillary Clinton // National Journal // Ron Fournier - May 19, 2015

I don't believe Hillary Rodham Clinton when she says—as she did at a brief news conference on Tuesday—that she has no control over the release of her State Department email. "They're not mine. They belong to the State Department."

I don't believe her because a person's actions are more revealing than words: She kept her government email on a secret server and, only under pressure from Congress, returned less than half of them to the State Department. She deleted the rest. She considered them hers.

I don't believe her when she says, "I want those emails out. Nobody has a bigger interest in those being released than I do."

I don't believe her because I've covered the Clintons since the 1980s and know how dedicated they are to what former Clinton spokesman Mike McCurry called "telling the truth slowly." The fact is that she would rather delay the document dump until early 2016—and then have the email released on a single day to overwhelm the media and allow her to declare herself exonerated. That was her strategic choice, Clinton advisers confirmed for me, until a federal judge ordered the State Department on Tuesday to release the email in stages.

I don't believe her answer to this question: Is there a conflict of interest in accepting huge speaking fees from special interests seeking government action? "No," she replied.

I don't believe her because I saw how hard Clinton and her husband, then-Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, worked to pass the state's first sweeping ethics initiative. I don't believe her because I've heard Clinton and her husband rail against GOP politicians who were guilty of less-obvious conflicts of interest. I don't believe her because there have been far too many credible news reports about the blurring of lines between family finances, the family foundation, and her political and government interests.

I believe the public has a right to know whether any of the deleted email involved correspondence about the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Foundation or its donors. I believe she's getting bad advice: The hide-and-attack tactics of the 1990s won't work as well—if at all—in a post-Internet era that honors transparency, authenticity, and accountability.

I believe she wants us to take her at her word, but we can't—not even those people like me who've known the Clintons long enough to respect their service and appreciate their many virtues. It hurts to witness the self-inflicted wounds and hemorrhaging of her credibility. But this is no time for sentimentality.

Blind faith doesn't get you elected president.

I do believe she's right about one thing. "I made a mistake," Clinton said about her Senate vote to authorize war against Iraq. "Plain and simple."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton wants to allow felons to vote. That could mean a lot in a state like Florida. // WaPo // Philip Bump - May 19, 2015

While in Iowa on Tuesday, Hillary Clinton mentioned a policy reform that could affect the results of presidential races: Allowing ex-felons to vote.

Clinton is not the first 2016 candidate to raise this issue, nor is it the first time that she's done so. Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) has repeatedly advocated for restoring voting rights for felons convicted of certain crimes. At several points while she was in the Senate, including shortly after she announced her 2008 candidacy, Clinton introduced the Count Every Vote Act, which would have restored those rights to anyone not currently incarcerated or not on parole or probation for a felony. We're still early in the 2016 campaign, so it's hard to know if that's still the boundary that Clinton sets.

As it stands, people who are convicted of felonies but are on parole can or cannot vote depending on where they live, since rules on felon voting differ by state. The Sentencing Project has a handy primer on the differences. In 12 states, those convicted of a felony cannot vote even after having repaid their debt to society -- sometimes for certain periods of time, sometimes only for certain felonies. (In two states, Maine and Vermont, there are no restrictions on the voting rights of felons, even if incarcerated.) In total, some 5.8 million people are barred from voting in the United States because of their criminal past, according to the Sentencing Project's data.

University of Florida associate political science professor Michael McDonald tries to tally how many ex-felons are disenfranchised by state at his site United States Election Project. His methodology matches government data on people under correctional control with the Sentencing Project's outline of each state's laws. Moreover, McDonald collects data on voter turnout in elections by matching ballots cast with the size of the voting eligible population.

Assuming that Clinton's advocacy in 2016 matches what she's called for in the past -- namely, restoring voting rights to those permanently disenfranchised -- McDonald's data doesn't help us. He explains why: "Time-series statistics on recidivism, deaths and migration of felons are largely unavailable." In other words, the government tracks people who are in prison or on parole, but once they're free, it's hard to determine where they are or if they're even still alive. In other words, we can't know how the Count Every Vote Act would change an election.

What if a proposal went further, restoring voting rights to those on probation or parole and those in prison? What if the ineligible voters in each state were suddenly eligible? We'll note that this hasn't been proposed by any presidential candidate, and probably wouldn't be popular if it were. But it's still illustrative.

Comparing the number of ineligible felons calculated by McDonald to the voting-age population in each state shows how big a part of the state's population was ineligible to vote due to restrictions. (We're using 2012 data since we're talking presidential politics.) In Georgia, the number of ineligible felons constitutes 4.2 percent of the voting-age population of the state, the highest value nationally.

So if we gave all of those people the right to vote, how many more voters would that be? We took the overall turnout rate (again from McDonald) and applied it to the ineligible population. This is purely speculative, of course; there's a lot of variance among different populations in terms of how heavily they turnout. Younger and poorer people vote less, for example. Painting with a broad brush, then, the biggest increase in the vote would have been in Texas (given its large population), followed by Georgia and Florida.

That Florida example is interesting. If you look at the estimated vote increase versus the margin of difference in the presidential race, Florida sticks out. The number of people who could gain the right to vote and then actually vote is twice the margin of victory for Obama in the state. Florida is also one of the 12 states that bans voting from convicted felons after they're out of institutional control -- in their case, for five years. We don't know how many people that is, but it's safe to assume the figure is in the thousands.

The core question here is not one of politics; it is a question of the boundaries we're willing to put on the responsibilities of citizenship. Clinton and Paul's argument is that we've put overly tight limits on those convicted of crimes. But rolling back those limits more broadly than Clinton proposed in 2007 could have real political implications -- particularly in the always-contested state of Florida.

Knowing politicians as we do, we doubt that this didn't enter into the calculus.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ohio Gov. John Kasich is right to "ban the box": editorial // Cleveland // Editorial Board - May 19, 2015

People shouldn't be able to hide from their past, but they shouldn't be shackled by it either. That's why Ohio Gov. John Kasich did the right thing by ordering state agencies to stop requiring job seekers to disclose on their applications whether they have a prior criminal conviction.

The change in policy doesn't mean applicants don't have to come clean. They will be asked during the interview process about any criminal history, and could be subject to a background check. Waiting until then to inquire, however, removes the possibility of a knee-jerk reaction based strictly on an application form.

It allows an applicant to be judged first on his or her merits and then be given a chance to explain the circumstances of their conviction. Sometimes, perhaps many times, those circumstances and an applicant's attitude will merit hiring.

Under Kasich's policy shift, certain jobs, such as wildlife officers or employees handling state funds, will still be subject to initial disclosures.

Sixteen states and a number of cities and counties – including Cleveland and Cuyahoga County -- have joined the "ban the box" movement and stopped requiring applicants for government jobs to check a box acknowledging a criminal conviction. Six states – Hawaii, Illinois, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey and Rhode Island – have placed the same restriction on private employers, according to the National Employment Law Project.

In Ohio, where nearly 15 percent of the population has been convicted of a crime, that might be the logical next step.

What I T old College Graduates // Medium // Vice President Biden - May 19, 2015

Everyone has different goals and aspirations. But one thing I've observed, one thing I know, is the expression my dad would use, "it's a lucky man or woman gets up in the morning, puts both feet on the floor, knows what they're about to do, and thinks it still matters."

No matter what you do or where you go, we are all striving towards the same thing—to seek that sweet spot that satisfies both success and happiness.

My wish for every college graduate is that not only tomorrow, but twenty, forty, fifty years from now, he or she has found that thing that allows them to get up in the morning, put both feet on the floor, go out and pursue what they love, and think it still matters.

Remember these points.

1. It's All Personal

It all comes down to being personal.

It's about being there for a friend or a colleague when they're injured or in an accident, remembering the birthdays, congratulating them on their marriage, celebrating the birth of their child. It's about being available to them when they're going through personal loss. It's about loving someone more than yourself.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Let me give an example.

After only four months in the Senate as a 30-year old kid, I was walking into a meeting with Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana. And I witnessed another newly elected Senator—the extremely conservative Jesse Helms excoriating Ted Kennedy and Bob Dole for promoting the precursor to the Americans with Disabilities Act.

When I walked into Majority Leader Mansfield's office, he looked at me and said "What's bothering you, Joe?" And I told him, "That guy Helms has no socially redeeming value. He doesn't care about people in need, the disabled."

Majority Leader Mansfield then proceeded to tell me that—Jesse Helms and his wife—had three years earlier adopted a 14-year-old boy in braces up to his hips.

He said, "Joe, it's always appropriate to question another man's judgment, never his motives. Because you don't know his motive."

I felt like a jerk. But I began to look past caricatures of my colleagues to try to see the whole person. And when I did, it seemed to break the ice.

Senator Helms and I continued to have profound political differences. But the mutual defensiveness dissipated. And as a result—we began to be able to work together.

So one piece of advice is try to look beyond the caricature of the person with whom you have to work. Resist the temptation to ascribe motive, because you really don't know -—and it gets in the way of being able to reach a consensus on things that matter to you and to many other people.

2. No one is better than you, every other person is equal to you and deserves to be treated with dignity and respect.

I've worked with eight Presidents and hundreds of Senators and I've had scores of talented people work for me. And here's what I've observed: regardless of their academic or social backgrounds, those who had the most success and were most respected were the ones who never confused academic credentials and societal sophistication with gravitas and judgment.

So don't forget about what doesn't come from a diploma—the heart to know what's meaningful and what is ephemeral; the head to know the difference between knowledge and judgment.

3. Remember that reality has a way of intruding.

Life can change in a heartbeat.

Six weeks after my election, my whole world was altered forever when a tractor trailer crashed into a station wagon and took the life of my wife, 13-month old daughter, and seriously injured my two young sons.

But because I had the incredible good fortune of an extended family grounded in love and loyalty—and a sense of obligation which they imparted to me—I not only got help, but focusing on my sons, who survived, was my redemption.

I can remember my mother saying something I thought that was so cruel at the time, "Joey, out of everything terrible that happens to you, something good will come if you look hard enough for it." She was right.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The incredible bond I have with my children is the greatest gift that could ever be given.

And who knows whether I would have understood that if nothing happened.

I began to commute every single day for 37 years from Wilmington to Washington—two hours each way—so I could kiss them goodnight, and kiss them good morning the next day. I needed my children more than they needed me. Some at the time wrote in the press and suggested that I couldn't be taken seriously because I didn't stay in Washington to attend fancy events or meet important people.

But I realized I didn't miss a thing. Ambition is really important. You need it. And I certainly have never lacked in having ambition. But ambition without perspective can be a killer.

4. Engage the World Around You

You are part of an exceptional generation.

You're the most tolerant generation.

You have the intellectual horsepower to make things better for the world around you.

But intellectual horsepower and tolerance alone do not make a generation great unless you can break out of the bubbles of your own making—technological, geographic, racial, and socioeconomic—to truly connect with the world around you.

Because it matters.

No matter what your material success or personal circumstance, it matters. You cannot breathe fresh air or protect your children from a changing climate no matter what you make. If your brother can't marry the man he loves, then you are lessened. If your best friend has to worry about being racially profiled, then you live in a circumstance not worthy of us.

So engage in the world around you.

Because you will be more successful and happier.

You can absolutely succeed in life without ever sacrificing your ideals or your commitment to others and family.

That's the honest truth.

My word as a Biden.

Lifelong Republican Turns On His Party, Embraces Obamacare // Think Progress // Tara Culp-Ressler - May 19, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Luis Lang, who is currently crowdfunding for medical expenses that he can't afford because he didn't sign up for insurance under Obamacare, has become a viral sensation. However, the 49-year-old South Carolina resident says he doesn't want to be the poster child for the Republican Party's opposition to health care reform anymore.

At the end of last week, the Charlotte Observer reported that Lang, a lifelong Republican who's previously prided himself on covering his own medical bills, can't afford to pay thousands of dollars to treat an issue stemming from his chronic diabetes. Lang is suffering form bleeding in his eyes and a partially detached retina, which will cause him to go blind if left untreated. So he set up a GoFundMe page to solicit $30,000 in donations to cover a costly surgery that will save his vision.

Since then, the story has been picked up in left-leaning outlets across the country and covered in nationally syndicated newspaper columns. Obamacare supporters flocked to Lang's GoFundMe page to urge him to change his mind about the health law.

In an interview with ThinkProgress, Lang joked that he might be the most hated Republican in the country right now. But he also said that, thanks in part to a flood of media attention that led him to learn more about health care policy, he doesn't identify with the GOP anymore.

"Now that I'm looking at what each party represents, my wife and I are both saying — hey, we're not Republicans!" Lang said. He added that, though he's not a political person by nature and has never voted solely along party lines, he wants to rip up his voter registration card on national television so Americans will have proof that he's making the switch.

Although the Charlotte Observer article positioned Lang against the ACA, he insists he has never been completely opposed to the law. He does, however, have some issues with the way it's been implemented.

Like many Americans, Lang struggled to navigate the website last year and was frustrated by long wait times and technological glitches. He told ThinkProgress he thinks the law is too confusing as it's currently written — and pointed out that it's too difficult for him to predict his annual income as a self-employed contractor, which is what prevented him from signing up for a plan during previous enrollment periods. He was too nervous about underestimating his income during the enrollment process and being required to pay back his insurance subsidy during tax season.

But Lang's main complaint is the fact that the Supreme Court ruled that Obamacare's Medicaid expansion should be optional, which has given Republican lawmakers the opportunity to refuse to implement the policy on the state level. That's led to a coverage gap preventing millions of Americans from accessing affordable insurance whatsoever. Because Lang's income has recently dried up, now that his deteriorating vision prevents him from working, he now falls into that gap.

"I put the blame on everyone — Republican and Democrat. But I do mainly blame Republicans for their pigheadedness," Lang said. "They're blocking policies that could help everyone. I'm in the situation I'm in because they chose not to expand Medicaid for political reasons. And I know I'm not the only one."

Lang said he's read almost every comment on his GoFundMe page. He acknowledged that a lot of people have criticized him for waiting until he got sick to think about purchasing insurance, which is not how the health care system is intended to function. But he insists that he and his wife have been discussing getting coverage now that they're getting older, and notes that he tried his best to navigate the law last year.

"I know we didn't do it the right way," Lang told ThinkProgress, explaining that he's hoping to figure out the situation with his fluctuating income so he can be the first in line to sign up for a plan during the next open enrollment period.

He said he's always tried to take responsibility for his own bills, but he also believes that the United States should move toward a universal health care system that makes coverage available to everyone regardless of their income level. He said he "one hundred percent agrees" with the people who commented on his crowdfunding page to argue that health care is a human right.

"In fact, I have some eyesight jokes for you," he added. "This whole thing has helped me see more clearly. Like they say, hindsight is 20/20."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MISCELLANEOUS

From Rob Russo:

Upgrades finalized for Roaring Brook Road rail crossing // Iohud // Hoa Nguyen – May 19, 2015

More than three months after the deadliest train crash in its history, Metro-North is working with other agencies to finalize upgrades to a nearby railroad crossing in New Castle.

Roaring Brook Road is about eight miles from the Commerce Street grade crossing in Valhalla where a commuter train and sport utility vehicle collided Feb. 3, killing the motorist and five passengers.

"There's no question that Valhalla has motivated everyone to look and try to do what we can do immediately," said New Castle supervisor Robert Greenstein, who has been pushing for the upgrades.

Next week, crews are expected to begin the milling and repaving of the road on both sides of the crossing and add new signs and improved pavement markings.

"These are improvements that needed to be done really yesterday," Greenstein said.

But while the Valhalla crash may have expedited these short-term fixes, Greenstein said ideally, officials will eventually approve construction of a new bridge over the railroad tracks that would eliminate the grade crossing and still allow traffic to pass by but he didn't believe the financing of such a bridge project would be feasible anytime soon.

"Let's face it — the bridge is not being built tomorrow," he said.

The crossing has had a history of close calls. Earlier this month, the railroad gate at Roaring Brook Road came down on a school bus, trapping it only seconds before a passenger train passed by. The bus driver, who was charged with stopping in the railroad right of way, a misdemeanor, stopped about 15 feet further than she should have and tried to back up but stopped when the gate caught on some brackets, New Castle police said. No one, including two students on the short-style bus, were injured in the incident.

As part of the planned work, Roaring Brook Road will be closed at the crossing in both directions for three days starting 7 p.m., May 29.

In Mount Pleasant, Supervisor Carl Fulgenzi, who has been petitioning the Department of Transportation to close the Cleveland Street crossing where Federal Railroad Administration records show there have been six accidents, said he is still awaiting a decision from state officials.

Fulgenzi said he has heard the closing of the Commerce Street grade crossing also may be a possibility but state and Metro-North officials have not updated him on their plans if there are any.

"They did admit that they are two crossings they are paying attention to," he said.

A few days ago, Fulgenzi said he was at the crossing with lawyers from the town's insurance carrier and the town police chief inspecting the site

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

when a motorist approached the crossing, drove around the gate and crossed to the other side just as the lights began flashing, signaling the near arrival of a train.

"God forbid there wasn't a train (passing by at the time)," Fulgenzi said.

MTA police chief Michael Coan said during a Monday Metro-North committee meeting that his agency is monitoring grade crossing safety and have issued 97 violations — or about a third of all 293 summons issued through April.

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Cheryl Mills" <cmills@cdmillsgroup.com> "Huma Abedin" <ha16@hillaryclinton.com> "Heather Samuelson" <hsamuelson@cdmillsgroup.com> "Kristina Schake" <kschake@hillaryclinton.com> "Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com> "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	4/23/2015 2:24:28 PM
Subject:	Pushback to 'Clinton Cash' .pdf
Attachments:	Pushback to 'Clinton Cash' .pdf

Happy to report that we were able to get a web page up with our pushback and rebuttal to the NYT. See attached for what it looks like.

The second document is our best attempt at having one document with the straight facts about what is wrong with the book. It has gotten some good pick up in the press. We also shared with talkers, friends and allies. TV is still not asking for surrogates to come on, so that's a good sign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara Latham" <slatham@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 1/4/2016 5:20:33 AM
Subject: Fwd: Rapid Summary: WJC first event in NH

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Mon, Jan 4, 2016 at 12:18 PM
Subject: Re: Rapid Summary: WJC first event in NH
To: Angel Urena <Angel@presidentclinton.com >
Cc: Josh Schwerin <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >, Ian Sams <isams@hillaryclinton.com >, HRCRR <hrcrr@hillaryclinton.com >, Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >, "cbaker@hillaryclinton.com " <cbaker@hillaryclinton.com >

Genius expectation setting by the Bill POTUS.

Sent from my iPhone

On Jan 4, 2016, at 12:17 PM, Angel Urena <Angel@presidentclinton.com > wrote:

> Mitchell (MSNBC) and Vega (ABC) caught up with him on the ropeline.
>
> He got asked about Trump three times. Punted nicely by saying that it's up to the Republicans to decide whether what Trump is saying matters/is fair game or not.
>
> He did handicap the race a bit by saying that with the exception (Dean/Kerry) no Democrat from a neighboring state has ever lost in NH. But, I'm told that you all make a similar argument all the time.
>
> So, so far so good.
>
> On Jan 4, 2016, at 12:12 PM, Josh Schwerin <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > +
> >
> > Sent from my iPhone
> >
> > On Jan 4, 2016, at 11:56 AM, Ian Sams <isams@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > Summary: WJC opened with explanation of what he believes the election is about, namely broadly shared prosperty and how to keep US safe while maintaining our values. He noted that experts have praised HRC's Wall Street plan as the most comprehensive. WJC gave extraordinarily warm and personal comments about HRC as a person, saying he fell in love with her because she was the most amazing person and that "everything she touched, she made better." This came after a long explanation of her young life and career when she was working for the Children's Defense Fund.
> >
> > The item from his speech that garnered the most attention was a comment he made on Tom DeLay and Ted Cruz. He called DeLay the pre-tea party Ted Cruz and said HRC's accomplishment of agreement with him on foster care reforms in the 1990s was perhaps a bigger deal than her getting China and Russia to agree to Iran sanctions.
> >
> > Andrea Mitchell caught him on the rope line and asked about Trump:
>
> - Mark Murray @mmurraypolitics: Bill Clinton ducks Q by @mitchellreports on Donald Trump: "We are trying to win a primary"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Key tweets below:

Zeke Miller @ZekeJMiller
Bill Clinton re tone of the campaign: "I'm a happy grandfather — I'm not mad at anybody"

Dan Merica @danmericaCNN
Bill Clinton on his first solo campaign trip: "I don't fit anymore. First of all, I'm a happy grandfather. I'm not mad at anybody."

Peter Nicholas @PeterNicholas3
"I think this election is about broadly shared prosperity," @billclinton says in campaign trail debut in Nashua, NH.

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti
Bill Clinton goes local almost immediately, taking on the opioid addiction crisis. "Three children of friends of mine have died."

Dan Merica @danmericaCNN
Another issue this election is about, Bill Clinton says, is "how are we going to keep America safe and still keep it America."

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti
Roughly 720 people here in the gym at Nashua Community College for Bill Clinton's solo campaign debut.

Mike Memoli @mikememoli
We're getting a taste of the sober, philosophical @billclinton . "Yesterday I read a story about Kenya ... "

Peter Nicholas @PeterNicholas3
.@billclinton protests flood of "dark money" in political system.

Abby D. Phillip @abbydphillip
Bill Clinton reminds Dems: the next president will make between 1-3 US Supreme Court appointments.

Sam Frizell @Sam_Frizell
Bill: "Even if the Supreme Court says billionaires can give all the money they want, you ought not to be able to give it in secret."

Abby D. Phillip @abbydphillip
Bill Clinton getting personal: "My wife, we fell in love... I thought she was the most amazing person."

Abby D. Phillip @abbydphillip
Bill on Hillary Clinton: "Everything she touched, she made better."

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti
"Tom Delay — he was the Ted Cruz of the pre-Tea Party era" - Bill Clinton, describing Hillary's health care work in the '90s

Jake Sherman @JakeSherman interesting parallel. twitter.com/gdebenedetti/s…
Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti
"Tom Delay — he was the Ted Cruz of the pre-Tea Party era" - Bill Clinton, describing Hillary's health care work in the '90s

Mike Memoli @mikememoli
.@billclinton refers to Tom DeLay the Ted Cruz of his era. But notes he signed bill that was product of his and Hillary's work together

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jonathan Martin @jmartNYT
!!!!

twitter.com/jeneps/status/…
Jennifer Epstein @jeneps
Bill Clinton calls Tom Delay "the Ted Cruz of the pre-Tea Party era." (Before recalling HRC's work with him on foster care.)

Gabriel Debenedetti @gdebenedetti
I do not believe in my lifetime that anybody has run for this job who is better qualified by experience, knowledge & temperance - WJC on HRC

John Harwood @JohnJHarwood virtuoso @billclinton in New Hampshire just now

Mike Memoli @mikememoli
And that's a wrap - @billclinton 's first NH speech clocks in just short of a half hour

Josh Kraushaar @HotlineJosh
.@chucktodd , on Bill Clinton debut on trail: "I didn't expect Bill Clinton to use Franklin Pierce to make the case for Hillary Clinton"

Domenico Montanaro @DomenicoNPR
The point of Bill Clinton -- or any spouse -- campaigning is to authenticate, humanize and personalize the candidate.

Alex Seitz-Wald @aseitzwald
Took a bit for Clinton to rev up, but he delivered in the final mins with meditation on what it takes to be POTUS and strong endorsement.

Mark Murray @mmurraypolitics
Bill Clinton ducks Q by @mitchellreports on Donald Trump: "We are trying to win a primary"

Domenico Montanaro @DomenicoNPR
"No candidate who's ever bordered the state has ever lost here" -- Bill Clinton trolling @BernieSanders . BTW, Dean lost in 04 to a MA Sen

Abby D. Phillip @abbydphillip
Bill Clinton didn't mention any GOP candidates by name except for this: He called Tom DeLay "the Ted Cruz, pre-Tea Party"

--
Ian Sams | Rapid Response
Hillary for America
(423) 915-6592 | @IanSams
Gchat: icsams

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRR" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrr+unsubscribe@hillaryclinton.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrr@hillaryclinton.com .

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRR" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrr+unsubscribe@hillaryclinton.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrr@hillaryclinton.com .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: JStocks@nea.org
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 4/18/2008 4:03:17 AM
Subject: FW: More gas

From one of our economists on staff.

John Stocks
Deputy Executive Director
National Education Association
202-822-7523

Sent from my GoodLink Wireless Handheld (www.good.com)

-----Original Message-----
From: Sims, Richard [NEA]
Sent: Friday, April 18, 2008 10:55 AM Eastern Standard Time
To: Anderson, Kim [NEA-GR]; Anderson, Scott [NEA]; Cahoon, Cecil [NEA]; Choi, Joanna [NEA]; Hasse, Charles; Johnson, Derrick [NEA]; Kaufman, Daniel [MD]; Mallard, Lisa [NEA]; McCormick, Margaret [NEA]; Reddy, Shilpa [NEA]; Reed, Timothy [NEA]; Schlein, David [NEA]; Scott, Merwyn [NEA]; Stocks, John [NEA]; Tijerina, Joe [NEA]; Uribe, Cristina [NEA]
Cc: White, Karen [NEA]
Subject: More gas

From an economic perspective, this is a seriously flawed idea. Eliminating the gas tax directly lowers the price of gasoline, encouraging additional consumption—increasing the demand, in economic terms. Therein lies the first rub: U.S. oil refineries are currently operating at full capacity (they always operate at full capacity during the holiday travel season) and since they can't supply any more gasoline, added demand simply results in higher prices. So while consumers might see some minor reduction in the pump price, the oil producers, domestic and foreign (certainly Iran, Russian, and Libya will be grateful) will be delighted at the slightly higher price they can now charge for their product.

Rub #2: The Iron Law of the Balanced Budget. A cut in revenues equals a cut in spending. (You can, of course, charge it to the future, which cuts your children's spending rather than your own. Pretending it does otherwise is a particularly ugly, but often expedient, fiscal fantasy.) In fact, the gasoline tax revenue that he proposes to eliminate is already going to spent supporting road and highway construction and maintenance around the country. Since highways are a vital part of our competitive infrastructure, his proposal is tantamount to deciding not to invest in our nation's future this year.

-----Original Message-----
From: Anderson, Kim [NEA-GR]
Sent: Friday, April 18, 2008 7:05 AM
To: Anderson, Scott [NEA]; Cahoon, Cecil [NEA]; Choi, Joanna [NEA]; Hasse, Charles; Johnson, Derrick [NEA]; Kaufman, Daniel [MD]; Mallard, Lisa [NEA]; McCormick, Margaret [NEA]; Reddy, Shilpa [NEA]; Reed, Timothy [NEA]; Schlein, David [NEA]; Scott, Merwyn [NEA]; Sims, Richard [NEA]; Stocks, John [NEA]; Tijerina, Joe [NEA]; Uribe, Cristina [NEA]
Cc: White, Karen [NEA]
Subject: FW: Lower Gas Prices?

Fyi.

Kim Anderson
Manager for Issue Advocacy
National Education Association
1201 16th Street, NW--Suite 510
Washington, DC 20036
202-822-7341; fax: 202-822-7309
C: 202-251-5578
Kanderson@nea.org

-----Original Message-----
From: John McCain [mailto:johnmccain@gop.com]
Sent: Thursday, April 17, 2008 11:48 PM Eastern Standard Time
To: Anderson, Kim [NEA-GR]
Subject: Lower Gas Prices?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

<https://www.johnmccain.com/Contribute?guid=1107602b-100e-4e07-bfd9-e9a8ff050521&s=rnc11 >

My Friends,

This week, I laid out an economic plan aimed at providing immediate and long-term relief for all American families. One of the key components of this plan is a suspension of the federal gas tax on gasoline from Memorial Day to Labor Day of this year.

<https://www.johnmccain.com/Contribute?guid=1107602b-100e-4e07-bfd9-e9a8ff050521&s=rnc11 > The effect of this "gas tax holiday" will be an immediate economic stimulus - taking a few dollars off the price of a tank of gas every time you fill up. And because the cost of gas affects the price of food, packaging and just about everything else, this immediate step will spread economic relief to every family in America.

My friends, this election will be shaped by the big issues we face as a nation, not the small ones. To effectively communicate our solutions to these issues, I will need a united base of support and financial resources to communicate my message to the American people. That's why I ask you to join my campaign by making a financial contribution by following this link right away. <https://www.johnmccain.com/Contribute?guid=1107602b-100e-4e07-bfd9-e9a8ff050521&s=rnc11>

I am running for president to tackle the most pressing challenges facing our nation today, and our economy is certainly one of our top challenges. The voters of our country will have a clear choice in November between my vision and policies for our country - rooted in our shared conservative principles - and the tax and spend policies of my Democratic opponents.

Whether it's the economy, the struggle against radical Islamic extremism or national security issues, I stand ready to offer bold solutions to our nation's challenges. The gas-tax holiday is just one example, and as I have always done, I will make my case to every American who will listen.

I will not confine myself to the comfort of speaking only to those who agree with me. I will make my case to all the people. I will listen to those who disagree. I will try to persuade them. I will debate. I will learn from them. And I will fight every moment of every day for what I believe is right for this country, and I will not yield.

Please join me today in the fight for what is right for this country by making a donation of $50, $100, $250, $500, $1,000 - any amount up to the legal limit of $2,300. <https://www.johnmccain.com/Contribute?guid=1107602b-100e-4e07-bfd9-e9a8ff050521&s=rnc11 > Your generosity is greatly appreciated, and I look forward to what will surely be a great contest in November.

Thank you,

<http://www.johnmccain.com/images/email/mccainsig_150_0408.jpg >

John McCain

P.S. In November, Americans will have a clear choice between my policies for addressing the big issues and the policies of my opponents. I stand ready to offer bold new solutions to the challenges we face as a nation, and I ask that you join me today calling for a gas tax holiday to provide immediate economic relief for many Americans. Please follow this link to join my campaign for president by making a generous donation today. <https://www.johnmccain.com/Contribute?guid=1107602b-100e-4e07-bfd9-e9a8ff050521&s=rnc11 > Every donation, no matter how small, is crucial to our campaign. Thank you.

<https://www.johnmccain.com/Contribute?guid=1107602b-100e-4e07-bfd9-e9a8ff050521&s=rnc11 >

Republican National Committee | 310 First Street, SE | Washington, D.C. 20003
p: 202.863.8500 | f: 202.863.8820 | e: info@gop.com

Paid for by the Republican National Committee.
310 First Street, SE - Washington, D.C. 20003 - (202) 863-8500 www.gop.com <http://www.gop.com/ >
Authorized by John McCain 2008

Unsubscribe <http://www.gop.com/unsubscribe.aspx?e=KiAnderson@nea.org >

Copyright 2008 Republican National Committee

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

****

Only the individual sender is responsible for the content of the message, and the message does not necessarily reflect the position or policy of the National Education Association or its affiliates.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	8/13/2015 8:19:02 AM
Subject:	Re: Iran riff

Passionate arguments doesn't seem great to me either.

And I would drop the word "none".

On Aug 13, 2015, at 2:59 PM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> But before we get into the politics, I want to say a few words about one of the most important decisions we face today.
>
> Across our country, Americans are considering and debating the nuclear agreement with Iran. Soon, it will come up for a vote in Congress. There are people of good faith on both sides of this issue, people who are committed to protecting our security and the security of our allies, especially Israel.
>
> President Obama and Secretary Kerry have worked hard to achieve this agreement and they are making passionate arguments for why it will keep us safe and close off avenues for Iran to get a bomb. Others, like my friend Senator Schumer, are deeply skeptical. I respect their concerns. I have no illusions about Iran's true intentions or its continuing threat to Israel, the region, and the United States. That threat is real and it must be confronted.
>
> But leadership is about hard choices. And to me, this one is clear. This agreement is the most effective path to prevent Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapon. There is no viable alternative. None. I support President Obama and I encourage everyone in Congress to do the same.
>
> As Secretary of State, I logged tens of thousands of miles and twisted a lot of arms to build a global coalition to impose the most crippling sanctions in history. That unprecedented pressure delivered a blow to Iran's economy and gave us leverage at the negotiating table, starting in Oman in 2012. We need to bring the same determination and unity to the job of enforcing this agreement and deterring Iranian aggression across the board. When this debate is over, we need to come together to ensure the President has the tools, resources, and support to send a clear message to Iran: Cheat, and you will pay. When you threaten Israel, you threaten America. And make no mistake, we will never allow you to acquire a nuclear weapon; not just during the term of this agreement -- never.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"NOBLE Ronald" <R.NOBLE@INTERPOL.INT>
To:	john.podesta@gmail.com
Date:	11/18/2008 2:25:59 PM
Subject:	INTERPOL Briefing on Global Security Challenges

(This 1.5 page letter is being sent you in hard copy as well.)

Dear John,

We have known each other for 15 years, and I understand how busy you are leading President-elect Obama's Transition Team. As articulated during his presidential election campaign, securing the United States and the world against the threat of terrorism and serious transnational crime will be one of President-elect Obama's highest priorities when he takes his oath of office on 20 January 2009. At the President-elect's, or his highest-level surrogate's, most immediate availability, I would like to offer my, and INTERPOL's, insights into what the current Administration never availed itself of over its eight years in office: a briefing on the threats and solutions to global security that should concern us all. It would be the first time in history that such a briefing has been given by INTERPOL to a newly elected Head of State.

Based on my experience of having participated in two US Presidential transition processes, I know that the current security briefing model relies mainly on highly classified national security material sourced from US agencies. Such briefings are, of course, valuable and absolutely essential - especially to determine whether nationally gathered intelligence suggests any terrorist plans targeting the US. However, such briefings may not reflect broader and more general international security threats which, if left unaddressed, could one day permit the United States to fall victim to terrorist attacks or other forms of serious crime.

The US's failure, prior to 9/11, to link fraudulent national identity documents to international terrorism is perhaps the most tragic example of what could go wrong. It is for this reason that INTERPOL has been highlighting the danger presented by the more than 800 million international air arrivals occurring each year worldwide for which the relevant passports are not screened against INTERPOL's global database of more than 16 million stolen and lost travel documents. Simply put, INTERPOL believes, and the evidence indicates, that a country's national security agenda must have roots in a robust international strategy that recognizes that the internal security of any one country (including the US) requires an external awareness, as terrorist attacks are frequently developed, planned and launched from beyond the target country's borders.

…/…

Let me make clear that I may be one of the few people contacting you not seeking a position for himself, a family member or friend. In my post as INTERPOL Secretary General, I can do more to enhance US and global security in this capacity than in any other capacity - especially if Heads of State and Government are prepared to tap into the enormous potential offered by INTERPOL. Just last month, I had a private audience with Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin, during which we conversed in German to dispense with the need for either of our respective staff to be present. I briefed him about INTERPOL's most ambitious undertaking: our Global Security Initiative for the 21st Century (GSI), and received valuable insights from him about how he perceived the West's approach to global security.

President-elect Obama will forever be associated with making people the world over see that extraordinary change is possible if they believe in it and work hard enough to make it happen. In reaching out to INTERPOL, President-elect Obama would forever change the way Heads of State and Government think about their own national security. More countries would look outward, not inward. More countries would think collectively, not individually. More countries would think about the role of law enforcement, and not just the military, in addressing global security. And, finally, more countries would understand that the US's view of global security has truly changed. I know all of these are also priorities that have been articulated by the President-elect during his campaign.

John, the United States has been fortunate not to have suffered another major terrorist attack since September 11, 2001. I frequently remind people that the September 11 terrorist attacks came more than 8½ years after the first World Trade Center attacks; so there is no reason for people to conclude that the threat posed by Al-Qaeda has passed. Indeed, in seeing the serious global security gaps that remain unaddressed, I am concerned that our good fortune will not continue indefinitely. I therefore look forward to the opportunity to brief the President-elect, you, or others on the immediate steps that the United States can take with INTERPOL to make enhancing global security a real and immediate priority for all countries in the world.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Yours sincerely,

(Ron)

Ronald K. Noble
Secretary General

cc: Mr Robert R. Beers
National Security Team Leads (Agency Review Team for the Obama-Biden Transition)

Mr John Podesta
Founder, President and CEO
Center for American Progress
1333 H Street, N.W., 10th Floor
Washington, D.C. 20005
USA

Sent from my BlackBerry Wireless Handheld

****

This message, and any attachment contained, are confidential and subject of legal privilege. It may be used solely for the designated police/justice purpose and by the individual or entity to whom it is addressed. The information is not to be disseminated to another agency or third party without the author's consent, and must not be retained longer than is necessary for the fulfilment of the purpose for which the information is to be used. All practicable steps shall be taken by the recipients to ensure that information is protected against unauthorised access or processing. INTERPOL reserves the right to enquire about the use of the information provided.

If you are not the intended recipient, be advised that you have received this message in error. In such a case, you should not print it, copy it, make any use of it or disclose it, but please notify us immediately and delete the message from any computer

****

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Josh Schwerin" <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
To: hrcrapid <HRCrapid@googlegroups.com>
Date: 4/26/2015 2:49:18 AM
Subject: 'This Week' Transcript: 'Clinton Cash' Author Peter Schweizer

'This Week' Transcript: 'Clinton Cash' Author Peter Schweizer

Apr 26, 2015, 9:34 AM ET

This is a rush transcript for April 26, 2015. It will be updated and may contain errors.

http://abcnews.go.com/Politics/week-transcript-clinton-cash-author-peter-schweizer/story?id=30568766&singlePage=true

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, HOST: And the author of "Clinton Clash," Peter Schweizer, joins us now.

Thank you for joining us this morning, Peter.

You know, I was looking at the book jacket right here and you say that, here in the book jacket that your reporting raises serious and alarming questions about judgment of possible indebtedness to an array of foreign interests and ultimately, a fitness for high public office.

So how does your reporting show that Hillary Clinton may be unfit for the presidency?

PETER SCHWEIZER, AUTHOR, "CLINTON CLASH": Well, I think the real question here, George, is when you ever have an issue of the flow of funds to political candidates, whether that's to their campaigns, whether that's to private foundations, whether that's to their spouse, is there evidence of a pattern of -- of favorable decisions being made for those individuals?

And I think the -- the point that we make in the book is that there is a troubling pattern.

There are dozens of examples of that occurring.

Some people, I think particularly the Clinton camp, would say that these are all coincidence. I don't think, when you're talking about 12 instances, you're talking coincidence. I think you're talking trend.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But you take it pretty far. You write that, "The pattern of behavior is troubling enough to warrant further investigation by law enforcement (INAUDIBLE)."..

SCHWEIZER: Correct.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Do you have any evidence that a crime may have been committed?

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think it's -- if you look at a couple of recent examples. For example, Governor McConnell down in Virginia, or you look at Senator Menendez , in these cases, you didn't have evidence of a quid pro quo. What you had was funds flowing to elected officials, some of them gifts, some of them campaign contributions and actions that were being taken by those public officials that seemed to benefit the contributors.

Certainly, I think it warrants investigation. What that investigation will reveal, we'll see.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But a criminal investigation?

SCHWEIZER: Well, we'll see. I mean that's what the Governor McConnell has faced and that's what Menendez has faced.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But the...

SCHWEIZER: And I think the evidence here is far more widespread in terms of repeated action than there were in those two instances.

STEPHANOPOULOS: As you know, the Clinton campaign says you haven't produced a shred of evidence that there was any official action as secretary that -- that supported the interests of donors.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SCHWEIZER: Well...

STEPHANOPOULOS: We've done investigative work here at ABC News, found no proof of any kind of direct action. And an independent government ethics expert, Bill Allison, of the Sunline Foundation (ph), wrote this. He said, "There's no smoking gun, no evidence that she changed the policy based on donations to the foundation."

No smoking gun.

Is there a smoking gun?

SCHWEIZER: Yes. The smoking gun is in the pattern of behavior. And here's the analogy I would give you. It's a little bit like insider trading . I wrote a book on Congressional insider trading a couple of years ago and talked with prosecutors.

Most people that engage in criminal insider trading don't send an e-mail that says I've got inside information, buy this stock.

The way they look at it, they look at a pattern of stock trades. If the person has access to that information and then they do a series of well-timed trades. That warrants investigation.

I think the same thing applies here.

By the way, what's important to note is it was confirmed on Thursday, both by "The New York Times" and "The Wall Street Journal," that there are multi-million dollar, non-disclosed donations that were made to the Clinton Foundation that were never disclosed by the Clintons.

This is a direct breach of an agreement they suggested with the White House.

STEPHANOPOULOS: That -- that is an issue for them, but it's not a criminal -- it's nothing that would warrant a cmii.

So let's look at some of the specifics behind your pattern.

SCHWEIZER: Sure.

STEPHANOPOULOS: A lot of focus on the sale of a company, Uranium One, to a -- to a Russian company. Of course, Frank Drisdra (ph), who had committed, what, a $130 million, a pledge to the Clinton Foundation back in 2006, had had an interest in this company.

But he actually sold it.

SCHWEIZER: Well, he sold his stock, but his firm, Endeavor Financial, continued to do finance deals well after that. And the individuals involved in the book, as you probably read, there are nine -- count them, nine major contributors to the Clinton Foundation who were involved in that nuclear deal.

The two individuals who were the financial advisers on the deal of the sale to the Russians, they're both major Clinton Foundation supporters. The chairman of that Foundation, Ian Telfer, whose donations were not disclosed, campaign -- and sorry, Clinton Foundation contributor. And there are others.

So this is not just about Frank Giustra. This is multiple layers (INAUDIBLE)...

STEPHANOPOULOS: OK, but you didn't disclose in your book that he had sold the interest.

SCHWEIZER: Yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Beyond that, this deal was approved by a -- a board of the government called the CFIUS Board.

SCHWEIZER: Correct.

STEPHANOPOULOS: This actually chaired by the secretary of the Treasury...

SCHWEIZER: Correct.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- not the secretary of State.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SCHWEIZER: Right.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Eight other agencies on board, the secretary of State, Homeland Security, Defense, Commerce...

SCHWEIZER: Right.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- Energy, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission...

SCHWEIZER: Right.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- signed off on it. And even though the State Department was one of nine agencies to sign off on it, there's no evidence at all that Hillary Clinton got directly involved in this decision.

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think it warrants further investigation. And there's a couple of things that need to be clarified.

Number one, she was one vote -- or the State Department was one vote on CFIUS. But any agency has veto power. So it needs to be unanimous. So they had to support this agreement.

The second thing that I would say is that in the midst of all of this, Hillary Clinton was in charge of the Russian reset. She was in charge of -- in -- of the A123 nuclear agreements with the Russians. She was the one that was meeting with Lavrov. There were four senior congressmen on national security issues that raised concerns about this issue...

STEPHANOPOULOS: But wait a second. There were nine different agencies...

SCHWEIZER: Sure.

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- who approved it.

Doesn't that suggest that that was because there was no national security concern, not because of some nefarious influence by Hillary Clinton?

SCHWEIZER: But -- but look at the nine individuals that were on the CFIUS committee, the nine agencies represented.

Who was, by far, the most hawkish on CFIUS issues in the past?

Hillary Clinton. She was big on rejecting the Dubai ports deal. She was big on other issues. She sponsored legislation when she was in the Senate to straighten CFIUS.

This was a signature issue for her and this is totally out of character...

STEPHANOPOULOS: But the assistant secretary who sat -- the assistant secretary of State who sat on the committee said she never intervened on any CFIUS issue at all.

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think that deserves further scrutiny. I would question that.

To argue that (INAUDIBLE)...

STEPHANOPOULOS: But based on what?

Based on what?

SCHWEIZER: Well, I think based on her (INAUDIBLE)...

STEPHANOPOULOS: Do you have any evidence that she actually intervened in this issue?

SCHWEIZER: No, we don't have direct evidence. But it warrants further investigation because, again, George, this is part of the broader pattern. You either have to come to the conclusion that these are all coincidences or something else is afoot.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And that -- that is that -- the Clintons do say it's a coincidence. As they say, you have produced no evidence. And I still haven't heard any direct evidence and you just said you had no evidence that she intervened here.

But I do want to ask a broader question.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It's been reported that you -- you briefed several Republicans on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, including the chairman, Bob Corker.

Did you offer any briefings for Democrats?

SCHWEIZER: No, but I'd be glad to give them before the book is released. This was a -- a friend that asked me. He thought it would be a good idea to talk to these individuals. This was the committee that confirmed her.

And I was glad to meet with them. They did not get copies of the book. They did not get any material. It was simply a verbal briefing.

And I'd be glad to brief any Democrats before May 5th, when the book comes out.

STEPHANOPOULOS: As you know, the Democrats have said this is -- this is an indication of your partisan interest. They say…

SCHWEIZER: Well...

STEPHANOPOULOS: -- you used to work for President -- President Bush as a speechwriter. You're funded by the Koch brothers.

How do you respond to that?

SCHWEIZER: Well, George, what did I do when this book was completed?

I went to the investigative unit at "The New York Times," the investigative unit here at ABC. I went to the investigative unit at "The Washington Post." And I shared with them my findings, OK. These are not cupcakes. These are serious researchers and investigators.

And they are confirming what I've reported. So people can look at the facts and...

STEPHANOPOULOS: They haven't come -- they haven't confirmed any evidence of any crime.

SCHWEIZER: Well, but -- but it's not up to an author to prove crime. I mean do you think that when people first started looking at Governor McConnell or they started looking at Menendez, that they immediately had evidence?

You need subpoena power. You need access to records and information. You need access to e-mails.

There's all sorts of things that you can do. You can't leave it up to an author to say that an author has to prove a criminal case.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Finally, Bloomberg News is reporting that you're going to be looking into Jeb Bush's business dealings, as well.

Is that true?

What have you found?

Where and when will you publish?

SCHWEIZER: We've been working on it for about four months. We've been looking at land deals. We've been looking at an airport deal. We've been looking at some financial transactions involving hedge funds based out of the UK.

We have already reached out to several media outlets and we're going to adopt a similar model that we have here, which is to share that information with investigative journalists at established news outlets, share with them that information.

And I think that people will find it very, very interesting and compelling.

Peter Schweizer, thanks very much.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Thanks for having me, George.

Up next, the roundtable on this Hillary book and augways (ph) from the campaign trail.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Plus, same-sex marriage coming to the Supreme Court this week.

Bruce Jenner's big announcement puts transgender issues in the spotlight. We debate the next frontier in civil rights.

And we're back in just two minutes.

--
Josh Schwerin
Spokesperson
Hillary for America
@Josh Schwerin

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	8/7/2014 6:46:57 AM
Subject:	Correct The Record Thursday August 7, 2014 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Thursday August 7, 2014 Afternoon Roundup:

Tweets:

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: HRC "worked diligently during her tenure at the @StateDept to strengthen the U.S. economy and create American jobs" http://thediplomat.com/2014/08/the-economics-of-us-foreign-policy/ … [8/7/14, 10:25 a.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton knows the economic value of diplomatic leadership, Amb. M. Osman Siddique writes in @Diplomat_APAC : http://thediplomat.com/2014/08/the-economics-of-us-foreign-policy/ … [8/7/14,10:03 a.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton launched the U.S.-Africa Clean Energy Finance Initiative to bring clean energy to Africa. #HRC365 http://www.state.gov/secretary/20092013clinton/rm/2012/06/193912.htm … [8/6/14, 5:01 p.m. EDT]

Headlines:

Roll Call opinion: Burns Strider: "7 Themes Emerge for Hillary Rodham Clinton and 2016"

"Why would right-wing extremists devote their time, energy and money so far away from an election attempting to discredit someone who hasn't even decided to be a candidate? It's as simple as apple pie: If Clinton runs, their agenda is in trouble.

They have to stop her in order to secure a shot at the presidency for themselves."

Glamour: "Career Advice from Hillary Rodham Clinton: 'You Don't Have to Be Perfect. Most Men Never Think Like That.'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“She's been leaning in for four decades—but now, in between a major book tour and a possible history-making presidential run, Hillary Rodham Clinton is putting her feet up and offering ‘hard-earned’ career lessons she says all young women should know.”

Long Island Press: “Hillary Clinton’s Book Revue Signing in Huntington Draws Hundreds”

“In all, the store sold out its supply of 1,200 books—and the staff lamented that they could’ve moved more product if they’d had the inventory.”

Wall Street Journal: “U.S. Ties to Myanmar Are Called Into Question”

“Any backsliding, analysts say, could stain this legacy and harm Mrs. Clinton's bid for the Democratic nomination in 2016.”

CNN: “Russia gives Snowden 3-year residency”

“Edward Snowden, who leaked secret information about U.S. spying programs, has been granted an extension to stay in Russia for three more years, his attorney said in a televised press conference in Moscow Thursday… Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton recently commented on Snowden's case in an interview with the German magazine Der Spiegel.”

Town Hall opinion: Conn Carroll: “Hillary Clinton's Corporate Welfare Bank Problem”

"At an Africa Business Forum this week, the former-president said, 'Economics is not theology. If you're running a country, you've got to try to create an opportunity for all of your businesses to be competitive. ... That's all the Ex-Im bank does, and I've heard more ridiculous things said about the Ex-Im bank in the last six months than I have in my adult life.'"

Articles:

Roll Call opinion: Burns Strider: “7 Themes Emerge for Hillary Rodham Clinton and 2016”

By Burns Strider

August 7, 2014, 12:00 p.m. EDT

Republican operatives are as lost as last year’s Easter egg when it comes to stopping Hillary Rodham Clinton. It’s two years from the presidential election, important 2014 elections are in front of us, and Clinton hasn’t even decided whether she will run. But the well-oiled Republican attack industry has thrown everything at her but the kitchen sink.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Last week, the Republican-led House Intelligence Committee confirmed what we've known all along: its most tried and most misleading attack, Benghazi, is baseless.

The committee's two-year investigation-turned-political-shenanigan has further discredited right-wing conspiracy theorists. No deliberate wrongdoing occurred, there was no intelligence failure before the attack and no stand-down order was issued. Furthermore, Clinton took responsibility, took action and was fully transparent.

Now, the right is left with nothing. And yet they continue to try to mislead the American people.

Why would right-wing extremists devote their time, energy and money so far away from an election attempting to discredit someone who hasn't even decided to be a candidate? It's as simple as apple pie: If Clinton runs, their agenda is in trouble.

They have to stop her in order to secure a shot at the presidency for themselves.

But their baseless and politically-motivated attacks on the tragedy in Benghazi haven't worked. They have been proved false time and time again. Truth rises; lies sink. In the course of our work, I've seen seven key themes emerge. I wanted to share them with you all.

1. Public opinion is much better for Clinton now than it was in 2008. The strength of Clinton's poll numbers now, compared to this time in the 2008 cycle, is astonishing. This widespread favorability extends outside the Beltway to Iowa and New Hampshire, where her favorability ratings with Democrats are 89 percent and 94 percent respectively.

2. Americans across the ideological spectrum are looking positively to a potential Clinton run. Republicans are trying every tactic in the book, even trying to convince Democrats that Clinton is not liberal enough. But only 6 percent of liberal Democrats don't think she should run for president.

3. Voters, specifically Democrats, are eager for her experience. If Clinton chooses to run, she will be the most qualified candidate in the modern history of the United States.

4. Clinton is in step with her party on core issues, particularly income inequality. While Republicans try to convince people that she doesn't connect with the liberal base on income inequality, her lifelong record and her own words tell us differently.

5. No credible challenger can amass the kind of broad party support Clinton has. The energy and excitement for Clinton is unprecedented. In all my years in politics, I have never seen such unified excitement for a single potential candidate, while the Republican field is anemic at best.

6. Voters are behind her, not just politicos. What's special about Clinton's broad support is that it's not just people inside the Beltway. Americans across the country have attended rallies, hosted house parties and donated small dollar amounts to Ready for Hillary. On her book tour, people have waited for hours, sometimes even overnight, just to see her, just to get a book signed.

7. Lastly, but most importantly, Hillary Rodham Clinton's work ethic has been on full display for months. Clinton and her supporters, if she chooses to run, do not want a coronation. America is a democracy, not a monarchy; and we do not crown our presidents. Instead, our candidates work for it. Clinton has demonstrated that she's ready and willing to put in the hours. Competition makes you work hard, and she will; she does. And we, her supporters, will work hard, too. These seven themes showcase the excitement, anticipation, and dedicated support for a Clinton candidacy. We must stay focused on the future, because I believe that Hillary is the best person to lead us there. We want someone focused on the hard choices that loom.

In the meantime, I'm waiting to see how House Republicans explain to their constituents back home this August that they're continuing to waste millions of taxpayer dollars funding a wild-goose chase on Benghazi, when their own, Republican-led committee has already determined this attack to be baseless. While they're stuck in the past, Democrats are looking forward.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Glamour: "Career Advice from Hillary Rodham Clinton: 'You Don't Have to Be Perfect. Most Men Never Think Like That.'"

By Cindi Leive

September 2014 [on newsstands on August 12, 2014]

She's been leaning in for four decades—but now, in between a major book tour and a possible history-making presidential run, Hillary Rodham Clinton is putting her feet up and offering "hard-earned" career lessons she says all young women should know. Below, read an excerpt of Editor-in-Chief Cindi Leive's interview with her from Glamour's September issue.

Hillary Rodham Clinton has been many things. You know the list: a lawyer, our First Lady, a senator, a presidential candidate, a pantsuit icon, a political lightning rod (remember health care in the 1990s?), the "most admired woman" in America (for the twelfth year running, according to Gallup), and, most recently, the most traveled secretary of state in American history, visiting 112 countries in that job and doing everything from fighting for human rights in Burma to facing criticism for the attack on the American compound in Benghazi, Libya.

But right now, without a government gig for the first time in over three decades, what she seems most like is a woman in between. Behind her is a high-octane book tour for her new memoir, Hard Choices (not without its speed bumps; her remark to ABC's Diane Sawyer that she and her family were "dead broke" when they left the White House provoked skepticism, and she later acknowledged she could have discussed the subject in a more "artful" way). Ahead of her is a choice about whether to run for president once again, after the 2008 race that won her 18 million votes, exponentially more than any female candidate before her. "Toward the end of the year, beginning of next year, I'll have to make a decision," the Secretary told Glamour. (On The Daily Show, she gamely filled out a career aptitude checklist to help her decide: "Do you like a home office?" Jon Stewart asked. Yes, she said, she did.)

In the meantime, though, she is focusing on an issue women of all political parties—people of all political parties—can and should get behind: the advancement of women and girls around the world. Nineteen years ago this month, then First Lady Clinton delivered a 20-minute speech in Beijing that put the phrase "women's rights are human rights" on the map; today, at the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation, she has launched No Ceilings: The Full Participation Project, dedicated to collecting data on the state of women globally. "No Ceilings will effect change for millions of women and girls in the twenty-first century," Melinda Gates, cochair of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, tells Glamour. "I'm optimistic that it will [help address] these inequalities once and for all." I interviewed Secretary Clinton about that—and about her career advice for women, because the book offers a detailed portrait of her work life: negotiating, networking, mentoring, and being mentored.

Here, excerpts from our interview, the complete version of which can be found in the September issue of Glamour, available on tablet now or on newsstands starting August 12. Listen in for her advice on everything from networking to dealing with doubters. Whether or not you share her political views, she's a work coach with serious experience to share.

Cindi Leive: You've been on the book tour to end all book tours! One of the things that I found fascinating about your book was the amount of personal-relationship building that goes into diplomacy—the long walks, the teas, the personal conversations that then allow you to get things done. Do we underestimate that piece of diplomacy?

Hillary Rodham Clinton: I think we underestimate it even beyond diplomacy. I think that relationships are at the core of any political system and economic system—any family—and I think we drifted away from understanding that in our country. The people-to-people level is critical. It is ironic, though—we can text with anybody in the world, we can have a videoconference with anybody in the world, but [there should be] an even higher premium on showing up and getting to know someone. Looking them in the eye, listening to them, trying to understand where they're coming from.... When I became secretary of state, I felt one of my primary jobs was building relationships around the world. And I did spend a lot of time and effort thinking through, How do I connect with this person?...

CL: You've said many times that your own approach to sexism, when you encounter it, is to just smile and keep going. But it can get pretty vile—during the 2008 presidential campaign we all remember the use of the word bitch. How do you know when you should smile and when you really have to call somebody out?

HRC: There's no easy answer. I'll give you some guidelines. I have generally not responded if it's about me. And I have responded if it's about somebody else, because if women in general are being degraded, are being dismissed, then I can respond in a way that demonstrates I'm not taking it personally but I'm really serious about rejecting that kind of behavior. Now, sometimes when it is about me...you have to not just remain silent but try to figure out a proper response—again, though, not going to the place of anger and feeling sorry for yourself, because that kind of plays into the hands of the sexists.... It does take practice though, Cindi. This is not something that your average 25-year-old—well, let me talk about myself: me at 25—would have either fully grasped or been able to respond to. So I've got a lot of hard-earned lessons that I can fall back on.... Back when I was going to school, I remember being in a big conference hall at Harvard and taking the Law School Admission Test...and some of the men were just rattling us.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CL: How?

HRC: [Saying], "What are you doing here? You shouldn't be here." "You're taking a place of a man who could maybe get drafted and die in Vietnam." It was just really personal! Personal and pointed. So I was in that group who were kind of on the front lines of a lot of this change. I think we're in a much better place than we were, but we still have to stand up for ourselves, and stand up for each other. Women standing up for each other is critically important.

CL: You've talked a lot about the importance of young women running for office. I hear from many of our readers that they're not all that interested. They think it just looks like it's going to be incredibly difficult—a blood sport.

HRC: It is.

CL: You quote Theodore Roosevelt, who called it "the arena." That sounds like The Hunger Games! How do you persuade women this is something worth doing?

HRC: I start by saying there are many ways to be influential. I mean, you can work for politicians...or in government and make a difference.... And for young women who are interested in running for office, you just have to decide you're going to follow Eleanor Roosevelt's maxim about growing skin as thick as the hide of a rhinoceros, and you have to be incredibly well-prepared—better prepared [than a man], actually—and you have to figure out how you're going to present yourself, and you have to have a support group around you, because it can be really a brutal experience. But I think if you were to talk to women who have run, both successfully and unsuccessfully, nearly all of them would say, "You learn so much." You learn about yourself, what you're capable of doing.... And it doesn't have to all happen when you're young—I mean, one of the most powerful women in American politics is Nancy Pelosi. She had five children. She didn't go into politics until her youngest child was in high school.... That's one of the great things about being a woman in today's world: You have a much longer potential work life than our mothers or our grandmothers did.

CL: You joke about the attention paid to your hair, to your pantsuits, to every fashion choice. Is it ever valid to look at those things?

HRC: It is. I mean, clearly people should meet an acceptable threshold of appropriateness! [Laughs.] But I think that for many women in the public eye, it just seems that the burden is so heavy. We're doing a job that is not a celebrity job or an entertainment or fashion job.... In a professional setting, treat us as professionals.... [And] it takes a lot of time. I've often laughed with my male colleagues, like, "What did you do? You took a shower, you combed your hair, you put your clothes on. I couldn't do that."

CL: If the next president, whoever he or she might be, is a Democrat, that person may face a Republican House and Senate. What do you think that president can actually hope to get done, given how little the parties seem to want to work together right now?

HRC: I don't in any way underestimate the difficulties, because it's only gotten harder. But I do think you just have to go into it with the attitude that you're going to speak clearly and authentically about what you see the country needs...and seek out whatever possible partners you can, even in the other party. I've looked at successful presidents going back. Some of our most successful governed through periods when their party was in charge, and when the other party was in charge. There's no magic formula.

CL: Esquire once said that your job as secretary of state was to "deal with difficult men."

HRC: There's truth to that!

CL: What advice do you have for our readers about how to deal with difficult men or women at work?

HRC: I will say, keeping your head down and doing the best job you can in the beginning gives you the opportunity to be evaluated on the basis of the contributions you are making. I often would listen more than talk in my early meetings with people.... [Then], when you feel strongly about your work or about a position, you'll be given more attention [than] if you hadn't done that constantly.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the same time, you cannot be afraid to present yourself. And sometimes that takes practice. If you're not comfortable with public speaking—and nobody starts out comfortable, you have to learn how to be comfortable—practice. I cannot overstate the importance of practicing. Get some close friends or family members to help evaluate you, or somebody at work that you trust.

CL: Women know they need a mentor. I'm curious—how do you decide, in your own professional life, who you want to mentor?

HRC: I look for people who have raw intelligence and a great work ethic and loyalty, and I can quickly identify people who have the right ingredients. But sometimes it is more difficult to get them to accept the fact that they can take on increasing responsibility....Oftentimes individuals will decide how far [they] go by how much work they're willing to put in and how quick they are to ask for help. I consider that one of the great skills: Too many people...have this deep-seated fear that if they ask for help, they will be thought less of. In my [view], they'll be thought more of.

CL: I thought it was interesting in the book how many times you asked people for advice. You called [American diplomat] Richard Holbrooke, [former Secretary of State] Condoleezza Rice—

HRC: I'm a big believer in that, because I don't think any of us have the answers to everything. There's no human being on earth who fits that category. So why wouldn't you ask for help? Why wouldn't you run ideas by people that you respect? Too many young people cast around trying to figure out what the answer is themselves, because they're afraid to come back and say, "I'm not sure I understood you," or "Could you give me a little more information about what you need?" Just do that. It saves you time, it saves your boss's or mentor's time. And it's a great lesson to learn.

CL: Do women feel that they have to be perfect from day one?

HRC: Yes! And that's a huge impediment that we impose upon ourselves. And I've seen it in so many talented young women who hold back because they're not sure that what they say will be smart enough. Or maybe they've said something in a prior meeting, and people acted like they hadn't said it, and that was crushing. Then we have all had the experience where 20 minutes later, a man says the same thing and everybody responds positively.... So don't take it personally. Take it seriously so that you understand it, and then try to devise techniques to overcome it. And I think this..."perfectionist gene" that too many young women have holds them back, and instead they should be really aiming for "good enough." You don't have to be perfect. Most men never think like that. They're just trying to figure out what's the opening and how they can seize it. They're not thinking about, Oh my gosh, I'm not perfect, my hair's not perfect today, I wore the wrong shoes. No.

Long Island Press: "Hillary Clinton's Book Revue Signing in Huntington Draws Hundreds"

By Spencer Rumsey

August 7, 2014

Some women had been waiting outside Huntington's Book Revue from 11 p.m. the night before, others had been there since daybreak as the line wound around the block. Their goal was the same: get a signed copy of Hillary Clinton's new book, Hard Choices, and lug the 635-page memoir home with them. In all, the store sold out its supply of 1,200 books—and the staff lamented that they could've moved more product if they'd had the inventory.

Across the street was a much smaller group of boisterous people who would never dream of reading anything written by New York's former senator and ex-first lady as they made clear by their shouts denouncing her. They stood on the corner of New York Avenue behind a police barricade, waving the yellow "Don't Tread on Me" flag that has become an emblem of the Tea Party, holding placards promoting Fox News and denouncing Clinton for "lying." One young man proudly displayed a black T-shirt with white lettering that read, "Liberalism is a mental disorder." A middle-aged guy wearing a tan cowboy hat yelled at Clinton's booklovers that "You don't even know who Benghazi is!" Not so, shouted a man in line outside the book store, "Yeah, he's Will Benghazi's brother!" That riposte drew a big laugh from his side of the street.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The mood inside the Book Revue was ebullient as the line of people weaved between the stacks and up the stairs to a balcony and down. Each patron had been frisked by the Secret Service, and the store was closed to customers after 2 p.m.The bathroom was off limits after 5 o'clock. There were a few people in wheelchairs, an elderly woman in a walker who'd come from Hempstead, and an infant dressed in a red, white and blue jumper.

Clinton sat down exactly at 6 o'clock, as promised, sparking applause and cheers, greeting the crowd with a big smile, "It's good to see you! Thank you for coming!" Beaming beside her were Huntington Supervisor Frank Petrone, Town Councilwoman Susan Berland, and State Comptroller Tom DiNapoli—all Democrats and all big fans. They posed for the first pictures and took off. The store staff and volunteers, plus a handful of interns, kept people moving like a human conveyor belt. There was constant laughter and chatter.

Many people were wearing red and blue stickers on their shirts that read "I'm ready for Hillary!" and some even had T-shirts proclaiming "Hillary in 2016!" She hasn't come close to declaring whether she's going to run for president, but these people on line had already made up their minds. She could count on them.

"I wanted the chance to possibly look in the face of the future female leader of the free world," said a young woman from Huntington, who said she was a registered Democrat but declined to give her name. She'd been waiting since 9:30 a.m."with about 30 people" ahead of her. And more than a thousand people eventually lined up behind her.

The last time Clinton had been at the Book Revue for a signing, J.K. Rowling had just released another Harry Potter book so the store was packed. "We had Hillary people and Harry Potter people," said Loren Aliperti, the Book Revue's event coordinator, with a smile. "That was the biggest business day we've ever had!"

For 23-year-old Danielle Steinmetz of Wantagh, meeting Clinton was one more thing to cross off from her bucket list.

"I am a huge Hillary fan! I just love her," said Steinmetz. "She's such an inspiration and a role model! It's great to finally meet her—it's a dream come true!"

Wall Street Journal: "U.S. Ties to Myanmar Are Called Into Question"

By Shibani Mahtani

August 7, 2014, 11:20 a.m. EDT

YANGON, Myanmar—With U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry expected to visit Myanmar for a regional security summit this weekend, some U.S. lawmakers and human rights watchdogs are warning of stalled overhauls and urging reconsideration of the increasingly cozy relations between the two countries.

The pressure on the U.S. to be harsher in its dealings with the Myanmar government, analysts say, reflects a growing skepticism—in Washington and beyond—toward the depth of the country's reforms, posing a challenge for the Obama administration, which has touted Myanmar's democratic transition as one of its biggest foreign-policy achievements.

Last week, 72 members of the U.S. House of Representatives, both Democrats and Republicans, warned in a letter to Mr. Kerry that conditions in Myanmar "have taken a sharp turn for the worse on a number of important fronts." They pointed to "horrific images of emaciated children" that continue to emerge from Rakhine state, where more than 140,000 mostly Rohingya Muslims remain displaced in camps after communal riots two years ago.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The U.S. lawmakers also warned of what they described as "stalled political reforms" linked to a slow and uncertain process around amending the military-drafted 2008 constitution, which gives the military a veto power over political changes and bars opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi from assuming the presidency.

"Just as the beginning of the reform process required a calibrated reassessment of U.S. policy three years ago, recent disturbing developments call for a significant recalibration now," their letter said.

Other groups like Human Rights Watch and PEN American Center, the free-expression advocacy group, have urged Mr. Kerry to keep human rights and freedom of expression issues high on his agenda. The Myanmar government recently sentenced four journalists and the chief executive of their newspaper to a decade in prison for a report on an alleged military-run chemical weapons facility.

Mr. Kerry will be visiting Myanmar for the Association of Southeast Asian Nations' Regional Forum on Aug. 10, held in the capital of Naypyitaw since Myanmar chairs the bloc this year. He will also hold bilateral meetings with the Myanmar government.

The souring of sentiment is in contrast to Hillary Clinton's celebrated visit to Myanmar almost three years ago. It was the first visit of a U.S. secretary of state to visit in almost six decades.

"Today there's more skepticism about the reforms," said Murray Hiebert, a senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington. Some U.S. lawmakers, he adds, "argue that Washington has gone too far too fast in relaxing sanctions, and exploring some military-to-military relations."

In 2012, Washington reversed its harsh policy of sanctions against Myanmar, slowly lifting economic sanctions and beginning a steady process of engaging with those it once blacklisted, starting with the former generals who make up the new nominally-civilian government.

But this recent increased pressure on Mr. Kerry proves a conundrum for Mr. Obama's administration, which has consistently credited Myanmar's reform success here to its own efforts. In Mrs. Clinton's recently launched book called "Hard Choices," a chapter on Myanmar—describing in detail her 2011 visit and the U.S. efforts in engaging with the reformist government of President Thein Sein —ends with the line: "It was America at its best." Any backsliding, analysts say, could stain this legacy and harm Mrs. Clinton's bid for the Democratic nomination in 2016.

Those close to Myanmar's reform process, though, continue to see U.S. support — and the support of their businesses — as a crucial tenet of country's success, where investment is just starting to create new jobs and bolster the gross domestic product of a still-impoverished nation.

Pushing for the "resumption of the former U.S. policy of ostracism" must be avoided for reforms and economic development to continue, said Romain Caillaud, managing director of political consultancy Vriens & Partners in Yangon. Mr. Caillaud has been based in the city for more than six years.

"Western businesses have a key role to play in this process of change that started a few years ago only, and discouraging their investment in Myanmar would not serve the objectives of policy makers in Washington, or of the population of Myanmar," he added.

CNN: "Russia gives Snowden 3-year residency"

By Joe Sterling

August 7, 2014, 8:10 a.m. EDT

Edward Snowden, who leaked secret information about U.S. spying programs, has been granted an extension to stay in Russia for three more years, his attorney said in a televised press conference in Moscow Thursday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Snowden recently formally requested that Russia's government extend his temporary asylum, and Snowden attorney Anatoly Kucherena said the request had been accepted.

"As of August 1, 2014, Snowden has received residency for three years," Kucherena told reporters Thursday.

Snowden's temporary asylum in Russia ended on July 31. He'd been holed up at a Moscow airport for five weeks before the Russian government granted asylum for one year on August 1, 2013.

Snowden has kept busy working for a Russian website and speaking out on the disclosures about the U.S. government's spying programs and processes that he helped make public.

Snowden's disclosures in 2013 made him an icon among those who praised him for risking his future to expose these secrets and a villain among those who accused him of being a lawbreaker who betrayed the United States.

The former government information technology contractor collected information on spy programs -- in which the NSA mined phone and Internet metadata from thousands of people inside and outside of the United States -- and exposed the programs to the media.

U.S. authorities have charged him with espionage and theft of government property.

No change in U.S. stance

The White House says the extension of Snowden's asylum in Russia doesn't change the U.S. government's desire for his return.

"There's been no change in our position: Mr. Snowden faces felony charges here in the United States," said Ned Price, a spokesman for the National Security Council.

"He should return to the U.S. as soon as possible, where he will be accorded full due process and protections."

U.S. intelligence agencies fear Snowden has achieved celebrity as a leaker and could be inspiring others to disclose classified national security information.

Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton recently commented on Snowden's case in an interview with the German magazine Der Spiegel.

"I think he is a poor messenger for the message that he's trying to take credit for," she told the magazine.

"I think he could have provoked the debate in our country without stealing and distributing material that was government property and was of some consequence," Clinton said.

Town Hall opinion: Conn Carroll: "Hillary Clinton's Corporate Welfare Bank Problem"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Conn Carroll

August 7, 2014

Hillary Clinton may have already wrapped up the Democratic Party's 2016 presidential nomination, but she is still having trouble connecting with non-Democratic partisans. According to the latest The Economist/YouGov poll, just 38 percent of Americans believe Hillary "understands the problems facing ordinary middle class people" while 44 percent of Americans say she does not.

Former-Clinton White House political director Doug Sosnik may have recently inadvertently explained why. In a 2013 memo he wrote:

“Americans' long-brewing discontent shows clear signs of reaching a boiling point. And when it happens, the country will judge its politicians through a new filter—one that asks, ‘Which side of the barricade are you on? Is it the side of the out-of-touch political class that clings to the status quo by protecting those at the top and their own political agendas, or is it the side that is fighting for the kind of change that will make the government work for the people—all the people?’”

And which side of that barricade is Hillary on?

One need look no further than the cozy relationship between Boeing, the Clintons, and the Export Import Bank.

In 2010, just months after then-Secretary of State Hillary Clinton helped Boeing land a $3.7 billion deal with a Russian firm, Boeing returned the favor by contributing $900,000 to the William J. Clinton Foundation.

All of these wheels were greased, of course, with taxpayer dollars through the Export Import Bank, which helped finance Boeing's 2010 deal with Putin's state-owned holding company.

Former-President Bill Clinton has since gone to bat for the Export Import Bank, an entity that candidate-Barack Obama once called, "little more than a fund for corporate welfare."

At an Africa Business Forum this week, the former-president said, "Economics is not theology. If you're running a country, you've got to try to create an opportunity for all of your businesses to be competitive. ... That's all the Ex-Im bank does, and I've heard more ridiculous things said about the Ex-Im bank in the last six months than I have in my adult life."

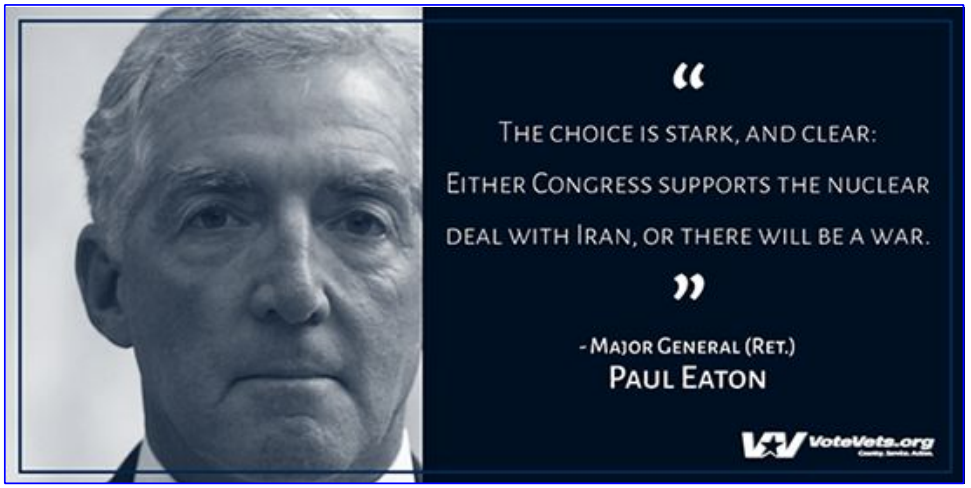
What Clinton forgot to mention, other then the lucrative way that Export Import bank subsidies get funneled through Boeing and into his foundation, is that the Export Import Bank often subsidizes deals that end up hurting American businesses and killing American jobs. Just ask Delta Airlines which recently told Congress that subsidized Ex-Im financing of Boeing products hurts their bottom line.

The reality is that the Export-Import Bank does not create any net jobs. Whatever jobs it does create for the corporations it subsidizes are lost by non-subsidized businesses.

The only reason the Clintons support the Export-Import Bank is because it gives them an opportunity to graft off of the corporate welfare banks transactions.

These are exactly the type of crony capitalist deals that Americans, especially "ordinary middle class people" are sick and tired of.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



From:	"Jon Soltz, VoteVets.org" <info@votevets.org>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	7/15/2015 9:14:13 AM
Subject:	[Iran] The voices of veterans and VoteVets supporters

VoteVets.org
Country. Service. Action.

I don't know if you had a chance to read the email General Eaton sent yesterday, John, but he is right: "Either Congress supports the nuclear deal with Iran, or there will be a war."

Veterans, military family members, and VoteVets' supporters have a very important voice and role to play in this debate. Make it heard.

Sign our petition urging Congress to support the agreement reached by our negotiators designed to separate Iran from their nuclear ambitions.

Thank you for adding your name.

Jon Soltz
Iraq War Veteran and Chairman
VoteVets

PAID FOR BY VOTEVETS ACTION FUND

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, click here . Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe. We try to send only the most important information and opportunities to participate via email. To sustain VoteVets with a contribution click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Cammie Croft" <ccroft@progressivemediausa.org>
To: "big campaign" <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com>
Date: 6/25/2008 7:22:15 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Speech on Energy Security Las Vegas, NV

Hi All,

Just off the phone with our tracker Andres who is on the ground in Las Vegas, NV today. Below are the notes from our call and a copy of McCain's full remarks.

Las Vega, NV - McCain Speech on Energy Security

Background Details:
- President of UNLV gave opening remarks
- Lieutenant Governor Brian Krolicki introduced McCain
- Room fairly small, seating room only
- Audience approximately 150-200 in size
- The event was more formal; many dressed up; older, white crowd
- Surprisingly few college students despite event being at a university
- Usual press -- national, traveling, local affiliates
- Well staffed by campaign

FULL Remarks:
LINK: http://thepage.time.com/full-remarks-of-mccains-vegas-energy-speech/

ARLINGTON, VA — U.S. Senator John McCain will deliver the following remarks as prepared for delivery in Las Vegas, NV, today at 10:30 a.m. PDT (1:30 p.m. EDT):
Thank you all very much. It's good to be here in Las Vegas, and I appreciate your inviting me to speak about America's energy problems. Some might think Vegas an unlikely setting for a discourse touching on energy conservation. And in the interest of brevity, I'll just skip the part about air conditioning and neon lighting.

Political campaigns have a way of settling on a few great questions, with little regard for the expectations of pundits, and even less concern for the carefully crafted strategies of the candidates themselves. These questions are rarely easy. Politicians usually avoid them for just that reason. And so it is good when events intrude on the familiar routine of stale soundbites, staged rallies, and over-managed messages, and turn to the concerns of the people themselves. In this election, the price and security of energy in America is one of those great questions.

It is an urgent question because the rising price of oil has brought hardship to our country, and threatens to bring much more. Gasoline at well over four dollars a gallon is bad enough all by itself, but it also affects the price of everything else. The cost of living is rising. The value of paychecks is falling. Many of our citizens can't keep up, and we need to think first of them. As a country, we find ourselves caught between the rock of slower growth and the hard place of inflation. All of this, in large part, because the price of oil is too high, the supply of oil is too uncertain, and we depend on oil too much.

Energy security is a vital question because it concerns America's most fundamental interests, and above all the safety of our citizens from the violence of the world. All the tact of diplomacy cannot conceal a blunt reality. When we buy foreign oil, we are enriching some of our worst enemies. And in the Middle East, Venezuela, and elsewhere, these regimes know how to use the power of that wealth.

In the case of Iran, despite our own sanctions, they use it to pursue nuclear weapons. They use it to threaten Israel and other democracies. Elsewhere, oil wealth allows undemocratic governments to control their own people — to crush dissent and to subjugate women. They use it to finance terrorists around the world and criminal syndicates in our own hemisphere. These are some of the most stagnant and oppressive societies on Earth, held back by oil-rich elites who would not last long if their own people had a choice in the matter. From these elites, we get the oil that fuels our productive economy. From us, they get the money that preserves their unjust power. Moreover, by relying upon oil from the Middle East, we not only provide wealth to the sponsors of terror — we provide high-value targets to the terrorists themselves. Across the world are pipelines, refineries, transit routes, and terminals for the oil we r ely on. And Al Qaeda terrorists know where they are.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Even if these other interests were not in the balance, America would still need to follow the straightest path to energy security, because of a threat literally gathering around the Earth itself. Back when Americans first learned to associate the word "energy" with "crisis," we didn't fully understand how fossil fuel emissions retain heat within the atmosphere. We didn't know that over time these greenhouse gasses could warm the planet. We didn't know they could melt glaciers and ice sheets, or raise the waters and alter the balance that sustains life. Good stewardship, prudence, and simple common sense demand that we act to meet this challenge, act quickly, and act together.

Energy security requires unity because it is not just one issue among many — another box on the candidate questionnaire. Our country's need for a safe, clean, and affordable supply of energy is not just one more competitor for attention in Washington, one more special interest in an overcrowded field. The great issue of energy security is the sum total of so many problems that confront our nation. And it demands of us that we shake off old ways, negotiate new hazards, and make hard choices long deferred.

This is a matter that has confounded nearly twenty Congresses and seven presidents. Yet even now our energy debates carry the echoes of ten, twenty, or even thirty years ago. We hear the same calls for new energy taxes, instead of new energy production. We are offered the same agenda of inaction — that long recitation of things we cannot do, energy we cannot produce, refineries we cannot build, plants we cannot approve, coal we cannot use, technologies we cannot master. The timid litany of limitations goes on and on. And it says more about the culture of Washington than it does about the character of America.

In the same way, energy bills are debated, passed, and signed into law with little serious thought to energy reform — but never without the familiar corporate handouts and fighting over scraps of pork. Even now, some in Washington still seem to think the best plan is a direct, heartfelt appeal for Saudi sympathy, as if that conveyed anything other than weakness. In the way of new ideas, a majority of the House of Representatives actually voted in favor of suing OPEC, as if we can litigate our way to energy security.

Ladies and gentlemen, America is going to meet this great challenge, but we are not going to do it as a supplicant or as a plaintiff. We are not going to meet it with words at all. We are going to meet it with action. And we are going to meet this challenge in a way consistent with the character of our nation. Three decades of partisan paralysis on energy security is enough. Since I am not president, I cannot say the buck stops here — but I will say that it must stop now.

Should I be entrusted with the honor of that office, I will break the stalemate in Washington, and I will put this country on a course to energy security. I will authorize and support new exploration and production of America's own oil and gas reserves — because we cannot outsource the solution to America's energy problem.

Opponents of domestic production cling to their position even as the price of foreign oil has doubled and doubled again. They were against it when a gallon of gas cost two dollars. They are still against it when a gallon of gas cost well above four dollars. And we're left to wonder what it will take to shake their faith in this dogma of dependence on foreign oil. As for me, my convictions place a priority on the well-being of people who cannot afford these ever-rising prices. Every year, we are sending hundreds of billions of dollars out of the country for oil imports, much of it from OPEC, while trillions of dollars' worth of oil reserves in America go unused. As a matter of fairness, we must deal with the here and now, and assure affordable fuel for America by producing more of it ourselves.

Fairness also requires that we reform the oil futures market. We must purge the market of the reckless speculation, unrelated to any kind of productive commerce, that has inflated the price of gasoline — at the expense of working men and women across our country. With new regulations, I intend to assure integrity in oil-futures trading, and to protect the public interest.

The need for more production extends as well to another long-neglected source of energy, and that is nuclear power. Here, too, opposition to this clean and proven technology has more to do politics than with the merits. The experience of nations across Europe and Asia has shown that nuclear energy is efficient. It is safe, it is proven, and it is essential to America's energy future.

Therefore, if I am elected president, I will set this nation on a course to building 45 new reactors by the year 2030. And I will set the goal of 100 new plants to power the homes and factories and cities of America. This task will be as difficult as it is necessary. We will need to recover all the knowledge and skills that have been lost over three stagnant decades in a highly technical field. As Nevadans are well aware, we will need to solve complex problems of moving and storing materials that will always need safeguarding. We will need to do all of these things, and do them right, as we have done great things before.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Perhaps no achievement would do more to secure our energy future than the mastery of clean-coal technology. From Wyoming to West Virginia, America's coal resources are greater than the oil riches of any kingdom of the Middle East. Burning coal cleanly is a challenge of practical problem-solving and human ingenuity — and we have no shortage of those in America either. So, as president, I will commit two billion dollars each year, until 2024, to clean-coal research, development, and deployment. We will build the demonstration plants. We will refine the techniques and equipment. We will deliver not only electricity but jobs to some of the areas hardest hit by our economic troubles. And in the end, we will make clean coal a reality.

The strategy here is to produce more, use less, and invent new ways of doing both. And inventing new ways is what we Americans do. What we need most right now is better and faster innovation in the cars and trucks we drive. And government policy is supposed to serve this purpose. Yet the highest fuel efficiency standards are useless if violations incur no serious penalty. Incentives for the purchase of fuel-efficient cars are too often the handiwork of lobbyists, with all the inconsistency and irrationality that involves. Support for corn-based ethanol has been a case study in the law of unintended consequences, distorting food markets through cropland competition, and depriving America of better and cheaper alternative fuels.

In each case, our government has sought the right objectives, but often with bad execution. And this failure of leadership must end. Standards in fuel efficiency serve a great national goal, and in my administration the penalties will assure compliance. In place of the current patchwork of incentives and credits for hybrids and other carbon-cutting vehicles, we will issue a Clean Car Challenge to the automakers of America, in the form of a single and substantial tax credit to buyers based on the reduction of carbon emissions. For every automaker who can sell a zero-emissions car, we will commit a 5,000 dollar tax credit to each and every customer who buys that car. For other vehicles, whatever type they may be, the lower the carbon emissions, the higher the tax credit.

Instead of playing favorites among the lobbyists, our government must also level the playing field for all alcohol fuels that break the monopoly of gasoline, to lower both gasoline prices and carbon emissions. This can be done with a simple federal standard to hasten the conversion of all new vehicles in America to flex-fuel technology — allowing drivers to use alcohol fuels instead of gas in their cars. Whether it takes a meeting with automakers during my first month in office, or my signature on an act of Congress, we will meet the goal of a swift conversion of American vehicles away from oil.

At the same time, we must not overlook the possibility that one day our cars can run without burning liquid fuels at all. Instead, cars can run on battery power alone, or as plug-in hybrids using both liquids and electricity. Some talented engineers are on the case, but this is a national priority and we must give it national focus. To add urgency to the mission, we will offer a prize of 300 million dollars — a dollar for every citizen — to the creator of a battery package of a size, capacity, cost, and power far surpassing existing technology. In the quest for alternatives to oil, our government has thrown around enough money subsidizing special interests and excusing failure. From now on, we will encourage heroic efforts in engineering, and we will reward the greatest success.

At this moment, some of the best minds in our country are also at work discovering or perfecting alternative technologies. They are not tilting at windmills — they're building them. They are capturing the boundless powers of the sun, the tides, the mighty rivers, and the warmth of the Earth itself. Yet for all the good work of entrepreneurs and inventors in finding cleaner and better technologies, the fundamental incentives of the market are still on the side of carbon-based energy.

Even with oil running at about 140 dollars per barrel, these new alternatives have yet to take the place of oil in our economy for two basic reasons: our infrastructure is outdated and our production capacity has been constrained. And this has to change as we can make the great turn away from fossil fuels. To lead in this effort, our government must strike at the source of the problem — with reforms that only Congress can enact and the president can sign.

We must do this in a way that gives American businesses new incentives and new rewards to seek, instead of just giving them new taxes to pay and new orders to follow. The most direct way to achieve this is through a system that sets clear limits on all greenhouse gases, while also allowing the sale of rights to excess emissions. And this is the proposal I will submit to the Congress if I am elected president — a cap-and-trade system to change the dynamic of our energy economy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For all of the last century, the profit motive basically led in one direction toward machines, methods, and industries that used oil and gas. Enormous good came from that industrial growth, and we are all the beneficiaries of the national prosperity it built. But there were costs we weren't counting, and these have added up now, in the atmosphere, in the oceans, and all across the natural world. And what better way to correct past errors than to turn the creative energies of the free market in the other direction?

Under the cap-and-trade system, this can happen. In all its power, the profit motive will suddenly begin to shift and point the other way toward cleaner fuels, wiser ways, and a healthier planet. As never before, the market would reward any person or company that seeks to invent, improve, or acquire alternatives to carbon-based energy. It is very hard to picture venture capitalists, corporate planners, small businesses and environmentalists all working to the same good purpose. But such cooperation is actually possible, and this reform will set it in motion.

My friends, America's dependence on foreign oil was a troubling situation 35 years ago. It was an alarming situation twenty years ago. It is a dangerous situation today. And starting in the term of the next president, we must take control over our own energy future, and become once again the master of our fate.

In recent days I have set before the American people an energy plan, the Lexington Project — named for the town where Americans asserted their independence once before. And let it begin today with this commitment: In a world of hostile and unstable suppliers of oil, this nation will achieve strategic independence by 2025.

This pledge is addressed to all concerned — to those abroad whose power flows from an accident of geology, and to you, my fellow Americans, whose strength proceeds from unity of purpose. Together, we will break the power of OPEC over the United States. And never again will we leave our vital interests at the mercy of any foreign power.

Some will say this goal is unattainable within that relatively short span of years — it's too hard and we need more time. Let me remind them that in the space of half that time — about eight years — this nation conceived and carried out a plan to take three Americans to the Moon and bring them safely home. In less than a third of that time, the gathered energies of my father's generation built the industrial might that overcame Nazi Germany and imperial Japan. That is the scale of our achievement when we set our minds to a task. That is what this country can do when we see a danger, and declare a purpose, and find the will to act.

As president, I will turn all the apparatus of government in the direction of energy independence for our country — authorizing new production, building nuclear plants, perfecting clean coal, improving our electricity grid, and supporting all the new technologies that one day will put the age of fossil fuels behind us. Much will be asked of industry as well, as automakers and others adapt to this great turn toward new sources of power. And a great deal will depend on each one of us, as we learn to make smarter use of energy, and also to draw on the best ideas of both parties, and work together for the common good.

This Project is not a plan calibrated to please every interest group or to meet every objection. That is how we arrived to our present predicament. That is how energy policy in Washington became a long list of subjects avoided, options ruled out, and possibilities foreclosed. Nor can I promise you that the long-term success of this Project will bring instant relief. In the mission of energy security, some tasks are the work of decades and some the work of years. And they will take all the will and resolve of which we are capable. But I can promise you this. Unless we begin this mission now, nothing will change at all, except for the worse. And when we succeed in the hard reform ahead, your children will live in a more prosperous country, in a more peaceful world.

This is a test of foresight, of political courage, and of the unselfish concern that one generation owes to the next. It is a test of our nation's ability to deal with serious matters in a serious way. It is even a test of America's character, of our capacity to respond to pressure and to overcome adversity. Americans don't hide from history or acquiesce in playing its victims. We make history, and we make the future better than the past. In my life I have seen the character of Americans tested, and tested in the most extreme circumstances, and I never doubt that Americans can do hard things and do them right. That is what is asked of us right now, once again, and together we will see the mission through. Thank you.

--
Cammie L. Croft
Tracking/Media Monitoring Director

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Progressive Media USA
ccroft@progressivemediausa.org
202-609-7679 (office)
206-999-3064 (cell)
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Kristina Schake" <kristinakschake@gmail.com> "Karen Finney" <finneyk8@yahoo.com> "Josh Schwerin" <joshschwerin@gmail.com> "Jesse Ferguson" <jesse@jesseferguson.com> "Jennifer Palmieri" <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com> "Christina Reynolds" <creynolds@gpg.com> "Adrienne Elrod" <adrienne.elrod@gmail.com> "Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com> "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hrcoffice.com> "Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com> "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com> "Amanda Renteria" <amandarenteria@gmail.com> "Marlon Marshall" <marlondmarshall@gmail.com> "Katie Dowd" <katie.w.dowd@gmail.com> "Teddy Goff" <teddy.goff@gmail.com> "Lona Valmoro" <lvalmoro@hrcoffice.com> "Harrell Kirstein" <hkirstein@hillaryclinton.com> "Tyrone Gayle" <tgayle@hillaryclinton.com> "Mike Vlacich" <mvlacich@hillaryclinton.com> "Alex Hornbrook" <ahornbrook@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	4/20/2015 11:11:58 AM
Subject:	Re: NH | Day 1

House party was good. She gave good remarks, people were murmuring about how good she was in such a scenario, and she stayed for 92 minutes, so had a lot of good conversation. Chozick of the NYT, James Pindell of the Boston Globe, and Nancy Cavanaugh of the Eagle Times (local paper) joined to listen to remarks.

All went well.

It was also a good reminder that wall paper is still very much a thing in parts of America.

Ert to Concord now. No more press with us today.

On Apr 20, 2015, at 3:34 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Just departed the baby furniture factory. She did the tour, which will have lots of great images come out of it, and while press couldn't hear her on the tour itself, she referenced what she talked about in the round table a few times, including a comment about all the machines being from other countries at the top.

The round table itself was another natural, substantive conversation on a range of issues, from drug use among young people to the need for a return to vocational training to capital gains taxes and spurring small business growth. A note that she hit hedge fund managers again for not paying their fair share in taxes.

She did very well in the opening, did the four fights, talked about our need to make the middle class mean something again, and did it with little to no looking at her notes sounding very natural.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the end she chatted with the participants and then walked over to shake hands with the guests there. After some brief conversations she doubled back to the center to take some questions. The first question was about Clinton Cash and she did quite well with it, used our line about Republicans being focused on her and her being focused on the issues.

WMUR asked her 2 questions, one about staged events which she handled well, said she was hear to talk to people and doing this how she wanted to do it. The other question was a redux of the Clinton Cash question.

Will send a transcript this afternoon. Headed to Claremont now.

On Apr 20, 2015, at 1:33 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Departed Kristin's Bakery, headed to the message event. She ordered a black tea and worked the room. Sat for about 20 minutes at one of the tables.

On Apr 20, 2015, at 9:53 AM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Road trip had commenced.

Will send event updates here.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Andrew Schwartz" <externalrelations@csis.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/6/2015 2:27:50 PM
Subject: Brzezinski: Russia must work with, not against, America in Syria

To ensure receipt of our email, please add us to your safe senders list

CSIS | CENTER FOR STRATEGIC & INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

Dear Colleague,

As we watch the crisis in Syria spiral further out of control, the world is asking questions of the United States and how it can lead in such a complex region. In this weekend's Financial Times, CSIS Trustee, Counselor and former National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski penned one of the most thoughtful pieces you will read on the crisis in Syria, Russia's involvement, and the need for "strategic boldness" on the part of the United States. As always, his insight is original and thought provoking. Read his piece here.

And in case you haven't seen it yet, check out "Brzezinski on the World " a new video series that explores solutions to today's global challenges in interviews with Dr. Brzezinski himself. The latest episode, On Global Politics , premiered today.

I always welcome your feedback,
Andrew

H. Andrew Schwartz
Senior Vice President for External Relations Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) www.csis.org

1616 RHODE ISLAND AVENUE NW, WASHINGTON, DC 20036 (202) 887.0200 / WWW.CSIS.ORG

To unsubscribe from all CSIS emails, please click here .

Powered By informz

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Maura Pally" <maura.pally@gmail.com>
To:	"Cheryl Mills" <cheryl.mills@gmail.com> "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com> "Heather Samuelson" <heather.samuelson@gmail.com> "Huma Abedin" <ha16@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	7/3/2015 3:18:39 AM
Subject:	Grassley letter
Attachments:	270203826-Senator-Demands-Lynch-Look-Into-Clinton-Ties-to-Shady-Uranium-...[2].pdf

Putting on all of your radars that Grassley sent a letter to AG Lynch (dated June 30th though we just saw it) asking questions about contributions to the Clinton Foundation and the Uranium One deal. Letter is attached. Craig is connecting with comms team to be sure they are aware as well.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jacob Roberts" <jacob@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 8/24/2008 6:50:32 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Sunday 08/24/08

Main Topics: Joebama ticket, McHouses, 'Passed Over'

Summary of Shift: Now that we know Obama's VP selection, pundits speculate over how the Obiden ticket will influence McCain's selection. Extremists rally in Denver to push the party further to the left for the elections. ACORN may have falsified voter registration forms in NV and may possibly face criminal charges. Pundits discuss the new McCain ads with democrats seemingly criticizing Obama and note the Clinton ad is released at 3am.
Fay, even as a 'tropical depression' continues to receive coverage. A Cuban Takewondo Olympian kicks a ref in the face for a disputed decision, receives lifetime ban from the sport. Ayatollah Ali Khamenei praises Ahmadinej ad, saying, 'Adopting an aggressive spirit against world bullies is a sign of the government's loyalty.'

Highlights:
1) Surrogates respond to housing and Biden
   a. ABC: Giuliani stresses that McCain is an ordinary American
   b. CNN: Pawlenty says Obama should be less self-righteous
   c. MSNBC: Porritt pushes the maverick label
   d. MSNBC: Benton claims no McCain opponent has challenged him on qualifications
2) MSNBC: Talking heads wonder weigh in on 'Passed Over'ad

No Clips:
1) CBS - CLARENCE PAGE: "McCain has scored some gains in the polls during that period in which he's been sniping at Obama for being too much of a celebrity while at the same time saying Obama's not well known enough. It's a weird argument but it works."

Clips w/ Labels and Transcriptions:
Highlight#1
Giuliani Sees No Distinction Between One Million-Dollar House and Many (ABC 08/24/08 10:16am)
RUDY GIULIANI: I welcome Joe to the whole effort again. Joe is a friend of mine. He's someone I've known for many years; worked with him when I was in the Justice Department; worked with him on the crime bill, and have great respect for him.

I think this is a problem for Senator Obama, more than anything else, not Joe Biden. I mean Senator Obama has made a choice more out of weakness than strength. It's quite clear, from all of the commentaries, all the things I've heard from democrats, in particular the strong choice would have been Hillary Clinton. The obvious choice would have been Hillary Clinton.

She had 50% of the democratic vote. Obama has 50% of the democratic vote. You almost have to go to extraordinary lengths to avoid her as the vice presidential pick of the party and it seems, to me, that, for whatever reason, that hasn't that been explained a choice was made out of weakness than strength. Don't go at your strongest candidate and then go with a candidate that actually emphasizes all your weaknesses and has been quite vocal about them.

I mean it's Joe Biden who says that [...] to you. I have seen that clip, I think, 100 times between today and yesterday of you asking him whether he was qualified—whether Obama was qualified for being president and Biden was quite clear he didn't believe he was qualified to be president of the United States; not experienced enough.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: [...] Why isn't it toughness to say, 'No,' to Senator Clinton even though she had all that support?

GIULIANI: I think it's actually weakness, isn't it? Is it tough to turn down the person who gives you the best chance to win because it unites your party, or is it some kind of difficulty in dealing with one of your rivals? Honestly, I'm speculating, I don't know.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The only facts I have, George, are the ones that you have. Senator Obama had 50% of the democratic vote. Senator Clinton has 50% of the democratic vote. It's kind of a no-brainer that that's your ticket and now some other ticket, whether it was Biden, Bayh, or Kaine, some of the others that were out there. That all is a way of…this is—the story here is more: the Obama-not-Clinton ticket. Why?

STEPHANOPOULOS: Senator Biden was very—wasn't shy yesterday, at all, about getting into the debate of the week and hear David Axelrod talk about Senator McCain's houses as well. Here's Senator Biden yesterday.

BIDEN: You talk about how much you're worried about being able to pay the bills. That's not a worry John McCain has to worry about. It's a pretty hard experience. He'll have to figure out which of the seven kitchen tables to sit at.

STEPHANOPOULOS: They clearly think they struck a nerve here.

GIULIANI: They do, but they both live in million dollar homes. So, you know—what is that about – people that live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Senator Obama has one.

GIULIANI: I don't know, $1 million house, 2, 3, 4? You're not in a position to point at other people when you're in that 1% of America, in terms of—I mean how many people live in $1 million homes? They both do.

This is not going to be, I think a fruitful way of going about it. It's not the new politics that Senator Obama was talking about. The thing that made Senator Obama popular was change and new politics. Now he selects a 35-year veteran of the senate, a Washington insider.

Certainly not change by anybody's definition and he's engaging in the same kind of political negative attacks that everybody else ever engaged in and trying to paint this as a new campaign. George, it simply isn't a new campaign. In fact t his is the reason why he's underperforming in his party.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But, Mayor, presumably, you know how many homes you have. Don't you think this will resonate with voters struggling to get by. Doesn't it worry you at all?

GIULIANI: No, no, no. You know why? Because I know John so well. One thing—there are certain stereotypes that work in attacks on candidates and others that don't.

Trying to convince the American people John McCain is not a regular guy isn't going to work. Now he's a good friend of mine. I know him in ways the American people are just getting to know him. I've been at baseball games with him, football games with him. We've talked sports. We've talked lots of things. We've gone out together. this is a regular guy that almost any American could relate to.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Okay. Mayor Giuliani, the McCain team has been sounding out party leaders about the prospect of picking a pro-choice running mate as you know and this has met a pretty violent reaction from many conservatives including Rush Limbaugh, take a listen.

RUSH LIMBAUGH: He's gonna hurt himself by putting a liberal republican on the ticket—particularly pro-choice. If they do that, if the McCain camp does that, they will have effectively destroyed the Republican Party and pushed the conservative movement into the bleachers.

STEPHANOPOULOS: There already is an enthusiasm gap among the republicans, as you know. Are you worried a pro-choice running mate would suppress the base?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

GIULIANI: No. What I want John to select is the best possible candidate, and I think John has such a strong record on being pro-life, 100%, as far as I can tell. From the very beginning, the first moment he got into politics, you couldn't have a candidate with a stronger record on pro-life. You couldn't have a candidate that's more committed to appointing judges like Roberts, like Scalia, like the judges who have been appointed by—Alito. I mean these are judges that Biden voted against. These are judges that, in some cases, he wasn't in the senate that presumably Obama would vote against.

Those are things that bring conservatives around, and, of course, he'll select a conservative. John is a conservative. He always has been, but I think he's not going to get down to a one-issue situation. Nobody is at 100% […]. You can pretty much vet me in 15 minutes by Googling me.

Pawlenty on McCain's Opulence: 'Give Me a Break' (CNN 08/24/08 11:15am)
TIM PAWLENTY: Well, of course, Pennsylvania is a swing state. I'm campaigning for Senator McCain here and Ohio the next couple of days but we're in Allentown this morning.

WOLF BLITZER: Are you ready to debate a native son of Scranton, Pennsylvania, that would be Joe Biden, the senior senator from Delaware?

PAWLENTY: Well, John McCain is I'm sure going to make a great pick for vice president. We'll know who that is soon. Whoever it is I think will have a better record for Pennsylvania and America than Barack Obama and Joe Biden and, by the way, I think we should listen to Joe Biden when he said Barack Obama is not ready to be President of the United States and Hillary Clinton said much the same. If I was a Hillary Clinton supporter this morning I'd be scratching my head.

BLITZER: But she issued a statement praising the selection of Joe Biden as the vice presidential running mate. She and Joe Biden are very close and thinks like a lot of other folks he'll bring some gravitas and national security experience, foreign policy experience to the ticket.

PAWLENTY: Well, I think the selection of Joe Biden really is an admission or an acknowledgement that Barack Obama did not have that experience or credentials as Joe Biden, Hillary Clinton and Evan Bayh and others said about Barack Obama so we should listen to him. I don't think he's ready to be president and when you're commander in chief you shouldn't have to select a mentor to help with you that role.

BLITZER: But he is a formidable debater and a very good talker, Joe Biden. Let me get back to that initial question. Whether or not you're going to be John McCain's running mate and we know you're high up there on the list, on the short list, do you feel that you would be ready to go one on one with Joe Biden in that kind of a debate?

PAWLENTY: I think if you look at Joe Biden he's somebody who is very long winded. I don't address the VP questions, but I think any of the people that Senator McCain is thinking about for vice president would be more than hold their own against Senator Biden [sic].

BLITZER: We know that John McCain has a lot of national and foreign policy experience, but what about you? What would you bring to the table on that issue?

PAWLENTY: Wolf, I just don't talk about the VP speculation anymore, whether you're John McCain or anybody else who is running for president. What you're looking for somebody who can step in and be president of the United States. Number two, you want someone who shares your overall direction and vision and values for the country and, number three, I hope there will be some chemistry in terms of issues and geography and the synergy between the two individuals. I think those are some of the characteristics or the dynamics that senator McCain will be looking at.

BLITZER: We'll move on to something else, but do you believe that you will be ready, God forbid, if necessary, to step up and be President of the United States?

PAWLENTY: [chuckles] John McCain is going to pick somebody with that as a first criteria so whoever he picks, that person will be ready to be President of the United States.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BLITZER: Joe Biden and John McCain have been friends in the senate for a long time, more than 20 years, but listen to what he said, Biden yesterday, at that joint event in Springfield, Illinois.

JOE BIDEN: I've been disappointed in my friend John McCain who gave into the right wing of his party and yielded to the very swift boat politics that he once so deplored.

BLITZER: All right, you want to respond because there's a lot of concern that John McCain, at least, on the democrat—on the part of the democrats, that he's moving towards that kind of negative politics, something you don't like personally, I know that.

PAWLENTY: Well, when you see the difference between John McCain and Barack Obama, it's not even a close call and as people move into the fall and get serious about finalizing their decision about president of the United States I think it's fair to give them information about the records, the values, the perspectives of these two candidates.

I'm here in Pennsylvania and when Barack Obama said in San Francisco that people turn to gods and guns because they are bitter and even mentioned Pennsylvania as an example of that type of attitude, it reflects a serious miscalculation and misunderstanding of traditional and important American values and perspectives about the second amendment and faith and bringing those kinds of issues forward, comparing and contrasting the candidates, is fair game, Wolf.

BLITZER: The other day in that interview with politico.com Senator McCain couldn't say exactly how many houses he and his wife Cindy McCain own and Obama wasted no time in saying this on Thursday. Listen to this.

BARACK OBAMA: If you think that being rich means you've got to make $5 million and if you don't know how many houses you have, then it's not surprising that you might think the economy was fundamentally strong.

BLITZER: […] What do you say to that charge that John McCain is simply out of touch with mainstream middle class working America?

PAWLENTY: Give me a break. John McCain is the one out there saying we've got to bring down energy prices and drilling offshore, by using nuclear energy, by having a gas tax holiday—Barack Obama opposes all that. Those are mainstream pocketbook issues that John McCain has been all over and Barack Obama has said no to. On the housing issue, give me a break.

Barack Obama made over $4 million last year. He's got a million dollar home that he had some dealings with a shady character to get it. He's got his own housing issues and, for him to bring this up, he should be careful about being so self-righteous about it because he's got his own issues when it comes to housing.

Porritt Discusses the Republican's DNC Plans (MSNBC 08/24/08 9:25am)
CHRIS JANSING: So what big names are we going to see there on the Republican side?

BEN PORRITT: We'll you're going see a variety of names, governors, senators. Gov. Mitt Romney, Tim Pawlenty will be out there. We'll also have a presence with Senator John McCain continuing to go on the campaign trail and really highlight the questions that differentiate these two candidates. But we'll have a presence there. And we just want to pose the questions of leadership and inexperience of Barack Obama.

JANSING: So as I understand it, you'll have people, like you said, Mitt Romney, Governor Pawlenty, I understand Rudy Giuliani is scheduled to be there as well. Working . . . within walking distance of the convention site. You might say it's smart strategy. Some other people might say it's really not the way the game should be played. They get their week, then you get the next week. Is there a fine line that you have to sort of walk with this kind of counterinsurgency?

PORRITT: Well, rapid response never sleeps in politics but I think more importantly this is a great opportunity for us to contrast the two candidates that we have. Barack Obama is posing himself as the next president of the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

United States. And the truth is, is that we don't feel he's ready. He lacks the leadership. He lacks the credentials. And on the other side John McCain has been ready for this his entire life. He's put the country first, he's served the country and when it comes to the very basic question of who is ready to be the next commander in chief, the answer is John McCain.

JANSING: So that is clearly going to be your key talking point, is the question of experience. Would you expect the democrats to be doing the same thing when you start your convention the next week?

PORRITT: Well, if that's the debate they want to have: of experience versus inexperience, that is a great topic for us. John McCain has served his country his entire life. And Barack Obama has a weak record, he has a weak record on the econ—

JANSING: You know what their response is. You know their response is yes, he has a record, but his record is to support many of the policies of George Bush who has the lowest approval ratings in the history of polling in terms of the presidency.

PORRITT: Well, John McCain is a maverick. He's based his entire career on being a maverick. He challenged President Bush in the 2000 election, he's challenged President Bush on being a financial, uh, fiscal conservative. The attack there that this is a McCain and Bush just doesn't hold water. And the truth is, is that these are more old policies of the past brought to you by a new face in the Democrat Party in Barack Obama.

Cyrstal Benton On Biden's Selection and McCain Campaign's Response (MSNBC 10:29am)
CHRIS JANSING: Let me get the McCain reaction to Joe Biden as the running mate for Barack Obama.

CRYSTAL BENTON: . . . the selection of Joe Biden, as Barack Obama's running mate is revealing. It's an admission by his campaign that Barack Obama doesn't have the judgment or experience to lead from day one. Barack Obama's campaign would have the American people believe that that 3:00 a.m. call is a conference call and that's simply not the case. There's one president and this November, voters will go to the polls and select the candidate with the experience and a proven record of putting this country's interest first, and that man is John McCain.

JANSING: Joe Biden wasted no time in attacking John McCain yesterday . . .

JOE BIDEN: You talk about how much you're worried about being able to pay the bills. Well, ladies and gentlemen, that's not a worry John McCain has to worry about. It's a pretty hard experience. He'll have to figure out which of the seven kitchen tables to sit at.

JANSING: Clear, the Democrats are going to paint John McCain as somebody who is out of touch with the concerns and problems of middle class America. We know we can look at the polls and see that this is going to be an election about pocketbook issues. What's your response to what is clearly the first in a series of talking points about the economy from the Democrats?

BENTON: Sure. Well, Chris, we're confident that Joe Biden is going to continue to be an attack dog on the trail. We saw throughout the Democratic primary election as he attacked Barack Obama on whether or not he was ready to lead. John McCain is ready to take office and lead on the critical issues that hard-working American families face—

JANSING: But is John McCain likely to be able to pick a vice presidential running mate that hasn't done exactly the same thing? You could probably pull any Republican debate and take almost any of these other candidates and hear him speak negatively about John McCain, and, yet, still be in the running for vice president.,

BENTON: Sure, Chris. There's a difference, though, between debating parts of policy and questioning whether or not somebody has the experience and characteristics that our country needs in a leader in these challenging times. None of John McCain's opponents challenged whether or not he was ready to lead our country on critical issues, and we'll make sure to pick a vice president who shares John McCain's values and will be ready to take office should they have to.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

JANSING: I don't think that that's necessarily true. I think if you look back at the debates, which, obviously, among the Democrats were focused on the Democrats, but there's a lot of concern certainly among the democratic party about John McCain's stand on the war and they went after it significantly in the debates, and even though it may not, again, be the number one point of contention, how much of an issue is this going to be and how difficult is in a going to be for John McCain to separate himself on the war from George Bush?

BENTON: John McCain was a leading advocate in the changing strategy and the troop surge in the war in Iraq. He stood up against his party and against President Bush in pushing for those policy changes. Like our ad we put out this morning from Hillary Clinton made clear, Hillary Clinton had her doubts about whether or not Barack Obama was ready for that 3:00 a.m. phone call. She challenged him on it, and she took him to the mat on it throughout the primary giving him some straight talk about whether or not he was ready to lead, and we'll continue to draw that contrast throughout the election.

JANSING: There is going to be, obviously, debates between the presidential candidates but also debates between the vice presidential candidates, and there are suggestions that now the McCain campaign needs to really consider who they're going to be put up against Joe Biden, arguably, a strong debater who did very well even though his campaign ended very early. He did well in the debates. Is there going to be a shift in the way that John McCain now looks at who his vice presidential running mate is going to be based on the selection of Joe Biden?

BENTON: John McCain will continue to consider people who share his principles and who are ready to step into the role of the presidency. We have a lot of strong supporters, and a lot of qualified people to choose from that would be well matched against Senator Obama and ultimately the debates that everybody will be tuned into are the ones between John McCain and Barack Obama. We'd hoped to give them a preview in town hall meetings across the country, but Barack Obama wouldn't meet our challenge.

Highlight #2
Will McCain's "Passed Over" Ad Work? (MSNBC 08/24/08 10:37am)
CHRIS JANSING: The McCain camp has responded to Obama's vice presidential choice quickly. This morning, another new TV ad called "Passed Over" . . .

["Passed Over" plays]

JANSING: . . . does this ad concern you? Using Hillary Clinton in this way?

CHRIS KOFFINIS: No, it doesn't concern me. The reality here is that John McCain is running an increasingly negative campaign. There isn't an American . . . in the entire country that can point to one issue or one policy that he ever talks about. All he does is attack, attack, attack . . .

JANSING: Is it working? . . .

KOFFINIS: . . . at the end of the day this race I think is going to start after both conventions . . . the problem is for John McCain, look at his own advisors like John Weaver, Mike Murphy. When you run an increasingly negative campaign, it hurst your brand . . . that is the thing that's going to hurt his candidacy . . .

JANSING: Let's talk about those Hillary Clinton voters . . . there is a question about how many of them will stick with Barack Obama but do you really believe that when push comes to shove and you look at the policies of Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton versus the policies of John McCain, that those Hillary Clinton supporters are likely to go over to the other side?

CHERI JACOBUS: I think that there's a good chance that John McCain is going to get an awful lot of them and . . . this is not an attack machine on the part of the Republicans. These are the actual words out of the mouths of Hillary Clinton and Joe Biden. Joe Biden has said that Barack Obama isn't qualified, isn't ready to be president and he stood by those words and he changed his mind yesterday. And basically you choose a vice presidential running mate, somebody who's ready to be president on day one but the real question is Barack Obama ready to be president on day one? That was a question that Hillary Clinton had during the primary campaign and people responded to that. That's still a question that dogs Barack Obama. Joe Biden said this. He didn't say it about Hillary Clinton when she was running in the primary, he didn't say, question the credentials of John Edwards. He didn't even say it about Dennis Kucinich. Joe Biden said this about Barack Obama, his words. This ad now is about Hillary's words. This is not a Republican attack machine. So this gives voters a lot to think about . . .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[. . .]

JACOBUS: The problem for Barack Obama is that he has not talked about the issues. John McCain and Republicans have been talking about the issues all along . . . he talks about change and doesn't fill in the blanks. John McCain has already been an agent of change. He was a key player in terms of changing the war . . .

KOFFINIS: . . . if you mean by agent of change, changing his mind, you're absolutely correct . . .

[. . .]

KOFFINIS: . . . the John McCain of 2000 would not vote for the John McCain of 2008, he has changed his mind on issue after issue, whether it was tax cuts, drilling, social security, he does it over and over. He's done that to appease a right wing base. I understand that. But to pretend somehow that he's this true maverick independent, you're living in a fantasy land.

--
Jacob Roberts
PAO
208.420.3470 (c)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Fariba Yassaee" <fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 8/18/2015 4:30:53 PM
Subject: Re: Albright: Another Bush Gets It Wrong on Iraq

Hi John,
Thanks for the message. I'll pass it on immediately.
Not sure if you have our numbers at the new office (since March). I'm at 202-759-5156 and main line is 202-759-5100. Feel free to call my cell anytime too - 201-739-7272.
Hope you and your family are enjoying some downtime this summer. At least some!
Best, Fariba

On Aug 18, 2015, at 7:26 PM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com > wrote:

> Fariba,
> I tried calling but maybe you changed your main line. Will you tell Madeleine I loved her op-ed and so did my current boss!
> John
>
> On Tuesday, August 18, 2015, Fariba Yassaee <fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com > wrote:
> > All, pasted below and at link is a piece Madeleine wrote in response to Jeb Bush's position on Iraq.
> >
> > http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/08/another-bush-gets-it-wrong-on-iraq-121435.html#.VdJv8oKCOnM
> >
> > IN THE ARENA
> > Another Bush Gets It Wrong on Iraq
> > By MADELEINE K. ALBRIGHT
> >
> > August 17, 2015
> > Since leaving office, I have come to a détente with many of my Republican friends, agreeing not to keep rehashing mistakes of the past and to instead focus on the future of America's foreign policy. However, Republican presidential candidate Jeb Bush's brazen attempts to rewrite history in a series of campaign appearances last week cannot go unchallenged. By blaming President Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton for the rise of ISIL, Governor Bush is clearly seeking to absolve his brother's administration of responsibility for today's problems in Iraq. This argument may serve Governor Bush's political interests, but it does a disservice to the truth
> >
> > No honest discussion of the situation today in Iraq can brush aside the mistakes that were made by the Bush administration during the invasion and its aftermath, much of it based on faulty intelligence and flawed assumptions. They sent too few troops to secure the country. They replaced a government that was a sworn enemy of Iran with one that had close ties to the mullahs. They disbanded the Iraqi Army and dismissed thousands of Sunni officers, who soon launched a violent insurgency.
> > None of these facts were acknowledged by Governor Bush in his speech at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library or in his recent campaign appearances in Iowa, because they undermine his attempts at blame shifting.
> >
> > According to Bush's emerging narrative, the fatal U.S. error in Iraq was the withdrawal of our troops on

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

December 31, 2011. If that is the case, then the error was made by President George W. Bush, who negotiated that withdrawal date in a binding agreement reached with Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki in 2008. The Obama administration sought to extend the mission for U.S. troops, and by all accounts Secretary Clinton strongly supported such a residual presence. But Prime Minister Maliki refused to give U.S. troops immunity from prosecution—and the administration wisely decided not to put U.S. troops at risk to support a government that did not want them there any longer.

It is these circumstances that Governor Bush believes led to the rise of ISIL, but once again, he is only telling part of the story. ISIL, which emerged from al Qaeda in Iraq, was established in 2003 in the chaos that followed the invasion. AQI became a magnet for disaffected Sunnis and remnants of Saddam Hussein's army, who still help lead ISIL.

No one, Democrat or Republican, would claim that all is going well in the Middle East today. The Obama administration has certainly made mistakes, and the Bush administration did not do everything wrong. We should also not fall into the trap of assuming everything is America's fault. Sectarian Iraqi leaders, the Assad regime in Syria and malign Iranian influence also bear responsibility for the tremendous problems facing the region.

Still, the United States has been and will be an important force in the Middle East. Our country does not need a backward-looking partisan fight over our policy in the region. Instead, we should be having a substantive, forward-looking discussion about the kind of role we can play in bringing stability to a critical part of the world.

To his credit, Governor Bush did present some ideas for how his administration would deal with Iraq. While his rhetoric has been lofty, and his criticism of President Obama and former Secretary Clinton has been sharp, the policies he proposes look remarkably similar to what the administration is already doing—supporting the Iraqi military in their fight against ISIL. The areas where he appears to differ are his willingness to put more U.S. lives at risk by sending troops into combat, and his unwillingness to rule out waterboarding in interrogations.

Governor Bush also spoke of the importance of alliances, but his rhetoric and proposed actions would jeopardize these important sources of strength. Nothing would infuriate our European allies more than Governor Bush's plan to break away from the nuclear agreement with Iran that they spent years negotiating alongside us. Similarly, Governor Bush made a point of using the term "Islamic terrorists," a phrase that our allies in the Arab world have pressed us not to use because it feeds the false narrative that we are at war with a religion.

Words matter in the world of diplomacy, and so does leadership. The reputation of the United States was severely damaged during President' Bush's administration. Today, America's place in the world is far stronger than it was in 2009 thanks to the leadership of President Obama and former Secretary Clinton. They renewed alliances, relentlessly pursued our terrorist enemies, and forged international coalitions on Iran sanctions and on the fight against climate change. That's a laudable record of achievement—one that needs no re-writes.

In the months ahead, I would encourage Mr. Bush to be a true student of foreign policy rather than a hurler of political potshots. The United States cannot afford another President Bush who blinds himself to global reality and who forges ahead into chaos. Americans deserve a president who will acknowledge the past and will forge a better future.

Read more: http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/08/another-bush-gets-it-wrong-on-iraq-121435.html#ixzz3j7jyKZKa

Fariba Yassaee | Vice President
Albright Stonebridge Group LLC

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

1101 New York Avenue, NW | Suite 900 |Washington, DC 20005

T +1.202.842.7222 | D +1.202.370.3584 | Skype: fariba.yassaee

fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	ctrfriendsfamily@americanbridge.org
Date:	11/8/2014 5:30:22 AM
Subject:	Correct The Record Saturday November 8, 2014 Roundup

Correct The Record Saturday November 8, 2014 Roundup:

Headlines:

MSNBC: “Hillary Clinton’s message comes into focus”

“While her speeches were tailored to the candidates she came to support and the politics of each state, a core set of themes began to emerge, according to a memo from Correct the Record, a pro-Clinton outside group managed by former staffers that has been defending the former secretary of state in the absence of an official campaign.”

MSNBC: “RNC chair: I ‘hope we’re running against Hillary Clinton’”

“Clinton defenders aren’t worried by Priebus’ talk, however, said Adrienne Elrod of the main group defending her, Correct the Record. ‘We agree with Reince – we hope she runs too! And Reince should be careful what he and the GOP wish for – 83% of Democrats think Hillary would make a good president, according to exit polls from Tuesday. Hillary Clinton’s overwhelming, across-the-board popularity and admiration among Americans is a result of her vision to strengthen the middle class, increase opportunities for women, and ensure a better future for Americans from all walks of life,’ Elrod said.”

Politico Magazine: “Hillary’s Wonderful Week”

“Let’s say it straight out: The biggest winner of the week was Hillary Clinton. I’m a passionate conservative and former speechwriter for George W. Bush, and I don’t like that conclusion one bit. But there it is.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bloomberg: “Obama Needs a Democratic Successor for Legacy, Aide Says”

“President Barack Obama’s legacy could be damaged if he’s not succeeded by a fellow Democrat, White House senior adviser Dan Pfeiffer said today.”

Washington Post: “Ready for Hillary events drawing some prominent pols in O’Malley’s home state”

“As Gov. Martin O’Malley (D) weighs a 2016 presidential bid, a raft of other prominent Maryland politicians are booked to attend a pair of fundraisers next month for a group laying the groundwork for Hillary Rodham Clinton to run.”

The Hill blog: In The Know: “'Star Trek's George Takei: I'd 'absolutely' back Clinton”

“If Hillary Clinton decides to make a second run for president, she can count on Captain Sulu among her supporters: ‘Star Trek’ star George Takei says he’s firmly on Team Hillary.”

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: “Sanders: Obama, Dems need new message”

“Asked to assess Hillary Clinton’s biggest weakness, the liberal lawmaker [Sen. Sanders] responded, ‘I’m not here to attack Hillary Clinton.’”

CNN: “2014: Did Hillary Clinton get her groove back despite Democrats' loss?”

“Clinton visited 20 states and stumped for 26 candidates ahead of Election Day 2014. Her midterm record was an abysmal 11 wins, 14 losses and one runoff, according to CNN projections.”

Fox News: “For Hillary Clinton, an uncertain return to the campaign trail”

“She is the leading global voice championing the empowerment of girls and women, but of the eight Democratic women Hillary Clinton stumped for in the 2014 midterm cycle, only one was declared a winner.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CNBC column: Larry Kudlow: “For 2016, Hillary had the worst night”

“What's important now is that the midterm exit polls turned conventional wisdom on its head. It's not just those awful numbers for the high-visibility Republican hopefuls. But Hillary loses to an unnamed name.”

Variety: “Bill Clinton Predicts ‘Boogie Dance’ in Washington After Republican Senate Win”

“Former President Bill Clinton weighed in Friday on the results of Tuesday’s midterm elections, suggesting that Congress and the White House can still ‘get things done’ and reflecting on his experience working with a divided government during a period of intense partisanship.”

Articles:

MSNBC: “Hillary Clinton’s message comes into focus”

By Alex Seitz-Wald

November 7, 2014, 5:01 p.m. EST

The pieces of an increasingly likely Hillary Clinton 2016 presidential campaign are starting to fall into place.

Clinton is already reportedly scoping out locations for a campaign headquarters, thinking about key staffing decisions and embarking on an unofficial listening tour to gain wisdom from a disparate set of thinkers.

And in the waning days of the 2014 midterm campaign, as Clinton stumped for Democrats across the country, a message began to emerge in her stump speeches. Over the course of 75 events on behalf of more than 30 candidates in 20 states, Clinton tested and honed and retooled the building blocks of what could become her presidential campaign’s raison d’etre.

While her speeches were tailored to the candidates she came to support and the politics of each state, a core set of themes began to emerge, according to a memo from Correct the Record, a pro-Clinton outside group managed by former staffers that has been defending the former secretary of state in the absence of an official campaign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“The primary theme that emerged in Clinton’s national travels leading up to November 4th was advancing opportunity and prosperity, directly addressing a fundamental concern and cynicism among the American people,” Isaac Wright, the group’s executive director, wrote to allies of the group in the memo, shared with msnbc ahead of its release.

That message resonates with Americans, Wright continued, citing exit polls that showed 83% of Democrats, and 40% of voters overall, think she would make a good president. That’s more than any other candidate, though a generic Republican beat her in a head-to-head match-up. Her message has the potential to resonate with the “emotional dismay of the electorate,” Wright continued.

Emotion was something too often lacking on the campaign trail from candidates this year, according to some Democrats, who complained that some candidates lacked an overarching positive message.

Clinton’s core themes, identified by Correct The Record, which as an independent expenditure group is prohibited from coordinating directly with candidates, include a focus on advancing middle class families and growing the economy and jobs.

Clinton also spoke about expanding opportunities for women and children, issues she has been involved in since her early adulthood. “One of the biggest differences between 2008 and the buildup to 2016,” Wright noted, “is Clinton’s relationship with her own position as a woman.” Not surprisingly, given her record, Clinton also put foreign policy front and center, speaking about support for U.S. troops and veterans.

Clinton has also been partisan on occasion, supporting Democrats and progressive values, while hitting Republicans – though almost never by name – and criticizing their policies. This was especially true when she slammed “trickle-down economics” in Massachusetts and went after Sen.-elect Joni Ernst in Iowa.

Some top Democrats, especially those associated with President Obama’s campaigns, have worried that Clinton will fail to offer a clear vision for why she should be president if she decides to run, aside from the strength of her resume.

Her initial pitch when she ran in 2008 was that she was “in it to win it” and that she would be “ready on day one.” Meeting the basic competency requirements of the job turned out to not be a very inspiring message. Later, after she lost the Iowa Caucuses, Clinton found her stride talking about populist economic issues. For instance, in Ohio, with the help of former Gov. Ted Strickland, she talked about taking on drug companies and credit card companies and sticking up for American families.

While the themes themselves may not be groundbreaking, Clinton has found a way to make them emotionally resonant. She speaks about values and fairness, instead of policy. And she connected her vision to her own story. The line that she repeated most on the trail in 2014 was, “You should not have to be the grandchild of a president to get” a fair shot. It speaks to fairness, her own story, and subtly addresses critiques of her wealth.

Expect to hear it a lot more.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MSNBC: “RNC chair: I ‘hope we’re running against Hillary Clinton’”

By Alex Seitz-Wald

November 7, 2014, 4:35 p.m. EST

Republicans want to run against Hillary Clinton for president, the head of the party insisted Friday, laying out how the GOP is already planning to capitalize on their wins in 2014 to be ready to take on Clinton in 2016.

Speaking at a breakfast with reporters hosted by the The Christian Science Monitor in Washington, D.C., Republican National Committee Chairman Reince Priebus said Republicans are keeping staff in key presidential swing states such as Florida, Ohio and Virginia, and explained how the GOP plans to avoid the “circus” of the 2012 nominating process.

The RNC is overhauling its rules to shorten the primary and caucus calendar, and reducing the number of debates, which numbered a whopping 23 in the 2012 cycle. “We’re taking it from a six month slice and dice fest to about weeks,” Priebus said. “We’re going to contain the process so we don’t end up with rogue debates that provide the temptation for candidates to break the rules.”

They’re also improving their voter mobilization efforts, which has traditionally been a strength for Democrats, he said, explaining that 2016’s “ground game” will have to be at least three times larger than in 2014. “I think we’ve got to be about perfect to win a national turnout vote in this country. I think Democrats can be good and win, we’ve got to be great,” he added.

Are Republicans worried about running against Clinton, the presumed Democratic nominee? “I sure as heck hope we’re running against Hillary Clinton,” Priebus said.

Clinton allies have been trying to spin Tuesday night’s Democratic drubbing as a secret victory for Clinton, who will now have a clear villain to run against in the GOP-controlled Congress.

Nonsense, Priebus responded Friday. “If your job was to unify the party and raise a ton of money and get a ton of volunteers on the ground, I promise you, you would want no other opponent to run against than Hillary Clinton,” he said. Priebus also said voters rejected the Clintons when they rejected candidates endorsed by the Clintons.

Of course, that is exactly what a Republican leader would say, since it’s his job to project confidence and rally donors and activists. If the RNC were really so eager to take on Clinton, for instance, one might wonder why they bothered sending a staffer dressed as a squirrel to stalk the former secretary of state this summer.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Priebus said Tuesday's wins were obviously very good for Republicans, but declined to say the party now had a mandate to govern. "I would call that a pretty sweeping victory, but whether it's a mandate or not, that's a different question," he said.

Voters in Wisconsin, for instance, "accepted" conservative Republican ideas, Priebus said. "Perhaps embraced might be a little over the top."

Clinton defenders aren't worried by Priebus' talk, however, said Adrienne Elrod of the main group defending her, Correct the Record. "We agree with Reince – we hope she runs too! And Reince should be careful what he and the GOP wish for – 83% of Democrats think Hillary would make a good president, according to exit polls from Tuesday. Hillary Clinton's overwhelming, across-the-board popularity and admiration among Americans is a result of her vision to strengthen the middle class, increase opportunities for women, and ensure a better future for Americans from all walks of life," Elrod said.

Politico Magazine: "Hillary's Wonderful Week"

By Matt Latimer

November 7, 2014

[Subtitle:] A Bush speechwriter proclaims: Her campaign lacked villains. Now she's got a lot of them.

Let's say it straight out: The biggest winner of the week was Hillary Clinton. I'm a passionate conservative and former speechwriter for George W. Bush, and I don't like that conclusion one bit. But there it is.

Shortly after the election results came in, most of the conventional wisdom was that Clinton emerged from the midterms tarred, along with her husband. After all, the former secretary of state and party front-runner campaigned for candidates all across the country, and more than 30 of those candidates lost.

But what was she supposed to do, campaign against them? Bill Clinton also went out on the trail, as did Joe Biden and virtually every Democrat of national import able to board an airplane. As fun as it is for Republicans to argue otherwise, Clinton's no more to blame for, say, Kay Hagan losing North Carolina than she is for CBS canceling "The Mentalist."

Here's why Clinton is now sitting pretty. All campaigns are about narratives and before Tuesday, Clinton's was shaping up to be rather difficult. She had been a very public player in an increasingly unpopular administration, charged with overseeing a foreign policy that looks more discredited by the day. Her latest book tour revealed a clunky, not-ready-for-primetime operation, and her sales, while good by any conventional measure, were disastrous when compared to the expectations her PR team clumsily set. No one could quite sense it yet, but there was a whiff of yesterday's news emanating all around her.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Then came November 4.

Despite rumors that Clinton is in person a warm, loyalty-inspiring manager, she has never worn that role convincingly with the general public. Stylistically, Clinton is far more suited for the role of leader of the opposition, rallying against her enemies (real or imagined). And at last she has something every good campaign narrative desperately needs: real villains. A lot of them. Ironically they are the very same villains who rescued her husband's waning political fortunes exactly two decades ago: a Republican-led Congress.

This doesn't necessarily have to be the GOP's fate over the next two years, though there is a compelling precedent. Recall, if you will, the 1994 tsunami that propelled Newt Gingrich to the speaker's chair and left an unpopular Democratic president lamely telling reporters that he was still "relevant." Bill Clinton was angered and humiliated by the voters' repudiation of his administration—and his party. But only for a moment. It did not take long for the Sinatra of Spin to figure out how to turn the Republicans, with the help of many co-conspirators in the media, into America's version of the Borgias.

If Republicans aren't careful, they will watch that history repeat. After all, how does one put this charitably? The usual spokesmen for today's GOP possess all the charisma of extras on "Murder, She Wrote." You know who I mean—the aging day players with graying hair and familiar (pasty) faces who stand around looking vaguely uncertain while Angela Lansbury solves all the crimes. Next to them Hillary Clinton, who will be 68 on the eve of the Iowa caucuses, looks like Renée Zellweger. (Perhaps a bad example, but I like the new her!) In any event, it's fair to say the Republican leadership in 2016 will be far easier to run against than it was in 2008 to run against a charismatic African-American son of a single mother at the height of media rapture.

"The first thing I need to do is get the Senate back to normal," Senator Mitch McConnell said upon winning the majority. Let's hope he was kidding. Unfortunately, one suspects it won't be too long before the GOP puts its champagne bottles back into the fridge and returns to its years-long preoccupation—waging an internal civil war over the party's message, goals and future.

One can sympathize with both sides in the dispute. On the one hand are those who fought hard to win back their chairmanships and plush offices in the U.S. Capitol and are willing to do anything to hold onto them. Which generally means pursuing an agenda of caution over controversy. Polls and platitudes over risky policies. On the other are those who think the party rose to power for a reason: that they must use their majority to enact the proposals they campaigned on. Which means pushing for an agenda that many in the Washington pundit class won't like: fighting debt ceiling increases, cutting spending for popular programs, repealing Obamacare by any means necessary and not simply a show vote that will lead to a presidential veto.

Both sides will draw different lessons from the 1994 experience—a misplayed hand that led to a government shutdown, Speaker Gingrich's resignation in 1998 and even eventually a resurgent Bill Clinton. The cautious establishment Republicans claim the Gingrich Congress failed because it was too radical and overreached. The activist movement Republicans say the Gingrich Congress buckled too quickly to the Clinton administration, and let critics in the media cow them. Regardless, McConnell will not have an easy time managing this rift. Nor will he likely enjoy the unenviable task of wrangling with a conference whose members will either be running for president, running for vice president or stewing with resentment over those who do. The more he tries to bring order to his caucus, the more division he will engender. (For an example, see Boehner, John.) In the meantime, Clinton supporters in the House and Senate will keep pushing popular-sounding if wholly unaffordable initiatives on health care, education and the environment, and then blame the Republican Congress for blocking them.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Yes, these are good days for the Hillary Clinton proto-campaign. Her first good days in a long while, in fact. No longer will she have to worry so much about gaining distance from President Obama—though that's certainly on her agenda. No longer will she have to defend or explain her position on issues pushed by a Democratic Senate. No longer will she have to subtly run against her husband and his scandals. Instead, she can run squarely against the circus that will preoccupy Congress and the media with every passing day. The calm voice of wearied experience. The wizened wife and mother—now grandmother—who can keep those rambunctious boys in line.

She's probably just about the only person in Washington today who's even happier than Mitch McConnell.

Bloomberg: "Obama Needs a Democratic Successor for Legacy, Aide Says"

By Jonathan Allen

November 7, 2014

President Barack Obama's legacy could be damaged if he's not succeeded by a fellow Democrat, White House senior adviser Dan Pfeiffer said today.

"It's very important because I know what we did in the first 100 days of our administration, and it was go through a lot of what President Bush did and sign executive orders doing the opposite," Pfeiffer told reporters and editors today at a Bloomberg Politics breakfast in Washington.

That dynamic will shape Obama's dealings with the Republican-led Congress and his party's presidential nominee in the final two years of his presidency. Hillary Clinton, Obama's first-term secretary of state and 2008 presidential primary rival, is the front-runner for the Democratic nomination in 2016, though she hasn't said whether she'll run.

"The best way to be succeeded by a Democrat is to be the best president we can be for the next two years and get as much done," Pfeiffer said. "Some of that will be with Congress; some of it will be on our own. So that's how we're thinking about it."

Trying to set up a Democratic successor isn't "in tension" with efforts to work with congressional Republicans, he said. The 2016 presidential election may provide an incentive for gridlock and force Republicans to show they can govern, he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I'd like to believe that the country would come before Party. I didn't fall off a turnip truck yesterday," Pfeiffer said.

Republican Brand

"A big anvil around the neck of Mitt Romney was the Republican Party brand," he said of the party's 2012 nominee for president. "Any Republican nominee is going to carry that. And it would be in their interest to improve that brand."

Tension between Obama and Clinton rose when she criticized his approach to foreign policy during her book tour this summer. Tempers flared and quickly settled back. Whether it's Clinton or someone else, Obama will need the Democratic nominee, Pfeiffer said.

"If you want to cement a lot of the very core elements of your legacy it's much easier to do, obviously, with someone who supports your agenda," he said.

Washington Post: "Ready for Hillary events drawing some prominent pols in O'Malley's home state"

By John Wagner

November 7, 2014, 6:02 p.m. EST

As Gov. Martin O'Malley (D) weighs a 2016 presidential bid, a raft of other prominent Maryland politicians are booked to attend a pair of fundraisers next month for a group laying the groundwork for Hillary Rodham Clinton to run.

U.S. Sens. Barbara A. Mikulski (D-Md.) and Benjamin L. Cardin (D-Md.) are both listed as "special guests" at a Dec. 1 event in Baltimore to benefit the Ready for Hillary PAC. State Senate President Thomas V. Mike Miller Jr. (D-Calvert) is among the hosts, according to a "save the date" announcement.

Those advertised to attend an event three nights later in Potomac include U.S. Rep. John Delaney (D-Md.), Montgomery County Executive Isiah Leggett (D) and eight current or incoming members of the Montgomery County Council.

The host committee also includes two unsuccessful Democratic candidates for governor this year — Attorney General Douglas F. Gansler (D) and Del. Heather R. Mizeur (D-Montgomery) — as well as State Treasurer Nancy K. Kopp (D) and three current or recently elected members of the state Senate from Montgomery.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley spokeswoman Lis Smith declined to comment Friday on the Ready for Hillary events.

O'Malley has said he is moving forward with preparations for a possible White House bid regardless of whether Clinton runs. He recently told The Post that he will probably have decided whether to move forward before his tenure as governor ends in late January.

The Hill blog: In The Know: "'Star Trek's George Takei: I'd 'absolutely' back Clinton"

By Judy Kurtz

November 7, 2014, 3:00 p.m. EST

If Hillary Clinton decides to make a second run for president, she can count on Captain Sulu among her supporters: "Star Trek" star George Takei says he's firmly on Team Hillary.

"We're Hillary supporters from way back," the social media whiz — who boasts nearly 8 million Facebook fans — exclaimed, appearing to include husband Brad Takei as a fan of the former secretary of State.

The outspoken Democrat and gay rights advocate says he would "absolutely" campaign for Clinton if she decides to throw her hat into the ring in the 2016 White House race.

ITK caught up with the 77-year-old actor and "Howard Stern Show" regular Thursday at government IT media company FedScoop's annual FedTalks gathering in Washington. The yearly event brings together hundreds of political and industry leaders from the tech and government information technology communities.

While Takei would likely give the Vulcan salute to Clinton, there's at least one Republican lawmaker he considers to be "rational."

"At times I support things that [Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.)] says. He's one of the rational Republicans," Takei says. "But I'm a Democrat and I think particularly with the Republicans now leaning more and more to the right, and with the extreme Tea Party people, there are very few Republicans that I can say are saying something rational."

And what about the heavy Democratic losses in the midterm elections?

"I think the real winner of the midterm election was big money," says Takei.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The entertainer is a supporter of the nonpartisan Mayday PAC, created by Creative Commons co-founder Larry Lessig and Republican strategist Mark McKinnon, which aims to “reduce the influence of money in politics.”

Making mention of the conservative group Citizens United, Takei added, “When billionaires can give $50 million, $500 million to a campaign, and there’s no limit, then it makes a mockery of ‘one man, one vote.’ ”

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: “Sanders: Obama, Dems need new message”

By Bob Cusack

November 8, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EST

Sen. Bernie Sanders said President Obama and the Democrats’ 2014 message played a significant role in the GOP’s takeover of the Senate.

In an interview on C-SPAN’s “Newsmakers” program, the Vermont legislator said Obama is partly to blame for the Republican rout.

“Some of the responsibility absolutely rests with President Obama. I think he’s not been as strong and clear about a message and legislation that will protect the interests of working families,” said Sanders, an independent who caucuses with Senate Democrats.

Sanders claimed Democratic candidates misread the electorate: “I think many of the Democratic candidates did not run on an agenda which resonated with working people…where the Democrats have been weak and individual Democratic candidates have been weak is not really coming up to the plate and saying, ‘You know what? We’re going to have to take on the billionaire class.’”

Democrats did not push hard enough for the minimum wage, Sanders added.

He credited Republicans for running a “very, very smart” campaign, though made clear he thinks it was deceitful. The GOP seized on the nation’s economic woes, Sanders pointed out.

“The Republicans said, ‘The problem is all Barack Obama. He caused it all. And any senator who has worked with Barack Obama — terrible, got to throw them out,’” he stated.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sanders, who is thinking about running for president in 2016, declined to provide a timetable on when he will make a final decision, saying voters need a break from campaign politics.

Asked to assess Hillary Clinton's biggest weakness, the liberal lawmaker responded, "I'm not here to attack Hillary Clinton."

Sanders has not decided if he will run as a Democrat or an independent, but he suggested he's leaning toward the latter. Running as an independent would require setting up a political infrastructure in 50 states, which would take an enormous amount of money and energy, he noted.

Sanders admitted he's a long shot to win the presidency. But he noted that he won 2 percent of the vote in his first election and 1 percent in his second. In his most recent election, Sanders attracted 71 percent of the vote.

He does have a sizable campaign war chest with more than $4.4 million cash on hand.

CNN: "2014: Did Hillary Clinton get her groove back despite Democrats' loss?"

By Dan Merica

November 7, 2014, 6:27 p.m. EST

Election night was terrible for the Democratic Party, and Hillary Clinton was not spared.

Clinton visited 20 states and stumped for 26 candidates ahead of Election Day 2014. Her midterm record was an abysmal 11 wins, 14 losses and one runoff, according to CNN projections.

But there is an argument - Clinton advisers will spin it to you - in the context of what appears to be an all-but-certain run in 2016, that her Midterm record is far less important than what she gained while campaigning for Democrats.

Re-learning to stump

Going into the Midterms, Clinton's mostly paid speeches were corporate and dull. She addressed audiences that were full of executive types who did not alawys seem excited to see her; many of whom were attending conferences that had no connection to the former secretary of state.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That changed during Clinton's time on the campaign trail.

The former secretary of state stretched her long-dormant political legs and toyed with what will likely be her presidential message. She honed a new message based on women's rights and opposition to Wall Street and - perhaps most importantly - got some needed practice ahead of a possible presidential run.

When the former secretary of state took the stage at September's Tom Harkin Steak Fry in Iowa - her first real political speech of the year - she appeared to reporters on the ground to be flat and out-of-practice. That afternoon, the crowd responded with far more excitement to Tom Harkin, their retiring senator, and Bill Clinton, Hillary's husband and the former president.

But over time during the Midterms, Clinton became more comfortable on the stump.

"Elections come down often to who's got more money, who's peddling more fear and who turns out," Clinton confidently told an excited audience in North Carolina in October. She didn't she away from hitting her Republican opponents and drawing some contrast between them and the person she was endorsing.

Most noticeably, Clinton honed her focus on women.

Nearly every event Clinton did was geared towards some combination of mothers and grandmothers. In Pennsylvania she spoke to a "Women for Wolf" event, while in Louisiana it was "Moms and Grams with Mary" who filled the event space.

Clinton seemed to embrace the theme and recognize that fact that if she runs for president, it will be from a historic perch as possibly the nation's first woman president.

"Don't let anyone dismiss what you're doing today as women's work," she told an audience in San Francisco. "Don't let anyone send you back to the sidelines."

As Clinton has grown back into the role of retail politician, though, so have her Republican detractors.

Groups like the Republican National Committee and America Rising learned how to prod Clinton and poked her with emails to reporters and tweets about her gaffes. They sometimes drove the media conversation and seized on mistakes she made.

Shortly after the Senate officially turned red on Tuesday, Rand Paul's Facebook page uploaded a photo of Clinton and the six losing Senate candidates that she endorsed. "HillarysLosers," read the photos that went gangbusters online. The morning after the country, effectively, turned red, the Republican National Committee blasted an email to reporters: "Hillary's Policies Were On The Ballot."

'This is bigger than a single surrogate'

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's closest confidants also don't see Tuesday as a repudiation of Clinton.

"This is bigger than a single surrogate," said a Clinton source with knowledge of her midterm schedule who requested anonymity to speak candidly. "No surrogate is that, sort of, silver bullet."

The source added that going into the midterms there was a realization that Clinton "hasn't given a political speech, certainly on any regular basis, in six years."

Given that, and despite her less than 50 percent batting average with successful candidates, people close to Clinton felt confidant that the midterms were time well spent for the former first lady.

"I think her going back in for Grimes was a good example [of not shying away from tough races], going to Iowa twice, too" the source said. "There was no, 'Oh man, we ought to pull out of here because it is going to be a loss."

The source argued that 2016 didn't come up a great deal during the conversations about where to go in 2014.

Growing from the book tour

Hillary Clinton's book tour was defined by her gaffes in the interviews trying to sell it.

Out of the gate, Clinton slipped up answering questions about her and her husband's wealth - pointing out the now mega-rich couple was "dead broke" when they left the White House - and it seemed like she was never fully able to recover.

Longtime Clinton confidants were concerned about her book tour performance.

"With the book tour, there were a lot of unforced errors. That was concerning," said one longtime Clinton adviser. "It was an open question whether she was going to fumble about her wealth."

But watching Clinton on the stump, the source said, it seemed that Clinton kicked off the rust.

Republicans see it differently.

"She is going to have to meet a reality where talking about only war on women issues and raising the minimum wage is not sufficient to win a national election or elections in these states," said Tim Miller, executive director of America Rising, said after Tuesday night . "I think that is a reality that the whole Democratic Party is going to have to meet but Hillary Clinton was gung ho about that message, too."

The midterms also weren't rhetorically flawless for Clinton.

In Boston, the former first lady "shorthanded" a line that seemed to hint it wasn't "corporations and business that create jobs." Clinton went on to walk back the comment that was, for the most part, her only noticeable gaffe for two months on the stump.

That is a departure from her book tour, a two month long affair riddled with slips of the tongue, and confidants were happy to see her gaffe on the populist side of the party.

"Was it completely without these sort of perceived bumps? No," said the source with knowledge of Clinton's midterm schedule. "But, at the end of the day, was it viewed as time well spent? Yes."

Fox News: “For Hillary Clinton, an uncertain return to the campaign trail”

By James Rosen

November 8, 2014

She is the leading global voice championing the empowerment of girls and women, but of the eight Democratic women Hillary Clinton stumped for in the 2014 midterm cycle, only one was declared a winner.

She is the prospective frontrunner for her party’s presidential nomination in 2016, but of the 26 Democrats Clinton campaigned for in the midterms, 12 won, 13 lost, and one – Sen. Mary Landrieu of Louisiana – lingers in uncertainty, facing a Dec. 6 runoff election against her Republican opponent.

This cycle marked Hillary Clinton’s return to the arena of electoral politics for the first time since her failed presidential bid in 2008 – secretaries of state traditionally abstain from partisan activity – and for those scouring the newly refashioned landscape for indications of how Clinton’s White House prospects may be affected, the results are decidedly mixed.

Supporters of the former secretary of state argue that, despite having eschewed the rough and tumble of politics for six years, she used her time on the stump this fall to good effect, forging new and strong ties with local party chieftains in states where such connections will prove valuable to a presidential run in two years.

“I think Hillary Clinton did yeoman's work in campaigning out there for Democrats,” said Patti Solis Doyle, a former Clinton campaign manager in 2008, in an interview with Fox News. “She did what she could to help her friends, and very strong Democrats out there. She raised money for them; she campaigned for them."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Solis Doyle emphasized that neither Clinton's name nor her policies were on the ballot on Tuesday – but that hasn't stopped some of her potential rivals from spreading the word that the big GOP gains marked a major setback for her aspirations. Rep. Paul Ryan, R-Wis., the GOP's 2012 vice presidential nominee, told conservative radio host Hugh Hewitt that Tuesday's verdict "tells you that she's not inevitable. I think she's very beatable."

More pointed was Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., who took to Twitter with unabashed glee to brand the 13 unsuccessful candidates Clinton stumped for "Hillary's Losers." "The 1990s was a long time ago," Paul said on "Fox and Friends" on Friday morning . "I don't think there is such a Clinton cachet as there once was. ... There is a message here about Hillary Clinton as much as there is a message about the president."

Doug Schoen, a former pollster for President Clinton, dismissed Sen. Paul's suggestions that Mrs. Clinton remains, in the public imagination, tied at the hip to the unpopular incumbent in the White House. "This election was a repudiation, first and foremost, as every Republican I've heard say, of President Obama," Schoen said on Fox News' "Happening Now" on Wednesday. "I think that the Clinton brand is separate and distinct from President Obama. I don't think this has an appreciable impact on her fortunes and future."

With long memories of the central role that Florida and Ohio have played in recent presidential contests, Clinton and her Democratic colleagues cannot have looked favorably upon the Republicans' success on Tuesday in holding onto the governor's mansions in those critical battleground states. Some have argued that she will benefit from the GOP wave by being able to run against the GOP Congress.

Yet in the actual business of campaigning – the deployment of rhetoric and charisma to sway persuadable hearts and minds – Clinton's performance again left some feeling as though she has still not worked out the kinks on display in her rocky book tour this spring. Perhaps Clinton's most memorable statement as a surrogate speaker during this cycle was her assertion, during an Oct. 24 appearance in Boston on behalf of (doomed) Massachusetts gubernatorial candidate Martha Coakley: "Don't let anybody tell you that it's corporations and businesses that create jobs."

That statement prompted criticism from Charles Lane, the left-leaning opinion writer for the Washington Post. " I thought NBC created a job for Chelsea [Clinton], so there is at least one corporation that has created a job," he quipped on the Oct. 27 edition of Fox News' "Special Report with Bret Baier." "She has made quite a few gaffes now since this unofficial presidential campaign has gotten underway."

Solis Doyle, who recalled chatting amiably with Clinton at a Georgetown event last month, thought her former boss effectively used the campaign cycle to regain her footing as a stump speaker after a long absence from the trail and the difficulties of the "Hard Choices" rollout. "There has been some criticism over the book tour," Solis Doyle said. "But I think what was good about that is that it was able to get some of the, you know, not-great performances out of the way, and she's sort of back in her game. ... I thought her performance on the stump during the 2014 midterm elections was pretty good."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CNBC column: Larry Kudlow: “For 2016, Hillary had the worst night”

By Larry Kudlow

November 8, 2014

We all know the Republican midterm landslide was largely a repudiation of President Obama's policies and his handling of the job of chief executive. And of course, we don't know who will succeed him in 2016. But buried deep inside Tuesday's exit polls is a series of numbers on presidential contenders that will blow your mind. It's completely different from most anything you've seen in the newspapers, the Internet, or on TV.

Get this. Here's a stunning question and answer from Edison Research, which interviewed 18,000 voters around the country as they left the polls on November 4:

Do you think Hillary Clinton would make a good president?

Yes: 42 percent. No: 52 percent.

Whether she's the front-runner or not, a majority of midterm-election voters don't want her running the country.

Does that leave the door open for other Democrats? Sure looks like it.

Does that leave the door open for a Republican? Hang on to your seats:

Do you think Jeb Bush would make a good president?

Yes: 29 percent. No: 59 percent.

Do you think Chris Christie would make a good president?

Yes: 24 percent. No: 64 percent.

Amazing. New Jersey governor Chris Christie, who is also the chair of the Republican Governors Association, has been widely praised for quarterbacking the GOP's tremendous election performance in the states. The GOP counted 31 Republican gubernatorial wins, even in deep-blue Massachusetts, Illinois, and Maryland. But voters still said no to Christie.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But there's more. Hang on to your seatbelts:

Do you think Rand Paul would make a good president?

Yes: 26 percent. No: 60 percent.

Do you think Rick Perry would make a good president?

Yes: 24 percent. No: 62 percent.

High-profile senator Rand Paul, who has had successful early years in the Senate, has a strong following among libertarian-like millennials, and has a crafty way of jumping on key issues, didn't do so well either. And Texas governor Rick Perry, who many experts suggest has recovered from his 2012 gaffes, also got a big thumbs-down.

But here's the kicker — my absolute favorite:

In the 2016 presidential election, for whom would you be more likely to vote?

Hillary Clinton (Dem): 24 percent. The Republican candidate: 40 percent.

That's right. The yet-to-be-named Republican beats Hillary.

I guess she shouldn't have said businesses don't create jobs. Or maybe voters remember her Russian reset with Putin, her calling Bashar Assad a "reformer" we can do business with, or her "who cares" exclamation about how the U.S. base in Benghazi was destroyed.

Or maybe the old Bill Clinton magic is not rubbing off anymore. But the fact is, the exit polls say ol' Hillary would lose to a Republican no-name. And at the margin, Tuesday's election has probably re-scrambled the Republican deck.

I'm sure not going to pick a winner here. But given the polling weakness of the other established candidates, and the virtual collapse of Hillary, you have to wonder ...

What about newly re-elected Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker? For quite a while he looked like he might lose, but he wound up with a bigger positive margin than anyone thought possible. He won his battle against the public unions. He cut taxes while strictly limiting spending. Is Governor Walker, who may possess the strongest political backbone in the country, now a Republican front-runner?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Or can the same be said of Ohio Governor John Kasich? He won re-election in a landslide, even after accepting federal Medicaid aid (unpopular in conservative circles). But he also found some spare budget cash to help Ohio's poor and stayed on the supply side with tax cuts.

Or what about Michigan governor Rick Snyder? He put the whole city of Detroit into bankruptcy to solve its collapsing financial structure and get it on the road to recovery. He also took on government unions and found a way to reduce tax burdens. And he made Michigan — the UAW's socialist paradise — into a right-to-work state.

Or maybe Louisiana governor Bobby Jindal has jumped to the front. He campaigned for fellow Republicans around the country while begging the GOP to come up with a true national message of economic growth, supply-side tax cuts, market-oriented health care, and education-choice reform.

I'm not going to go through the whole list. There are other Republican governors and senators, and at least one key policymaker in the GOP dominated House, who could be that yet-to-be-named Republican in 2016.

What's important now is that the midterm exit polls turned conventional wisdom on its head. It's not just those awful numbers for the high-visibility Republican hopefuls. But Hillary loses to an unnamed name.

To channel the great William F. Buckley Jr., get me a phone book and I'll start picking her opponents.

Variety: “Bill Clinton Predicts ‘Boogie Dance’ in Washington After Republican Senate Win”

By Jordyn Holman

November 8, 2014, 4:35 a.m. PST

Former President Bill Clinton weighed in Friday on the results of Tuesday’s midterm elections, suggesting that Congress and the White House can still “get things done” and reflecting on his experience working with a divided government during a period of intense partisanship.

“The retrospective memory of my six years tends to be one that is airbrushed,” Clinton told the crowd at USC. “For this time, what you gotta have is an agenda and get things done. There’s going to be a boogie dance for the first few months, but we’ll see what they’re going to do.”

Clinton said the election, in which Republicans gained control of the Senate and expanded their grip on the House, “completed the process that was started in 2010.” But he suggested that such a scenario was not so out of the ordinary given that Republicans seized control of Congress in 1994 while he was president.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton said that one big showdown that will take place will be seeing if Congress defunds the Affordable Care Act. He added that he hoped they would continue the bipartisan support of funding basic research.

At the event, which was aimed at USC honor students and faculty, Clinton lauded the growth in technology and innovation that is reshaping the entertainment industry and economy. Clinton said the growing interdependence of countries is at the root of many of these trends.

“You have to have an idea of what you want the world to look like,” he said.

He pointed to the innovation taking place in Orlando, Fla., known mostly as the home of Disney and Universal theme parks, to describe the intersection of the technology with other sectors of the economy.

“Most people who don’t live there think of Orlando as the home of Disneyworld,” Clinton said. “But the Defense Department and NASA spend $5 billion a year on computer simulation. It’s obvious that they need improvement in simulation to keep theme park membership. It’s also way safer and cheap to teach young military personnel how to operate or fly a tank or airplane on a simulator than the real deal. There’s just this explosive creative environment down there.”

Clinton also touched on the influence of social media in connecting people in new and groundbreaking ways.

“The Internet has done a lot of good,” he said. “It allows six-year-olds to get on the Internet and find out what I had to go to college to learn about.”

Since leaving office, Clinton has dedicated his life to humanitarian efforts overseas, particularly focused on improving global health and wellness and increasing opportunities for women and children through the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation.

The former president noted that there’s been a lot of headlines about turmoil around the globe, such as the ISIS terror campaign and the deadly Ebola outbreak, but he asserted that this obscures the progress on the geopolitical front. “Though every headline in the last few months seems negative, there have been a lot of positive trend lines,” he said.

He cited the Millennium Goals set forth by the United Nations, which will expire next year, as an example, saying some of them will be reached.

“We are in the best shape of any big country in the world in the next 20 years,” he said. “No big country that is running this well is as young as we are, as diverse as we are or as technological as we are. In the next 20 years, there will be bad days, there will be bad headlines, but you can keep the trend lines positive.”

Later on Friday, Clinton was scheduled to attend an event on the Paramount lot to raise money for his foundation, with Jessica Alba and musical act Parachute on the bill.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· November 14 – Little Rock, AR: Sec. Clinton attends picnic for 10th Anniversary of the Clinton Center (NYT)

· November 15 – Little Rock, AR: Sec. Clinton hosts No Ceilings event (NYT)

· November 21 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton presides over meeting of the Global Alliance for Clean Cookstoves (Bloomberg)

· November 21 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton is honored by the New York Historical Society (Bloomberg)

· December 1 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton keynotes a League of Conservation Voters dinner (Politico)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

· December 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton honored by Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights (Politico)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Tara Sonenshine" <tsonenshine@earthlink.net>
To: "Alice Cosgrove" <alice.e.cosgrove@gmail.com>
"Anna Stolitzka \(Debbie Wasserman Shulz\)" <stolitzka.anna@gmail.com>
"Anne Hall" <Anne.Hall@APORTER.COM>
"Bill Antholis" <antholis@virginia.edu>
bill.danvers@gmail.com
"Brian Katulis" <bkatulis@americanprogress.org>
"Bruce Riedel" <briedel@brookings.edu>
"Caitlin McDonnell" <cmcdonnell@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Carol Browner" <cmbrowner@me.com>
"Carole Hall" <chall@brookings.edu>
"Catherine Whitney" <Catherine.Whitney@skadden.com>
"Chris Roberts" <croberts@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Colin Kahl" <colin.h.kahl@gmail.com>
"Dan Benjamin" <dbenjam61@hotmail.com>
"Daniel Silverberg" <danielsilverberg@yahoo.com>
"Debbie Schulz" <hrtsleeve@gmail.com>
"Denis McDonough" <denis.mcdonough@gmail.com>
"Derek Chollet" <dhchollet@gmail.com>
"Don Gips" <don.gips@gmail.com>
"Don Kerrick" <donkerrick@gmail.com>
"Eryn Sanders" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
"Greg Craig" <gcraig@skadden.com>
"Jake Sullivan" <Jake.sullivan@gmail.com>
"Jamie Rubin" <JamesPRubin1960@gmail.com>
"Jan Stewart" <jstewart@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jasmine Battle" <jbattle@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jeff Smith" <jeffrey_smith@aporter.com>
"Jeremy Bash" <jeremybash@gmail.com>
"Jessica Lewis" <lewisje03@yahoo.com>
"Jim Miller - Department of Defense" <james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com>
"Jim O'Brien" <jobrien@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Joanna Nicoletti" <info@forwardengagement.org>
"Joe Cirincione" <jcirincione@ploughshares.org>
"John Norris" <jnorris@americanprogress.org>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Julianne Smith" <julsmi@gmail.com>
"Ken Lieberthal" <klieberthal@brookings.edu>
"Kurt Campbell" <kurtmcampbell@yahoo.com>
"Leon Fuerth" <hdpf@msn.com>
"Maggie McCloud" <mmccloud@dmggroup.com>
"Maida Stadtler" <mstadtler@apcoworldwide.com>
"Marcel Lettre" <marcel.lettre@gmail.com>
"Mariah Sixkiller" <mariah6@gmail.com>
"Martin Indyk" <mindyk@brookings.edu>
"Michele Flournoy" <micheleflournoy3@gmail.com>
"Mike Morell" <mike08082013@gmail.com>
"Pat Griffin" <pgriffin@pmj-dc.com>
philip.gordon <philip.gordon@verizon.net>
"Rob Malley" <rmalley555@gmail.com>
"Rose Marie Owen" <rmowen@virginia.edu>
"Samuel Berger" <sberger@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Sharon Burke" <burkese@comcast.net>
"Steve Ricchetti" <sricchetti@cox.net>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Strobe Talbott" <stalbott@brookings.edu>
"Susan Rice" <ricesusane@aol.com>
"Suzy George" <suzygeorge8@gmail.com>
"Tamara Wittes" <twittes@brookings.edu>
"Theodore Waddelow" <twaddelow@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Tim Roemer" <tjroemer@gmail.com>
"Tom Daschle" <Tom@DaschleGroup.com>
"Tom Donilon" <tdonilon@gmail.com>
"Tom Downey" <tdowney@dmggroup.com>
"Tommy Ross" <trossjr@gmail.com>
"Toni Verstandig" <tonigverstandig@gmail.com>
"Tony Blinken" <ablinken@aol.com>
"Veronica Pollack" <veronica@daschlegroup.com>
"Vikram Singh" <vsingh@americanprogress.org>
"Wendy Sherman" <wendyrsherman@gmail.com>

Date: 8/28/2015 7:58:27 AM

Subject: Iran Events

International Crisis Group
WORKING TO PREVENT CONFLICT WORLDWIDE

PLOUGHSHARES FUND

The International Crisis Group and Ploughshares Fund are pleased to invite you to a panel discussion and exchange on the Iran Nuclear Agreement now being considered by the U.S. Congress. The session will be held September 8, 2015 from 1 to 3 p.m. in Room 236 of the Russell Senate Office Building. Both organizations have been closely involved in analyzing and commenting on the technical and political aspects of the nuclear negotiations leading up to the current agreement and have strong views on its importance for U.S., regional and global nuclear non-proliferation objectives.

Participating in the panel will be Samuel R. Berger, former National Security Advisor; Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering, former Under-Secretary of State for Political Affairs; both members of the Crisis Group Board of Trustees; Jean-Marie Guéhenno, president of the International Crisis Group and former UN Under-Secretary General for Peace-Keeping; Joseph Cirincione, president of Ploughshares Fund and professor at Georgetown University; and Dr. Ali Vaez, Crisis Group Iran Senior Analyst.

Europe's role in and response to the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) has been a major issue during the current congressional debate. The question under consideration is whether European nations would increase their nuclear-related sanctions against Iran if Congress rejects the JCPOA in hope of a "better deal." Absent from the debate has been discussion of what Europe's strategy toward Iran will be, beyond sanctions. Perhaps equally important will be determining how Europe will help pursue implementation of the JCPOA, assuming that it will take effect.

The International Crisis Group and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace jointly invite you to discuss these questions:

1. How Europe Will Respond to the Iran Nuclear Agreement
Wednesday, September 9, 2015
12:15 to 1:45 p.m.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace
1779 Massachusetts Ave NW
Washington, DC 20036
RSVP HERE

2. Two veterans of European statecraft will kick off the discussion, with a U.S. analyst commenting. Jean-Marie Guéhenno is the president and CEO of the International Crisis Group. A former French diplomat, he served as the United Nations' under secretary general for peacekeeping operations from 2000 to 2008. Wolfgang Ischinger is the chairman of the Munich Security Conference. He was the German ambassador to the United States from 2001 to 2006 after serving as German deputy foreign minister for three years. Suzanne Maloney is interim deputy director of the Foreign Policy program at the Brookings Institution and a senior fellow in the Brookings Center for Middle East Policy. Most recently, she was a member of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff, covering Iran, Iraq, the Gulf States, and broader Middle East issues. Cornelius Adebahr, an associate in Carnegie's Europe Program, will moderate the discussion.

   Please join us for a very lively discussion on how Europe and the United States can jointly take the Iran deal forward. A light lunch will be served. Please click here to RSVP.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 1/6/2015 9:22:20 AM
Subject: Dahr Jamail | As Climate Disruption Advances, 26 Percent of Mammals Face Extinction

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Tuesday, 6 January 2015

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Dahr Jamail | As Climate Disruption Advances, 26 Percent of Mammals Face Extinction

Dahr Jamail, Truthout: In this month's dispatch, we examine how climate disruption is progressing rapidly on every front, and how even some diehard climate deniers are starting to recognize the dire danger we face.

Read the Article

Top Secret List Shows McChrystal Halting Night Raids After Controversy

Gareth Porter, Truthout: Published documents show Gen. Stanley McChrystal admitted the raids "come at a steep cost in terms of perceptions of the Afghan people." He said, "Nearly every Afghan I talk to mentions [night raids] as the single greatest irritant."

Read the Article

Elizabeth Warren: Our Populist Agenda - in Her Own Words

Roger Hickey, Campaign for America's Future: Sen. Elizabeth Warren has become the most visible leader of the growing populist movement that is uniting a new majority around an agenda for economic change. We present Warren's thinking about the economy in her own words.

Read the Article

Police Violence? Body Cams Are No Solution

Shahid Buttar, Truthout: Cameras fail to provide meaningful transparency, extend domestic spying, fuel mass incarceration and represent a budgetary bonus to police departments and corporate camera contractors, while distracting the debate from the more important issue of officer - and department - accountability for abusive patterns and practices.

Read the Article

BuzzFlash

Slavery May No Longer Officially Exist, but the Plantation Police Are Still on Patrol

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: Contemporary policing includes "plantation patrols" that enact a modern form of accepted institutional intimidation, brutality, incarceration and killing.

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

Michael Brown Sr. and the Agony of the Black Father in the US

Read the Article at Esquire

The Greatest Trick Obama Ever Pulled Was Convincing the World the US Isn't Still at War

Read the Article at The Guardian

"Incomprehensible" Secrecy: Sen. Bernie Sanders

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Former Guantánamo Prisoner Given Life Sentence in Russia

Aisha Maniar, Truthout: Rasul Kudaev's case exemplifies how the stamp of Guantánamo can blight an innocent man's life more than a decade after his release and how, to create a false sense of terror to justify illegal actions, states all over the world destroy lives with impunity.

Read the Article

So-Called "Free Trade" Deals Have Decimated the US Economy

The Daily Take Team, The Thom Hartmann Program: While the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) has been negotiated on and written in secret, many of its key details have been leaked, and those leaks paint a very disturbing picture about the effects that the TPP would have on the US public and economy.

Read the Article

A Self-Perpetuating Machine for US Insecurity: Welcome to the National Security State of 2015

Tom Engelhardt, TomDispatch: Official Washington has invented a national security system so dumb, so extreme, so fundamentalist and so deeply entrenched in our world that changing it will surely prove a stunningly difficult task. Welcome to the nightmarish inheritance we are preparing for our children and grandchildren.

Read the Article

Let's Begin the Year With a Major Victory Over Corporate Power

Kevin Zeese and Margaret Flowers, Popular Resistance: We have an immediate challenge in 2015 that threatens our progress. Obama and Congress are pushing to finalize the Trans-Pacific Partnership. If we don't stop it, our struggles will be set back and social, economic and environmental justice will be more difficult to achieve.

Read the Article

An Interview With Sherry Payne: Nurse, Childbirth Educator, Womanist

Monica J. Casper, The Feminist Wire: "When I think of how this [reproductive justice] framework 'fits' for my community, I think about the lack of access to dependable and efficacious contraceptives; I think about a maternity care complex that pathologizes Black women rather than promotes pregnancy wellness," says Sherry Payne in this interview.

Read the Interview

Studies Show Pot Legalization Has Not Impacted Teen Use

Lizabeth Paulat, Care2: Although adult use of marijuana increased following the years of legalization in Colorado and Washington State, what's interesting is that teen use has fallen. According to the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the use of marijuana has fallen among teens in almost every sector.

Read the Article

On the News With Thom Hartmann: Pope Francis to Urge Catholics to Address Climate Change, and More

In today's On the News segment: Pope Francis will urge the world's 1.2 billion Catholics to do more to address global warming; more than 50 percent of the food tested by our government contains pesticides; Vermont just proved

Demands Release of TPP Trade Agreement Text

Read the Article at Ring of Fire

Without Fox News, There Would Have Been No Iraq War

Read the Article at Mother Jones

How I Busted Steve Scalise: Inside a GOP Political Scandal - and Its Ongoing Cover-Up

Read the Article at Salon

Palestinians Seen Gaining Momentum for Statehood

Read the Article at The New York Times

Dave Zirin: As I Fought Cancer, Stuart Scott Was My Strength

Read the Article at The Nation

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

we have the power to shut down nuclear plants; and more.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

"David Duke Without the Baggage": Will Top GOPer Steve Scalise Resign Over Speech to Racist Group?

Amy Goodman and Aaron Maté, Democracy Now!: As Congress begins a new session today, one of its top Republicans has acknowledged he once addressed a gathering of white supremacists and neo-Nazis. House Majority Whip Steve Scalise has confirmed reports he spoke at a 2002 convention of EURO - the European-American Unity and Rights Organization.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Tony Carrk" <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 4/25/2015 4:52:46 AM
Subject: Re: FOR APPROVAL: Simplified Talkers for Surrogates re NYT

Couple of changes on my end and then good. Saw a typo in "arrangement"

- Would say author "works at an organization that has received Koch funding"
- would just say arrangement instead of "unusual" arrangement.

1. The Times ignores the essential fact that Hillary Clinton was not at all involved in the State Department's review of the sale to the Russians, AS STATED BY THE FORMER STATE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL WHO SERVED AS THE PRINCIPAL REPRESENTATIVE IN THIS PROCESS AT THE TIME.

4. The Times overlooks the fact that the State Department was just one of nine agencies involved in the U.S. government's review of the sale of Uranium One. IN ADDITION, THE DEAL WAS APPROVED BY THE NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION AND THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT.

On Sat, Apr 25, 2015 at 11:25 AM, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

> Good!
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
> On Apr 25, 2015, at 10:56 AM, Adrienne Elrod <aelrod@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:
>
> Jen/Kristina/Tony -
>
> Can y'all give these a quick once over? Some of our surrogates/friends and fam who are not going on tv but just want the top lines on how to defend on this topic have asked for a super simplified version of talkers. Fallon has signed off. Thanks!
>
> Adrienne K. Elrod
> Spokesperson
> Hillary For America
> www.hillaryclinton.com
> @adrienneelrod
>
> <04.23.15 Simplified Talkers Re NYT Foundation Story.docx>
>
> --
> You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
> To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
> To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
> For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Eryn Sepp" <esepp@americanprogress.org>
To: John.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 6/8/2015 9:12:28 AM
Subject: FW: AKP getting hammered

FYI – from Michael on Turkish election.

From: Michael Werz [mailto:mwerz@americanprogress.org]
Sent: Sunday, June 07, 2015 2:50 PM
To: John Podesta
Subject: AKP getting hammered

With 91% reporting results indicate that AKP is around 260 seats, short of 276 needed for majority. Kurdish HDP "winning" big with over 12%, meaning more than 70 seats in parliament. Nationalist MHP has gained ground, with outsize effect on seat count from small Anatolian cities.

We have word that main opposition CHP is preparing to piece together a minority government with outside (non-coalition) support of MHP and HDP. That could mean they open a corruption investigation into senior AKP leadership. All unconfirmed at this point.

This result will mean an internal AKP fight to lay blame -- most likely with PM Davutoglu sacrificed. There is a chance, however, that this will cause the old AKP leaders who have been forced out (like Gul and Arinc) to turn on Erdogan, painting him as more electoral liability than bonus.

There is also a decent chance this will mean early elections, likely by August, if nobody can piece together a government. But it means Erdogan's presidential dream is dead.

The other remarkable thing to remember is that it appears the election was mostly fair (besides AKP monopoly on TV time, government resources).

Turkey Election Could Transform State

President Erdogan pushes for sweeping powers, but Kurdish Peoples' Democratic Party could stand in way

Turks are voting in a make-or-break election for President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, who is seeking to overhaul the country's constitution.
By Emre Peker
Updated June 7, 2015 9:07 a.m. ET
14 COMMENTS
ISTANBUL—Turkish voters headed to the polls Sunday to elect a new parliament in the most uncertain and high-stakes election since the governing Islamist-conservative party swept to power in 2002.
Polls opened at 8 a.m. local time with 53.7 million voters eligible to cast ballots and closed at 5 p.m. across Turkey's 81 provinces. Election officials and monitors started tallying the votes as soon as polls closed. Early results are expected within hours and the final count should materialize late Sunday, although the contours of the new parliament may not immediately be clear.
While the tense atmosphere in the lead up to the ballots gave way to a more harmonious and hopeful environment at some polls, building pressure also triggered violence at others across the nation.
Television stations broadcast videos from a skirmish in the southeastern province of Sanliurfa by the Syrian border, where 15 people were injured after pro-Kurdish politicians were barred from visiting polling stations. Turkey's pro-government and opposition media were also dueling, charging either opposition parties or the ruling party with obstructing ballot observers, sometimes through force.
As polls closed in the Kurdish-dominated city of Diyarbakir in Turkey's southeast, local officials reported a high turnout and said long lines of voters had snaked out of polling stations throughout the day. Tight security measures were in place at voting points after a Friday bombing of an HDP campaign rally left two dead and dozens wounded. Thousands of policemen were deployed in the city, with many bused in from other parts of the country, amid fears of street violence following the results.
Many voters appeared confident the pro-Kurdish HDP would pass the 10% threshold. Murat, a 45-year old Kurdish construction worker said he had shifted his allegiance to HDP after years supporting the AKP.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I've returned to vote for my own people. The AKP has bolstered the police and state pressure is back... I was also upset by the attacks against the HDP," he said.
"Turkey is at a crossroads, nothing will be as it was in the past after this election—regardless of the outcome," said Melih Demir, a 36-year-old attorney who voted for the main-opposition republicans and said mounting anti-democratic trends need to be reversed. "I hope that after the vote, there is no more friction, that there is peace."
Opposition voters, split mostly among three parties, were united in the goal of ending the reign of the Justice and Development Party, or AKP, or at least curbing the government's power. AKP voters, however, warned against a return to the volatile coalition governments in the decade before 2002, and touted the ruling party's accomplishments from infrastructure investments to empowering the conservative middle class.
"My choice is obvious: the AKP—because they have achieved so much for the country. I don't want the nation to splinter, therefore I believe the stability of this one-party government must continue," said 72-year-old Hayriye after casting her vote in the governing party's Istanbul stronghold of Uskudar.
President Recep Tayyip Erdogan is pushing to concentrate his powers and fundamentally transform the Turkish state, there are mounting challenges to the $800 billion economy and the country faces national-security risk stemming from unrest at home and conflicts in neighboring Syria and Iraq, so the election's outcome is poised to chart Turkey's political future for the next decade.
"Turkey is headed toward its most exciting and potentially decisive election in more than a decade," the Center for American Progress, a Washington-based nonpartisan policy institute, said in a report Tuesday.
Contesting the election are four major parties: the governing AKP, the secularist Republican People's Party, the Nationalist Movement Party and the pro-Kurdish Peoples' Democratic Party, or HDP. Surveys in the lead up to the polls showed the AKP winning most of the seats in the Ankara parliament, but painted an unclear picture as to the makeup of the next government.
"The vote is also likely to decide if Turkey will continue to be dominated by President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, whose personal ambition to build a stronger presidency and solidify his hold on power has shaped the campaign," the Center for American Progress said.
Indeed, while voters are picking representatives to parliament, the ballot will once again serve as a referendum on Mr. Erdogan and his vision for Turkey—even though the president isn't running in this election.
Since his election to the nonpartisan and mostly ceremonial presidency last August, Mr. Erdogan has been campaigning to shift executive powers to his office from the prime ministry, which he held for 12 years before becoming head of state.
The president argues that the transition would help streamline decision-making and allow him to build a "New Turkey" that restores the nation's Ottoman grandeur. Pointing at a series of autocratic moves led by stifling of dissent and a crackdown on the government's political rivals, Mr. Erdogan's detractors warn that the change would create an autocracy.
An overwhelming victory for the ruling AKP, which Mr. Erdogan co-founded and led until last summer, could deliver Turkey's ultimate leader the executive powers he wants. For that, the AKP would have to secure at least 330 of the 550 seats in parliament, write a new constitution and put it to a referendum. To form a single-party government, the AKP needs 276 seats.
While pre-election surveys have shown republican and nationalist opposition parties eating into the government's support, the outcome could be determined by the pro-Kurdish People's Democratic Party, or HDP.
If the HDP wins 10% of the votes, overcoming an electoral threshold to enter parliament, it would halt Mr. Erdogan from realizing his plans with a new constitution and potentially force the first coalition government since the AKP has been in power.
Failure by the HDP to clear the barrier could land the governing party with enough seats to deliver Mr. Erdogan his long-held wish of an executive presidency like the ones in the U.S., France and Russia.
The absence of pro-Kurdish lawmakers would also threaten to derail two-year-old peace talks with the terrorist-listed Kurdistan Workers' Party, or PKK. That could reignite an insurgency that in the past three decades cost 40,000 lives and $1 trillion in economic damage.
"Turkey could witness a period of political turbulence and violence in the aftermath of the elections," said Anthony Skinner, who covers Turkey at U.K.-based political-risk consultancy Verisk Maplecroft. "The election is a choice between increased authoritarianism versus a parliamentary democracy defined by the division of power."
The fairness of elections has also surfaced as a significant concern for the first time in decades, with tens of thousands of volunteers signing up to monitor ballots.
"I was bothered by the fact that my ballot was not tallied as intended in last year's local elections, so, I decided to volunteer as a poll observer," said Gurcan Gulersoy, a 20-year-old student in Istanbul's liberal Cihangir neighborhood. "Workers at the ballots are more serious compared to the previous elections I have seen."
Distrust about polling follows scores of irregularities in the 2014 local elections, which had also served as a referendum on Mr. Erdogan's leadership as his government battled sprawling corruption charges. The AKP swept the municipal polls with 46% national support, and still comfortably remains Turkey's most popular party.
"Only a few votes will determine whether the HDP surpasses the 10% threshold, creating incentive for vote tampering," said a task force led by former U.S. ambassadors to Turkey in a report published by the Bipartisan Policy Center, a Washington-based think tank. "The outcome of this election will be crucial for the AKP's 'New Turkey.'"
Write to Emre Peker at emre.peker@wsj.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 8/14/2015 8:45:27 AM
Subject: Re: Iran tonight

Good!

On Aug 14, 2015 3:32 PM, "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Here's where we've landed:

I want to start by saying something about one of the most serious decisions we face today as a nation – the Iranian nuclear agreement.

As Secretary of State, I traveled tens of thousands of miles and twisted a lot of arms to build a global coalition against Iran and impose the most crippling sanctions in history. That pressure delivered a blow to Iran's economy and gave us the leverage necessary to get to the negotiating table and begin the first preliminary talks.

Now, thanks to President Obama, Secretary Kerry, and Secretary Moniz, we have an agreement that blocks Iran's pathways to a bomb and gives us new tools for verification and inspection to compel rigorous Iranian compliance.

There are people of good faith on both sides of this debate, people who are committed to protecting our security and the security of our allies, especially Israel, a true friend of America.

None of us should have any illusions about Iran's true intentions or its continuing threat to Israel, the region, and the United States. That threat is real and it must be confronted, including how we enforce this agreement and deter Iranian aggression and sponsorship of terrorism.

But our path is clear. This agreement, combined with strong enforcement and deterrence, is the only way to prevent Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapon.

There simply is no viable alternative.

That's why I strongly support President Obama. And I encourage all of you to get involved and let Congress know that you support the President as well.

And when this debate is over, we need to come together to ensure the President has the tools, resources, and support to send a clear message to Iran: Cheat, and you will pay. When you threaten Israel, you threaten America. And make no mistake, we will never allow you to acquire a nuclear weapon; not just during the term of this agreement -- never.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 11/2/2015 4:04:01 AM
Subject: Pope UN Address

The English translation of Pope Francis' September 25 address to the United Nations, UN Headquarters, New York.

Mr President,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Thank you for your kind words. Once again, following a tradition by which I feel honoured, the Secretary-General of the United Nations has invited the pope to address this distinguished assembly of nations. In my own name, and that of the entire Catholic community, I wish to express to you, Mr Ban Ki-moon, my heartfelt gratitude. I greet the heads of state and heads of government present, as well as the ambassadors, diplomats and political and technical officials accompanying them, the personnel of the United Nations engaged in this 70th Session of the General Assembly, the personnel of the various programs and agencies of the United Nations family, and all those who, in one way or another, take part in this meeting. Through you, I also greet the citizens of all the nations represented in this hall. I thank you, each and all, for your efforts in the service of mankind.

This is the fifth time that a pope has visited the United Nations. I follow in the footsteps of my predecessors Paul VI, in 1965, John Paul II in 1979 and 1995, and my most recent predecessor, now Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI, in 2008. All of them expressed their great esteem for the organisation, which they considered the appropriate juridical and political response to this present moment of history, marked by our technical ability to overcome distances and frontiers and, apparently, to overcome all natural limits to the exercise of power.
An essential response, in as much as technological power, in the hands of nationalistic or falsely universalist ideologies, is capable of perpetrating tremendous atrocities. I can only reiterate the appreciation expressed by my predecessors, in reaffirming the importance which the Catholic Church attaches to this institution and the hope which she places in its activities.

The United Nations is presently celebrating its seventieth anniversary. The history of this organised community of states is one of important common achievements over a period of unusually fast-paced changes. Without claiming to be exhaustive, we can mention the codification and development of international law, the establishment of international norms regarding human rights, advances in humanitarian law, the resolution of numerous conflicts, operations of peace-keeping and reconciliation, and any number of other accomplishments in every area of international activity and endeavour.

All these achievements are lights which help to dispel the darkness of the disorder caused by unrestrained ambitions and collective forms of selfishness. Certainly, many grave problems remain to be resolved, yet it is clear that, without all those interventions on the international level, mankind would not have been able to survive the unchecked use of its own possibilities. Every one of these political, juridical and technical advances is a path towards attaining the ideal of human fraternity and a means for its greater realisation.

For this reason, I pay homage to all those men and women whose loyalty and self-sacrifice have benefitted humanity as a whole in these past seventy years. In particular, I would recall today those who gave their lives for peace and reconciliation among peoples, from Dag Hammarskjöld to the many United Nations officials at every level who have been killed in the course of humanitarian missions, and missions of peace and reconciliation.
Beyond these achievements, the experience of the past 70 years has made it clear that reform and adaptation to the times is always necessary in the pursuit of the ultimate goal of granting all countries, without exception, a share in, and a genuine and equitable influence on, decision-making processes. The need for greater equity is especially true in the case of those bodies with effective executive capability, such as the Security Council, the financial agencies and the groups or mechanisms specifically created to deal with economic crises.

This will help limit every kind of abuse or usury, especially where developing countries are concerned. The International Financial Agencies should care for the sustainable development of countries and should ensure that they are not subjected to oppressive lending systems which, far from promoting progress, subject people to mechanisms which generate greater poverty, exclusion and dependence.

The work of the United Nations, according to the principles set forth in the preamble and the first articles of its founding charter, can be seen as the development and promotion of the rule of law, based on the realisation that justice is an essential condition for achieving the ideal of universal fraternity. In this context, it is helpful to recall that the limitation of power is an idea implicit in the concept of law itself. To give to each his own, to cite the classic definition of justice, means that no human individual or group can consider itself absolute, permitted to bypass the dignity and the rights of other individuals or their social groupings.
The effective distribution of power (political, economic, defence-related, technological, etc.) among a plurality of subjects, and the creation of a juridical system for regulating claims and interests, are one concrete way of limiting power. Yet today's world presents us with many false rights and – at the same time – broad sectors which are vulnerable, victims of power badly exercised: for example, the natural environment and the vast ranks of the excluded. These sectors are closely interconnected and made increasingly fragile by dominant political and economic relationships. That is why their rights must be forcefully affirmed, by working to protect the environment and by putting an end to exclusion.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

First, it must be stated that a true “right of the environment” does exist, for two reasons. First, because we human beings are part of the environment. We live in communion with it, since the environment itself entails ethical limits which human activity must acknowledge and respect. Man, for all his remarkable gifts, which “are signs of a uniqueness which transcends the spheres of physics and biology” (Laudato Si’, 81), is at the same time a part of these spheres. He possesses a body shaped by physical, chemical and biological elements, and can only survive and develop if the ecological environment is favourable. Any harm done to the environment, therefore, is harm done to humanity.

Second, because every creature, particularly a living creature, has an intrinsic value, in its existence, its life, its beauty and its interdependence with other creatures. We Christians, together with the other monotheistic religions, believe that the universe is the fruit of a loving decision by the Creator, who permits man respectfully to use creation for the good of his fellow men and for the glory of the Creator; he is not authorised to abuse it, much less to destroy it. In all religions, the environment is a fundamental good (cf. ibid.).

Abuse of the environment

The misuse and destruction of the environment are also accompanied by a relentless process of exclusion. In effect, a selfish and boundless thirst for power and material prosperity leads both to the misuse of available natural resources and to the exclusion of the weak and disadvantaged, either because they are differently abled (handicapped), or because they lack adequate information and technical expertise, or are incapable of decisive political action.

Economic and social exclusion is a complete denial of human fraternity and a grave offence against human rights and the environment. The poorest are those who suffer most from such offences, for three serious reasons: they are cast off by society, forced to live off what is discarded and suffer unjustly from the abuse of the environment. They are part of today’s widespread and quietly growing “culture of waste”.

The dramatic reality this whole situation of exclusion and inequality, with its evident effects, has led me, in union with the entire Christian people and many others, to take stock of my grave responsibility in this regard and to speak out, together with all those who are seeking urgently-needed and effective solutions. The adoption of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development at the World Summit, which opens today, is an important sign of hope. I am similarly confident that the Paris Conference on Climatic Change will secure fundamental and effective agreements.
Solemn commitments, however, are not enough, even though they are a necessary step toward solutions. The classic definition of justice which I mentioned earlier contains as one of its essential elements a constant and perpetual will: Iustitia est constans et perpetua voluntas ius sum cuique tribuendi.

Our world demands of all government leaders a will which is effective, practical and constant, concrete steps and immediate measures for preserving and improving the natural environment and thus putting an end as quickly as possible to the phenomenon of social and economic exclusion, with its baneful consequences: human trafficking, the marketing of human organs and tissues, the sexual exploitation of boys and girls, slave labour, including prostitution, the drug and weapons trade, terrorism and international organised crime. Such is the magnitude of these situations and their toll in innocent lives, that we must avoid every temptation to fall into a declarationist nominalism which would assuage our consciences. We need to ensure that our institutions are truly effective in the struggle against all these scourges.

The number and complexity of the problems require that we possess technical instruments of verification. But this involves two risks. We can rest content with the bureaucratic exercise of drawing up long lists of good proposals – goals, objectives and statistical indicators – or we can think that a single theoretical and aprioristic solution will provide an answer to all the challenges.

It must never be forgotten that political and economic activity is only effective when it is understood as a prudential activity, guided by a perennial concept of justice and constantly conscious of the fact that, above and beyond our plans and programmes, we are dealing with real men and women who live, struggle and suffer, and are often forced to live in great poverty, deprived of all rights.

To enable these real men and women to escape from extreme poverty, we must allow them to be dignified agents of their own destiny. Integral human development and the full exercise of human dignity cannot be imposed. They must be built up and allowed to unfold for each individual, for every family, in communion with others, and in a right relationship with all those areas in which human social life develops – friends, communities, towns and cities, schools, businesses and unions, provinces, nations, etc.

This presupposes and requires the right to education – also for girls (excluded in certain places) – which is ensured first and foremost by respecting and reinforcing the primary right of the family to educate its children, as well as the right of churches and social groups to support and assist families in the education of their children. Education conceived in this way is the basis for the implementation of the 2030 Agenda and for reclaiming the environment.

At the same time, government leaders must do everything possible to ensure that all can have the minimum spiritual and material means needed to live in dignity and to create and support a family, which is the primary cell of any social development. In practical terms, this absolute minimum has three names: lodging, labour, and land; and one spiritual name: spiritual freedom, which includes religious freedom, the right to education and other civil rights.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For all this, the simplest and best measure and indicator of the implementation of the new Agenda for development will be effective, practical and immediate access, on the part of all, to essential material and spiritual goods: housing, dignified and properly remunerated employment, adequate food and drinking water; religious freedom and, more generally, spiritual freedom and education. These pillars of integral human development have a common foundation, which is the right to life and, more generally, what we could call the right to existence of human nature itself.

Ethical limits

The ecological crisis, and the large-scale destruction of biodiversity, can threaten the very existence of the human species. The baneful consequences of an irresponsible mismanagement of the global economy, guided only by ambition for wealth and power, must serve as a summons to a forthright reflection on man: “man is not only a freedom which he creates for himself. Man does not create himself. He is spirit and will, but also nature” (BENEDICT XVI, Address to the Bundestag, 22 September 2011, cited in Laudato Si’, 6).

Creation is compromised “where we ourselves have the final word… The misuse of creation begins when we no longer recognise any instance above ourselves, when we see nothing else but ourselves” (ID. Address to the Clergy of the Diocese of Bolzano-Bressanone, 6 August 2008, cited ibid.). Consequently, the defence of the environment and the fight against exclusion demand that we recognize a moral law written into human nature itself, one which includes the natural difference between man and woman (cf. Laudato Si’, 155), and absolute respect for life in all its stages and dimensions (cf. ibid., 123, 136).

Without the recognition of certain incontestable natural ethical limits and without the immediate implementation of those pillars of integral human development, the ideal of “saving succeeding generations from the scourge of war” (Charter of the United Nations, Preamble), and “promoting social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom” (ibid.), risks becoming an unattainable illusion, or, even worse, idle chatter which serves as a cover for all kinds of abuse and corruption, or for carrying out an ideological colonisation by the imposition of anomalous models and lifestyles which are alien to people’s identity and, in the end, irresponsible.

War is the negation of all rights and a dramatic assault on the environment. If we want true integral human development for all, we must work tirelessly to avoid war between nations and between peoples.

To this end, there is a need to ensure the uncontested rule of law and tireless recourse to negotiation, mediation and arbitration, as proposed by the Charter of the United Nations, which constitutes truly a fundamental juridical norm. The experience of these seventy years since the founding of the United Nations in general, and in particular the experience of these first 15 years of the third millennium, reveal both the effectiveness of the full application of international norms and the ineffectiveness of their lack of enforcement. When the Charter of the United Nations is respected and applied with transparency and sincerity, and without ulterior motives, as an obligatory reference point of justice and not as a means of masking spurious intentions, peaceful results will be obtained. When, on the other hand, the norm is considered simply as an instrument to be used whenever it proves favourable, and to be avoided when it is not, a true Pandora’s box is opened, releasing uncontrollable forces which gravely harm defenceless populations, the cultural milieu and even the biological environment.

The preamble and the first article of the Charter of the United Nations set forth the foundations of the international juridical framework: peace, the pacific solution of disputes and the development of friendly relations between the nations. Strongly opposed to such statements, and in practise denying them, is the constant tendency to the proliferation of arms, especially weapons of mass distraction, such as nuclear weapons. An ethics and a law based on the threat of mutual destruction – and possibly the destruction of all mankind – are self-contradictory and an affront to the entire framework of the United Nations, which would end up as “nations united by fear and distrust”. There is urgent need to work for a world free of nuclear weapons, in full application of the non-proliferation Treaty, in letter and spirit, with the goal of a complete prohibition of these weapons.

The recent agreement reached on the nuclear question in a sensitive region of Asia and the Middle East is proof of the potential of political good will and of law, exercised with sincerity, patience and constancy. I express my hope that this agreement will be lasting and efficacious, and bring forth the desired fruits with the cooperation of all the parties involved.

In this sense, hard evidence is not lacking of the negative effects of military and political interventions which are not coordinated between members of the international community. For this reason, while regretting to have to do so, I must renew my repeated appeals regarding to the painful situation of the entire Middle East, North Africa and other African countries, where Christians, together with other cultural or ethnic groups, and even members of the majority religion who have no desire to be caught up in hatred and folly, have been forced to witness the destruction of their places of worship, their cultural and religious heritage, their houses and property, and have faced the alternative either of fleeing or of paying for their adhesion to good and to peace by their own lives, or by enslavement.

These realities should serve as a grave summons to an examination of conscience on the part of those charged with the conduct of international affairs. Not only in cases of religious or cultural persecution, but in every situation of conflict, as in Ukraine, Syria, Iraq, Libya, South Sudan and the Great Lakes region, real human beings take precedence over partisan interests, however legitimate the latter may be. In wars and conflicts there are individual persons, our brothers and sisters, men and women, young and old, boys and girls who weep, suffer and die. Human beings who are easily discarded when our only response is to draw up lists of problems, strategies and disagreements.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Protection of human dignity

As I wrote in my letter to the secretary-general of the United Nations on 9 August 2014, “the most basic understanding of human dignity compels the international community, particularly through the norms and mechanisms of international law, to do all that it can to stop and to prevent further systematic violence against ethnic and religious minorities” and to protect innocent peoples.

Along the same lines I would mention another kind of conflict which is not always so open, yet is silently killing millions of people. Another kind of war experienced by many of our societies as a result of the narcotics trade. A war which is taken for granted and poorly fought. Drug trafficking is by its very nature accompanied by trafficking in persons, money laundering, the arms trade, child exploitation and other forms of corruption. A corruption which has penetrated to different levels of social, political, military, artistic and religious life, and, in many cases, has given rise to a parallel structure which threatens the credibility of our institutions.

I began this speech recalling the visits of my predecessors. I would hope that my words will be taken above all as a continuation of the final words of the address of Pope Paul VI; although spoken almost exactly fifty years ago, they remain ever timely. “The hour has come when a pause, a moment of recollection, reflection, even of prayer, is absolutely needed so that we may think back over our common origin, our history, our common destiny. The appeal to the moral conscience of man has never been as necessary as it is today… For the danger comes neither from progress nor from science; if these are used well, they can help to solve a great number of the serious problems besetting mankind (Address to the United Nations Organisation, 4 October 1965). Among other things, human genius, well applied, will surely help to meet the grave challenges of ecological deterioration and of exclusion. As Paul VI said: “The real danger comes from man, who has at his disposal ever more powerful instruments that are as well fitted to bring about ruin as they are to achieve lofty conquests” (ibid.).

The common home of all men and women must continue to rise on the foundations of a right understanding of universal fraternity and respect for the sacredness of every human life, of every man and every woman, the poor, the elderly, children, the infirm, the unborn, the unemployed, the abandoned, those considered disposable because they are only considered as part of a statistic. This common house of all men and women must also be built on the understanding of a certain sacredness of created nature.

Such understanding and respect call for a higher degree of wisdom, one which accepts transcendence, rejects the creation of an all-powerful élite, and recognises that the full meaning of individual and collective life is found in selfless service to others and in the sage and respectful use of creation for the common good. To repeat the words of Paul VI, “the edifice of modern civilisation has to be built on spiritual principles, for they are the only ones capable not only of supporting it, but of shedding light on it” (ibid.).

El Gaucho Martín Fierro, a classic of literature in my native land, says: “Brothers should stand by each other because this is the first law; keep a true bond between you always, at every time – because if you fight among yourselves, you’ll be devoured by those outside”.

The contemporary world, so apparently connected, is experiencing a growing and steady social fragmentation, which places at risk “the foundations of social life” and consequently leads to “battles over conflicting interests” (Laudato Si’, 229).

The present time invites us to give priority to actions which generate new processes in society, so as to bear fruit in significant and positive historical events (cf. Evangelii Gaudium, 223). We cannot permit ourselves to postpone “certain agendas” for the future. The future demands of us critical and global decisions in the face of world-wide conflicts which increase the number of the excluded and those in need.

The praiseworthy international juridical framework of the United Nations Organisation and of all its activities, like any other human endeavour, can be improved, yet it remains necessary; at the same time it can be the pledge of a secure and happy future for future generations. And so it will, if the representatives of the States can set aside partisan and ideological interests, and sincerely strive to serve the common good. I pray to Almighty God that this will be the case, and I assure you of my support and my prayers, and the support and prayers of all the faithful of the Catholic Church, that this Institution, all its member States, and each of its officials, will always render an effective service to mankind, a service respectful of diversity and capable of bringing out, for sake of the common good, the best in each people and in every individual

Upon all of you, and the peoples you represent, I invoke the blessing of the Most High, and all peace and prosperity. Thank you.

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara Du Bois" <sdubois@progressivemediausa.org>
To: "Sara Du Bois" <SDuBois@progressivemediausa.org>
Date: 6/16/2008 1:23:15 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 6/16

08 Election Daily News Clips
June 16th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

12pm McCain: Finance Luncheon in Midland,TX

6pm McCain: Finance Reception in Dallas, Texas

8pm McCain: Finance Event in Dallas, TX

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

'Maverick' McCain bedevils Democrats (Washington Times 6/16/08)
By Joseph Curl
Sen. John McCain's reputation as a maverick who regularly bucks the conservative wing of his party will be a formidable obstacle for Sen. Barack Obama as he seeks to persuade moderates to vote for him in November.
http://washingtontimes.com/news/2008/jun/16/maverick-mccain-bedevils-democrats/

Behind McCain's Town Hall Campaign (TIME 6/16/08)
By Michael Scherer
Sometimes in politics, the medium really is the message. ... For McCain, the town hall is more than just a chance for him to spread his message of staying the course in Iraq and cutting taxes and spending. It is itself the message he wants to deliver.
http://www.time.com/time/politics/article/0,8599,1814902,00.html

Historians see little chance for McCain (Politico 6/16/08)
By: David Paul Kuhn
One week into the general election, the polls show a dead heat. But many presidential scholars doubt that John McCain stands much of a chance, if any.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0608/11090.html

Bush-backer pens pro-Obama book (Politico 6/16/08)
By: Ben Smith
The conservative Evangelical biographer of George W. Bush and Tom DeLay has moved on to a new subject: Barack Obama. And his new book, due out this summer, may lend credibility to Senator Obama's bid to win Evangelical Christian voters away from the Republican Party.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0608/11099.html

McCain Wobbles (Slate 6/16/08)
By Mickey Kaus
Alito and Scalia or Breyer and Ginsberg?
http://www.slate.com/id/2193674/?from=rss

Aiming to Avoid the Dole-drums (NEWSWEEK 6/23/08)
By Holly Bailey
McCain needs to learn from the mistakes of another honored war hero who ran for the White House and lost.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.newsweek.com/id/141506

She Had Such Nice Things to Say (NEWSWEEK 6/23/08)
By Jonathan Darman
To get McCain elected, Carly Fiorina is talking up ... Hillary.
http://www.newsweek.com/id/141508

In '74 Thesis, the Seeds of McCain's War Views (NYT 6/15/08)
By DAVID D. KIRKPATRICK
About a year after his release from a North Vietnamese prison camp, Cmdr. John S. McCain III sat down to address one of the most vexing questions confronting his fellow prisoners: Why did some choose to collaborate with the North Vietnamese?
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/15/us/politics/15pows.html?_r=1&ref=politics&oref=slogin
Link to pdf of thesis: http://graphics8.nytimes.com/packages/pdf/politics/20080615/McCain.pdf

What Will the Pillars of His Foreign Policy Be? (Washington Post 6/15/08)
By James Mann; B03
The Bush administration has become legendary for infighting over foreign policy. But don't assume that the Republican bickering over how to deal with the world ends when President Bush steps down. To see the potential for internal conflict in a McCain administration, consider two figures who may well be in line for top foreign policy jobs.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/13/AR2008061301571.html

Warring Campaigns (Weekly Standard 6/23/08)
by Stephen F. Hayes
McCain and Obama trade blows over Iraq.
http://www.weeklystandard.com/Content/Public/Articles/000/000/015/227cvowu.asp

There's Votes in Them Thar Hills (Weekly Standard 6/23/08)
by Fred Barnes
For years now, John McCain has warned of the peril to America in sending $400 billion a year to foreign countries in return for oil. He's been loud and relentless on the subject--and wise. "It's a national security issue," he declared last week at a town hall meeting in New York City. Much of the money goes to countries that "do not like us very much," he noted. That was McCain's understated way of saying the beneficiaries include Iran, Venezuela, and Saudi Arabia, countries in which anti-American forces find aid and comfort.
http://www.weeklystandard.com/Content/Public/Articles/000/000/015/225hregm.asp

McCain's run little noticed in bustling Hanoi (Philadelphia Inquirer 6/15/08)
By Melissa Dribben
As notoriety cedes to prosperity, a small salute to his "Hilton" ordeal remains.
http://www.philly.com/inquirer/home_top_stories/20080615_McCain_s_run_little_noticed_in_bustling_Hanoi.html

Age Becomes the New Race and Gender (NYT 6/15/08)
By ADAM NAGOURNEY
This year's campaign for president has provided an extended test of attitudes toward race and gender, two powerful and volatile forces in politics. Now a third is about to join that list: age.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/15/weekinreview/15nagourney.html

McCain blasts corn subsidies, backs larger Security Council (AP 6/15/08)
U.S. presidential hopeful Sen. John McCain supports ending subsidies for U.S. ethanol production and would back Brazil's inclusion on an expanded United Nations Security Council, a Brazilian newspaper reported Sunday.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/politics/election2008/2008-06-15-mccain-brazil_N.htm

Campaigns Unable to Agree on Series of Meetings (NYT 6/15/08)
By MICHAEL FALCONE and JULIE BOSMAN
In almost every campaign appearance this week, Senator John McCain has been leaning on Senator Barack

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama to accept his offer to engage in a series of 10 one-on-one town-hall-style meetings, a format that worked well for Mr. McCain in the primaries.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/14/us/politics/14campaign.html

McCain Reaches Across the Aisle in Virtual Town Hall (Washington Post blog 6/15/08)
By Michael D. Shear
Sen. John McCain held a novel, virtual town hall meeting Saturday afternoon that his campaign said was aimed at letting Democrats and independents ask McCain questions over a conference call.
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/06/14/mccain_reaches_across_the_aisl.html

Fiorina woos Clinton supporters for McCain (Reuters 6/15/08)
Republican John McCain enlisted the high-profile help of Carly Fiorina, once the most powerful businesswoman in the United States, on Saturday to try to get women behind his campaign for the White House.
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/25169407/

McCain tries to play Dems for fools (again) (Carpetbagger 6/15/08)
It makes perfect sense that the McCain campaign would make at least cursory efforts to reach out to Hillary Clinton's most ardent supporters. John McCain does, after all, have very little to lose. There are some lingering hard feelings after the longest and closest Democratic presidential primary ever, and even though the intra-party factions agree on everything and share a common agenda, McCain hopes to convince a few Dems that his ideas, vision, issue positions, platform, and voting record are completely irrelevant in a presidential campaign.
http://www.thecarpetbaggerreport.com/archives/15877.html

McCain and Clinton's unlikely friendship (LA Times 6/15/08)
By DON FREDERICK and ANDREW MALCOLM
...people who know both McCain and Clinton. It's true, they confirmed, there is a special friendship. It apparently started in January 2001, when Clinton became the first former first lady elected to public office and walked into the U.S. Senate.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-ticket15-2008jun15,0,7726398.story

Gingrich: McCain Won't Win On Experience (CBS 6/15/08)
Former Speaker Says If Republicans Campaign Against Obama's Resume They Will Fail
http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2008/06/15/ftn/main4181837.shtml

Gingrich: Jindal is best choice for vice president (The Hill 6/15/08)
By Klaus Marre
Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) said Sunday that Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal "would be far and away the best candidate" to appear on the Republican presidential ticket with Sen. John McCain (Ariz.).
http://thehill.com/campaign-2008/gingrich-jindal-is-best-choice-for-vice-president-2008-06-15.html

Obama and McCain: two sides of the coin (LA Times 6/15/08)
By Janet Hook
As the faltering economy has catapulted to the top of the presidential campaign agenda, Republican John McCain and Democrat Barack Obama have both said they want to make healthcare more affordable, cut taxes and adopt a new energy strategy. But they have laid out far different paths to achieving these goals.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-econplans15-2008jun15,0,7782825.story

McCain Meets with Iraqi Foreign Minister (Washington Post blog 6/15/08)
By Juliet Eilperin
Presumptive GOP nominee John McCain (R-Ariz.) met privately with Iraqi Foreign Minister Hoshyar Zebari this morning at his campaign headquarters, before emerging to praise the minister and take a handful of questions from a pool of reporters.
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/06/15/mccain_meets_with_iraqi_foreig.html

McCain Texas Fundraiser Back On, Sans Oilman (Washington Post blog 6/15/08)
By Juliet Eilperin
Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz) has decided to hold a fundraiser initially sponsored by a controversial Texas oilman later in the summer at a different venue, according to an aide who asked not to be identified.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/06/15/mccain_texas_fundraiser_back_o.html

McCain has diluted his rare reputation (Baltimore Sun 6/15/08)
By PAUL WEST
John McCain once had the most powerful brand in American politics.
www.baltimoresun.com/news/nation/bal-te.infocus15jun15,0,4687694.story

At Reuters Summit, McCain seen as best choice for economy (Reuters 6/15/08)
Republican presidential candidate John McCain's tax policies have given him an edge as the better man for the economy, various Wall Street experts said at this week's Reuters Investment Outlook Summit.
http://www.reuters.com/article/politicsNews/idUSN1334411920080615

McCain event with fundraiser who joked about rape has been 'postponed,' not canceled. (ThinkProgress 6/15/08)
On Friday, ABC reported that Sen. John McCain's (R-AZ) campaign had canceled a fundraiser with a Texas oilman who compared rape to the weather while running for governor. "As long as it's inevitable, you might as well lie back and enjoy it," said Clayton Williams in 1990. But the Houston Chronicle now reports that yesterday afternoon, the campaign said that the event had simply been "postponed" until later this summer:
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/06/15/mccain-event-with-fundraiser-who-joked-about-rape-has-been-postponed-not-canceled/

McCain Cuts Fund-Raiser (NYT 6/15/08)
By SARAH WHEATON
Senator John McCain's presidential campaign canceled a fund-raiser at the home of an 86-year-old oilman, Clayton Williams, after the campaign faced questions about comments Mr. Williams made in the 1990 race for Texas governor.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/15/us/politics/15mccain.html

McCain Says No to Returning Funds Raised by Controversial Oilman (Washington Post blog 6/14/08)
By Juliet Eilperin
Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) will not return the $300,000 raised by a Texas Republican who joked in 1990 that women should submit to rape and "enjoy it."
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/06/14/mccain_says_no_to_returning_fu.html

Kaffee vs. Jessup II?: Obama and McCain Square Off on Habeas Corpus Rights for Accused Terrorists (ABC blog 6/15/08)
By Jake Tapper
At a town hall meeting in Wayne, Pa., today, Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., embraced an issue hardly made for his own TV ads: the rights of detainees accused of terrorism.
http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalpunch/2008/06/kaffee-vs-jessu.html

Kristol: McCain And Graham Plan To Introduce Legislation Undermining Supreme Court Decision On Guantanamo (ThinkProgress 6/15/08)
...Today on Fox News Sunday, Weekly Standard editor Bill Kristol revealed that "very soon" — likely as early as next week — McCain and Graham will be introducing legislation to undermine the Supreme Court decision by setting up a "national security court":
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/06/15/kristol-court-guantanamo/

McCain Denounces Detainee Ruling (Washington Post 6/14/08)
By Juliet Eilperin and Michael D. Shear; A04
Republican Sen. John McCain (Ariz.) on Friday forcefully sided with President Bush in condemning the U.S. Supreme Court's decision to grant access to federal courts for the detainees held at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, potentially muddying his reputation as a critic of the administration's approach to treatment of suspected terrorists.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/13/AR2008061303414.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FLASHBACK: In 2003, McCain Blasted Administration's Indefinite Detention Of Detainees (ThinkProgress 6/13/08)
Yesterday, the Supreme Court ruled that Guantanamo Bay detainees have the right to challenge their detention in civilian courts. The Bush administration and its allies quickly criticized the decision:
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/06/13/mccain-gitmo-detention/

Obama Seen Beating McCain in Web War (ABC 6/15/08)
By JENNIFER PARKER
Facebook Entrepreneur Chris Hughes a Player in Obama's Tech-Savvy Campaign http://abcnews.go.com/Politics/Vote2008/story?id=5063449&page=1

McCain gets early Father's Day present (AP 6/15/08) Daughter switches from independent to Republican http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/25140190/

McCain vs. himself (Carpetbagger 6/15/08)
For all of the enormous differences between Barack Obama and John McCain, running second are the differences between John McCain and himself.
http://www.thecarpetbaggerreport.com/archives/15883.html
Link to video: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hnb2IrsU1Cg

McCain: Sorry, Five Joint Appearances With Obama Just Won't Do It (TPM 6/15/08)
By Greg Sargent
Five joint appearances between the two presidential candidates between now and Election Day isn't enough? That's the McCain campaign's claim, now that it has rejected Obama's offer to conduct three traditional debates, plus a joint town hall in July, and another debate on foreign policy in August.
http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/06/mccain_five_joint_appearances.php

Disclosures Give Look at Candidates' Personal Finances (NYT 6/14/08)
By LARRY ROHTER
Senators John McCain and Barack Obama released their Senate financial disclosure statements on Friday, revealing that Mr. McCain and his wife had at least $225,000 in credit card debt and that Mr. Obama and his wife had put more than $200,000 into college funds for their daughters.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/14/us/politics/14disclosure.html

More on Cindy McCain's finances disclosed (LA Times 6/14/08)
By Ralph Vartabedian
John McCain's wife made 13 deals last year in her financial enterprise that exceeded $1 million each, according to a Senate disclosure statement.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-disclosure14-2008jun14,0,5094734.story

Hillary Pledged Delegate: I'm Backing McCain! (TPM 6/14/08)
By Eric Kleefeld
Although Hillary Clinton has asked her delegates to support Barack Obama, one particular delegate is taking the polar-opposite route. Debra Bartoshevich, a Hillary pledged delegate from Wisconsin, has now announced that she's supporting John McCain.
http://tpmelectioncentral.talkingpointsmemo.com/2008/06/hillary_pledged_delegate_im_ba.php

Colin Powell Sees McCain-Obama Race as Tough Choice (WSJ blog 6/13/08)
By Susan Davis
Former Secretary of State Colin Powell said it's not out of the question that he may support expected Democratic presidential nominee Barack Obama in the race against John McCain.
http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2008/06/13/colin-powell-sees-mccain-obama-race-as-tough-choice/

Fact Check: McCain and Social Security (FOX News 6/13/08)
John McCain has long advocated letting workers divert some of their payroll taxes into private accounts. So when he says now that he won't privatize Social Security, that raises eyebrows. But is he flip-flopping?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.foxnews.com/wires/2008Jun13/0,4670,SocialSecurityFactCheck,00.html

McCain Doubles Down On His Social Security Privatization Bamboozlement (ThinkProgress 6/13/08)
Yesterday, despite his clear record on the issue, Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) told a crowd in Nashua, NH that he has "never" been for the privatization of Social Security.
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/06/13/mccain-social-security-bamboozle/
Link to video: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RkkKSF3xiNY

AFA Urges Strengthening Montgomery GI Bill (AFA press release 6/13/08)
The Air Force Association today urged improvements to the Montgomery GI Bill, including those proposed in S. 22 by Sen. Jim Webb (D-VA).
http://www.afa.org/media/press/gibill.asp

McCain: Treat our wives with respect (CNN 6/13/08)
* Sen. John McCain talks one-on-one with CNN's Dana Bash on Friday
* "Americans want us to have a much more respectful campaign," he says
* McCain blasts the Supreme Court's decision on detainee rights
* He's also asked if he's considering a McCain-Romney ticket http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/06/13/mccain.interview/index.html

Report: Rove Talks "Fairly Regularly" With McCain Camp; Getting Six Figures From Freedom's Watch (MotherJones 6/13/08)
In a new National Journal article (not available online), writer Peter Stone dives deep into the conservative establishment and gets campaign staffers, movement operatives, and the ubiquitous "strategists" and "consultants" to talk about Karl Rove's current role in presidential politics. The takeaway? Rove is back. In fact, he probably never left. The campaign that is trying to prove it's not a second coming of George W. Bush is using the President's former chief strategist on a regular basis.
http://www.motherjones.com/mojoblog/archives/2008/06/8690_natl_journal_ro.html

OPNIONS AND EDITORIALS

McCain's time warp (Boston Globe 6/16/08)
TRYING TO deflect criticism that he is sounding like a clone of the unpopular President Bush, Senator John McCain is equating Barack Obama's policies with those of President Jimmy Carter. Comparisons across generations are rarely on target, and McCain's remarks are particularly obtuse.
http://www.boston.com/bostonglobe/editorial_opinion/editorials/articles/2008/06/16/mccains_time_warp/

It's Going To Be Quite a Battle (The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette 6/16/08)
By DAVID SHRIBMAN
This is shaping up as quite a presidential election: a close campaign taking on the trappings of what generals call "total war."
http://www.nysun.com/opinion/its-going-to-be-quite-a-battle/80017/

Angry Clinton Women ♥ McCain? (NYT 6/15/08)
By FRANK RICH
The same Republican operatives who gleefully insulted Hillary Clinton are now peddling the fable that her female supporters will desert their own party en masse.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/15/opinion/15rich.html

Hillary redux? (Washington Times 6/15/08)
John McCain is seemingly imitating the campaign strategy Hillary Clinton used against Barack Obama during the Democratic primaries and caucuses. Like Mrs. Clinton, Mr. McCain is emphasizing his experience and foreign-policy credentials. His campaign is also mirroring her campaign focus on winning big states, courting swing voters, and wooing the white, blue-collar vote. Mrs. Clinton achieved some success with this formula. Yet in the long run, her strategy failed. Why, then, is Mr. McCain adopting an approach that ultimately failed for Mrs. Clinton?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2008/jun/15/editorial-hillary-redux/

Think the Gender War Is Over? Think Again (NYT 6/15/08)
By SUSAN FALUDI
FOR months, our political punditry foresaw one, and only one, prospective gender contest looming in the general election: between the first serious female presidential candidate and the Republican male "warrior." But those who were dreading a plebiscite on sexual politics shouldn't celebrate just yet. Hillary Clinton may be out of the race, but a Barack Obama versus John McCain match-up still has the makings of an epic American gender showdown.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/15/opinion/15faludi.html

When McCain Drops Out (Huffington Post 6/15/08)
By Steve Rosenbaum
When the Republicans choose their candidate on September 4th, there is a very real chance that they could throw the election into an unexpected chaos as they pull a genuine September Surprise. I think there is every reason to believe John McCain won't be the nominee. Ok, let me say that again. McCain will not be the Republican candidate in November.
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/steve-rosenbaum/when-mccain-drops-out_b_107236.html

Questions for Gore Vidal (NYT 6/15/08)
INTERVIEW BY DEBORAH SOLOMON
The writer talks about the trouble with critics, what West Point taught him about McCain and why he doesn't care about gay marriage.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/15/magazine/15wwln-Q4-t.html

Foreclosures and the Election (NYT 6/15/08)
There is much still uncertain about the future course of the home mortgage debacle, but one thing is now clear: Congress and President Bush have done so little for so long that they will never manage an effective response. Like so many other problems, the foreclosure crisis will be dumped on the next president and the next Congress.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/15/opinion/15sun1.html

No easy solutions (Philadelphia Inquirer 6/15/08)
The next president will inherit a wide range of economic problems, from soaring food and gas prices, to a slumping housing industry, to a weak job market and the tumbling value of the dollar.
http://www.philly.com/inquirer/opinion/20080615_Editorial__The_Economy.html

A Moment of Clarity in Baghdad (NYT 6/14/08)
The disconnect between Washington's stay-the-course Republicans — President Bush and Senator John McCain, in particular — and the Iraqi government has grown too wide to ignore. As the administration pushes for a legal agreement to extend the American military presence in Iraq, the Iraqis are pushing back. That is a positive sign.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/14/opinion/14sat1.html

Candidates, Fly Away Home (NYT 6/14/08)
By GAIL COLLINS
With the general election five months away, it feels as if we're embarking on a very long cruise with two neighbors in the last throes of a troubled marriage.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/14/opinion/14collins.html

MCCAIN'S OIL WRONG (NY Post 6/14/08)
Who's writing John McCain's campaign speeches - Michael Moore? You'd think so, from the over-the-top rhetoric McCain used on Thursday night at Federal Hall, ripping into the nation's oil companies.
http://www.nypost.com/seven/06142008/postopinion/editorials/mccains_oil_wrong_115488.htm

BUSH NEWS

Bush never lied to us about Iraq (LA Times 6/16/08)
By James Kirchick

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The administration simply got bad intelligence. Critics are wrong to assert deception.
http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-oe-kirchick16-2008jun16,0,4808346.story

Bush says US can calm tensions on Afghan-Pakistan border (Washington Post 6/16/08)
By DEB RIECHMANN
President Bush says the United States can help calm the "testy situation" along the border of Afghanistan and Pakistan.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/16/AR2008061600313.html?hpid=moreheadlines

Britain, E.U. Announce Iran Sanctions (Washington Post 6/16/08)
By Dan Eggen
British Prime Minister Gordon Brown on Monday announced new sanctions against Iran and an unspecified increase in troops for Afghanistan, handing President Bush a symbolic boost on the last day of his weeklong farewell trip to Europe.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/16/AR2008061600313_pf.html

Iran and Iraq on the agenda for Bush-Brown talks (Reuters 6/16/08)
By Matt Spetalnick
U.S. President George W. Bush and British Prime Minister Gordon Brown will present a united front against Iran's nuclear ambitions Monday and seek to dispel media suggestions of a rift over troop levels in Iraq.
http://www.reuters.com/article/featuredCrisis/idUSL1658907

Bush warns Brown over plan to cut Iraq force (UK's The Guardian 6/15/08)
By Ned Temko
George Bush flies into London today with a warning for Gordon Brown not to announce a timetable for a British pull-out from Iraq, and expressing deep scepticism about the Prime Minister's high-profile strategy for bringing down world oil prices.
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2008/jun/15/georgebush.iraq

Bush is straight-talker, so what's EU-3? (AP 6/15/08)
By DEB RIECHMANN
President Bush is a straight-talking guy, so what's he doing talking about the EU-3? It's part of Bush diplomatic-speak. Derided by some as a cowboy during his first term, Bush is ending his presidency knee-deep in group diplomacy.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/15/AR2008061500164.html

Jeb back on stump ... just for schools (St. Petersburg Times 6/15/08)
By Shannon Colavecchio-Van Sickler
Jeb Bush is back. This week, in the center of the state he governed for eight years, Bush ends his 18-month hiatus from Florida public life. The chosen occasion: a high-profile education conference, organized by his foundations, that will showcase the controversial reforms of his tenure.
http://www.tampabay.com/news/politics/state/article625057.ece#

Cheney Acknowledges He Lied About China Drilling '60 Miles Off The Coast Of Florida' (ThinkProgress 6/13/08)
On Wednesday, Vice President Dick Cheney gave a speech to the Chamber of Commerce in which he claimed that China, in cooperation with the Cuban government, is drilling for oil "60 miles off the coast of Florida." "Even the communists have figured out" that drilling for oil is the solution to the energy crisis, Cheney argued.
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/06/13/cheney-admits-oil-lie/

OTHER TOP NEWS

Gay Rights Pioneers Will Be First Married Lesbian Couple in San Francisco (AP 6/16/08)
More than 55 years after they fell in love, Phyllis Lyon and Del Martin plan to become one of the first same-sex couples to legally exchange marriage vows in California.
http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,367211,00.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In Midwest Floods, a Broad Threat to Crops (NYT 6/16/08)
By SUSAN SAULNY
Here, in some of the best soil in the world, the stunted stalks of Dave Timmerman's newly planted corn are wilting in what sometimes look more like rice paddies than the plains, the sunshine glinting off of pools of collected water. Although time is running out, he has yet to plant all of his soybean crop because the waterlogged soil cannot support his footsteps, much less heavy machinery.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/06/16/us/16midwest.html?em&ex=1213761600&en=26c8215ba785304e&ei=5087%0A

F.C.C. Chief Backs XM-Sirius Deal (AP 6/16/08)
The proposed merger of the nation's two satellite radio broadcasters, bogged down in the regulatory process for over a year, has cleared a major hurdle with Federal Communications Commission chief recommending approval of the $5 billion deal.
http://www.nytimes.com/aponline/business/AP-FCC-XM-Sirius.html?hp

Tim Russert leaves NBC big shoes to fill (NY Daily News 6/16/08)
By David Hinckley
NBC News' David Gregory said Sunday on "Today" that the death of Tim Russert is a "loss we're still coming to terms with."
http://www.nydailynews.com/entertainment/tv/2008/06/16/2008-06-16_tim_russert_leaves_nbc_big_shoes_to_fill.html

Russert death shows massive heart attack isn't easy to predict (USA TODAY 6/15/08)
By Steve Sternberg
For all their differences, NBC newsman Tim Russert and famed marathoner Jim Fixx, author of the 1977 best-seller The Complete Book of Running, have two things in common: Each died of a massive heart attack while still in his 50s. Neither one saw it coming.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/health/2008-06-15-heart-attack-russert_N.htm

A Sober Assessment of Afghanistan (Washington Post 6/15/08)
By Ann Scott Tyson; A16
The outgoing top U.S. military commander in Afghanistan said Friday that attacks increased 50 percent in April in the country's eastern region, where U.S. troops primarily operate, as a spreading Taliban insurgency across the border in Pakistan fueled a surge in violence.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/14/AR2008061401639.html

Iran Rejects Six-Nation Proposal (Washington Post 6/15/08)
By Thomas Erdbrink and Robin Wright; A14
Iran said Saturday that a package of incentives offered by six countries was "out of the question" because it includes a demand for the country to suspend uranium enrichment activities.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/14/AR2008061400831.html

Obama talks tough on 'AWOL' fathers (Politico 6/15/08)
By: Mike Allen
Talking tough on Father's Day, Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.) challenged African-American men on Sunday to play more of a role in raising their children and warned them that "responsibility doesn't just end at conception."
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0608/11096.html

Obama: 'If They Bring a Knife to the Fight, We Bring a Gun' (WSJ blog 6/14/08)
By Amy Chozick
...That's exactly what Barack Obama said he would do to counter Republican attacks "If they bring a knife to the fight, we bring a gun," Obama said at a Philadelphia fundraiser Friday night. "Because from what I understand folks in Philly like a good brawl. I've seen Eagles fans."
http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2008/06/14/obama-if-they-bring-a-knife-to-the-fight-we-bring-a-gun/

Paul, Barr may be forging an alliance for fall election (Boston Globe 6/14/08)
By Foon Rhee

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Signs are emerging of a possible alliance this fall between Ron Paul, the libertarian-minded rebel Republican, and Bob Barr, the Libertarian Party's presidential nominee.
http://www.boston.com/news/nation/articles/2008/06/14/
paul_barr_may_be_forging_an_alliance_for_fall_election/

Detainees May Be Denied Evidence for Defense (Washington Post 6/15/08)
By Josh White; A03
When Khalid Sheik Mohammed and other alleged co-conspirators in the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks seek to represent themselves in military commissions trials in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, they may be barred from reviewing highly classified evidence and might not have access to the intelligence agents who interrogated them, according to the Pentagon's Office of Military Commissions.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/06/14/AR2008061401540.html

Did Justice Scalia go too far? (Chicago Tribune blog 6/15/08)
by James Oliphant
Justice Antonin Scalia is known for his strongly worded dissents, ones where he has never been hesitant to use confrontational and, some would say, even abusive language to make his point as clearly as possible.
http://www.swamppolitics.com/news/politics/blog/2008/06/did_justice_scalia_go_too_far.html

America's prison for terrorists often held the wrong men (McClatchy 6/14/08)
Tom Lasseter
The militants crept up behind Mohammed Akhtiar as he squatted at the spigot to wash his hands before evening prayers at the Guantanamo Bay detention camp.
http://www.mcclatchydc.com/detainees/story/38773.html

Sens. Dodd, Conrad tied to special mortgage deals (AP 6/13/08)
By JULIE HIRSCHFELD DAVIS
Senate Banking Committee Chairman Christopher J. Dodd, a leader of Congress' efforts to help homeowners ensnared in the subprime mortgage meltdown, reportedly got special treatment on his own mortgages from the CEO of Countrywide Financial Corp., a company whose practices he has called ``abusive.'' http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/feedarticle/7584635
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"John M Deutch" <jmd@mit.edu>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	8/10/2015 7:46:15 AM
Subject:	Age of nuclear fleet
Attachments:	Almost all U.S. nuclear plants require life extension past 60 years to operate beyond 2050 - Today in Energy - U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA).pdf

John,

Enjoyed breakfast. Here is the answer to the first question -- as we thought. The U.S. fleet begins to pass 60 years of age around 2030 and all are over 60 by 2050.

My guess is most of the post 60 reactors will not seek license renewal for technical reasons. And if granted extensions very considerable capital costs mods would be required with likely accompanying reductions in capacity factors from the high 90+ levels of today. So absent unexpected options for nuclear, and post 2040 reduction in generation should be expected.

John

****

John Deutch
Department of Chemistry
Room 6-215
MIT
Cambridge MA 02139

e-mail jmd@mit.edu
Tel: 617 253 1479
Fax: 617 258 5700

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Michael Bronfein" <mbronfein@gmail.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 7/15/2015 10:06:48 AM
Subject: Fwd: AIPAC's Position on the Iran Nuclear Ag reement

John,

I listened in on the AIPAC call today. It was a call to arms. AIPAC views this as one of the most important lobbying efforts in its history. In addition to normal lobbying efforts they are collaborating with Citizens for a Nuclear Free Iran to run TV ads and are embarking on a fundraising campaign around this issue. I wanted you to know this so that HRC and her advisors knew this in advance of her staking a position. Personally, I'm opposed to the Iran Deal as I understand it but am prepared to more deeply understand it before making a final determination. I fear that this will become a polarizing issues for the Pro-Israel community and it will be important for HRC to fully consider all aspects of this policy issue before taking a public stance. Her stance to date in my view has been very appropriate. The landscape has now changed and people will be closely examining her every word. Moreover, the republicans' will use this to energize Pro-Israel supporters and donors. When I meet with her in April I shared that I was surprised at the number of people in the Baltimore Jewish Community questioning her stance on Israel. I attempted to persuade them differently but she is suffering to some degree from guilt by association. This could be a defining moment.

Let me know if i can be helpful to you in any way.

Regards,

Michael

Begin forwarded message:

From: "Robert A. Cohen, AIPAC President" <membership@aipac.org >
Subject: AIPAC's Position on the Iran Nuclear Agreement
Date: July 15, 2015 at 4:35:17 PM EDT
To: mbronfein@gmail.com
Reply-To: "AIPAC" <membership@aipac.org >

Click here to view the web version.

AIPAC America's Pro-Israel Lobby

As promised in my letter to you yesterday, AIPAC's policy experts have carefully reviewed the entire proposed nuclear agreement with Iran, including all of its annexes. Following our detailed assessment, we have come to the unfortunate conclusion that this agreement does not achieve the minimum requirements necessary for an acceptable deal.

AIPAC admires the determined efforts by America's negotiating team over the past many months, and we remain committed to a successful diplomatic process to bring about an end to Iran's nuclear weapons quest. As we have said since the negotiations began in 2013, diplomacy offers the best path to peacefully resolving the Iranian nuclear issue. Regrettably, however, the deal presented yesterday in Vienna falls short of its intentions to make the United States, Israel and our allies safer. In fact, we believe this agreement will do the opposite.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We can, and we must, do better.

Over the next 60 days, AIPAC will focus on one goal: engaging and convincing members of the House and Senate to oppose this deal and ultimately seek a better one.

A congressional rejection of this bad agreement will require the passion and political activism of every single member of our movement. This effort will demand unprecedented resources, energy and focus to engage our representatives in Washington and to articulate the grave consequences of accepting this deal.

Please take action today by contacting your members of Congress and urging them to oppose this unacceptable agreement.

AIPAC published a press release moments ago, which further explains our position and details our concerns with the proposed deal. Please read this statement (included below) and share it broadly with those in your community. In addition, please take a look at this fact sheet highlighting six unacceptable consequences of the proposed agreement.

I am proud to stand with you and with AIPAC as we meet this challenge together and work to safeguard our future.

Thank you for all that you are about to do.

Sincerely,

Robert A. Cohen
AIPAC President

--

AIPAC Statement on Proposed Iran Nuclear Agreement

AIPAC has consistently supported diplomatic efforts to end Iran's nuclear weapons program, and we appreciate the commitment and dedication of President Obama and his administration throughout these negotiations. Unfortunately, this proposed agreement fails to halt Iran's nuclear quest. Instead, it would facilitate rather than prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon and would further entrench and empower the leading state sponsor of terror.

During these negotiations, we outlined criteria for a good deal that Congress itself had set in five critical areas: inspections, possible military dimensions, sanctions, duration and dismantlement. In each of these areas, the proposed agreement has significant flaws:

- The proposed deal does not ensure "anytime, anywhere" short-notice inspections;
- The proposed deal does not clearly condition sanctions relief on full Iranian cooperation in satisfying International Atomic Energy Agency concerns over the possible military dimensions of Tehran's program;
- The proposed deal lifts sanctions as soon as the agreement commences,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

rather than gradually as Iran demonstrates sustained adherence to the agreement;

- The proposed deal lifts key restrictions in as few as eight years;
- The proposed deal would disconnect and store centrifuges in an easily reversible manner, but it requires no dismantlement of centrifuges or any Iranian nuclear facility;
- In return for this flawed agreement, Iran will receive over $100 billion in sanctions relief. Tehran will use these funds to fuel its hegemonic ambitions, support the killing of civilians in Syria, fund the terrorist organizations Hamas and Hezbollah, and spur deadly conflicts throughout the region.

This agreement not only fails to achieve its objectives in the nuclear arena, but it releases Tehran in a matter of years — regardless of Iranian behavior — from ballistic missile sanctions and an arms embargo imposed by the United Nations Security Council. This late, unexpected concession will provide additional arms for terrorism and proxy wars, while strengthening Iran's capabilities against our regional allies.

This accord threatens the future of the nuclear non-proliferation regime. By leaving Iran on the threshold of a nuclear weapon — despite its history of violating international obligations — other countries in the region will have a dangerous incentive to initiate their own nuclear programs. The resulting nuclear arms race would severely destabilize the region.

Proponents of the proposed agreement will argue that the only alternative to this agreement is military conflict. In fact, the reverse is true. A bad agreement such as this will invite instability and nuclear proliferation. It will embolden Iran and may encourage regional conflict.

We strongly believe that the alternative to this bad deal is a better deal. Congress should reject this agreement, and urge the administration to work with our allies to maintain economic pressure on Iran while offering to negotiate a better deal that will truly close off all Iranian paths to a nuclear weapon.

Congress should insist on a better deal.

Click here to unsubscribe

AIPAC | America's Pro-Israel Lobby
251 H Street NW • Washington, DC • 20001 • TEL 202-639-5200
Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	12/2/2014 1:11:34 AM
Subject:	Correct The Record Tuesday December 2, 2014 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Tuesday December 2, 2014 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

Baltimore Sun: "Mikulski: 'We need Hillary.'"

"'We need Hillary,' the Maryland Democrat and Senate Appropriations Committee chairwoman told about 100 people gathered at Goucher College for a fundraiser organized by the Ready for Hillary PAC, the group laying the groundwork for her possible candidacy."

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: "Clinton, Biden to appear at D.C. event on Israel"

"Hillary Clinton and Vice President Joe Biden will be among the attendees at a Washington forum on Israeli-U.S. relations this weekend."

MSNBC: "Hillary Clinton to environmentalists: I'm one of you"

"Gene Karpinski, president of the League of Conservation Voters, thought Clinton hit it out of the park. 'You saw her tonight, coming to our organization and really leaning in to this issue to make it clear how much she cares about it,' he told reporters after her speech. 'She's always been committed on it, and she's voted right very consistently, but with this audience, she's now making whole comments and focusing on this.'"

The Daily Beast: "Hillary Praises Fracking, Stays Silent on Keystone"

"Exiting the hotel ballroom, philanthropist Tom Steyer also seemed to give Clinton a pass for not mentioning the pipeline project. 'I always respect what Secretary Clinton has to say. She is always smart and she is always wise. And I thought she did a great job.'"

Politico: "Hillary Clinton avoids Keystone at conservation group event"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Hillary Clinton gave a sweeping speech on the environment Monday night, criticizing 'those who doubt the science of climate change' and strongly praising President Obama's record – without ever mentioning the controversial Keystone XL pipeline."

The Guardian: "Hillary Clinton says fracking carries risks in conservation speech"

"Clinton offered praise for Obama's leadership in international climate negotiations, especially last month's agreement between the US and China to reduce greenhouse gas emissions."

The New Republic: "The Economic Forecast for 2016 Favors Hillary Clinton"

"The economy isn't in great shape right now. Wages are still stagnant. But there are a number of signs that it may improve significantly during Obama's last two years in office."

CNN: "Poll: Romney, Clinton top 2016 field"

"On the Democratic side, Hillary Clinton unsurprisingly receives an overwhelming majority of support, with 65 percent of left-leaning Americans saying she would be their choice for the 2016 nomination."

FiveThirtyEight: "What Might Persuade Hillary Clinton Not To Run In 2016"

"Not only are her numbers dropping, but she is running on par with a Democratic brand in its weakest shape in a decade."

Breitbart opinion: "Rand Paul: 'Benghazi Was The Definition Of An Intelligence Failure"

"Yes Hillary, it still matters."

The Daily Beast: "Rand Paul Won't Let Benghazi Die"

Asked on what intelligence Paul has based his conclusion that the Republican-led committee's findings were incorrect, his senior aide, Doug Stafford, deflected by saying, 'Senator Paul doesn't believe the questions have all been answered, nor does he believe those responsible for this failure have been held accountable, especially Secretary Clinton.' Asked, then, whether Paul is under the impression that the House Intelligence Committee and its Republican chairman fell prey to White House Benghazi propaganda, Stafford said: 'We don't have any comment on why the House Intelligence Committee issued a bad report, only that they did.'"

Dayton Daily News: "Portman says no to presidential run"

"Sen. Rob Portman will not run for president in 2016, saying that he will seek another term as U.S. senator from Ohio instead."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Articles:

Baltimore Sun: "Mikulski: 'We need Hillary.'"

By John Fritze

December 1, 2014, 8:30 p.m. EST

Sen. Barbara A. Mikulski told a group of Hillary Clinton supporters gathered in Baltimore County on Monday that Maryland would provide a "groundswell of grassroots" support for the former Secretary of State should she decide to run for president in 2016.

"We need Hillary," the Maryland Democrat and Senate Appropriations Committee chairwoman told about 100 people gathered at Goucher College for a fundraiser organized by the Ready for Hillary PAC, the group laying the groundwork for her possible candidacy.

"We've got to organize," she said. "We've got to mobilize."

Not mentioned by Mikulski or anyone else on stage was Martin O'Malley, Maryland's outgoing governor who is also weighing a run for president in 2016. The fundraiser was expected to draw several other high profile Democrats -- many of whom have worked closely with the O'Malley administration for years -- but only Mikulski showed.

"We can't go backward and we can't let anything grow under our feet," said Mikulski, who co-chaired Clinton's presidential campaign in Maryland in 2008. "We want her to know that there's a groundswell of grass roots support."

Early signs of support for Clinton among the congressional delegation that knows O'Malley best demonstrates the challenge the governor faces as he contemplates a possible White House run. Polls in early primary states show Clinton eclipsing O'Malley, despite his repeated appearances for congressional and gubernatorial candidates in the run up to this year's midterm elections.

Clinton is expected to make a decision early next year.

Mikulski has previously noted her support for Clinton's potential candidacy.

"I'm a Hillary person, so I know Gov. O'Malley is working hard to establish his national credentials," Mikulski told Politico in an interview earlier this year.

Maryland's other senator, Ben Cardin, was set to attend the event Monday but instead remained in Washington for votes on the Senate floor. Rep. John Delaney, the Montgomery County Democrat first elected in 2012 -- who also has close ties to the Clinton family -- is expected to host a similar fundraiser for the draft-Clinton effort this week.

Cardin has typically been cautious in supporting candidates during -- or ahead of -- primary elections. He did not back Barack Obama in the 2008 presidential campaign until June, a day before Clinton dropped out of the race. He also declined to engage in Delaney's competitive primary against a state lawmaker in 2012.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Senator Cardin thinks Hillary Clinton's energy is positive for our party and our country," Cardin spokeswoman Sue Walitsky said in a statement. "He is excited about her potential candidacy."

A spokeswoman for O'Malley's federal committee declined to comment on the fundraiser.

O'Malley was an early backer of Clinton's 2008 campaign but Obama ultimately carried the Democratic Primary in Maryland that year with nearly 61 percent of the vote.

Tickets to the fundraiser cost $20.16.

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: "Clinton, Biden to appear at D.C. event on Israel"

By David McCabe

December 1, 2014, 2:05 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton and Vice President Joe Biden will be among the attendees at a Washington forum on Israeli-U.S. relations this weekend.

Both will speak to the Saben Forum, an annual event organized by the Brookings Institution and entertainment mogul Haim Saban. Saban is also a major political donor who has pledged to support Clinton should she run for president in 2016.

The event willalso feature Secretary of State John Kerry and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. Netanyahu will appear via sattalite.

Biden and Netanyahu will be the meeting's keynote speakers.

Attendees will discuss the relationship between the U.S. and Israel "via candid closed-door dialogue between U.S. and Israeli officials, policymakers, journalists, and business leaders."

The meeting occurs as debate continues over a potential deal between Western countries and Iran on the latter country's nuclear program. Israel has been skeptical of a deal, but is reportedly pleased that an extension in negotiations might yield a more favorable accord.

It will also come amid an uptick in violence in Israel, including an attack by two Palestinians on an orthodox synogogue in Jeruselum that claimed the lives of three Americans.

Clinton has said she will make a decision about whether to run for president next year. She has appeared regularly in the press this year while promoting a new memoir about her time at the State Department and stumping for Democratic candidates.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MSNBC: "Hillary Clinton to environmentalists: I'm one of you"

By Alex Seitz-Wald

December 1, 2014, 10:51 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton came to a League of Conservation Voters fundraiser Monday to assure the green donors that she is one of them – even if she won't take a stand on the controversial Keystone XL pipeline at the moment.

In a forceful speech at the deep-pocketed environmental group's annual dinner in New York City, the former secretary of state scolded climate "deniers," called for bold leadership on global warming and praised leading environmentalists – all while touting her own victories in the field.

Clinton's speech capped an awkward day on the pipeline issue for the likely 2016 presidential candidate. The League of Conservation Voters is strongly opposed to the Keystone XL pipeline, which would carry tar sand oil from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. But earlier Monday, Clinton raised funds for a politician on the other side of the issue – Louisiana Sen. Mary Landrieu, who recently proposed a bill to approve the pipeline's construction.

Clinton acknowledged that dealing with climate change will be politically challenging, but cited the legacy of President Teddy Roosevelt – a new hero of Clinton's – as a example of "national leadership that was both decisive and innovative" on the environment.

"Our economy still runs primarily on fossil fuels and trying to change that will take strong leadership," she said. But "we do not have to choose between a healthy environment and a healthy economy."

Instead, she said moving to a greener economy will create jobs and help make "America the clean energy super-power of the 21st Century."

Gene Karpinski, president of the League of Conservation Voters, thought Clinton hit it out of the park. "You saw her tonight, coming to our organization and really leaning in to this issue to make it clear how much she cares about it," he told reporters after her speech. "She's always been committed on it, and she's voted right very consistently, but with this audience, she's now making whole comments and focusing on this."

But nowhere did Clinton mention Keystone, the controversial issue she has shied away from as she weighs another bid for the White House. Clinton has come under fire for that evasion, but says she can't comment on it while the project makes its way through a State Department review process.

In his introductory remarks, Karpinski praised the recent defeat in the Senate of a bill to approve what he called the "dirty and dangerous" pipeline sponsored by Landrieu. But Karpinski said he didn't have a problem with Clinton's support for Landrieu. "The Clinton and the Landrieu families have been friends going way way back," he said, noting that plenty of other pals of his organization will raise money for members of the "Democratic team" they might not always agree with.

As she did when appearing with Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, a leader on economic populism, a month ago, Clinton took time to heap praise on Democratic leaders on the environment. Clinton called Rhode Island Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse, the Senate's foremost climate hawk, her "friend" and looked at him in the audience to say, "Thank you for fighting the good fight, day in and day out."

Clinton also touted Karpinski's work and even gave a special shout out to Karpinski's mother, who stood and gave a wave. "We need the LCV as much as we ever have," Clinton said, ticking off several of the group's key accomplishments over decades. The group is consistently one of the biggest spenders for Democrats in elections.

After her speech, Clinton sat at a table with Democratic mega-donor Tom Steyer and several members of LCV's board to eat and hear the rest of the program.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Could Clinton offer the leadership she kept calling for? Karpinski certainly hinted at it, making a joke about "the first Clinton administration" and referencing the Iowa caucuses, just over a year away.

Carol Browner, the former head of the Environmental Protection Agency, went even farther. "Hillary, wherever life takes you in the next few months, we know we can continue to count on you to raise your voice and your intellect in the effort to combat climate change," Browner said. "And we hope you know you can count on us."

The Daily Beast: "Hillary Praises Fracking, Stays Silent on Keystone"

By David Freedlander

December 1, 2014

[Subtitle:] At a speech to an environmental advocacy group, Clinton came out in favor of fracking—and ignored the controversial pipeline project.

At a speech to the League of Conservation Voters in midtown Manhattan Monday night, before hundreds of deep-pocketed donors, Hillary Clinton praised the environmental legacy of Teddy Roosevelt, touted the prospect of new green technologies, and had warm words for Barack Obama's aggressive efforts to combat climate change.

Absent from the former Secretary of State's speech? Any sense of where she stood on the controversial Keystone pipeline project, or what she would do differently as president to steer the nation towards a more sustainable future.

But that didn't mean that Clinton wasn't clear about where she came down on environmental matters—she praised both her husband's record of cleaning up air and water standards, and the Obama administrations recent efforts to strike a climate deal with China and to toughen pollution standards.

"We continue to push forward. But that is just the beginning. Science of climate change is unforgiving, no matter what the deniers may say," Clinton said, reading off of prepared remarks.

The former Secretary of State alluded to the need to wean the nation off of fossil fuels, but noted that, "the political challenges are also unforgiving. There is no getting around the fact that the kind of ambitious response required to effectively combat climate change is going to a be a tough sell at home and around the world at a time when so many countries around the world, including our own, are grappling with slow growth and stretch budgets."

Clinton was vague about the kind of response needed to address climate change, coming down neither in favor of the traditional Democratic carbon tax or the Republican (pre-Obama, at least) cap and trade plan.

Instead, Clinton, much as her husband has done, pushed for market-based solutions to social problems, arguing that green technologies would enable economic growth and would slow the effects of climate change. She called for "next generation" power plants, smarter grids and greener buildings, describing a "false choice between growing our economy and protecting our environment."

Clinton did, however, come out in favor of natural gas drilling, known as hydrofracking, which has become a key cause for environmental activists, who say that the risks involved in natural gas drilling are not yet known.

"Yes, natural gas can play an important bridge role in the transition to a cleaner, greener economy," Clinton said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But if Clinton waded into the natural gas debate, she entirely avoided the Keystone one.

That debate took center stage over the midterms when financier Tom Steyer pledged $100 million to pro-environment candidates and made the pipeline a litmus test. Republicans rallied to the cause, arguing that the pipeline would create jobs. (Nonpartisan experts say that both the pipeline's negative environmental effects and positive job creation projections are overstated.) Last month, embattled Democrat Mary Landrieu pushed for a vote on Keystone in order to boost her standing in her December run-off re-election. The measure failed in the Senate in a vote that received warm praise from LCV president Gene Karpinski in his introduction of Clinton.

Clinton appeared at a fundraiser for Landrieu earlier in the day.

Karpinski, who said that he was confident that Obama would reject Keystone, said he did not have a problem with Clinton's support for Landrieu.

"Look, the Clintons and the Landrieu families have been friends going back in history. And all kinds of friends of ours have raised money for Mary Landrieu to support her as a candidate. There is nothing surprising. This is what people do."

Karpinski wasn't the only one willing to cut a not-yet-candidate Clinton some leeway. Exiting the hotel ballroom, philanthropist Tom Steyer also seemed to give Clinton a pass for not mentioning the pipeline project.

"I always respect what Secretary Clinton has to say. She is always smart and she is always wise. And I thought she did a great job."

Asked whether she should have mentioned the pipeline project, he merely said, "I thought her speech was great."

Politico: "Hillary Clinton avoids Keystone at conservation group event"

By Maggie Haberman

December 1, 2014, 11:11 p.m. EST

NEW YORK — Hillary Clinton gave a sweeping speech on the environment Monday night, criticizing "those who doubt the science of climate change" and strongly praising President Obama's record – without ever mentioning the controversial Keystone XL pipeline.

"The science of climate change is unforgiving, no matter what the deniers may say," Clinton said during a nearly 30-minute speech at a dinner hosted by the League of Conservation Voters, criticizing the "old false choice between protecting our environment and growing our economy." She argued for the need to boost economic growth while finding new energy bridges to move away from fossil fuel dependence.

Clinton praised last month's U.S.-China climate accord but described it as a "beginning" instead of an end. And she left open the possibility of supporting "fracking," the drilling for natural gas, provided the right environmental protections are in place. But she never used the word "fracking," and said the process shouldn't happen when the risk to specific areas is too great.

Fracking has been contentious in her home state of New York. But in swing states like Ohio and Pennsylvania, it has more support.

Clinton also remarked that the incoming Congress will have more lawmakers who "want to turn back the clock" on environmental progress.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's speech was closely watched ahead of her likely 2016 presidential campaign, with climate change an issue of growing concern among liberal donors. In a sign of how the big-money politics around climate change have developed with Democrats, Clinton was seated next to Tom Steyer, the billionaire environmentalist who spent heavily in the midterms and is strongly opposed to the Keystone proposal.

The speech came two hours after Clinton hosted a New York-based fundraiser for embattled Louisiana Democratic Sen. Mary Landrieu, who's now in a runoff and recently made an ill-fated push for the Keystone project in the Senate. Steyer has done nothing to assist the long-serving Democrat, who is trailing significantly ahead of Saturday's election.

At the fundraiser, which was closed to reporters, Clinton never mentioned the Keystone pipeline, according to an attendee. But she made a passing reference at one point to Landrieu doing what she had to do for her constituents.

Before Clinton spoke, League of Conservation Voters President Gene Karpinski slammed the pipeline as "dirty and dangerous," calling for its defeat.

"We're gonna kill that pipeline," he insisted.

Clinton has been criticized by some environmental groups for not taking a position on the project, which is being reviewed by current Secretary of State John Kerry.

But her allies have said in the past that she doesn't want to get ahead of the sitting secretary of state by voicing an opinion. The LCV has been noticeably absent among Clinton critics on the pipeline, and Karpinski gave her cover for not mentioning it, telling reporters after the speech that there was no reason for her to take a stand before a decision by the administration.

"She's already been asked about that," Karpinski shrugged when reporters asked if he was troubled that she didn't discuss it. "That's not her decision right now. You heard her praise president Obama many, many time. … We're absolutely confident that (Kerry) will reject that pipeline."

If anything, the evening was a reminder that, despite the controversy around the issue, major players in the environmental movement are so far unwilling to strongly take on the likely frontrunner for the Democratic nomination.

In her speech, Clinton said she realized that developing clean energy globally is "going to be a tough sell" with too many nations experiencing "slow growth and stretched budgets."

"But I like to remind people that just as this challenge is obvious, so is the opportunity it represents," Clinton said, saying there are significant economic impacts involved.

As she has in other speeches, she invoked Teddy Roosevelt and drew parallels between the challenges of his era and the current one.

She recalled the famous moment when she and Obama in 2009 crashed a meeting involving China and other countries at a global environmental summit and described that as one of many opportunities still to come to affect change.

Clinton was introduced by her husband's former Environmental Protection Agency head, Carol Browner, who compared the former first lady's work on the environment to work she has done protecting children.

Browner said introducing Clinton was like being the opener "for The Rolling Stones." And Karpinski repeatedly alluded to the possibility of another Clinton in the White House, at one point saying, as he introduced Browner, that she had served in the Clinton administration.

"I was going to say under the first President Clinton," said Karpinski, to laughter.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He later told reporters he was pleased with her overall message.

“She made it clear that climate change is a real threat … if you deal with it the right way it’s actually gonna create jobs … [and] save the planet,” he said.

As for her raising money earlier for Landrieu, he said, “ The Clintons and the Landrieu families have been friends going way way back in history.”

The Guardian: “Hillary Clinton says fracking carries risks in conservation speech”

By Suzanne Goldenberg

December 1, 2014, 10:48 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] Possible presidential candidate draws distinction with Barack Obama, who has trumpeted boom in gas and oil exploration

Hillary Clinton has offered mild criticism of the fracking boom that has spread across the US under Barack Obama’s presidency, drawing another small distinction with his administration.

Clinton, who has yet to declare she is seeking the presidency, kept the bulk of her speech to a League of Conservation Voters dinner in New York resolutely vanilla. But she did express concerns about the environmental costs associated with natural gas and went so far as to suggest there may be places where it was too dangerous to drill at all.

“I know many of us have serious concerns with the risks associated with the rapidly expanding production of natural gas,” Clinton told the crowd on Monday night.

“Methane leaks in the production and transportation of natural gas pose a particularly troubling threat so it is crucial we put in place smart regulations and enforce them – including deciding not to drill when the risks to local communities, landscapes and ecosystems are just too high.”

Clinton’s comments were nowhere near as sharp as her critique of Obama’s foreign policy last August, when she bluntly said the administration lacked a coherent strategy.

But they are significant because of Obama’s championship of an “all of the above” energy strategy – and because they suggest Clinton is trying to appeal to voters concerned about fracking.

Clinton’s speech was otherwise notable for the degree to which she avoid mentioning any controversial topics – much like her address to an energy conference in Nevada during the summer.

She made no mention of the Keystone XL pipeline – the most politically weighted decision awaiting Obama. She made no mention of Arctic drilling, or coal. She even avoided the word “fracking”.

But the distinction was evident. Over the years Obama has regularly boasted about the expansion of oil and gas production under his watch, due to fracking, much to the frustration of campaign groups.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The president even touted the expansion of natural gas during his milestone June 2013 speech on climate change.

Natural gas produces far greater greenhouse gas emissions than originally thought because of methane leaks.

Most environmental groups now dismiss the idea that natural gas could serve as a bridge to a clean energy future – as Obama once claimed, and as Clinton repeated on Monday

"If we are smart about this and put in place the right safeguards natural gas can play an important bridge role in the transition to a cleaner energy economy," she said.

Elsewhere Clinton's remarks hewed very closely to Obama's positions on climate and environment.

She called for a strong defence of the new rules cutting carbon pollution from power plants, which form the central pillar of Obama's climate action plan.

Clinton offered praise for Obama's leadership in international climate negotiations, especially last month's agreement between the US and China to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

She also borrowed a page from many of Obama's recent speeches, taking a swipe at Republican climate denial. "The science of climate change is unforgiving – no matter what the deniers may say," she said.

The New Republic: "The Economic Forecast for 2016 Favors Hillary Clinton"

By Danny Vinik

December 1, 2014

After the Democrats were roundly defeated in the midterms, pundits blamed it partly on the left's stale economic agenda and argued that this agenda will hurt the party in 2016. The latest example of this argument comes from Ed Luce, who writes in the Financial Times that Hillary Clinton's road to the White House will be damaged by the stale agenda, a disconnect between Clinton and liberal voters, and a more unified conservative base. "As it stands, whatever coalition is expected to carry Mrs Clinton over the finishing line is likely to result from a calculated process of addition," Luce writes. "In politics, winning is ultimately about ideas. In the absence of new ones, Mrs Clinton's bridge to the White House looks rickety." Those are all legitimate concerns. But Luce overlooks a fundamental reason why she is the early favorite: The economy is quickly improving under a Democratic president.

The economy isn't in great shape right now. Wages are still stagnant. But there are a number of signs that it may improve significantly during Obama's last two years in office. Monthly job gains have surpassed 200,000 for the past nine months. The Commerce Department's estimate for third-quarter GDP growth was nearly 4 percent. Workers are quitting their jobs at the fastest rate in more than six years—an indication they have confidence in the economy. New research from the New York Fed indicates that Americans may be done deleveraging, or reducing their debt. Gas prices are also collapsing, leaving more money for consumers to spend on other goods.

Economic forecasters are expecting those green shoots to lead to stronger growth over the next two years. The Congressional Budget Office projects that the economy will grow nearly 4 percent in both 2015 and 2016. The Federal Reserve's most recent forecast put growth a bit lower, at 2.6-3.0 percent over the next two years. For comparison, growth hovered around 2 percent in 2013 and 2012.

That's all good news for Clinton, since political science research demonstrates the outsized role that the economy plays in presidential elections: an improving economy benefits incumbents. That's partly why Obama defeated Mitt Romney.

There is less evidence on how the economy affects presidential elections without an incumbent, but we know that it still matters. "If the incumbent president isn't running, the effect of the economy would be a little bit smaller, but it's still important," George Washington political scientist John Sides told me earlier this year. "The logic there being that a new candidate for the party would not get as much credit or blame as the actual president who was presiding over the economy." In other words, an improving economy benefits the candidate of the incumbent party: The more the economy improves over the next 24 months, the better Clinton's chances are of winning the presidency.

None of this is to say that the Democrats don't currently have a problem politically with their economic agenda. They do—and there aren't any clear solutions to it. But an improving economy will also minimize those political consequences. If growth is between 3 and 4 percent and wages are growing—a big "if" that heavily depends on actions at the Federal Reserve—voters may look more favorably on the Obamanomics. Clinton could seize on popular policies that Republicans blocked during Obama's time in office—minimum wage increases and equal pay legislation, for instance—and add a few of her own ideas, maybe paid family leave. Thanks to an improving economy, she could make that stale agenda look much more appealing to voters.

The opposite is true as well: If the economy falters, Democrats and Clinton will receive the brunt of the blame and her chances of winning the presidency will fall. A lot can change over the next two years, but the economic data we currently have is indicative of stronger growth over the next two years. That's a more important indicator for Clinton than any message voters sent Democrats this past November.

CNN: "Poll: Romney, Clinton top 2016 field"

By Sara Fischer

December 2, 2014

Washington (CNN) -- Mitt Romney may say he's not planning to make a third run for the White House, but according to a new CNN/ORC national poll, Republican voters aren't ready to give up on the idea just yet.

While there is no clear frontrunner for the Republican ticket in 2016, most likely GOP voters say they would choose the former Massachusetts governor for the nomination, among 16 potential contenders.

According to the survey, 20 percent of voters say Romney would be their first choice for the nominee, with retired neurosurgeon and conservative activist Ben Carson coming in second with 10 percent of the vote.

Other big name contenders, former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush and New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, round out the top four, garnering 9 percent and 8 percent, respectively. Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee takes fifth place with 7 percent of the vote.

In what could be a telling 2016 indicator, when Romney is removed from the competitive set, the first place spot goes to Bush, whose family has publicly pressured him to throw his hat in the ring for months.

But even though Bush leads the pack among the hypothetical field of 15, he only edges Carson in second place by 3 percentage points, and Huckabee in third by just 4 points.

On the Democratic side, Hillary Clinton unsurprisingly receives an overwhelming majority of support, with 65 percent of left-leaning Americans saying she would be their choice for the 2016 nomination. Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, a progressive favorite, and Vice President Joe Biden, fall way behind to take second and third place -- with 9 percent and 10 percent, respectively.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But when Clinton is removed from the vote selection, Biden pulls more support among voters, who say they would prefer him as their 2016 Democratic nominee with 41 percent, versus 20 percent for Warren.

The poll surveyed 1,045 Americans, including 510 Republicans and right-leaning independents and 457 Democrats and left-leaning independents. The survey was conducted by telephone from Nov. 21-23.

FiveThirtyEight: "What Might Persuade Hillary Clinton Not To Run In 2016"

By Harry Enten

December 1, 2014, 2:34 p.m. EST

Most speculation about the 2016 presidential election has taken at least one thing for granted: Hillary Clinton will run. But the Cook Political Report's Charlie Cook recently threw some cold water on that assumption (or at least some lukewarm water); Cook estimated Clinton has only a 60 to 70 percent chance of running.

I have no clue whether Cook's estimate is right. But recent data illustrates why Clinton might balk at running: She no longer looks quite so invincible, and early indicators point toward a Republican-leaning political environment.

We're still a long way from the 2016 election, but Clinton needs to decide soon whether to run. The political landscape right now is more Republican-leaning than at a comparable point in the 2012 cycle (when President Obama, with a 46 percent approval rating, led a generic Republican 42 percent to 39 percent). Obama's approval has dropped to 42 percent.

In four polls conducted over the past month, YouGov asked more than 2,500 registered voters whether they would vote for the Democratic or Republican candidate for president in 2016. The Republican candidate led, on average, 39.2 percent to 36.7 percent. Again, these results are among registered, not likely, voters, so this lead has nothing to do with turnout.

The current environment suggests Clinton would need to be stronger than a generic Democratic candidate to be considered the favorite. Instead, her standing has deteriorated. YouGov has been polling Clinton's favorable ratings among adults over the past six years (adults overall tend to be more Democratic leaning than just registered voters).

[CHART]

Clinton was quite popular during her days as secretary of state. But since leaving that nonpartisan post in 2013, her net favorable rating has been falling. The most recent YouGov poll put her at an all-time low.

YouGov's results have been echoed by other pollsters, including NBC/Wall Street Journal and Quinnipiac University. The most recent NBC survey found Clinton's net favorable rating at +3 percentage points; Quinnipiac had it at +5 percentage points.

Clinton's edge against Republicans in a potential 2016 matchup has also taken a hit. She once led by double-digits in matchups against most Republicans. But recent live telephone polls in the key swing states of Iowa and New Hampshire have Clinton neck and neck with 2012 Republican nominee Mitt Romney. Nationally, Quinnipiac found Romney leading Clinton 45 percent to 44 percent among registered voters. At a comparable point in the 2012 cycle, Romney was down 7 percentage points to Obama. Clinton led New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie by 1 percentage point, and she holds leads of 4 to 9 percentage points on the other Republican candidates.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Any lead Clinton does have is almost entirely attributable to being better known. In the Quinnipiac survey, 95 percent of respondents recognized her name. Only Romney, with 86 percent name recognition, comes close to being as well-known (and he's the only candidate who leads Clinton). The rest of the GOP field has name recognition at 71 percent or below.

Among the seven Republican candidates listed by Quinnipiac, the correlation between Clinton's lead (or lack thereof) over each Republican and that Republican's name recognition was 0.94. In other words, other Republicans should gain ground as they become better known. In fact, a simple regression between name recognition and a Republican's standing against Clinton in the Quinnipiac poll suggests that she isn't performing much better than a generic Democrat.

None of this means that Clinton would lose if she ran. Polls at this point are not very predictive. Obama may become more popular. The Republicans could nominate an extreme candidate. Any number of other things could happen.

Clinton, however, no longer looks like such a juggernaut. Not only are her numbers dropping, but she is running on par with a Democratic brand in its weakest shape in a decade.

Breitbart: "Exclusive: Rand Paul: 'Benghazi Was The Definition Of An Intelligence Failure"

By Sen. Rand Paul

December 1, 2014, 7:01 a.m. PDT

The House Intelligence Committee released its long-awaited Benghazi report Friday, claiming, "There was no intelligence failure prior to the attacks."

This one sentence tells us how seriously we should take this report.

Benghazi was the definition of an intelligence failure. It was, in fact, one of the worst intelligence failures in our history, a strategic blunder that resulted in the murder of a U.S. Ambassador and three other Americans.

The ultimate blame lies with the Obama Administration and more directly with Hillary Clinton who oversaw this tragedy during her tenure as Secretary of State. No rational person has ever disputed that our government failed horribly in protecting the U.S. embassy and our diplomats.

Americans just wanted to know who was responsible.

Now, a Congressional Committee chaired by Rep. Mike Rogers is telling us no one is responsible because there was no intelligence failure to begin with.

It might be time to rename the House "Intelligence" Committee.

This administration has changed the talking points and ignored important questions about Benghazi throughout—when the administration knew what was happening, why did it happen, was it terrorism, who ignored Ambassador Christopher Stevens security requests, who told Susan Rice the consulate was secure, the list of questions goes on. These questions remain unanswered or insufficiently answered and are crucial to getting to the bottom of what really happened.

The Associated Press claims the report debunks, “A series of persistent allegations hinting at dark conspiracies, the investigation of the politically charged incident determined that there was no intelligence failure, no delay in sending a CIA rescue team, no missed opportunity for a military rescue, and no evidence the CIA was covertly shipping arms from Libya to Syria.”

None of these accusations contain even a modicum of truth?

Three CIA security members have said their team was intentionally delayed by the administration in conducting a rescue effort. Are they being untruthful, or is this report perhaps not telling the full story? Multiple highly-respected news outlets reported on arms possibly being smuggled from Libya to Syria, before and after the attacks in Benghazi. Were all these stories fabricated? Or did they contain some useful or pertinent information related to this investigation?

The Obama Administration has tried to paint members of Congress who ask these questions as somehow being extreme or crazy—and perhaps the House Intelligence Committee will now follow suit,

But remember, this is the same administration that called the investigation into the IRS scandal a product of a “conspiracy theory.”

When Clinton was asked during her Benghazi testimony almost two years ago who first floated the story about an anti-Islamic video supposedly being the catalyst for the attacks, she shot back, “What difference at this point does it make?”

It makes a huge difference, Mrs. Clinton. All of these questions make a difference—about your judgment and the basic competency of this administration. They make a difference to the families of the victims.

They make a difference to the American people who deserve to know the truth.

From the beginning of this controversy, Obama officials have used smoke and mirrors at every opportunity to evade blame. They have ducked and weaved to avoid anything that could possibly cast the administration in a bad light.

“C.Y.A.” is a term many Americans are familiar with that was invented by U.S. soldiers during the Vietnam War. This new Benghazi “intelligence” report is little more than a C.Y.A. attempt designed to protect incompetent politicians and government agents at the expense of justice for the victims of September 11, 2012.

They will continue to cover up. I will continue to seek the truth until those at the top of this two-year chain of deception are finally held accountable.

And yes Hillary, it still matters.

The Daily Beast: “Rand Paul Won’t Let Benghazi Die”

By Olivia Nuzzi

December 1, 2014

[Subtitle:] Lashing out at a House report saying there was ‘no intelligence failure’ before the 2012 attack allows the Kentucky senator to jab at

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton—and appeal to his father's base.

When the GOP-led House Intelligence Committee concluded in late November that there had been "no intelligence failure" before the 2012 attack on the U.S. facilities in Benghazi, Libya, it threatened to pry from Republicans one of their favorite vehicles for sniping at the Obama administration and former secretary of state Hillary Clinton.

Rand Paul does not appear to be willing to let that happen.

The junior Kentucky senator and likely presidential candidate attacked the committee's findings in an op-ed that is part first-stage-of-grief and part letter to Clinton.

"Benghazi was the definition of an intelligence failure," Paul begins, dismissing the entire committee report as unserious.

"It was, in fact, one of the worst intelligence failures in our history, a strategic blunder that resulted in the murder of a U.S. Ambassador and three other Americans…The ultimate blame lies with the Obama Administration and more directly with Hillary Clinton who oversaw this tragedy during her tenure as Secretary of State."

Paul then asks of the "persistent allegations hinting at dark conspiracies" noted by the Associated Press, "None of these accusations contain even a modicum of truth?"

Later, Paul quotes Clinton's notorious line, "What difference, at this point, does it make?" referring to what served as the catalyst for the attacks, an anti-Muslim video or a push by radical Islamists. "It makes huge difference, Mrs. Clinton," Paul writes. "This new Benghazi 'intelligence' report is little more than a C.Y.A. attempt designed to protect incompetent politicians and government agents at the expense of justice for the victims of September 11, 2012…And yes, Hillary, it still matters."

Asked on what intelligence Paul has based his conclusion that the Republican-led committee's findings were incorrect, his senior aide, Doug Stafford, deflected by saying, "Senator Paul doesn't believe the questions have all been answered, nor does he believe those responsible for this failure have been held accountable, especially Secretary Clinton."

Asked, then, whether Paul is under the impression that the House Intelligence Committee and its Republican chairman fell prey to White House Benghazi propaganda, Stafford said: "We don't have any comment on why the House Intelligence Committee issued a bad report, only that they did."

Paul has consistently used Benghazi as a device to stake out high ground on foreign policy. He broaches the subject of Benghazi with ease, almost as if it's become its own form of small talk—and it's not hard to figure out why he doesn't want to let it go.

For one thing, Benghazi allows Paul to attack Clinton without having to acknowledge why he's doing it—were he to win the Republican nomination, he would likely face Clinton in the general election.

But perhaps more important than that, taking the the-government-is-hiding-the-truth-from-you position on Benghazi permits Paul to appeal to the base he inherited from his father, former congressman and presidential candidate Ron Paul: conspiracy-prone libertarians. It's a group that sometimes expresses skepticism about the younger Paul—he is, after all, the more mainstream (i.e., willing to sell out) version of his father. In his own words, he is just "libertarian-ish," more likely to stake out positions outside the mainstream than the average Republican but ultimately someone who may muddy his own convictions in an effort to appeal to generic right-wing primary voters.

Infowars.com, an entertainingly deranged conspiracy-mongering website run by Bill Hicks-lookalike Alex Jones, a friend of the Paul family, seemed to praise Paul for not buying into the House Intelligence Committee's Benghazi report, with the screaming headline "Rand Paul Slams Benghazi 'Cover Your Ass' Report."

Paul is not the only one unwilling to accept the committee's findings.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In the latest Weekly Standard can be found an editorial under the headline “The Benghazi Whitewash.” that aren’t damning are a classic Washington whitewash…and one of the central facts confirmed by the report is an indictment of the mainstream media coverage of Benghazi.”

The publication chides National Journal’s Ron Fournier, Politico’s Michael Grunwald, and The Atlantic’s Conor Friedersdorf for taking the committee’s report to mean what the committee reported.

Perhaps to Paul’s dismay, he has an ally in Sen. Lindsey Graham, with whom he has frequently sparred.

On CNN’s State of the Union on Sunday, Graham said the committee is “full of crap.”

While Paul will likely continue to address Clinton via Breitbart, Stafford said he is eagerly awaiting the result of the Select Committee on Benghazi, led by Republican Rep. Trey Gowdy. “Senator Paul looks forward to having more information brought forward about Benghazi and the failures of this administration, particularly Secretary Clinton.”

Dayton Daily News: “Portman says no to presidential run”

By Jessica Wehrman

December 2, 2014, 12:12 a.m.

Sen. Rob Portman will not run for president in 2016, saying that he will seek another term as U.S. senator from Ohio instead.

Announcing his decision to a small group of Ohio reporters in his Capitol Hill office Monday, Portman said he decided to remain in the Senate because he felt energized by the new GOPSenate majority, saying “there is a good chance for us to do something” on a broad array of issues, such as overhauling the tax code and expanding international trade.

Portman, who had been lauded as a credible candidate by a wide variety of media outlets including the Washington Post and ABC News, said he made his decision during the past few days after talking to his family during the Thanksgiving holidays.

“If you run for president, it’s just not practical to be involved in policy issues here,” he said. “You can’t do both. At least for me, I couldn’t do both.”

Although Portman said he was “not interested” in being a vice presidential candidate for the eventual Republican nominee, he did not flatly rule out being on the ticket in 2016.

With the Republicans holding their 2016 convention in Cleveland, Portman clearly would be regarded as a potential running mate for the Republican nominee. No Republican has ever won the White House without carrying Ohio.

“I’m not seeking that and as you know that’s not something you can seek anyway,” Portman said. “I’m not interested. I’m not putting myself out there. I’m interested in running for re-election and continuing to serve Ohio in what will be a more productive Senate.”

By declining to run, Portman is opting out of joining no fewer than a dozen GOPcontenders who are reportedly mulling a 2016 bid, among them Sens. Ted Cruz of Texas, Rand Paul of Kentucky, Marco Rubio of Florida; Govs. John Kasich of Ohio, Rick Perry of Texas, Bobby Jindal of Louisiana, Chris Christie of New Jersey and Scott Walker of Wisconsin, and former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Portman's decision will now shine increased spotlight on the other Ohio contender, Kasich, who drew positive attention last month after an appearance at the Republican Governors Association conference in Florida.

Portman's decision came after months of speculation that he was preparing a run for the presidency in 2016. Privately, some in Portman's camp had gone so far as to mull the best way to raise money for a presidential campaign.

But Portman all along said he would not make a decision until after the November 2014 elections, saying the results of those elections would help influence his decision.

Portman served as the vice-chairman for finance for the National Republican Senatorial Committee, a role which involves him raising money for Senate candidates across the country.

Portman indicated he might have entered the presidential race had the Democrats retained control of the Senate in last month's elections, which would have meant that Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., would have remained majority leader.

"I think it would be much harder for me to feel as though I was making a significant difference in the lives of my fellow Ohioans if Harry Reid had stayed in there, because we wouldn't be doing tax reform or expanding exports or budgets or some of the other oversight responsibilities that we have and are not doing here in the Congress," he said.

In particular, he said he is likely to be named to chair a subcommittee on investigations, which will provide him with the chance to launch serious oversight probes of the Obama administration.

Portman said his family did not influence his decision, and would have been supportive either way, although he admitted they were "relieved" to not have to be in the limelight. Portman's family garnered national attention in 2013 when he announced that he was supportive of gay marriage after his son, Will, came out as gay. Will, he said, "was OK either way."

Although his support of gay marriage has sparked the ire of some conservatives, Portman said he was not particularly worried that it would cost him votes.

"Some say it would hurt, some say it would help," he said. "I think it's unpredictable and I think it is for anybody running by the way. This is going to be wide open. And who knows how it all sorts out."

In the end, he said, he decided that he could get more done in the Senate.

"This is what feels right," he said.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

· December 3 – Washington, DC: Sec. Clinton helps launch the “Security Through Inclusive Leadership” event at Georgetown (International Peace and Conflict)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

· December 5 – Washington, DC: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Saban Forum (CNN)

· December 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton honored by Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights (Politico)

· January 21 – Saskatchewan, Canada: Sec. Clinton keynotes the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce’s “Global Perspectives” series (MarketWired)

· January 21 – Winnipeg, Canada: Sec. Clinton keynotes the Global Perspectives series (Winnipeg Free Press)

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Robert Creamer" <creamer2@aol.com>
To:	"Robert Creamer" <creamer2@aol.com>
Date:	7/7/2011 1:35:53 AM
Subject:	[big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer-GOP Budget Cuts Would Weaken American Defenses, Risk Thousands of Lives
Attachments:	PastedGraphic-5.pdf

GOP Budget Cuts Would Weaken American Defenses, Risk Thousands of Lives

The budget approved by all but four House Republicans this spring would weaken America's defenses and risk thousands of lives.

Now that's not your typical Progressive attack on the Republicans' budget priorities – but it's entirely true.

I'm not arguing that the Republicans have proposed cutting the anti-missile "defense" program aimed at "rouge" missiles from Iran or North Korea that has cost almost $100 billion to date.

Nor am I suggesting that the GOP has opted to slash funding for the massive nuclear arsenal that is deployed to defend America against the Soviet Union – which of course ceased to exist over two decades ago.

These massive programs defend America against foes that may – or may not – actually present a real threat. No, the Republicans chose instead to slash funding for a program to defend us against a clear and present danger – an enemy that attacks our people and kills thousands every year.

The Republicans budget – and its subsequent Appropriations Committee allocations – would slash funding for our defense against the flu virus that attacks our country regularly and on the average kills 36,000 Americans.

That's right, GOP lawmakers have decided that we just can't afford to spend so much money on the National Institutes of Health. They believe that providing tax breaks for millionaires and billionaires, providing tax subsidies to CEO's for their corporate jets, giving subsidies to the oil companies, and providing huge tax breaks to Wall Street speculators are more important than the fight against cancer, flu, or heart disease. In fact, they believe so much in tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans that they are willing to risk an economic meltdown to protect them. But they didn't bat an eye when it came to cutting money to defend America against threats that kill twelve times more each year than the September 11th attack.

Take the flu. Most years the U.S. is attacked by a flu virus. The problem is that the strains of flu virus vary. Currently that means that drug makers must wait to determine the exact strain before they can stockpile the vaccinations that are required to protect our population. Our failure to vaccinate our entire population – and especially our at-risk population – is the major reason why, on the average, 36,000 people die from the flu each flu season.

But right now the NIH is developing a universal flu vaccine that would immunize the population against all of the various flu strains – and save tens of thousands of lives. The NIH Director, Dr. Francis Collins, says that the proposed budget cuts would set the universal flu vaccine project back for years.

Or take the impact of the GOP cuts on the war against cancer. Right now the NIH is funding research to develop techniques to decode specific cancers so they can be targeted by new drugs that seek out and destroy only cancer cells. Paul Ryan and the Republicans think we just can't afford to spend so much to stop cancer. Subsidies for corporate jets – that's a different matter.

And the cuts at NIH are just one more example of upside-down GOP economic theory. Ignoring all empirical data, they contend that simply by cutting government spending and taxes for the wealthy they can spur economic growth. No matter that when Bush cut taxes on the wealthy to their lowest levels since the Great Depresssion, the economy did not produce one additional private sector job for an entire decade.

The Republicans believe that investment by government – by definition – does not produce economic growth. Next time they ride to work on a street or subway, or pick their child up from a public school, or rely on inspections by the Food and Drug Administration when they buy a product – they should close their eyes and pretend that government does not have a massive impact on all economic activity.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Or they should look at economic impact of the NIH. The NIH's project that mapped the human genome cost $3 billion and to date has produced over $700 billion of economic benefit. According to NIH Director Collins, since the NIH was founded, it is estimated to have generated $70 trillion of economic activity.

Take the example of monoclonal antibodies. This technology lies at the root of many of the most innovative therapies in modern medicine. The FDA has approved twenty monoclonal antibody therapies, and hundreds more in are clinical trials. In 2010, five out of the top twenty bestselling drugs were monoclonal therapies and generated annual revenues of $35 billion.

Antibodies allow the immune system to latch onto specific targets – or invaders – in the blood stream like bacteria and viruses that cause disease. Monoclonal antibodies are produced when an antibody-producing B-cell is fused with a cancer cell, creating an immortal line of cells that can produce a single form of very pure antibody.

The technique for developing monoclonal antibodies was developed by Drs. Georges Kohler and Cesar Milstein, using a mouse tumor line developed by NIH. They won the Nobel Prize for their work in 1984. Since that time the NIH has played an enormous role in converting this promising technique into life-saving therapies and diagnostic tools.

The recently approved breakthrough therapy for melanoma, Ipilimumab, is a monoclonal antibody.

A study authored by United for Medical Research concludes that in 2010, NIH investment led to the creation of 487,900 quality jobs, produced $68 billion in new economic activity across the country, and increased job growth by at least 10,000 in 16 states.

The bottom line is simple. The budget debate is not about "tightening our belts" because we're broke. It is about choices – priorities.

America is not "broke." In the last ten years before the Great Recession, the per capita Gross Domestic Product (GDP) increased at an average rate of 1.8% per year. That means that if the benefits of economic growth were equally spread throughout our society, everyone should have been almost 20% better off (with compounding) in 2008 than they were in 1998.

But average incomes didn't go up at all, because all of that growth went only to the top 2% of the population. The middle class may feel "broke," but America is not.

Yet the Republicans tell us that we have to stop investing in our future in order to continue to provide tax giveaways to that top two percent. The budget they passed would slash investment in medical research, education, health care and our infrastructure. Rather than investing in the future growth of the economy – the future of our kids – they say we have to allow the rich to "eat the seed corn" of our economy, and gorge themselves on $4,000 blouses, vacations in the south of France, multi-million dollar estates, exotic cars, and tax-subsidized rides in corporate jets.

They say that in order to protect the privileges of the wealthy, we need to eliminate Medicare and replace it with a program that would increase out-of-pocket health care costs for seniors by $6,000 per person each year.

Just last year, the average CEO salary went up 23% to over $10 million -- and corporate profits soared. The top-earning CEO, Viacom's CEO Philippe Dauman, made $84.5 million – or $40,625 per hour. I guess the CEO class didn't get the memo about the need to "tighten our belts."

And now, in their ardor to defend the CEO class, the GOP is threatening to pull the plug on the economic grenade, let America default on its debts, and once again bring the economy down in a heap.

In the next eighteen months we have to fight like hell to limit the damage that is resulting from Republican control of the House of Representatives.

Next fall, once and for all, we must decisively end the reckless experiment in trickle down economics that caused the Great Recession. We must elect Democrats who are committed to investments in education, scientific research, public infrastructure and good jobs that are all necessary for long term, widely-shared economic growth.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Robert Creamer is a long-time political organizer and strategist. He is a partner in Democracy Partners, and author of the book: Stand Up Straight: How Progressives Can Win, available on Amazon.com . Follow him on Twitter @rbcreamer.

Robert Creamer
Democracy Partners
creamer2@aol.com
DC Office 202-470-6955
Cell 847-910-0363

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
To:	huma@hrcoffice.com jbenenson@bsgco.com jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com
Date:	5/1/2015 7:13:30 AM
Subject:	Re: Heads up for call with HRC

Got it.

But of course, the press will not consider the questions answered until they are asked by them.

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: Huma Abedin <huma@hrcoffice.com>
To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com>; Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
Cc: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com>; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>; Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com>; Teddy Goff <tgoff@hillaryclinton.com>; Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>; Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com>; Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com>; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
Sent: Fri, May 1, 2015 2:09 pm
Subject: Re: Heads up for call with HRC

just to give people background here:
1. She believes she needs to do this video is because her integrity is being attacked and she is the only one who can say she didnt make a decision as secstate based on a donor.
2. Imp point: The foundation has had little luck getting their surrogates booked on any serious shows. So she feels like it has to be someone at her level or WJC level that engages directly in order for there to be any coverage of the defense.
3. She doesnt want to continue to have to have press yell these questions at her in Nevada and CA and if she doesnt do the video, that is the situation she will be in

_____
From: Joel Benenson
<jbenenson@bsgco.com>
Sent: Friday, May 01, 2015 1:53 PM
To: Jennifer
Palmieri
Cc: John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Mandy Grunwald; Huma Abedin; Teddy Goff; Jim Margolis; Kristina Schake; Robby Mook; Dan Schwerin
Subject: RE:
Heads up for call with HRC

For some reason I don't have the morning news round up -- can someone send that to me.

-----Original Message-----
From:
Jennifer Palmieri [mailto:jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, May 01,
2015 1:51 PM
To: Joel Benenson
Cc: John Podesta; Jake Sullivan; Mandy
Grunwald; Huma Abedin; Teddy Goff; Jim Margolis; Kristina Schake; Robby Mook; Dan Schwerin
Subject: Re: Heads up for call with HRC

Given this morning's am shows - which were terrible - that is no longer a great argument.

Sent from my iPhone

> On May 1, 2015, at 1:49 PM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
wrote:
>
> Thanks.
> Do we have some analysis of nightly news/front pages etc to make the case that this is not being covered heavily? Or at least enough based on day to day observation, i.e. not on front pages, not on nightly news or morning news...
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Jennifer Palmieri
[mailto:jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com]
> Sent: Friday, May 01, 2015 1:44 PM
>
To: John Podesta; Joel Benenson; Jake Sullivan; Mandy Grunwald; Huma > Abedin;
Teddy Goff; Jim Margolis; Kristina Schake; Robby Mook; Dan

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

> Schwerin
>
Subject: Heads up for call with HRC
>
> While on the phone on a different topic, HRC raised Clinton Cash convo with Jake and me. It was a difficult conversation. So folks should be ready to explain why we don't think a video makes sense.
>
> Moreover, my impression is she wants a much stronger response. Which means engaging more on details that we have to date not found in our interest to do so.
>
> Just wanted to update folks.
>
> Sent from my iPhone

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Hudson Institute" <events@hudson.org>
To:	podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date:	8/8/2014 7:00:04 AM
Subject:	Invitation: Which Poses the Bigger Threat to U.S. National Security —Iran or Non-State Sunni Extremism ? - Thursday, August 14, 12:00 - 1:30 pm

Hudson Institute
Event Invitation

Which Poses the Bigger Threat to U.S. National Security—Iran or Non-State Sunni Extremism?

Thursday, August 14th
12:00 to 1:30 pm

Hudson Institute
Betsy and Walter Stern Conference Center
1015 15th Street, NW - Sixth Floor
Washington, DC 20005

Register for event

With the belief that Iran's nuclear weapons program constituted the greatest threat to U.S. interests in the Middle East, Barack Obama entered the White House hoping to achieve a historic reconciliation with the Islamic Republic. But the administration's current policies throughout the region suggest that the White House no longer sees Iran as the key problem. Rather, it views the clerical regime as a potential partner, particularly when it comes to combating Sunni extremists like al Qaeda and ISIS. As Obama has explained in several interviews, the Iranian regime, while problematic, represents a real nation-state and rational actor that looks out for its interests and responds to incentives—which is not the case for non-state actors.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The White House has re-prioritized American strategy in the Middle East. Its policies in Syria and Iraq demonstrate that it now sees groups like al Qaeda and ISIS—rather than Iran—as the key threat to American interests. The question is whether the Obama administration has got it right. And if it's wrong, what are the likely consequences?

On August 14th, Hudson Institute Senior Fellow Lee Smith will moderate an expert panel featuring Michael Doran, Hillel Fradkin, and Brian Katulis to discuss whether non-state Sunni extremism or Iran constitutes the major strategic threat to American interests in the region.

Lunch will be provided.

This event will be live streamed on Hudson's homepage .

Panel

Michael Doran

Michael Doran is a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution's Center for Middle East Policy where he specializes in Middle East security issues. He has held several academic positions and has served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense and Senior Director at the National Security Council.

Hillel Fradkin

Hillel Fradkin is a senior fellow with Hudson Institute where he directs the Center on Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World and co-edits Current Trends in Islamist Ideology. His articles have appeared in the Wall Street Journal, World Affairs, the Journal of Democracy, Commentary, and the Weekly Standard among other publications.

Brian Katulis

Brian Katulis is a senior fellow at the Center for American Progress, where he focuses on the Middle East and North Africa, and is co-author of The Prosperity Agenda: What the World Wants from America—and What We Need in Return.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Lee Smith

Lee Smith is a senior fellow at the Hudson Institute and a senior editor at the Weekly Standard.

Program

12:00 — 12:10
Introduction by Lee Smith

12:10 — 12:50
Remarks by Michael Doran, Hillel Fradkin, and Brian Katulis

12:50 — 1:10
Moderated Panel Discussion

1:10 — 1:30
Audience Q & A

View more upcoming events

Hudson Institute
1015 15th Street, N.W. 6th Floor
Washington, DC 20005

Unsubscribe
View this email in a browser
Forward to a friend

This email was sent to podesta@law.georgetown.edu from Hudson Institute. To ensure that you continue receiving our emails, please add contact@hudson.org to your address book or safe list.

© 2014 Hudson Institute, Inc.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Common Good" <patriciaduff@thecommongood.net>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 2/12/2016 4:56:34 PM
Subject: New News! (2/12/2016)

News as of February 12, 2016

Weekly roundup about our democracy and The Common Good community

- This HUUUUGE: Einstein's theory on gravity waves is proven.
- Trump, Sanders win in NH; Kasich gains, Rubio loses ground.
- Economic "doom loop"? Markets in turmoil; economic concerns deepen.
- US & Russia negotiate process for a break in hostilities, humanitarian aid in Syria.
- North Korea launches 'satellite' sparking fear about long-range missile program.
- Obama calls for "better politics"; ambitious budget

Polls

NH Democratic Primary Results: Sanders 60.4% Clinton 38%
NH GOP Primary Results: Trump 35.3% Kasich 15.8% Cruz 11.7% Bush 11% Rubio 10.6% Christie 7.4% Fiorina 4.1% Carson 2.3% AP

Key findings from NH Exit polls: Fewer than 50% of Democrats find Clinton to be honest and trustworthy...70% of women under 45 voted for Sanders.. 40% of voters in both the Democratic and Republican primaries said they identify as independents. 2/3rds of GOP voters say they support a temporary ban on non-citizen Muslims entering the United States. AP . Sanders beat Clinton among women by 11 points (55%-44%) and swept all age categories except voters over 65, non-whites, and those with family incomes over $200,00. Philip Bump, Wash Post

Trump up +16 In Latest SC Poll: Trump in 1st with 36%. Cruz is in 2nd with 20%. Rubio jumped a statistically insignificant +1 with 15%. [Augusta Chronicle poll] RealClearPolitics

Sanders within single digits of Clinton nationally: Sanders trails Clinton by 7 points, 46% to 39%, in the Morning Consult survey released Friday. Mark Hensch, The Hill

Domestic Affairs

Einstein was right: "Scientists announced that they have detected gravitational waves, vibrations of space and time, proving Einstein was right 100 years after he first predicted their existence." Alyssa Newcomb, ABC News

Obama says nation deserves a "better politics" based on civility and compromise to cure a "poisonous political climate" that pushes citizens away. "We've always gone through periods when our democracy seems stuck, and when that happens we have to find a new way of doing business. We're in one of those moments. We have to build a better politics," he said. "What's different today is the nature and extent of the polarization," said Obama, who cited political parties that have become more homogeneous in their ideology, a fractured media, advocacy groups and "unlimited dark money." Rick Pearson, Monique Garcia, and Celeste Bott, Chicago Tribune

SCOTUS blocks plan to limit greenhouse-gas emissions: The Supreme Court temporarily blocked the Clean Power Plan, halting the cornerstone of Obama's climate policy. "The court's 5-4 vote is unprecedented, the first time it has overruled a lower court to stay a regulation. The justices split along partisan lines." Alex Guillen, Politico

Obama's final budget seeks tax hikes on banks & the wealthy: "The plan calls for a $4 trillion spending blueprint that would pour billions into clean energy, education and Medicaid, and pay for it by raising taxes on big banks and the wealthy...The plan is not expected to gain much traction on Capitol Hill, but the president says it is about values." Benton Ives, Politico ; The budget also calls for an 11% increase in funding for the SEC and a 32% increase for the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC). Reuters ; Divided GOP to powwow on budget: "Speaker Ryan is expected to use charts and graphs in his pitch to House Republicans...But his message will be simple: There will be severe consequences if we don't pass a budget this year." Scott Wong and Sarah Ferris, The Hill

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Executive order signed by President to establish a federal privacy council: The order will help ensure the administration's branches are using the best, most secure practices to safeguard employee information, as well as government data. Kevin Liptak, CNN

Obama to ask Congress for $1.8 billion to respond to the Zika virus abroad and prepare for it at home. Steven Mufson and Lena H. Sun, Wash Post

The last of 4 armed protesters at an Oregon wildlife refuge reportedly has surrendered, ending a 41-day standoff with law enforcement. Fox News FBI agents arrest Cliven Bundy; he faces federal charges related to the 2014 standoff with federal agents at his ranch over federal use of public land. Fox News

The DOJ files a civil suit against Ferguson, alleging that the city's police and court system continue to violate black residents' civil rights: "The damning 56-page complaint details "patterns and practices" of force being used without legal justification and "racially discriminatory law enforcement conduct."" Mark Berman, Sari Horwitz, and Wesley Lowery, Wash Post

The Economy

Is the US headed for recession? The markets suggest so: "While many economic indicators aren't flashing concern, the global financial turmoil could cause a slowdown." Greg Ip, WSJ ; Is the global rout deepening?: "What is new is that investors are now worrying that banks are being caught in the middle as central banks in Europe and Japan turn to negative interest rates to spur growth." Tommy Stubbington and Margot Patrick, WSJ ; Will the US fall into a bear market too? "The steep decline for the MSCI All-Country World Index reflects the sense of dread that has crippled risky assets in recent weeks…Many individual stock markets are already in a bear market, including Brazil, Canada, China, France, Germany and Japan. So far, the U.S. has avoided bear status. However, both the Dow and the S&P 500 are down about 13% from their recent highs and the Nasdaq is off 17%." Matt Egan, CNN Money ; Stock market ended rough week on high note, rising 313.66 points Friday as bank stocks bounced back. But concerns weigh on markets. WSJ

Oil prices rallied on Friday, rebounding from a 13-year low the previous day: "UAE energy minister said OPEC members were ready to cooperate on possible production cuts." Georgi Kantchev and Timothy Puko, WSJ: US stocks gain as oil & banks rally: "[T]raders and analysts groused that they didn't expect the latest bounce to last." Corrie Driebusch and Riva Gold, WSJ

Fed's Yellen testifies before Congress, cites growing risks to economy: Yellen's remarks suggest foreign economic slowdown and market distress could threaten the Fed's plans to raise the rate gradually this year. Paul Davidson, USA Today Yellen said the Fed was not to blame for the turmoil that has engulfed financial markets this year. Rich Miller and Christopher Condon, Bloomberg

A darkening global outlook and financial-market turmoil mean the best of Europe's recovery is likely behind it. Nina Adam and Jason Douglas, WSJ Eurozone economy grows, but still lags behind 2008: "Europe's economic core remains soft." Jack Ewing, NY Times

Global growth fears spread to Asia; Nikkei falls more than 5%: "Anxiety over slowing growth, falling oil prices and rock-bottom interest rates spilled over into Asia." Kosaku Narioka, WSJ

Negative rates hurt banks as unconventional policies backfire: "It seemed like a good idea at the time: Cut interest rates below zero to revive growth. But as policy makers embrace the notion, investors are close to panic mode." Ye Xie, Lu Wang, and Eshe Nelson, Bloomberg ; The new concern is that negative rates have squeezed banks' profits and put their soundness in question. Clive Crook, Bloomberg

What is it that makes today's global economy abnormal?: "First, potential growth in developed and emerging countries has fallen because of the burden of high private and public debts...Second, actual growth has been anemic and below its potential trend, owing to the painful process of deleveraging underway, first in the US, then in Europe, and now in highly leveraged emerging markets. Third, economic policies – especially monetary policies – have become increasingly unconventional...the distinction between monetary and fiscal policy has become increasingly blurred." Nouriel Roubini (TCG Speaker), Project Syndicate

The thorny economics of illegal immigration: "Arizona's economy took a hit when many illegal immigrants left, but benefits also materialized." Bob Davis, WSJ

Foreign Affairs/National Security

Russia & US agree to a halt in Syrian war: "The "cessation of hostilities" is scheduled to go into effect within the next week..but humanitarian access to besieged cities and towns will begin immediately." Karen DeYoung, Wash Post What has been agreed? 1) To try to immediately step up aid...2) For a US/Russia-led task force to work to achieve a "cessation of hostilities" across Syria…[that] will exclude action against so-called Islamic State group, jihadist group al-Nusra Front and other UN-designated terrorist groups...3) To work towards an eventual ceasefire and implementation of a UN-backed plan for political transition in Syria." BBC News; Ash Carter- Regardless of fate of diplomatic efforts to end Syria's civil war, allies must contribute more to military campaign against ISIS: Phil Stewart and Robin Emmott, Reuters

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

North Korea launches 'satellite,' sparks fears about long-range missile program: Anna Fifield, Wash Post; South Korea said it would suspend operations at an industrial complex it runs jointly with North Korea. "The complex, located in North Korea, houses more than 120 South Korean companies and was established over a decade ago as a symbol of cooperation between the two countries."Krishnadev Calamur, The Atlantic ; Senate unanimously approved strict sanctions intended to limit Pyongyang's ability to finance warheads and missiles. Emmarie Huetteman, NY Times

NATO orders fleet to deploy in Aegean Sea 'to help end Europe's refugee crisis': "Warships will be used to stop people-smuggling boats for the first time...NATO Secretary General Jens Stoltenberg said action would be taken "without delay"." Adam Withnall, The Independent

Intelligence officials testify that ISIS will probably conduct additional attacks in Europe and then attempt the same in the US. "[These officials] believe IS leaders will be 'increasingly involved in directing attacks rather than just encouraging lone attackers.'" Deb Riechmann and Richard Lardner, AP

Assad's regime is laying siege to the city of Aleppo — cutting off hundreds of thousands of people from international aid. Tim Lister, CNN ; Assad wouldn't have been able to do this without Russia, which has been bombing the city as part of the offensive, killing at least 150 civilians over the weekend. Elisha Fieldstadt, NBC News ; Syrian Rebels increasingly turn to guerrilla tactics as regime forces gain battlefield advantage: Raja Abdulrahim, WSJ

The most effective way Putin's regime can avoid collapse is by causing the EU to collapse sooner: "Putin will be able to gain considerable economic benefits from dividing Europe and exploiting the connections with commercial interests and anti-European parties that he has carefully cultivated." George Soros, Op-Ed, Project Syndicate

World map shows where pollution is getting worse: US, Europe and Japan have greatly improved, but pollution has worsened in parts of China, India and the Middle East. Rick Noak, Wash Post

UN discloses that female genital mutilation has risen by 70 million: At least 200 million women and girls, alive today, who have undergone genital mutilation. Robin Wright, The New Yorker

Africa - the fastest-growing front of global jihad--and perhaps its deadliest. "Driving this change is a crucial transformation of the way that Islam is being practiced by the 250 million Muslims living south of the Sahara... the new active Islam, not the dormant, Sufi ...[version]." Yarolsav Trofimov, WSJ

2016 Campaign

Trump & Sanders' NH victories prove anti-establishment, populist fervor is real: "The success by two outsider candidates...all but guaranteed protracted, bruising races for each party's presidential nomination." Patrick Healy and Jonathan Martin, NY Times Kasich's 2nd place finish thrusts him into relevance, a setback for Rubio and Bush: His finish was driven by late-deciding, upscale, moderate, and independent-leaning voters. Marc Caputo and Anna Palmer, Politico

Who won the latest Dem Debate? "This debate had a more subdued and even scholarly tone, with detailed discussions about Henry Kissinger...and President Obama's legacy...Many commentators and critics felt that Mr. Sanders held his own on domestic affairs, but that Mrs. Clinton outshined him on foreign policy and scored some points by cornering him as a single-issue candidate." Alan Rappeport, NY Times Clinton projected confidence, challenging Sanders on issues beyond income inequality. Jonathan Martin, NY Times It's not easy to argue realism versus idealism, smaller steps versus larger strides, political evolution versus political revolution. Yet...Clinton did it deftly. Scott Lehigh, Boston Globe

Rubio donors disappointed but look for strong South Carolina showing: Sean Sullivan and Matea Gold, Wash Post . Rubio eyes brokered convention after NH setback: Steve Peoples, AP

Tax Policy Center- Rubio's tax proposals could produce large, "unsustainable, budget deficits": The proposals would put more money in taxpayers' wallets and in business coffers, their benefits would be concentrated at the top end of the income scale." Lynnley Browning, Bloomberg

Goodbye to Carly Fiorina and Chris Christie candidacies following poor results in NH primary. David A. Graham, The Atlantic

Sanders' win sets the stage for a quest for votes in states with larger minority populations: "South Carolina and Nevada will test candidates' abilities to connect with Latinos and African Americans." John Wagner and Anne Gearan, Wash Post ; Clinton captures vital endorsement from Congressional Black Caucus PAC: Stephen Collinson, Rebekah Metzler and Eugene Scott, CNN

Bernie's fundraising juggernaut yields $6.3 million in the 23 hours after the polls closed and counting: It's "deceptively sophisticated, using cutting edge technology and techniques to create a perfect fundraising storm never before seen in presidential politics."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ken Vogel, Politico

The DNC rolls back restrictions that banned donations from federal lobbyists and PACs, a move introduced by Barack Obama in 2008. Tom Hamburger and Paul Kane, Wash Post

GOP candidates have started turning on Wall Street donors: Now they're "attacking one another for being too close to the financial industry." Josh Green, Bloomberg ; Chances are slim that anyone connected to Wall Street will secure a top post in the administration, no matter who wins the presidency. Andrew Ross Sorkin, NY Times

Mike Bloomberg, actively considering an independent run for president, will meet with pollster Frank Luntz this week. Mara Gay and Josh Dawsey, WSJ Why the media wants Bloomberg to run: "A Bloomberg candidacy would redefine the range and tone of the political argument, changing the story and thereby giving reporters a chance to renew themselves." Jack Shafer, Politico

Books & Film

"Exit Right: The People Who Left the Left and Reshaped the American Century" by Daniel Oppenheimer: "A new book looks at the leftist origins of the rabid right." Sam Tanenhaus, The Atlantic 60 MINUTES with rare interview of John Brennan: The head of the CIA outlines the ISIS threat to the US and other security concerns such as cyber and biological terror with Scott Pelley.

Upcoming Events

Meet the Candidate: Congresswoman Tammy Duckworth (D-IL), Candidate for US Senate

Monday, February 29, 2016
Breakfast & remarks: 10:30-11:30am

RSVP

The Comm Good Forum on "Security and Opportunity in Turbulent Times"

Friday, May 20, 2016, 8am-4pm, Sessions all day on national and economic security

RSVP

Thank you TCG Digest contributors: TCG Staff, Isabelle Lehner, Emily Samuels, and Isaac Getlan, and our interns Emily Abrams, Juliet Kirk, Uzma Azhar, Daniela Gutierrez, and Grace Ewing.
Visit our website www.thecommongoodusa.org, Facebook, and our Twitter @TheCommonGood. JOIN IN by sending us your ideas, news, and reactions to admin@thecommongood.net .

This email was sent to podesta@law.georgetown.edu
why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences
The Common Good · 115 East 57th St · Suite 1010 · New York, NY 10022 · USA

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Adam Blickstein" <ablickstein@nsnetwork.org>
To:	bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date:	10/9/2009 5:16:51 AM
Subject:	[big campaign] Nobel: While Obama Renews America's Global Leadership, Conservatives Go on the Attack

Nobel: While Obama Renews America's Global Leadership, Conservatives Go on the Attack

Washington, D.C. - Domestic reaction to President Barack Obama's winning the Nobel Peace Prize has been a classic case of missing the forest for the trees. While commentators have obsessed over the daily political ups and downs of a new President, observers should recognize this award for what it is: a clear recognition that the Obama administration has dramatically changed the direction of American engagement with the world, putting forward an agenda that the world supports and shares..

In his first nine months in office, President Obama has reasserted American leadership on behalf of an agenda that has seized the imagination of people around the world: controlling nuclear weapons, responding to climate change, and promoting Middle East peace. The President has also restored America's moral standing by implementing a timetable for the end of American involvement in Iraq, renouncing torture, and working to revamp America's detention policy.

But conservative leaders like Michael Steele and Rush Limbaugh lambasted the President for renewing America's global leadership. And Limbaugh went as far to say "The Nobel gang just suicide bombed themselves."

The Nobel Prize doesn't just go to people who have completely succeeded in their efforts, nor is it a lifetime achievement award. Instead, it is given explicitly to endorse and encourage those who are working to bring about a better more peaceful world. Yitzchak Rabin, Shimon Peres, and Yasser Arafat received the award not because they had resolved the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, but because they had set out to resolve it in such an inspiring way. The committee is recognizing Obama's efforts to lead a growing global movement - and this is a moment for us to be proud of our country.

World lauds Nobel committee's decision to award Nobel Peace Prize to President Obama:

- Mohammed Elbaradei, director-general of the United Nations International Atomic Energy Agency and Nobel recipient. "I cannot think of anyone today more deserving of this honor. In less than a year in office, he has transformed the way we look at ourselves and the world we live in and rekindled hope for a world at peace with itself." [NY Times, 10/09/09]
- Shimon Peres, Israeli President and Nobel recipient: "Very few leaders if at all were able to change the mood of the entire world in such a short while with such a profound impact, You provided the entire humanity with fresh hope, with intellectual determination, and a feeling that there is a lord in heaven and believers on earth... Under your leadership, peace became a real and original agenda. And from Jerusalem, I am sure all the bells of engagement and understanding will ring again. You gave us a license to dream and act in a noble direction." [NY Times, 10/09/09]
- Mikhail Gorbachev, former President of the Soviet Union and Nobel recipient. "In these hard times people who are capable of taking responsibility, who have a vision [of problems], commitment and political will should be supported." [NY Times, 10/09/09]
- Archbishop Desmond Tutu: "It is a very imaginative and somewhat surprising choice. It is wonderful." [Middle East Online, 10/09/09]
- Masdar Mas'udi, senior leader of Indonesia's largest Muslim Organization: "I think it's appropriate because he is the only American president who has reached out to us in peace. On the issues of race, religion, skin color, he has an open attitude." [NPR, 10/09/09]
- The Nelson Mandela Foundation: "We trust that this award will strengthen his commitment, as the leader of the most powerful nation in the world, to continue promoting peace and the eradication of poverty." [NPR, 10/09/09]

Obama's selection follows Nobel tradition of rewarding leaders, including past American presidents, who have worked to create peace and stability. "Obama is the third sitting U.S. president--and the first in 90 years--to win the prestigious peace prize... Woodrow Wilson was awarded the price in 1919, after helping to found the League of Nations and shaping the Treatise of Versailles; and Theodore Roosevelt was the recipient in 1906 for his work to negotiate an end to the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Russo-Japanese war," writes the Washington Post.

Historically the prize has often been awarded to people in the midst of their work - often seeking to encourage those efforts, rather than simply rewarding past accomplishments. An article in Foreign Policy says that, "The Nobel committee seeks to change the world through the prize's very conferral, and, unlike its fellow prizes, the peace prize goes well beyond recognizing past accomplishments. As Francis Sejersted, the chairman of the Norwegian Nobel Committee in the 1990s, once proudly admitted, 'The prize ... is not only for past achievement. ... The committee also takes the possible positive effects of its choices into account [because] ... Nobel wanted the prize to have political effects. Awarding a peace prize is, to put it bluntly, a political act.'" This was the precisely the point of the Nobel Committee's decision.

As one member of the five person panel that chooses the winner told the Wall Street Journal, "this was primarily an award on his work on and commitment to nuclear disarmament - and his dialogue. Of course there will be criticism, because he hasn't achieved his goals yet. It will take time, but this is a support." Thorbjørn Jagland, the Nobel Committee chairman places it in a historical context: "If you look at the history of the Nobel Peace prize, we have, on many occasions, tried to enhance what many personalities are trying to do. For instance, when Willy Brandt got the prize back in the 1970s, he launched Ostpolitik in Europe, which was so important to what happened in Europe many years later. For instance, giving the prize to Mikhail Gorbachev, who changed the world completely. And now to President Obama, who is contributing to improve the international climate," reports the Wall Street Journal. [Washington Post, 10/9/09 . Foreign Policy, 7/9/09 . WS Journal, 10/7/09 . WS Journal, 10/09/09]

Conservatives attack President Obama for promoting American security while addressing global challenges. Conservatives, blinded by partisan politics, have had a running meme that the president has not achieved anything in office. For example, John Miller writes in the National Review that, "Obama isn't the first American president to win the Nobel Peace Prize, but he's the first to win it without having accomplished anything... Obama's award is simply the projection of wishful thinking." And Republican consultant Curt Anderson said in the Washington Post that "It will completely reinforce the notion that he is all flash and no substance, all style, and more popular in Europe than in America." Even before the prize was awarded, this theme was leaking into the mainstream media. Chip Reid of CBS news said last month that, "After eight months in office, he's still the darling of the international community... But with scant progress on a long his of issues, the question now is what does he have to show for it?" [John Miller, National Review, 10/09/09 . Curt Anderson, Washington Post, 10/09/09 . Chip Reid, CBS News via NewsBusters, 09/23/09]

Two leaders of the conservative establishment, Michael Steele and Rush Limbaugh, lambasted the President for renewing America's global leadership.

- "The Nobel gang just suicide bombed themselves. Gore, Carter, Obama, soon Bill Clinton. See a pattern here? They are all leftist sell-outs. George Bush liberates 50 million Muslims in Iraq, Reagan liberates hundreds of millions of Europeans and saves parts of Latin America. Any awards?" Limbaugh says "Obama gives speeches trashing his own country and for that gets a prize, which is now worth as much as whatever prizes they are putting in Cracker Jacks these days." (10/09/09)
- "The real question Americans are asking is, 'What has President Obama actually accomplished?' It is unfortunate that the president's star power has outshined tireless advocates who have made real achievements working towards peace and human rights. One thing is certain - President Obama won't be receiving any awards from Americans for job creation, fiscal responsibility, or backing up rhetoric with concrete action." - RNC Chairman Michael Steele

Meanwhile, the Administration has made significant progress on multiple important global issues that have strengthened American security.

- Achieved significant progress on nonproliferation. The Washington Post reports, "The committee praised Obama for his 'extraordinary efforts to strengthen international diplomacy and cooperation between peoples' during his nine months in office and singled out for special recognition Obama's call for a world free of nuclear weapons, which he first made in an April speech in Prague." Agot Valle, a member of the five-person Nobel committee, told the Wall Street Journal that the "committee last met on Oct. 5, and that the decision to choose Obama was unanimous, especially after Sept. 24, when Obama became the first sitting U.S. president to chair a U.N. Security Council summit-level meeting. At that meeting, the Security Council passed a resolution calling for a strengthened Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty ahead of negotiations on the issue with Iran in Geneva." [Washington Post, 10/9/09 . WS Journal, 10/7/09]
- Reached out to the Muslim world in an unprecedented show of trust and respect. Just under nine months into his administration, President Obama's administration has dramatically altered the tenor of America's relationship with the Muslim world. From his first interview as President with Al-Arabiya to his address in Cairo, the President has clearly articulated America's desire for better relations between the U.S. and the world's Muslims. [President Obama, 6/04/09]
- Strengthened the international response to Iran. President Obama increased pressure on Iran heading into talks on its nuclear program by gaining Russian verbal support for sanctions if diplomacy fails. The New York Times reported that Russian President Dmitri Medvedev "signaled for the first time that Russia would be amenable to longstanding American requests to toughen sanctions against Iran significantly" if talks scheduled for next month head nowhere. "'I told His Excellency Mr. President that we believe we need to help Iran to take a right decision,' Mr. Medvedev said, adding that 'sanctions rarely lead to productive results, but in some cases, sanctions are inevitable.'" [NY Times, 9/24/09]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- "Reset" U.S.-Russia relations. By offering Russia a "reset button" the Administration has bolstered relations with a key partner for addressing nuclear proliferation, the war in Afghanistan, the crisis with Iran, climate change and any international crisis. CFR notes that the administration's efforts to "'press the reset button ' in relations with Russia was well-received in Moscow." And as Secretary Clinton said on Russia's cooperation regarding Iran, "we also believe that in working closely with Russia, sharing information, that they have been quite helpful this past week." [CFR, 2/18/09. Secretary Hillary Clinton, CBS News, 9/27/09]
- Restructured the G20 to be more representative and effective. The New York Times reports, "President Obama will announce Friday that the once elite club of rich industrial nations known as the Group of 7 will be permanently replaced as a global forum for economic policy by the much broader Group of 20 that includes China, Brazil, India and other fast-growing developing countries, administration officials said Thursday." [NY Times, 9/25/09]
- Reengaged the UN and challenged its members to match their rhetoric with action. In his speech to the United Nations General Assembly, President Obama said, "Now, like all of you, my responsibility is to act in the interest of my nation and my people, and I will never apologize for defending those interests. But it is my deeply held belief that in the year 2009 -- more than at any point in human history -- the interests of nations and peoples are shared... We have sought -- in word and deed -- a new era of engagement with the world. And now is the time for all of us to take our share of responsibility for a global response to global challenges." [Barack Obama, 9/23/09]

###

Adam Blickstein
Communications Director
National Security Network
202-289-7113 (office)
617-335-0859 (mobile)
ablickstein@nsnetwork.org

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail dubois.sara@gmail.com with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin.hrco@gmail.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 4/23/2014 11:57:33 AM
Subject: Re: Keystone in the book

So we're officially cutting Keystone and here's the domestic energy section that remains, with a few small additions:

While we were pursuing all this work abroad, there were also exciting developments at home. American innovation was at the forefront of unlocking new energy supplies, whether it was hard-to-reach oil and gas or cutting edge renewables. And, it turned out that our country was blessed with far more energy resources than we realized. By 2013, the United States surpassed both Saudi Arabia and Russia to lead the world in oil and gas production. And production of wind and solar doubled between 2009 and 2012, when clean renewables accounted for more than half of new U.S. energy capacity for the first time ever.

The boom in domestic energy production, especially in natural gas, opened major economic and strategic opportunities for our country.

Expanded energy production has created tens of thousands of new jobs, from oil rigs in North Dakota to wind turbine factories in South Carolina. Cheap and plentiful natural gas is helping drive down costs for energy-intensive manufacturers and giving the United States a big competitive advantage over places like Japan and Europe, where energy prices remain much higher. Researchers project that all the ripple effects from our domestic energy revolution could create up to 1.7 million permanent jobs by 2020 and add between 2 and 4 percent to our annual gross domestic product. The shift to natural gas is also helping lower carbon emissions, because it's cleaner than coal. Greater domestic production is reducing our dependence on foreign oil, easing a major strategic burden, and freeing up supplies elsewhere that might have otherwise gone to the American market that can instead help our European allies lessen their dependence on Russia.

There are legitimate climate change concerns about the new extraction practices and their impact on local water, soil and air supplies. Methane leaks in the production and transportation of natural gas are particularly worrisome. So it's crucial that we put in place smart regulations and enforce them, including not drilling when the risks are too high.

If we approach this challenge responsibly and make the right investments in infrastructure, technology and environmental protection, America can be the clean energy super power for the 21st century. That means creating a positive environment for private sector innovation and risk-taking, with targeted tax incentives, a commitment to research and development, and policies that encourage rather than undercut the transition to clean, renewable sources of energy. And it means investing in the infrastructure of the future, including next-generation power plants to produce electricity more cleanly, smarter grids to deliver it more effectively, and greener buildings to use it more efficiently. China and others are already racing forward with big bets on renewables. We cannot afford to cede leadership in this area, especially since American innovation holds the key to the next generation of advances, and our capacity to employ them at home and in our hemisphere is almost limitless. Our economic recovery, our efforts against climate change and our strategic position in the world all will improve if we can build a bridge to a clean energy economy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: Dan <dschwerin.hrco@gmail.com >
Date: Wednesday, April 23, 2014 at 4:43 PM
To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Cc: Ethan Gelber <egelber.hrco@gmail.com >, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com >, PIR <preines.hrco@gmail.com >, Huma Abedin <Huma@clintonemail.com >, Jake Sullivan <Jake.Sullivan@gmail.com >
Subject: Re: Keystone in the book

Great. The Secretary is open to cutting and thinks maybe we'll add a few more lines on the promise of clean energy instead. John, if you have ideas on that, please let me know.

From: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Date: Wednesday, April 23, 2014 at 4:42 PM
To: Dan <dschwerin.hrco@gmail.com >
Cc: Ethan Gelber <egelber.hrco@gmail.com >, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com >, PIR <preines.hrco@gmail.com >, Huma Abedin <Huma@clintonemail.com >, Jake Sullivan <Jake.Sullivan@gmail.com >
Subject: Re: Keystone in the book

Cut

On Apr 22, 2014 10:37 AM, "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin.hrco@gmail.com > wrote:

> Our editor Jonathan Karp has suggested to HRC that she cut the reference to Keystone from the book, a change that apparently is still manageable in the production process even at this late date (lets hope it doesn't open the floodgates). His view is that it "reads like you're punting on an issue I don't think readers are expecting you to address in the first place. Unless you feel some need to mention it, I'm not sure what the gain is. You say you're waiting for the study before making a determination, but I question whether any study is capable of defining a clear course of action, and some readers might think that relying on a study is a stalling tactic." As background, she decided to write about Keystone because her daughter suggested that it would be a glaring omission and look like an even worse dodge if she left it out. Podesta, copied here, helped us craft the language below, which HRC/WJC edited again this week. I'd like to present her with a recommendation as soon as possible as to whether we think this should stay or go. Thoughts?
>
> Our economic recovery, our efforts against climate change and our strategic position in the world all will improve if we can build a bridge to a clean energy economy.
>
> There will be tough questions along the way. One high-profile example is the controversy over the proposed Keystone XL pipeline that would transport oil from the tar sands of Canada to refineries in the United States. Proponents of the pipeline say it will produce jobs and spur economic growth. Opponents warn about potential environmental damage, locally in Canada and along the transportation route, and globally because of the high life-cycle carbon content of the fuel produced from tar sands. Because the route of the pipeline would cross the border, the State Department has jurisdiction over approving it. When I was Secretary, I launched a careful, evidence-based process to evaluate the environmental and economic impact. Unfortunately, politics in Washington intervened and Republicans in Congress forced a decision before the government had the necessary facts. The Obama administration had no choice but to say no. As of this writing, another evaluation is underway and a final decision is up to Secretary Kerry and President Obama. I've refrained from weighing in on this question since leaving the Department out of respect for my successor's process. But I do hope that this important decision can be insulated from politics and made based on evidence rather than ideology or political pressure.
>
> Whether Keystone is approved or disapproved, we should keep heading toward a future of less imported oil and more domestic clean energy production. That's how we'll continue to grow our economy and reduce our emissions.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Washington Post" <email@e.washingtonpost.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 2/14/2016 2:38:04 AM
Subject: The Daily 202: Trump l ost last night's debat e in South Carolina. How much does it matter?

View The Daily 202 on the Web

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share on Twitter Share on Facebook

Trump lost last night's debate in South Carolina. How much does it matter?

Donald Trump stands alone on stage during a commercial break at last night's Republican debate in Greenville, South Carolina. (Jonathan Ernst/Reuters)

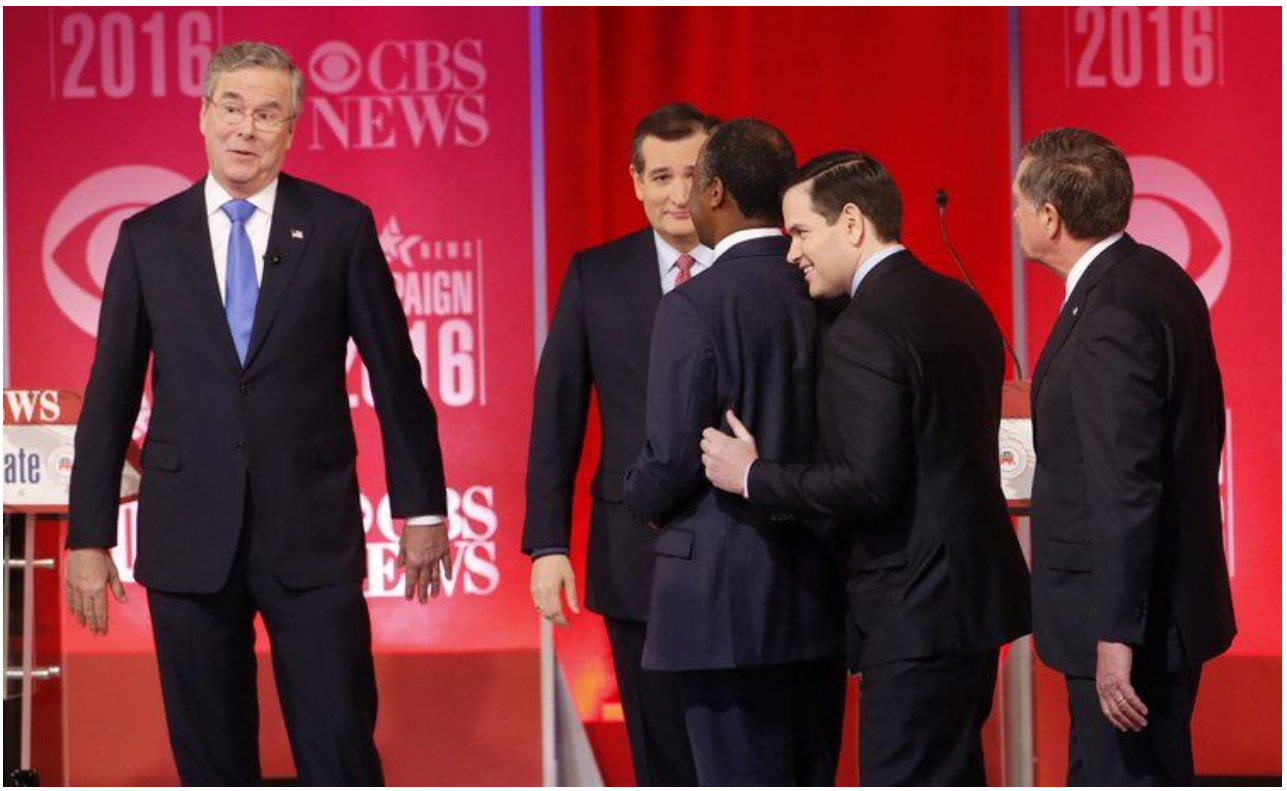
This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

-- There is widespread consensus that Donald Trump had a very bad night in Greenville. The question is whether that will cause lasting damage, or if he continues to be coated in Teflon.

One of the problems for leaders of the chattering class is that they have been so wrong about Trump so many times for so many months that everyone is gun-shy about predicting his impending decline.



The billionaire was flustered and cranky. Not only was he thrown off his game by sustained boos from the crowd and a pile-on by his rivals, but he often sounded more like a Democrat than a Republican.

He didn't just call George W. Bush's decision to invade Iraq a disaster – which he has done before – but he blamed him for 9/11 and said that the former president "lied" about the presence of weapons of mass destruction as a pretext for war. "Obviously the war in Iraq was a big, fat mistake," the frontrunner said at the Peace Center. "George Bush made a mistake. We can make mistakes, but that one was a beauty. We should have never been in Iraq. We have destabilized the Middle East."

Trump again defended Planned Parenthood, as everyone else promised to defund it. "It does wonderful things, but not as it relates to abortion," he said. "Wonderful things that have to do with women's health."

Keep in mind that he said this in the buckle of the Bible Belt, just down the road from Furman and Bob Jones universities.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(EPA/Erik S. Lesser)

-- If next Saturday's Republican primary becomes solely a referendum on W, which it probably won't, Jeb could win. The former president, who is flying to Charleston tomorrow night to campaign with his brother, still has an astronomical approval rating among likely voters in the Palmetto State. "I am sick and tired of him going after my family," Jeb said. "While Donald Trump was building a reality TV show, my brother was building a security apparatus to keep us safe."

Bush's popularity in the Palmetto State is why Marco Rubio jumped to the 43rd president's defense as much as his brother. "I thank God all the time that it was George W. Bush in the White House on 9/11 and not Al Gore," the Florida senator said. "He kept us safe."

It was one of the biggest applause lines of the night, and it prompted Trump to shout: "I lost hundreds of friends. The World Trade Center came down during the reign of George Bush! He kept us safe? That is not safe!"

Trump calling Bush a liar might have been a bridge too far, Dave Weigel thinks: "Republicans generally believe, against evidence, that Iraq held weapons of mass destruction when America invaded in 2003. In 2012, a poll conducted by a Dartmouth political scientist found that 63 percent of Republicans still thought this. Last year, a poll from Fairleigh Dickinson University's Public Mind found a majority of Republicans, 51 percent believed WMD had been found in Iraq."

Scott Clement flags a Post-ABC poll last May that found 54 percent of

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Republicans still think the Iraq war was worth fighting, while 41 percent said it was not. A January 2007 Post-ABC News poll found 83 percent of Republicans thought Bush had made the country "safer and more secure." Later that year, our poll found 85 percent of Republicans approved of the way Bush handled the U.S. campaign against terrorism.

Romney alum Katie Packer Gage's group, Our Principles PAC, will launch a digital campaign today to highlight Trump's support for impeaching W in 2008. Watch her ad here .

-- Recall that Trump was basically a non-factor during the previous two debates. He boycotted Fox News before the Iowa caucus, and his rivals basically avoided mentioning him. In New Hampshire last weekend on ABC the rest of the field was focused on arresting Rubio's momentum. That means it has been quite a while since he took much real heat from his critics, with the exception of a clash with Jeb over eminent domain.

But last night, reflecting the establishment's renewed focus on stopping Trump, the ninth Republican debate was almost entirely about Trump. He got the most airtime (16 minutes), two minutes more than Cruz and five minutes more than Bush, Rubio or Kasich. "Refusing to bow to party orthodoxy or even politeness, Trump trashed one of the most revered families in Republican politics and made a big political bet that standing his ground is better than backing down, no matter how much he is under fire. … Trump did not flinch. But whether he will be punished or rewarded by voters here in next weekend's primary was the unanswerable question."

Here's the rub: Two-thirds of likely voters in South Carolina are not supporting Trump. An ARG poll that was in the field during the two days leading up to the debate has Trump at 35 percent, with a closely-bunched battle for second: Kasich at 15, Rubio at 14, Cruz at 12 and Bush at 10.

-- So will last night move the numbers?

The Fix's Chris Cillizza : "Trump seemed somewhat out of control and angry for much of the debate. … Trump, who often comes across as tough yet good-natured, came across on Saturday night as downright mean in several exchanges with Bush and Cruz. (And, as any politician will tell you, it's tough to make Cruz into an empathetic figure.) Trump's hard-core supporters will never leave him — no matter how well or badly he does in a debate. And, his hard-core supporters may well be enough to carry him to victory in a week's time in South Carolina. But, that doesn't mean Trump was good Saturday night. He wasn't." Chris names Rubio and Bush as the two winners .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Post columnist Charles Krauthammer , on Fox, called Trump "VERY BITTER": "He took a risk in being as open and often contemptuous as he was, BUT I don't think it's going to SHAKE his support. The question is, will it LIMIT his support?"

BuzzFeed's McKay Coppins : "The hostile crowd reaction seemed to take a toll on the longtime showman. Trump, his face reddening, erupted at even the faintest prompt or mildest pushback. When a moderator pressed him on a question about Social Security, he grew increasingly defensive and disproportionately upset and by the end of the exchange he was shouting his answer."

The Daily Beast's Will Rahn: "If the Donald somehow starts to slip -- if his lead in South Carolina narrows, if a clear alternative to his slow march to the nomination develops -- this debate will likely be seen as the turning point, the moment when the man who's thrown out every rulebook in politics finally learns that a few rules still apply. Or, more likely, no clear alternative rises from tonight's pileup, as Trump continues his divide-and-conquer undoing of the modern Republican Party."

The Weekly Standard's John McCormack: "People who follow politics a lot are used to Trump's unhinged moments, but debate audiences haven't seen 2-hour meltdown like this."

"Meet the Press" moderator Chuck Todd: "Trump is testing the limits of whether he can ever grow his support enough to be the conservative party's nominee … unless SC has changed, I think he hurt himself."

Weekly Standard editor Bill Kristol: "Best debate yet. Trump definitively exposed. Cruz, Rubio and Bush all impressive in different ways … Jeb most likely won't be the nominee. But he did a service to the country by provoking Trump to blurt out his nutty views on Bush and WMD."

Politico spokesman and longtime Republican operative Brad Dayspring: "Did Trump implode or did he double down on what's propelled him? I'd argue the latter. We'll see." Politico's headline says Trump was "BLUDGEONED. "

ABC's Rick Klein: "Predictions of Trump doing damage to his own campaign

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

have been almost comically wrong over the past six months … and perhaps Trump is indeed a better student than everyone in the political class has realized. But on a night where the importance of the race was highlighted anew, Trump's rivals could portray him as flunking a big test."

Cook Political Report's Amy Walter : "The key issue post-debate isn't what it means for Trump, it's was there a clear 'establishment' lane winner? Don't think there was."

New York Times columnist Ross Douthat: "Even on an 'off' night Trump takes up so much oxygen that he makes it very hard for anyone else to look even somewhat presidential … The casual viewer sees a bunch of career politicians being heckled by a famous guy who seems to be telling at least some hard truths … As I may have mentioned before, I don't think Trump can be the nominee … but damn (sorry!) can he make it hard for anyone else to win."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Rubio gets a touch up during a commercial break. (Reuters/Jonathan Ernst)

-- Rubio had a good night:

The Weekly Standard's Stephen Hayes : "After last week's stumbles, Rubio probably needed the debate of his life this week. He got it."

Max Boot: "In tonight's debate it was Trump vs. George W. Bush. Bush won. And best defense of him came from Rubio."

The Resurgent's Erick Erickson: "Rubio had to prove himself … And he rose to the occasion … [he] found his footing again in the CBS debate and evangelicals leaning toward Rubio have every reason to see how he trends in South Carolina. He was the candidate who turned issues toward family, and I think he got the better of Cruz in the immigration exchange."

The Weekly Standard's Michael Warren: "He seemed to bounce back with strong, informed answers on national security and taxes. But with his top establishment rivals delivering solid turns themselves, has Rubio's opportunity to break out of the pack passed?"

Chris Cillizza: "Does Rubio still talk a little too fast and sound a little too rehearsed? Yes. But, he clearly helped himself."

-- Many were impressed by Bush:

National Review's Rich Lowry: "Jeb stood up to Trump, just wish he had better

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

rhetorical hammers than saying Trump is insulting his way to the nomination." … [and] as we learned in NH, it doesn't matter if audience is booing Trump."

Conservative Post blogger Jennifer Rubin: "My God, if this Jeb showed up day one he would have won by now."

Politico's Eli Stokols: "Jeb really took it to Trump tonight. But as we saw with Christie last week, the aggressor doesn't always benefit. And Trump has been bulletproof."

Washington Examiner's David Freddoso: "I didn't expect to be saying Jeb is winning a debate, but he's winning a debate … A lot of people who don't even care for Jeb have to be admiring how he bloodied Trump's nose there."

-- The Post's Fact Checkers examine a dozen specious claims that were made during the debate. Four highlights from Glenn Kessler and Michelle Ye Hee Lee:

- Ben Carson's closing statement included a fake quote from Joseph Stalin. There's no evidence the Soviet dictator said it, but conservatives have circulated it on social media.
- "The evidence is very slim" that Trump actually warned against attacking Iraq before March 2003, as he repeatedly insisted.
- On Jeb's job creation claims: "Florida had the highest number of net jobs three out of the eight years of his term, in 2002, 2003 and 2004. In growth rates, Florida ranked eighth, seventh and third respectively in those three years."
- On Trump's adamancy he never went bankrupt: "Trump personally has not gone "bankrupt" but as a result of his corporate bankruptcy restructurings, he did have to give up personal assets to help make loan payments, and his equity stake in various casinos was greatly reduced."

-- Last night felt more like a three-ring circus or a wrestling match than a debate. That could help John Kasich, who largely stayed above the fray. "I got to tell ya, this is just crazy," he said at one point. "This is just nuts. Geez, oh, man."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Glenn Beck ✓
@glennbeck

Follow

this is an embarrassment.The debate in Iowa where the Game Show Host didn't show wasn't like this.I can't let my kids watch this.#GOPDebate

22:17:28 - Feb 13 2016

205 634

Glenn Beck ✓
@glennbeck

Follow

Kasich is using the same peacemaker rhetoric as in every debate, but tonight it is working. This debate is an embarrassment. #GOPDebate

22:13:23 - Feb 13 2016

551 1,276

Laura Ingraham ✓
@IngrahamAngle

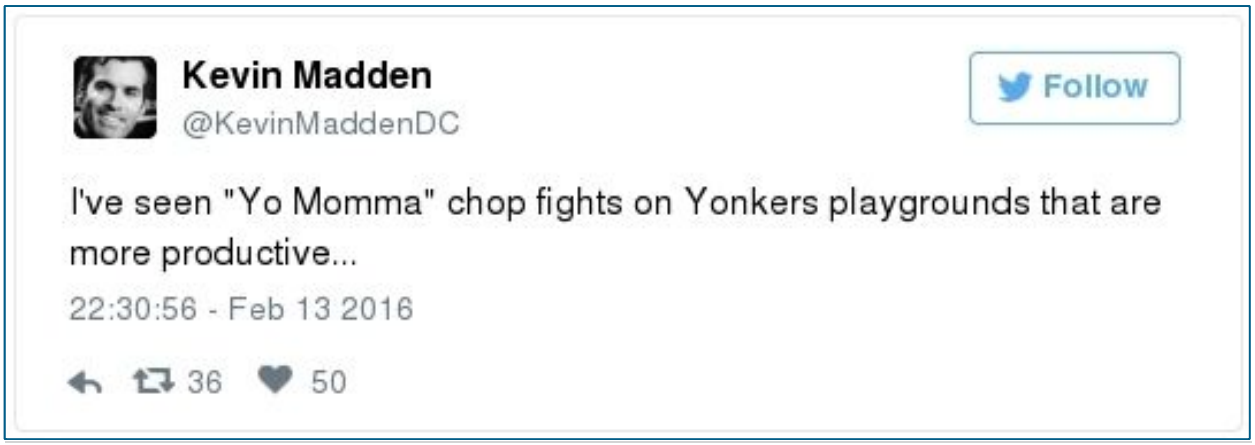
Follow

This debate is actually pretty damned entertaining. Pig-pile on Trump, audience jeering, candidates straining voices to be heard.

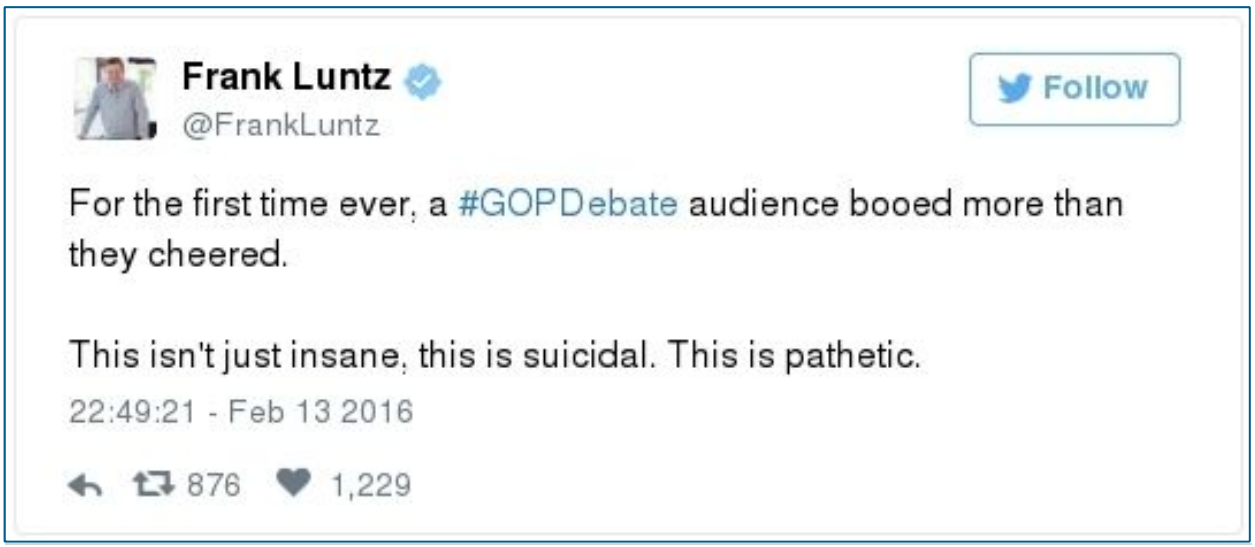
22:31:04 - Feb 13 2016

220 628

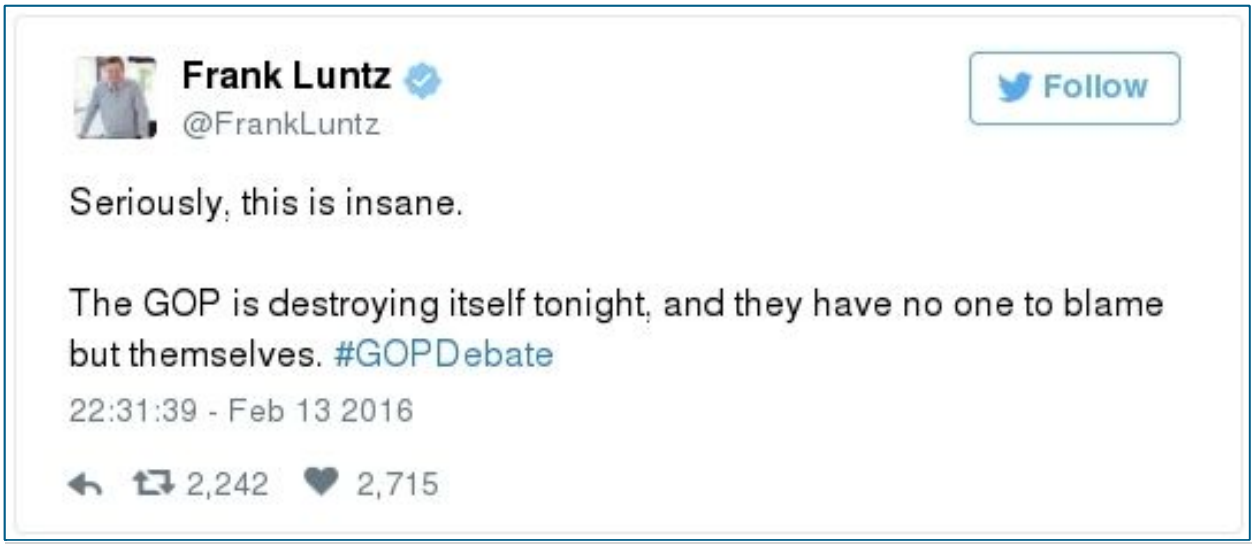
Laura Ingraham ✓
@IngrahamAngle



Follow



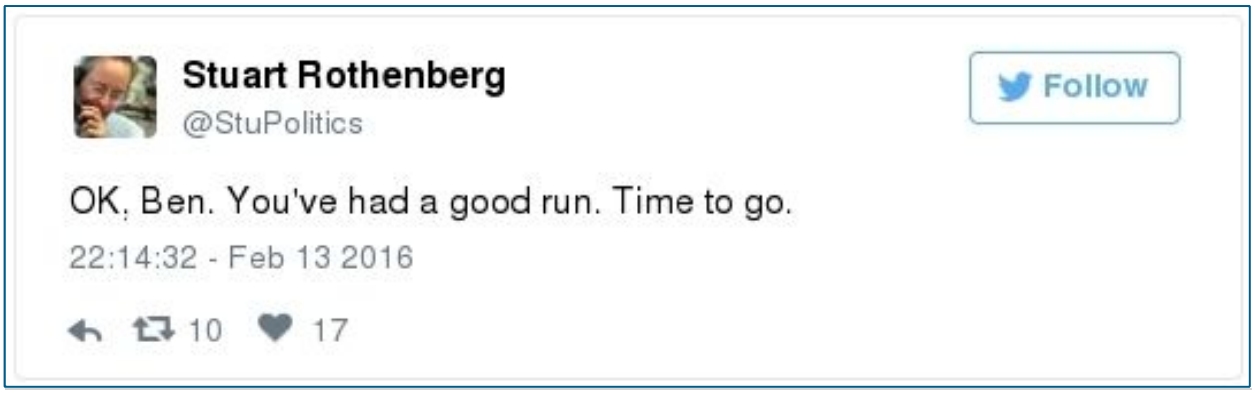
Watching this, I think @JohnKasich just may come in 2nd in SoCarolina.



22:46:50 - Feb 13 2016

120 363

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



Some believed Carson should be voted off the island:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The debate opened with a moment of silence for Antonin Scalia. (EPA/Erik S. Lesser)

-- Justice Antonin Scalia's death at a Texas hunting resort (of apparently natural causes) set off an immediate political battle about the future of the Supreme Court in an election year.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Justice Scalia in a 2010 file photo (Reuters/Larry Downing)

The short-term impact: The Post's Bob Barnes, an expert on the court, forecasts a lot of 4-4 splits on controversial issues like abortion, affirmative action, the rights of religious objectors to the contraceptive mandate in the Affordable Care Act, and the president's powers on immigration and deportation. When there's a tie, the decision by the lower court is affirmed. That means there is no precedent for the future. This means that who won in the lower court matters a great deal.

The coming fight: President Obama immediately announced he will nominate a successor, but Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) vowed that the Senate will not confirm anyone this year. "The American people should have a voice in the selection of their next Supreme Court Justice," he said.

Minority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) retorted: "Failing to fill this vacancy would be a shameful abdication of one of the Senate's most essential Constitutional responsibilities."

In other Scalia-related developments:

-- Trump, Cruz, Rubio and John Kasich all suggested either Obama shouldn't pick a replacement, or that the Senate should "delay, delay, delay" in Trump's words.

-- Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders agreed that it is "outrageous" for

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Republicans to block a nomination. "Apparently they believe that the Constitution does not allow a Democratic president to bring forth a nominee to replace Justice Scalia," Sanders said in a statement. "I strongly disagree with that."

-- Who will Obama nominate?

One leading candidate will probably be Sri Srinivasan, an ex-Justice Department official who is now on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. He'd be the first judge of South Asian descent on SCOTUS and was confirmed, 97-0, for his current post by the Senate in May 2013. Read Jeffrey Toobin's New Yorker story on Srinivasan here .

Other names mentioned by court insiders last night, per USA Today: Srinivasan's colleagues on the D.C. Circuit Patricia Millett and Merrick Garland, as well as California Supreme Court Justice Goodwin Liu.

-- Scalia passed away at a luxury West Texas ranch close to the Mexican border called Cibolo Creek, which has hosted movie stars like Mick Jagger, Bruce Willis and Tommy Lee Jones. (Elise Viebeck)

-- Read Barnes' full obituary of Scalia, who died at 79, here .

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

-- Saturday Night Live opened with a funny Hillary skit. It features five of the cast members sitting around a table over brunch talking about how they know they're supposed to vote for Clinton, but that they are going to support Bernie Sanders. Then the Hillary impersonator appears and performs Bonnie Raitt's "I can't make you love me," with Bill playing the piano. A Jeb character makes a cameo at the end. Watch it here . And you can see "Weekend Update" here .

-- The State Department released 550 more emails from Hillary's private email server, totaling 1,000 pages. Of them, 84 were retroactively classified, per CNN . A judge said all of the relevant Clinton emails as secretary of state from her homebrew email server must be released by Feb. 29 , one day before the Super Tuesday primaries. Among the new emails are a bunch from Sidney Blumenthal , including "memos and thoughts on Libya" and the David Petraeus scandal. In one funny email highlighted by NPR , top Clinton aide Cheryl Mills forwarded a Post story titled "Bill Clinton's ego could cost Obama in November." Hillary replied: "What can be done?"

-- Breanne Deppisch and Elise Viebeck contributed to this special Sunday edition of The Daily 202.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

GET SMART FAST:

1. Turkey pledged to contribute ground troops to an anti-ISIS coalition in Syria and to allow Saudi Arabia to launch airstrikes from its bases. (Karen DeYoung)
2. France's prime minister rejected the idea of a permanent quota system for distributing asylum seekers across Europe, and refused to take more than 30,000. This puts Paris at odds with Berlin shortly before a summit of European leaders to discuss the crisis. (Andreas Rinke and Tatiana Jancarikova)
3. The DNC rolled back its restrictions on taking donations from federal lobbyists and PACs. (Tom Hamburger and Paul Kane)
4. DHS has expanded its screening of social media. Secretary Jeh Johnson declined to be specific but said the department is now monitoring the social media use of people who apply for various immigration benefits, along with those seeking asylum under the Obama administration's controversial program to accept refugees from Syria. (Jerry Markon)
5. A snow squall caused more than 50 vehicles to pile up on a Pennsylvania interstate, killing three and sending scores to hospitals. (AP)
6. West Virginia became the 26th Right To Work state. The Republican legislature overrode the Democratic governor's veto of a bill that turned the state right to work and replaced the state's prevailing wage law. (West Virginia Gazette)
7. The U.S. plans to restore commercial flights to Cuba for the first time in more than 50 years. Under the agreement, part of Obama's push to normalize relations between the two countries, airline carriers can submit potential travel routes to be approved by the DOT. (New York Times)
8. Meanwhile, Cuba finally returned a U.S. missile that was inadvertently shipped to the country in 2014. (CNN)
9. Austin, Texas, will have a referendum on how to regulate ride-sharing services like Uber and Lyft. The voters will decide whether drivers must be fingerprinted and pay higher fees to the city. (USA Today)
10. Apple is facing a class action lawsuit over the phone-bricking "Error 53," which has left some customers in need of a new phone. Hayley Tsukayama : "The problem affects iPhone owners who've had third-party work done on their phone's home buttons, which also houses the fingerprint scanner. Numerous people have reported that while the hardware seemed to be fine after the repairs, their phones became completely inoperable after updating their iOS operating system. Frustratingly, there doesn't seem to be a way to recover the phone after that point; the only option is to get a new device."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Pope Francis dons a sombrero in Mexico City's main square, the Zocalo, yesterday. (AP Photo/Christian Palma)

POWER PLAYERS IN THE NEWS:

1. The Pope kicked off a six-day tour of Mexico by calling on its president to bring justice to a country racked by corruption and gangs. Francis offered an unvarnished assessment of Mexico's troubles, including the country's "drug trade, exclusion of different cultures, violence and human trafficking." (Joshua Partlow and Gabriela Martinez)
2. In Cuba, Francis met with Russian Orthodox Patriarch Kirill -- the first time two such leaders have met in centuries. The pair urged the international community to protect persecuted Christians around the globe. (CNN)
3. Jim Gilmore ended his presidential campaign Friday night. (Rachel Weiner)
4. Gov. Rick Snyder (R-MI) and EPA Administrator Gina McCarthy will testify before the House Oversight Committee during an upcoming hearing on the water crisis in Flint. (The Hill)
5. Lawyers for Bill Cosby again tried to get the charges against the comedian dismissed, asking an appeals court to consider whether he had a "binding agreement" from a former prosecutor that he would not be charged. (Boston Globe)
6. Elton John and Katy Perry will headline a fundraising concert to benefit Hillary on March 2 in New York City. That's the day after Super Tuesday. (Washington

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Examiner)

7. Martin O'Malley's Irish pub-rock band will perform again on March 13, his first scheduled performance since dropping out of the presidential race. (Baltimore Sun)

WAPO HIGHLIGHTS:

-- "Mysterious and fast-moving, Zika virus has world's health leaders scrambling," by Lena H. Sun and Brady Dennis: "Global health authorities and government officials are mobilizing to battle the fast-spreading Zika virus … But their efforts are being hobbled by a fundamental lack of understanding of a disease that has spread to nearly three dozen countries and is moving so quickly that some experts estimate it could infect as many as 3 million to 4 million people within 12 months. Unlike Ebola, which had been studied extensively by the time it emerged in Guinea in late 2013, Zika wasn't considered a menace. The mystery surrounding the virus — officials aren't sure what will turn up next — makes it 'much more insidious, cunning and evil' than Ebola, said Bruce Aylward, a WHO official. 'This emergency is because of what's unknown,' said David Heymann, an infectious-disease professor. But it is not always clear what that decisive action should be, or how to marshal the political and financial resources needed to make it happen."

-- "17 years after Columbine, the mother of one of the killers finally tells her story," by Carlos Lozada: "Stories of victims are prevalent in our reckoning with mass shootings. They carry greater moral force, or less moral ambiguity, than those of perpetrators. But Sue Klebold is both the mother of a killer and of one of his victims, too … This book's insights are painful and necessary, and its contradictions inevitable. It is an apology to the loved ones of the victims; a catalogue of warning signs missed. Sue knows she will always be seen as 'the woman who raised a murderer,' but she insists that she and Tom were loving, engaged parents. Though they recognized that Dylan had problems, 'we simply — and drastically and lethally— underestimated the depth and severity of his pain and everything he was capable of doing to make it stop.'"

Related: The CDC reports a spike in Zika infections in PUERTO RICO over the past month. The mosquito that commonly transmits the virus is prevalent there. That's bad news for the island going into spring break season. (Brady Dennis)

-- "What a divided America actually hears when Obama speaks," by Greg Jaffe: "The challenge for Obama is breaking through in a climate defined more by alienation and frustration than differences on policy. Policies can be modified or changed … But how does a president persuade an angry and mistrustful nation to actually listen to each other? Obama's shot on the subject was the State of the Union address — a speech he labored over, writing and rewriting its final section on the country's corrosive and divided politics. 'Well said, Mr. President!' a viewer tweeted … 'Profiles in pathetic delusion,' countered another.'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

Bryan Garner, a friend and co-author of Scalia's, posted these photos on Twitter following his death:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bryan A. Garner
@BryanAGarner

Follow

Nino was happy last week in Hong Kong. I'll miss my dear friend.
pic.twitter.com/2BZpIDXKFi

18:51:58 - Feb 13 2016

155 307

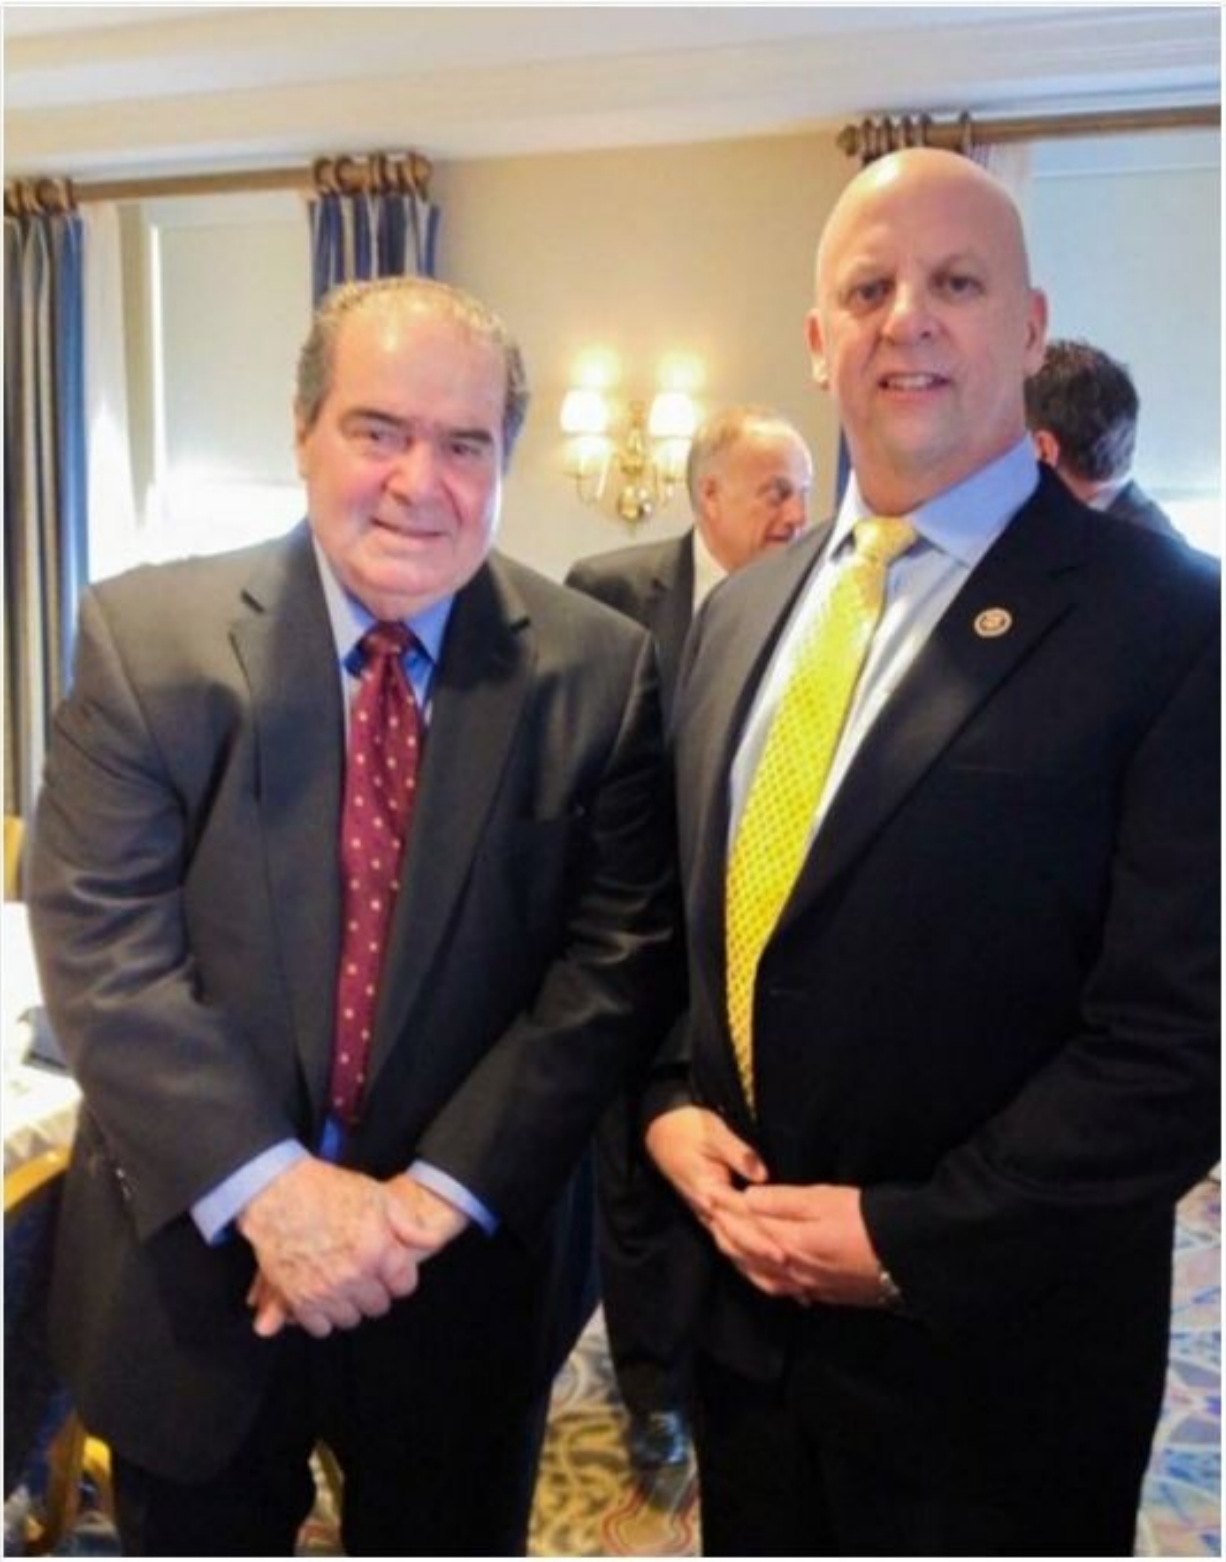
This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Flags were half-staff at the Capitol and the Supreme Court:

Dozens of Republican lawmakers shared photos of themselves with Scalia:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jeff Fortenberry
@JeffFortenberry



Follow

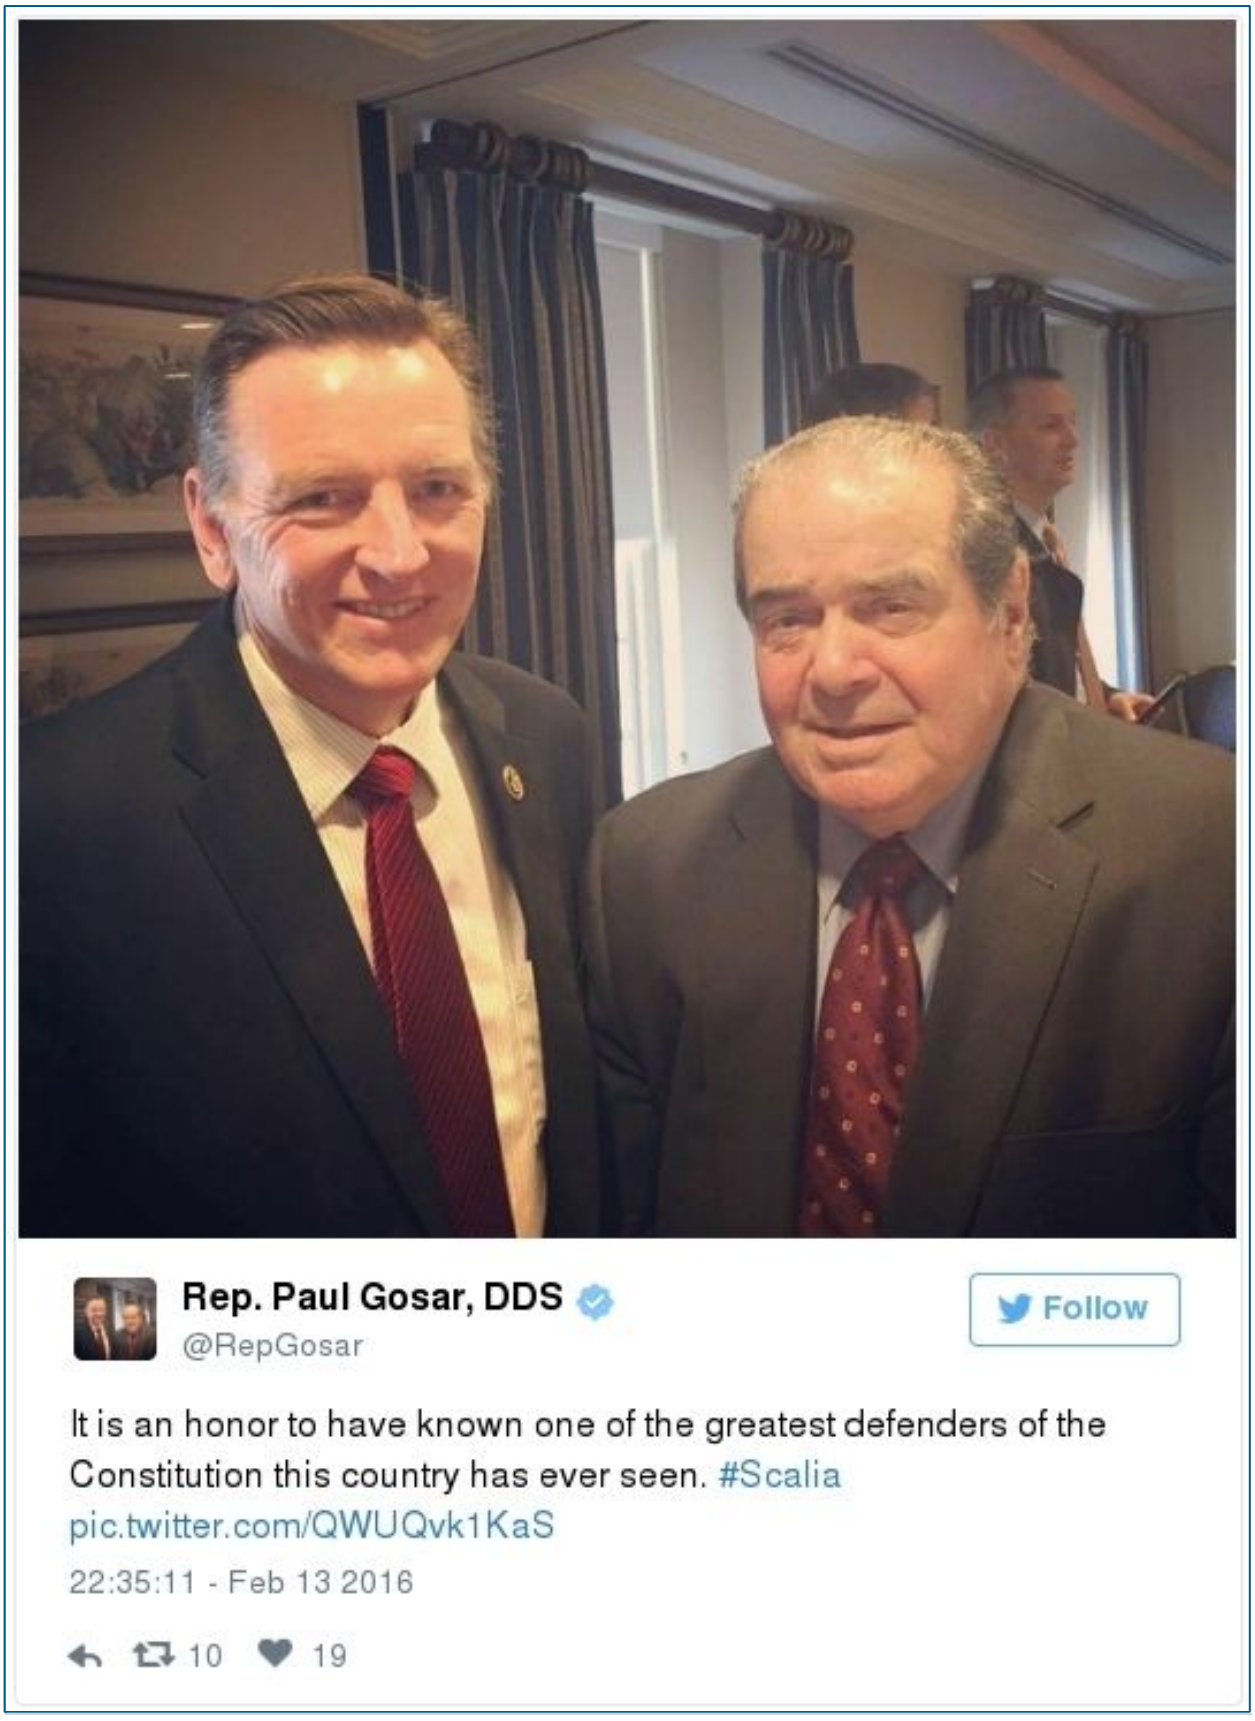
Justice Scalia was a truly great man of enormous character.
pic.twitter.com/EFCB5bmWtl

18:15:43 - Feb 13 2016

11 24

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Scott DesJarlais
@DesJarlaisTN04



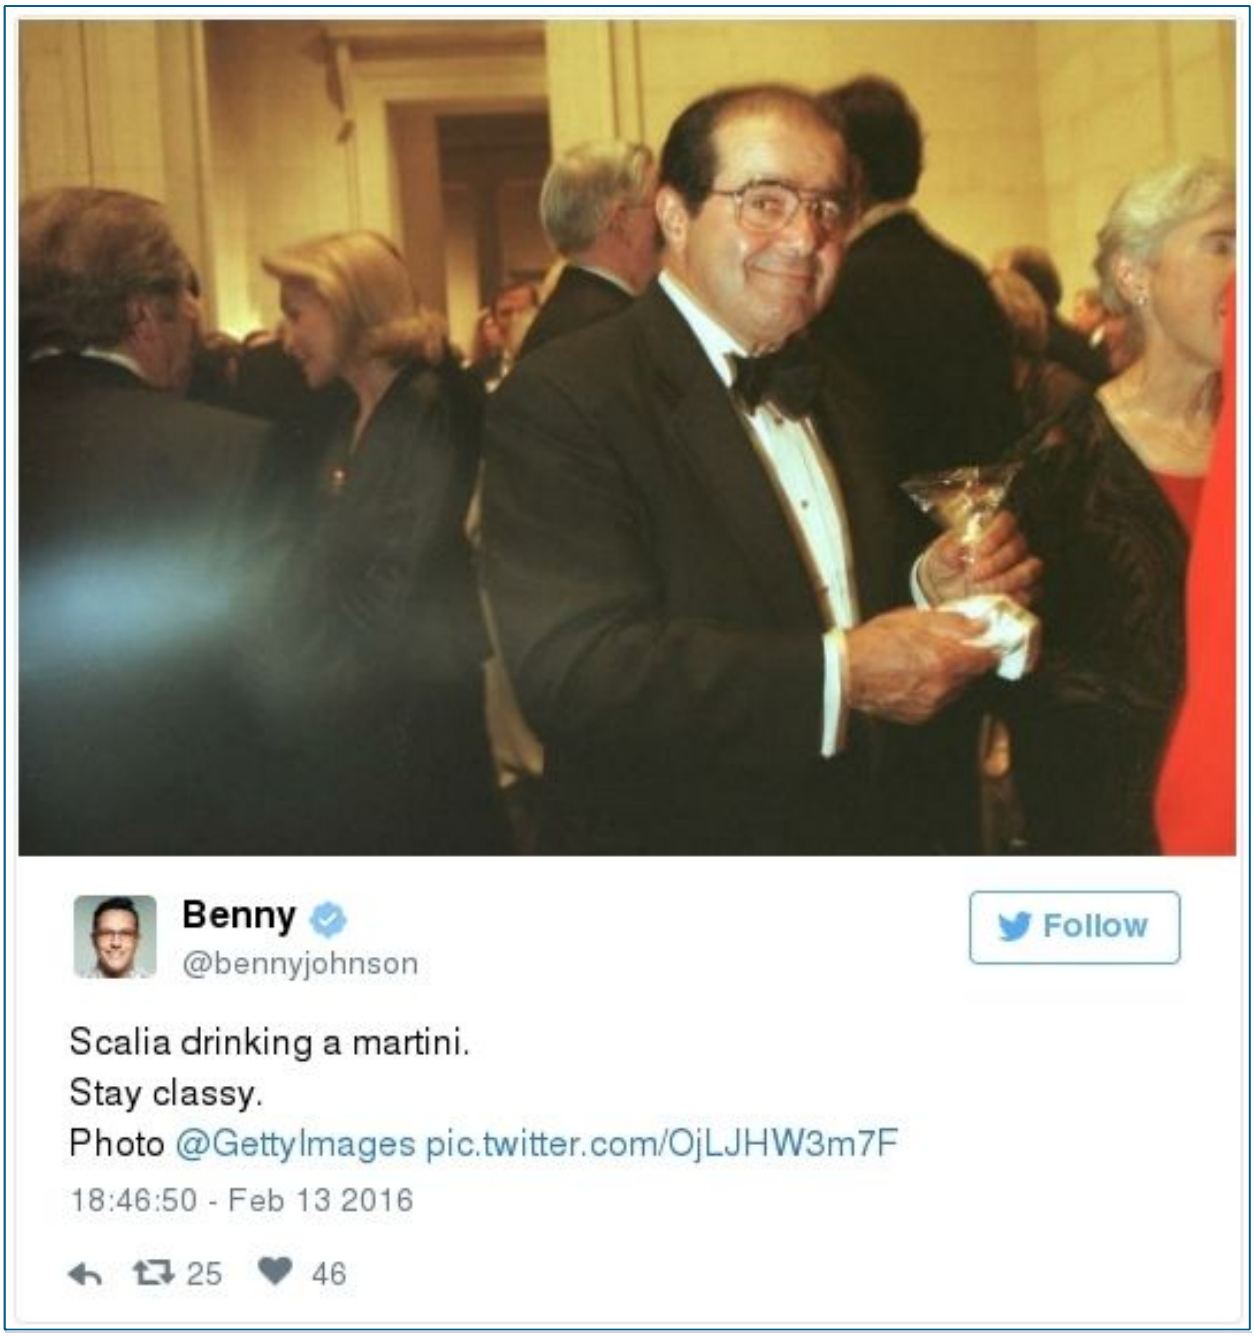
Follow

I'm sorry to hear the passing of Justice Scalia, a champion of constitutional principles. He will be sorely missed.
pic.twitter.com/UbyJOGVIuI

19:54:58 - Feb 13 2016

13 21

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



Katie Couric recalled an outing last year with Scalia:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And a final throwback, via Getty Images:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As the debate about whether Republicans can avoid confirming Obama's pick for a full year escalated, Democrats circulated this chart to make the case that it would be unprecedented:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Figure 2. Number of Days from Nomination to Final Vote

(Nominees Receiving a Final Vote from 1975 to Present)

Nominating President	Senate Majority	Nominee	Number of Days Elapsed from Nomination to Final Vote
Obama	D	Kagan	87
Obama	D	Sotomayor	66
Bush, G.W.	R	Alito	82
Bush, G.W.	R	Roberts*	23
Clinton	D	Breyer	73
Clinton	D	Ginsburg	42
Bush, G.H.W.	D	Thomas	99
Bush, G.H.W.	D	Souter	69
Reagan	D	Kennedy	65
Reagan	D	Bork	108
Reagan	R	Rehnquist	89
Reagan	R	Scalia	85
Reagan	R	O'Connor	33
Ford	D	Stevens	19

Source: Congressional Research Service

Steven Rattner
@SteveRattner
Follow

In last 40yrs, its never taken more than 108 days to confirm a SCOTUS nominee. Obama has >300 days left. #GOPDebate pic.twitter.com/LIVvITTzoM

21:10:08 - Feb 13 2016

102 70

Obama aides expressed disdain for McConnell's pledge to block whoever the president picks:

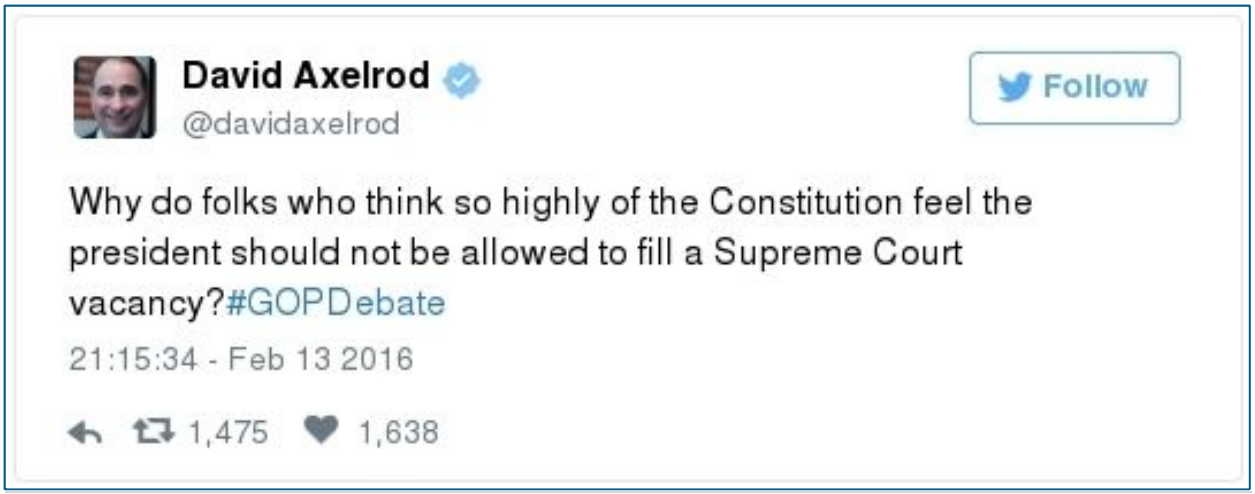
Dan Pfeiffer
@danpfeiffer
Follow

Mitch McConnell: putting the Con in constitutionalism

18:28:48 - Feb 13 2016

98 110

David Plouffe makes an important point -- some of these purple-state senators will be hurt if they look like rubber-stamp obstructionists:



This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A Democratic operative thinks GOP obstruction could make it easier for Democrats to retake the Senate:

Here's more reaction from commentators, staffers and leaders:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Evan Smith
@evanasmith

Follow

Fan fiction: Obama appoints Hillary

18:31:51 - Feb 13 2016

57 86

Hendrik Hertzberg
@RickHertzberg

Follow

Obama's obvious best pick: himself. How could GOP resist the chance to vote him out of the White House? (And put Ryan a heartbeat away.)

18:01:31 - Feb 13 2016

60 104

Douglas Heye
@DougHeye

Follow

I'm hopeful Scalia's passing causes GOP voters to focus on serious implications of the GOP primary & reject Trump. (But not that hopeful.)

18:32:35 - Feb 13 2016

2 1

Jared Keller
@jaredbkeller

Follow

Who should President Trump nominate for Scalia's seat on the bench? @SenateMajLdr

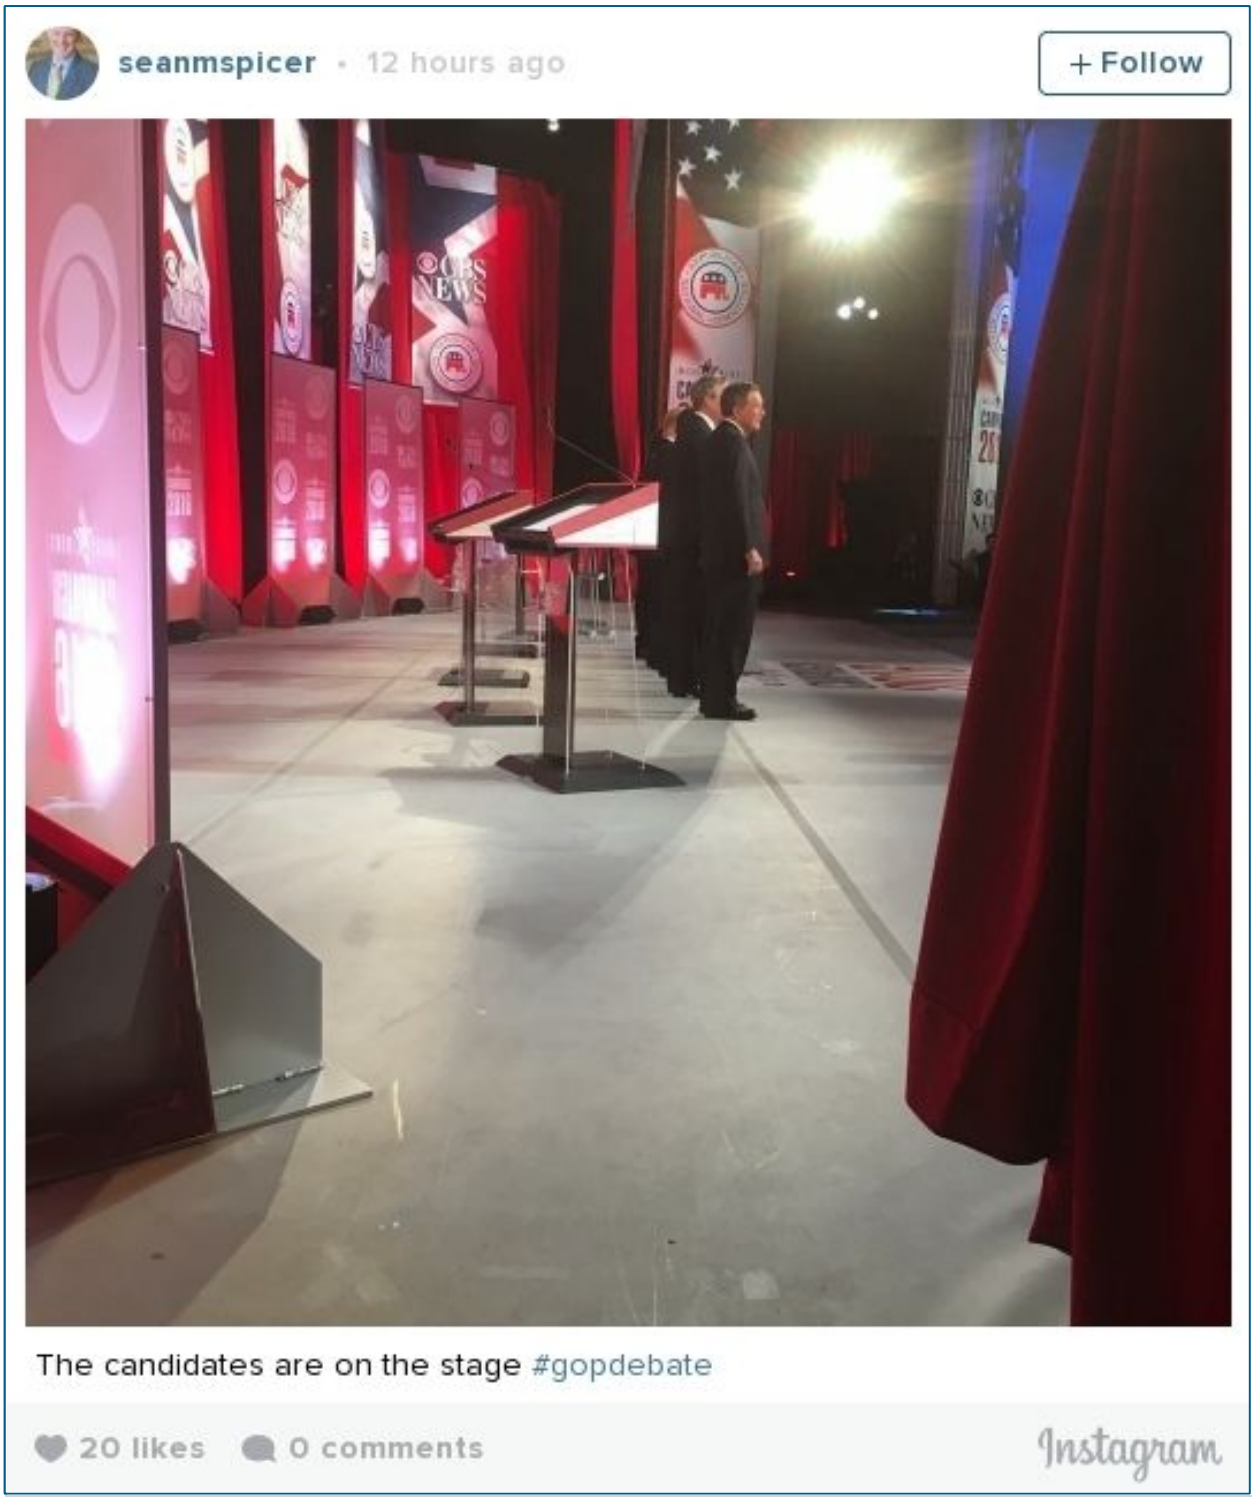
18:32:33 - Feb 13 2016

0 8

A few shots of the debate arena:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

seanmspicer · 12 hours ago



+ Follow

Getting ready #gopdebate

5 likes 0 comments Instagram

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Donald and Melania en route:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Lindsey Graham visits with Jeb during a commercial break:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Lindsey Graham
@LindseyGrahamSC

Follow

Great job tonight @JebBush! #allinforjeb pic.twitter.com/0xOoTAkeNY

23:43:09 - Feb 13 2016

25 73

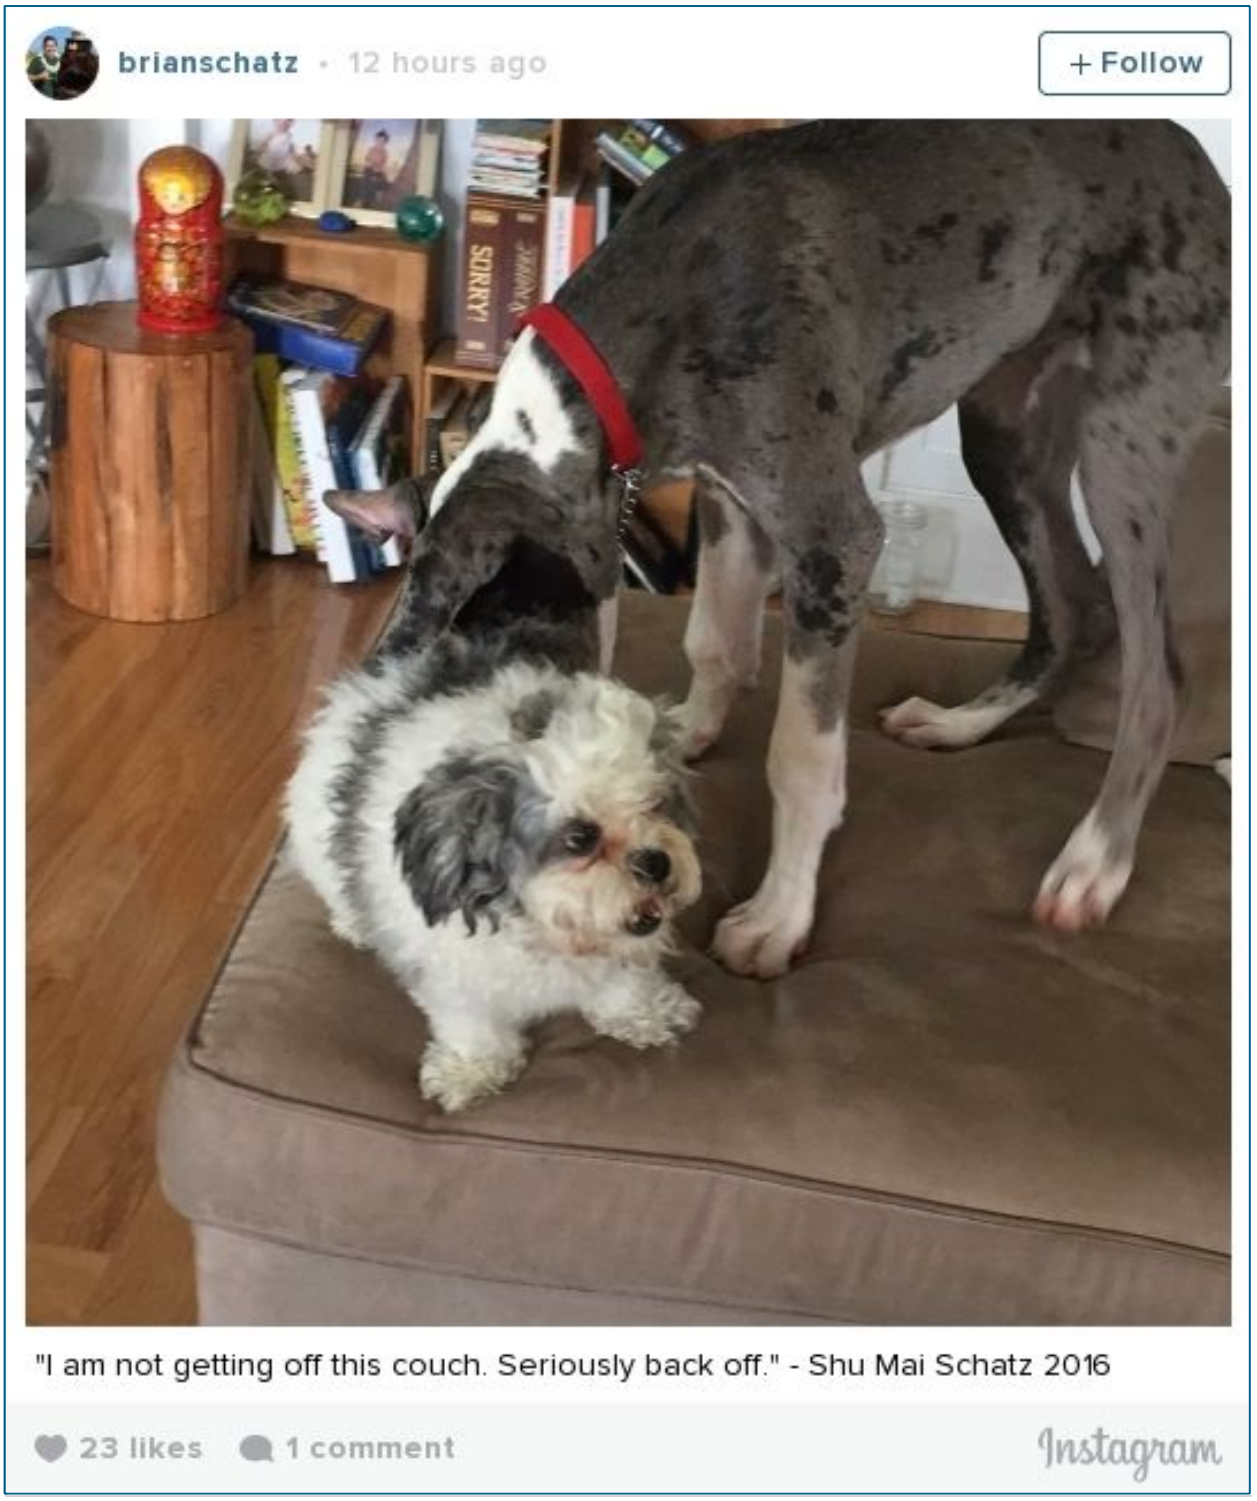
This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For a Trump rally, someone dressed up as the infamous wall:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

John Santucci
@JTSantucci

Follow



And this guy that asked me to take his picture as I left the Trump rally pic.twitter.com/52Y99kUUXA

21:27:07 - Feb 12 2016

117 149

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In Honolulu, Democratic Sen. Brian Schatz's dogs were not getting along:

Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-N.Y.) was bundled up for a local parade:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

elisestefanik · 17 hours ago + Follow

Prepare to laugh - turns out, there is such a thing as too many layers for a parade in -25 degree weather! Note the #chewbacca costume behind me. Smart for #NY21 weather. □□□□□□□□□□□□

139 likes 9 comments Instagram

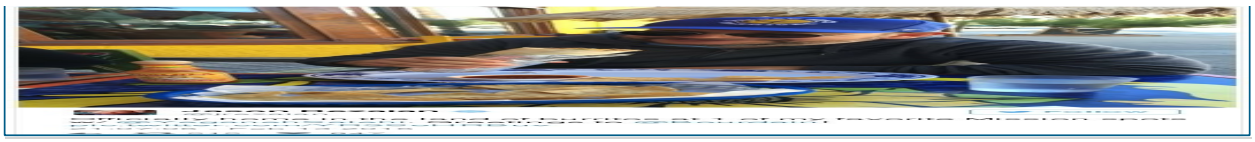
Rep. Janice Hahn (D-Calif.) presented an award to Kendrick Lamar:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

repjanicehahn · 14 hours ago

+ Follow

Today I presented Compton's own Kendrick Lamar with a Certificate of Congressional Commendation in recognition of his talent, his success, and everything he has done for the young people of Compton. Kendrick represents his hometown with pride and shows young people from Compton that they shouldn't believe them when they say Compton is no good, or that they can't grow up to be anyone because of where they come from. Compton is a city with heart and soul and is home to a community that I am proud to represent. Thanks, Kendrick! And good luck at the Grammy's on Monday!



18 likes 0 comments Instagram

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Post's Jason Rezaian enjoyed a burrito in San Francisco!

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

GOOD READS FROM ELSEWHERE:

-- New York Times column, "When Hillary Clinton Killed Feminism ," by Maureen Dowd: "The Clintons felt that Obama had presumptuously snatched what was rightfully hers in 2008 … gliding past to make history before she could. So this time, the Clintons assumed, the women who had deserted Hillary for Barack owed her … This attitude intensified the unappetizing solipsistic subtext of her campaign, which is 'What is Hillary owed?' It turned out that female voters seem to be looking at Hillary as a candidate rather than as a historical imperative. And she's coming up drastically short on trustworthiness. Bernie has a clear, concise 'we' message, even if it's pie-in-the-sky: The game is rigged, we have to take the country back from the privileged few and make it work for everyone. Hillary has an 'I' message: I have been abused and misunderstood … It's my turn.'"

-- Wall Street Journal op-ed, "Trump's America ," by Charles Murray: "If you are dismayed by Trumpism, don't kid yourself that it will fade away if Trump fails to win the Republican nomination. Trumpism is an expression of the legitimate anger that many Americans feel about the course that the country has taken. It is the endgame of a process that has been going on for a half-century: America's divestment of its historic national identity … the central truth of Trumpism as a phenomenon is that the entire American working class has legitimate reasons to be angry at the ruling class. Many of the dynamics of the reversal can be found in developments across the whole of American society: in the emergence of a new upper class, new lower class, and in the plight of the working class caught in between. Mainstream America is fully aware of this condescension and contempt and is understandably irritated by it. American egalitarianism is on its last legs."

-- New York Times, "The House D.J. of the Sanders Campaign ," by Jason Horowitz: "Standing between a wall of retracted wooden bleachers and his turntables, Mel Sandico, a.k.a. D.J. Mel, looked up to survey the crowd filing into Senator Bernie Sanders's New Hampshire victory party … Mr. Sandico has become the house D.J. of Mr. Sanders's parties, playing a mix that is in equal parts laid-back lounge bar, alternative college radio and dancey early '90s bar mitzvah … totally consistent with the projected image of a 74-year-old Democratic socialist from lily-white and Phish-fanatical Vermont who is to trying to capture the imagination of young people and minorities. A few minutes later, the instrumental version of Dr. Dre came over the speakers. … Mr. Sandico laughed. 'It's like we're at a club,' he said."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-- Politico, "Sanders targets Colorado as March must-win ," by Edward-Isaac Dovere and Annie Karni: "The Clintons have a history of losing in Colorado—Bill Clinton lost the 1992 caucuses to Jerry Brown, and Hillary Clinton lost them to Barack Obama in 2008 … The state is also the linchpin for his March strategy, when Sanders hopes to run the table in a series of caucus states in March … While some insist the Vermont senator's record opposing the strictest gun control measures may be a better fit here than elsewhere, the Clinton campaign continues to believe Sanders will have a problem in Colorado on his gun record. That's all missing the point, according to several Democratic operatives on the ground, who say that Sanders will be strong here. 'I don't think people responding to his message are worrying about specifics,' said one Clinton backer in Colorado, 'they're motivated by a vision.'"

-- Los Angeles Times, "Recorded interview reveals former Sheriff Lee Baca lying to a federal prosecutor," by Joel Rubin and Cindy Chang: "Lee Baca's guilty plea Wednesday to making a false statement marked a stunning reversal for the longtime law enforcement leader who had previously insisted he played no role in the jail scandal. In his plea agreement, the 73-year-old retired sheriff did not contest the other false statements prosecutors accused him of making. Baca is the ninth former sheriff's official to be convicted in the obstruction of justice case … At the heart of the case is how sheriff's officials responded when they discovered in 2011 that FBI agents were secretly investigating the jails and had gone so far as to smuggle a cellphone to an inmate working as a federal informant. Baca faces up to six months in prison under the terms of the deal he made with the U.S. attorney's office … His former second in command, retired Undersheriff Paul Tanaka, is scheduled to go to trial next month."

HOT ON THE LEFT

Scalia's death could save Obama's bold climate plans. From New York : "Last week, the Supreme Court issued a stay delaying the implementation of Obama's Clean Power Plan. The stay indicated that a majority of the justices foresee a reasonably high likelihood that they would ultimately strike down Obama's plan, which could jeopardize the Paris climate agreement and

HOT ON THE RIGHT

NRA: Scalia death puts gun rights in jeopardy. From the Washington Examiner : "We are one justice away from a Supreme Court that would harm our Second Amendment rights," said the NRA. The organization plans to spend over $20 million on the upcoming election.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

leave greenhouse gasses unchecked. Without Scalia on the Court, the odds of this drop to virtually zero."

DAYBOOK:

On the campaign trail: Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders are in Las Vegas. The Republicans will remain in South Carolina. Here's a rundown:

- Cruz: Beaufort
- Rubio: Easley
- Carson: Fort Mill, Columbia

QUOTE OF THE DAY: Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev described East-West relations as having "fallen into a new Cold War" and said NATO was "hostile and closed" toward Russia. "I sometimes wonder — are we in 2016 or 1962?" Medvedev asked in a speech to the Munich Security Conference on Saturday. (AP)

NEWS YOU CAN USE IF YOU LIVE IN D.C.:

-- Don't take off those hats, gloves, or scarves just yet. "There's a slight relaxation in the brutality of Saturday, mainly because winds are not as strong, and there's more sunshine overall," the Capital Weather Gang forecasts. However, temperatures probably struggle to the low-and-mid 20s, which is very cold however you slice it. Clouds should tend to increase late in the day as our next storm system approaches."

-- Virginia lawmakers are considering a bill that would allow state officials to use the electric chair to execute those on death row when lethal-injection drugs are not available. If the legislation passes, the measure could be used as early as next month. (Matt Zapotosky)

-- In a significant setback for her cash-strapped campaign, the Congressional Black Caucus will not endorse Rep. Donna Edwards in her Maryland Democratic Senate primary against fellow Rep. Chris Van Hollen. The snub came after the CBC PAC voted to table a decision to endorse Edwards, rather than holding a vote on the endorsement itself. (Rachel Weiner)

-- The Capitals lost 4-3 to the Dallas Stars.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Here's a 3-minute recap of the debate:

The South Carolina GOP debate in 3 minutes

And the moment where Cruz pulled out his Spanish skills, after Rubio accused him of not being able to speak the language:

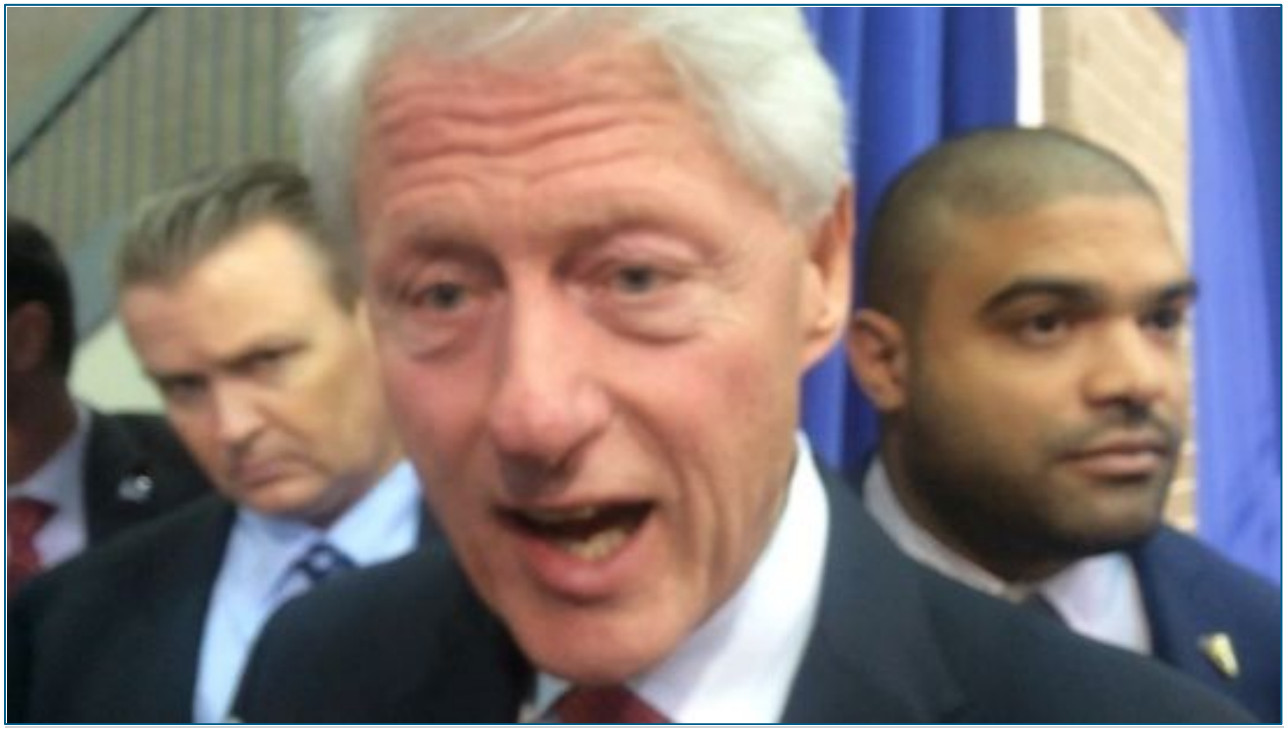
Cruz speaks Spanish after Rubio accusation

The weirdest moment of the debate was when Trump brought up a quote Jeb gave the Boston Globe about taking off his pants:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The weirdest moment of the CBS GOP debate

Watch Scalia reflect on his 1986 confirmation hearing:



Here are President Obama's comments on Scalia's death:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

President Obama on Justice Scalia's death

And Bill Clinton's reaction to the news:

Bill Clinton comments on the death of Justice Scalia

As part of the outreach to African Americans, Sanders' campaign released a five-minute video of him endorsing Jesse Jackson in 1988, using some of the same rhetoric he still does today:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bernie Sanders Endorses Rev. Jesse Jackson

This was one heck of a dunk from the NBA's Slam Dunk Contest:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hardwood Paroxysm
@HPbasketball

Follow

Let's slow it down. pic.twitter.com/4lZ6iFp1wC

22:43:36 - Feb 13 2016

3,571 2,921

You are receiving this email because you signed up for the The Daily 202 newsletter or were registered on washingtonpost.com .
For additional free newsletters or to manage your newsletters, click here .

We respect your privacy . If you believe that this email has been sent to you in error, or you no longer wish to receive email from The Washington Post, click here . Contact us for help.

©2016 The Washington Post | 1301 K St NW, Washington DC 20071

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Rebecca Buckwalter-Poza" <rbuckwalterpoza@progressivemediausa.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 5/22/2008 4:34:57 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Polling Round-Up: Bush and Congress, Government, Economy, Iraq

Low Bush job approval and cool attitudes toward the president in ARG and Democracy Corps polling. Congressional approval also low, with a majority pessimistic about likelihood of Congress passing legislation to help Americans. An anti-government attitude also appears in a recent Rasmussen poll in which a majority of Americans (62 percent) said they prefer fewer services and lower taxes (with 29 percent supporting the alternative of "bigger government and higher taxes"). There is slight abatement of Americans' negative outlook on the economy from ARG -- fewer now think the US is in a recession, 57 percent as compared to 68 percent in April. Rasmussen finds that Americans believe McCain more likely to win war in Iraq but say Obama would be more likely to bring troops home. Also see links to exit polling from Kentucky and Oregon.

Bush Approval

Approval Low [American Research Group , 5/20/08]

- Among all Americans, 28 percent approve of the way Bush is handling his job as president and 69 percent disapprove.

High Disapproval, Cool Thermometer Score [Democracy Corps/Greenberg Quinlan Rosner , 5/20/08]

- Disapprove 65, approve 31
- Bush thermometer: Cool 58, Warm 30

Bush Disapproval High [Rasmussen , 5/18/08]

- Disapprove 66, approve 32

High Disapproval for Bush's handling of Economy [American Research Group , 5/20/08]

- 23 percent approve of Bush's handling of the economy, 70 percent disapprove.

Congressional Approval

Attitudes toward Congress Not Improving, Most Believe Congress Not Helping (And Won't Help) [Rasmussen , 5/20/08]

- 13 percent give Congress a job approval of "good" or "excellent," 47 percent say "poor"
  - Men: 59 poor, 11 good or excellent
  - Women: 35 poor, 14 good or excellent
  - Republicans: 58 poor
  - Democrats: 31 poor
- Has Congress passed legislation to improve life in America within past year? 61 percent said no, 12 yes.
- Will Congress address important problems in the next six months? 56 percent say no, 37 yes.
- Nearly three quarters believe lawmakers are more interested in their own careers than helping people.

Direction of the Country

Wrong track 77 [George Washington University , 5/22/08]

Wrong track 75, right direction 17 [Democracy Corps/Greenberg Quinlan Rosner , 5/20/08]

Thermometers

GOP Thermometer Cool [Democracy Corps/Greenberg Quinlan Rosner , 5/20/08]

- Republican Party: cool 48, warm 32
- Democratic Party: cool 38, warm 43,
- NRA: cool 36, warm 42
- Pro-life, anti-abortion groups: cool 42, warm 37
- NAFTA and international trade agreements: cool 45, warm 22
- Big corporations: cool 45, warm 28
- Gay marriage: cool 54, warm 25
- Immigration into the Country: cool 49, warm 24

Government

Voters Prefer Fewer Government Services and Lower Taxes [Rasmussen , 5/20/08]

- 62 prefer, 29 disagree, 10 not sure
  - GOP: 83 prefer, 13 disagree
  - Democrats: 46 disagree, 43 prefer

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Economy

U.S. Hiring Slips Further, Suggests More Job Losses Ahead [Gallup , 5/21/08]

- "Net New Hiring Activity" fell 1.1 percentage points from March to April, followed by a 3.6 point decline between April and May, continuing the trend of steady declines since the beginning of the year.
- Number of companies hiring has fallen from 39.8 percent in January to 38.1 percent in April.
    - The percentage of firms letting people go has increased from 13.7 percent to 15.5 percent.

Half of Americans Say Economy Will be Better in a Year [American Research Group , 5/20/08]

- 51 percent of Americans say they believe the national economy will be better in a year from now.
- But 70 percent of Americans say they believe the national economy is getting worse right now.
- 57 percent of Americans say the national economy is in a recession, down from 68 percent in April.

Consumer Finances, Hopes for Economy Weak [Rasmussen , 5/20/08]

- Good or excellent 35, poor 22.
    - 54 percent of investors rate their personal finances as good or excellent.
    - Republicans rate the economy: good or excellent 25, poor 36.
        - Getting better 19, getting worse 58
    - Democrats rate the economy: good or excellent 7, poor 68.
        - Getting better 3, getting Worse 85

Voters Stay Cool on Economy [Democracy Corps/Greenberg Quinlan Rosner , 5/20/08]

- Cool 69, warm 17

Negative Economic Outlook Persists [Gallup , 5/19/08]

- Poor ratings of economy back up to 45 percent.
- Additionally, 85 percent of Americans say the economy is getting worse.

Iraq

Voters Cool Toward Iraq War [Democracy Corps/Greenberg Quinlan Rosner , 5/20/08]

- Cool 62, Warm 24

General Election

[George Washington University , 5/22/08]

- Barack Obama leads John McCain 49 percent to 47 percent. McCain leads Hillary Clinton 51 percent to 43 percent.
- One-fifth of Clinton supporters said they would not vote for Obama if he is the Democratic nominee.
- Fifty-six percent of Americans say the Iraq war is not worth fighting. Forty percent said troops should stay till the country is stabilized, 32 percent say there should be a withdrawal within two years and 25 percent want an immediate withdrawal.
- If it was discovered that Iran had developed nuclear weapons, a third of voters would support military action, 29 percent would oppose it and 38 percent are unsure.
- Both John Mccain and Barack Obama are viewed favorably by 54 percent of voters while 51 percent view Hillary Clinton negatively.

About Half Say Victory in Iraq Likely if McCain Elected [Rasmussen , 5/19/08]

If Obama is elected President:

- 20 percent believe victory in Iraq is likely if Barack Obama is elected in November.
- 59 percent say it is at least somewhat likely that virtually all combat troops will come home from Iraq during his first term.

If McCain is elected President:

- 43 percent believe the troops are likely to come home if McCain is elected.
- Among those who believe that getting the troops home is the top priority, 84 percent believe that victory is at least somewhat likely.

Electoral College: Democrats 200, Republicans 189, Toss-up 38 [Rasmussen , 5/19/08]

- Study finds when "leaners" are added, Democrats lead 260 to 240.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FL, PN, OH, MI, VI, MO, WI, CO, IA, NV, NM, NH are toss-up or just slightly leaning to one party.

Obama 48, McCain 46, and Clinton 49, McCain 47 [Democracy Corps/Greenberg Quinlan Rosner , 5/20/08]

Obama 46, McCain 45, and Clinton 48, McCain 44 [Gallup , 5/18/08]

Democratic Primary

Obama 55, Clinton 39 [Gallup , 5/19/08]

Voters Warmer toward Obama than Clinton [Democracy Corps/Greenberg Quinlan Rosner , 5/20/08]

- Hillary Clinton: Cool 48, warm 38
- Barack Obama: Warm 44, cool 42
    - McCain: Warm 40, cool 40

Key Clinton Constituencies Moving Toward Obama [Gallup , 5/20/08]

- Obama now favored among men, 18- to 29-year-olds, postgrads, and upper-income Democrats by a 2-to-1 margin, or better, over Clinton.
    - 18-29 years of age: Obama 74, Clinton 25
    - Postgraduate education: Obama 65, Clinton 31
    - Monthly incomes of $5,000 or more: Obama 64, Clinton 33
    - Men: Obama 63, Clinton 31
- Support for Clinton among her core support groups has fallen below 50 percent.
    - Non-Hispanic whites: Clinton 47, Obama 47
    - Women: Obama 49, Clinton 46
    - High school graduate or less: Obama 47, Clinton 46
    - Easteners: Obama 52, Clinton 43
- Only women aged 50 and older still supporting Clinton strongly.
    - 26 percent of men 18 to 49 support Clinton
    - 39 percent of men 50 or older support Clinton
    - 41 percent of women 18 to 49 support Clinton
    - 52 percent of women 50 or older support Clinton

States – General Election

Alaska

McCain 50%, Obama 41% [Rasmussen , 5/17/08]

Colorado

Obama 48, McCain 42 [Rasmussen Reports , 5/21/08]

Florida

McCain 50, Obama 40 [Rasmussen Reports , 5/21/08]

Minnesota

Obama 51, McCain 38 [Star Tribune , 5/18/08]

Nebraska

McCain 50, Obama 39 [Rasmussen , 5/18/08]

New Mexico

McCain 44, Obama 44, Undecided 12 [Survey USA , 5/20/08]

- White Voters: McCain 52, Obama 37
- Latino Voters: Obama 51, McCain 40

Obama 50, McCain 41 [Rasmussen , 5/17/08]

Ohio

McCain 45, Obama 44 [Rasmussen , 5/19/08]

- McCain leads by seven percentage points among men but trails by four among women.
- McCain supported by 77% of GOP voters while Obama attracts 65%.

Pennsylvania

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama 48, McCain 40 [Survey USA , 5/20/08]

States – Democratic Primary

Kentucky

Clinton 62, Obama 31 [Survey USA , 5/19/08]

Oregon

Obama 58, Clinton 39 [Public Policy Polling , 5/19/08]

Exit Polls

KY and OR from MSNBC, Fox, ABC, and CNN [via CQ, 5/20/08]

MSNBC

- Seven in 10 white voters backed Clinton in Kentucky, including about three-quarters of those who did not complete college.
- Only four in 10 white working-class voters said they would support Obama against John McCain in the general election.
- About one in five white voters in Kentucky said race was a factor in their decision and nine of 10 of them said they voted for Clinton.

Fox News

- Clinton won 73 percent of the vote among white women.
- Forty-five percent of voters said they had been affected by the economic downturn and, of them, 68 percent backed Clinton.
- Forty-seven percent of voters in Kentucky said they regard Obama as trustworthy compared to 45 percent for Clinton.
- Fifty-three percent of Kentucky voters believe Obama shares the views of his controversial ex-pastor, the Rev. Jeremiah Wright.
- In Oregon, unlike other states, Obama was splitting the women's vote with Clinton and he also was beating her handily among union voters.

ABC News:

- Unlike Kentucky, only one in six said they would vote for McCain over Obama.

CNN:

- Fifty-six percent of Kentuckians said that Obama should choose Clinton as his running-mate against 42 percent who said he should not. Seventy-seven percent of Clinton supporters expressed that view but only 41 percent of Obama supporters agreed.

--
Rebecca Buckwalter-Poza
Progressive Media USA
rbuckwalterpoza@progressivemediausa.org
202-609-7674 (o)
919-423-4783 (m)
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 8/9/2014 5:50:01 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Saturday August 9, 2014 Roundup

Correct The Record Saturday August 9, 2014 Roundup:

Headlines:

Arizona Capitol Times opinion: Surprise Mayor Sharon Wolcott: "GPEC pursuing creative solutions to regional challenges"

"Hillary Clinton dedicates a chapter of her newly released book, 'Hard Choices,' to her role as an advocate for American businesses while she served as secretary of state, writing, 'I was determined to do everything I could to help American businesses and workers seize more of the legitimate opportunities already available.'"

CNN: "Hillary Clinton's unpaid warriors"

"Magruder is an unsalaried Clinton warrior. And he isn't alone."

Capital New York: "The (Hillary) Beat goes on"

"Former Secretary of State, Senator and First Lady Hillary Clinton has not declared any sort of candidacy for 2016, but the group of reporters dedicated full-time by news outlets to follow her and report on her keeps growing every month."

Newsmax: "Clintons Support Brooklyn as Host of '16 Democratic Convention"

"New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio has picked up some heavy-hitter support in his drive to grab the 2016 Democratic National Convention for Brooklyn — former President Bill Clinton and current Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton."

New York Magazine blog: Daily Intelligencer: "The Clintons Are Down to Party in Brooklyn for 2016"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Madison Square Garden hosted Bill Clinton's nomination in 1992, and one could get the sense that Hillary feels — what's the word? — inevitable.”

New York Times: “Fear of ‘Another Benghazi’ Drove White House to Airstrikes in Iraq”

“‘The situation near Erbil was becoming more dire than anyone expected,’ said a senior administration official, speaking on the condition of anonymity to describe the White House’s internal deliberations. ‘We didn’t want another Benghazi.’”

State House News Service (M.A.): “Sen. Elizabeth Warren says she supports President Obama's decision to authorize airstrikes in Iraq”

“Warning against a new U.S. war in Iraq, U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren on Friday stood by President Barack Obama’s decision to authorize targeted airstrikes to help defend Americans in Erbil, Iraq, and provide aid to a religious minority taking refuge in the Sinjar mountains.”

Sioux City Journal (I.A.): “Iowa trip: Huckabee thinking about 2016 campaign”

“Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee on Friday said he is actively considering a 2016 presidential campaign. He's scheduled to appear in Ames, Iowa, on Saturday. “

Articles:

Arizona Capitol Times opinion: Surprise Mayor Sharon Wolcott: “GPEC pursuing creative solutions to regional challenges”

By Sharon Wolcott, mayor of Surprise, Arizona

August 8, 2014, 9:06 a.m. EDT

While a lot of things have changed since I entered public service 20 years ago, the American people still elect representatives for the same reason. Just like the first office I was ever elected to — and every office I’ve held in between — the people of Surprise elected me to help improve their lives. My job, pure and simple, is to make this community a better place to live and work, by making it easier for the people of Surprise to support their families, put a roof over their heads, educate and care for their children, and access health care.

In a perfect world, this would be an easy task. Well-paying jobs would be widely available, high-quality housing would be affordable to all, public schools would be adequately funded and provide a top-notch education for every student, and proper health care would be accessible to anyone who needs it.

Unfortunately, that is not the world we live in. The reality is that people are having a hard time finding good jobs, making ends meet, and paying for the basic necessities like housing, education and health care. And while I work day in and day out to fix these problems for the people of Surprise, they are too complex to be solved by the government alone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Addressing these tricky issues requires an “all hands on deck” approach. To really make a difference, we have to put our heads together with members of the community, business leaders and the government to come up with creative, multi-faceted solutions.

That is what we are doing at the Greater Phoenix Economic Council, where I serve as a member of the board. We are a private-public partnership representing 23 communities in the Maricopa County area and more than 160 private investors. Our purpose is to attract businesses to the area to grow our economy, create jobs, and make Maricopa County a better place to live, by working on behalf of businesses looking to relocate and expand.

And we are not in this alone. After the 2008 financial crisis, the Obama administration made it a top priority to stimulate economic growth and create jobs. The most influential leaders in America — from the White House to the departments of State and Commerce — have become advocates on behalf of U.S. companies to create jobs here at home.

Hillary Clinton dedicates a chapter of her newly released book, “Hard Choices,” to her role as an advocate for American businesses while she served as secretary of state, writing, “I was determined to do everything I could to help American businesses and workers seize more of the legitimate opportunities already available.” As she explains in the chapter, “During my travels I often made a pitch for an American business or product, like GE in Algeria. For example, in October 2009, I visited the Boeing Design Center in Moscow because Boeing had been trying to secure a contract for new planes with the Russians. I made the case that Boeing’s jets set the global gold standard, and, after I left, our embassy kept at it. In 2010, the Russians agreed to buy fifty 737s, for almost $4 billion, which translated into thousands of American jobs. And our efforts weren’t just on behalf of big companies like Boeing or GE — we also advocated for small and medium-sized businesses across our country trying to go global.”

The International Trade Administration’s Advocacy Center, part of the Department of Commerce, also serves as an advocate for American businesses. Last August, the Advocacy Center helped Boeing win a $1.6 billion contract with South Korea to sell them 36 Apache helicopters made right here in the Phoenix area in nearby Mesa. Secretary of Commerce Penny Pritzker recently visited the Boeing facility in Mesa to see this success story for herself.

In the Phoenix area, these efforts have been vital to our economy, with Boeing employing so many of our friends and neighbors. The Mesa facility alone employs 4,700 people.

This type of collaboration between the government and the private sector has paid off for the people of Arizona. Here in Surprise, we have become a recognizable presence at the state Capitol and a voice on economic development here at home, in the region and even in Washington D.C., thanks in part to Secretary Clinton and Secretary Pritzker and the work they have done on behalf of one of the area’s largest employers. Together, we are helping improve the lives of the people of Surprise — just as I was elected to do — as well as people across the state and this great nation.

CNN: “Hillary Clinton's unpaid warriors”

By Dan Merica

August 8, 2014, 2:25 p.m. EDT

Taj Magruder has never voted for Hillary Clinton. He has no connection to her paid staff. And he is not collecting a paycheck from a cadre of groups anticipating a Clinton presidential run in 2016.

All of this bothers him.

Magruder, a 23-year-old "Clinton-ologist" from Pennsylvania, devotes much of his online life to supporting, defending and responding to her every move.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In what he calls his "own little war room" -- his computer and Twitter account -- the Pennsylvania state Senate employee has carved out a space as one of Clinton's most ardent unpaid supporters.

"I have yet to vote for Hillary," said Magruder, who was too young to cast a ballot the last time she was on one. "I am really looking forward to fixing that in the coming years."

Magruder is an unsalaried Clinton warrior. And he isn't alone.

All over the Internet, bloggers and their circles of friends with no backing from the Clinton orbit defend the former first lady from attacks.

While their defenses don't have the weight of a Clinton spokesperson or a former top aide, they are influential in their small community of friends and family. And they are standing up for the person they hope becomes the next President.

"I am very, very passionate obviously about Hillary," Magruder said, if that wasn't already clear. "I just want to make sure that Hillary has, if she does run, a kind of presence on social media that she hasn't always had."

Magruder is dogged and devout.

He regularly tussles with reporters.

"I don't know if Maggie Haberman still hates me or not," he said referring to a Politico reporter he sparred with over a story.

[TAJ MAGRUDER TWEETS]

And he touts Clinton's many appearances.

"She was so good last night," he tweeted after Clinton's sit-down on the Colbert Report.

Why does he do this?

"When I see a story that is like, 'yuck,' I feel like I should just stick up for my girl," he said with a laugh.

Since May 2012, Magruder has tweeted nearly 30,000 times. Most of them -- especially recently -- have been about Clinton.

And while he only has 780 followers, many of those include reporters following Clinton and representatives from the groups looking to help her if she runs again.

Clinton's unpaid army does far more than tweet. Some, like Still 4 Hill, have devoted years to blogging about her every move.

Since 2008, Still 4 Hill -- who keeps her identity private because of her paid employment -- has kept detailed records of Clinton's comings and goings, including nearly every speech she delivered as secretary of state.

The process, is admittedly, consuming.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"You have to find ways to squeeze it in," she said. "I cheat a little bit (and blog) during a lunch hour or something like that. But most of the time I do it at night."

Still 4 Hill started her blog after Clinton ended her presidential campaign in 2008.

She began to write about Clinton's events at the State Department and once Clinton stepped down as America's top diplomat in 2013, Still 4 Hill began writing about Clinton on the paid speaking circuit.

"I see it as documentation," Still 4 Hill said about her blog. "I want to be able to go back and look at this speech or look at that speech."

Amid all the glow for Clinton, there is also pushback against her critics.

When the Washington Post's conservative blogger Jennifer Rubin wrote a lengthy critique of Clinton's time at State, Still 4 Hill responded to what she called "repetitive and tiresome... empty bloviating" from Rubin.

There is more to the online response, though: People like Magruder and Still 4 Hill have received a little notoriety for their persistence.

Ask people within the Clinton universe about Magruder and they laugh about his exuberance.

Though he was never paid, Ready for Hillary sent the Clinton devotee to a finance meeting earlier this year to act as an example of a "grassroots supporter."

Still 4 Hill's blog receives upwards of 10,000 hits a week. As of late -- given Clinton's book tour and regular appearances -- the blog can gets as many as of 2,500 clicks a day.

And when Still 4 Hill met Clinton at a New Jersey book singing this year, she was sure to mention her blog.

According to blogger, Clinton responded, "Still 4 Hill! I love it. Yeah, I love it."

There is a downside to all of this, too.

Both Magruder and Still 4 Hill are building a online record of their thoughts and feelings about Clinton and that record -- at some point -- could come back to haunt them.

What's more, in the anything goes nature of a campaign, comments made by Clinton followers and fans can blow up into bigger stories.

What happens when those fans have years of logs and comments that opposition groups could cull?

"To the extent that the actors join Hillary's campaign or official groups that support Hillary's campaign, their views and statements online become relevant," Tim Miller, executive director of America Rising, an anti-Clinton super PAC, told CNN.

Still 4 Hill's post-2008 actions seemed to recognize this.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Shortly after Clinton conceded defeat to Barack Obama after a bitter primary battle, the blog took a negative, sometimes anti-Obama turn, Still 4 Hill told CNN.

After giving it some thought -- and after Clinton patched up her relationship with him -- the blogger decided to delete some of those posts.

"I am reading her book now and when I read the first chapter it was like tearing a scab off a wound of something," Still 4 Hill said, capturing how she is still hurt over that campaign. "That primary season was so brutal. ... I removed a lot of the pages from June 2008 to the general election campaign."

But Clinton's previous run might not be her last. So what if she runs again, how much work are these devotees willing to commit? And is all of their Internet devotion an audition for something bigger?

"I would love it if a role is available for me. If there is one, I would love it," Magruder said. "But whether or not I get an official role won't stop me from doing work on social media."

Capital New York: "The (Hillary) Beat goes on"

By Jeremy Barr and Alex Weprin

August 8, 2014, 2:26 p.m. EDT

Former Secretary of State, Senator and First Lady Hillary Clinton has not declared any sort of candidacy for 2016, but the group of reporters dedicated full-time by news outlets to follow her and report on her keeps growing every month.

The latest addition is Alex Seitz-Wald, who started at MSNBC digital this past month to cover "Hillary Clinton and any Dems who may run against her," as he put it on Twitter.

Seitz-Wald, a former reporter for National Journal and Salon, joins a long list of reporters on the beat, like Annie Karni at the New York Daily News, Jonathan Allen at Bloomberg, Maggie Haberman at POLITICO, Ruby Cramer at Buzzfeed, Amy Chozick at The New York Times, Maeve Reston at The Los Angeles Times and Brianna Keilar at CNN, among others.

In late May The Washington Post announced that Anne Gearan would be joining its politics desk to "renew her focus on covering Clinton and her seemingly inevitable second try for the presidency."

Language like "seemingly inevitable" seems to suggest that the decision to devote a reporter full-time to Clinton is a calculation meant to put them ahead of the curve when (or if) she declares her candidacy; and inevitably, these announcements provoke "tsks" from politics-weary corners of the Internet: Why are you covering a candidate that isn't even running?

But the real reasons for the surge in the Hillary beat are more nuanced. For one thing, publishers and broadcasters have long since learned to pay attention to what the audience does—not what they say. And Clinton stories are still great business, whether her run is inevitable or not.

Risa Heller, who handled communications for New York Sen. Chuck Schumer and former Gov. David Patterson, suggested that intense reader interest in Hillary Clinton, and a buzzing from the political press, is nothing new. As such, Heller said she's not surprised that so many news organizations have designated a reporter to cover her.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“I assume what these news organizations are saying is, ‘We’re going to be at the front of this, and we’ll write a bunch of interesting stories that people are going to read, and if she doesn’t run, then what do we have to do lose?” Heller said.

“There seems to be a pretty large appetite for Clinton stuff.”

“Even if she decides not to run, Clinton is a great story on the merits, and she’s at the nexus right now of the conversation about the future of the Democratic Party,” Buzzfeed political editor Katherine Miller told Capital. “Ruby’s telling that story, and will follow it wherever it goes.”

Most importantly, the possibility of a Clinton run in the minds of the public make her a central figure in determining the future of a party that will have just come off a challenging two-term presidency.

Washington Post senior politics editor Steven Ginsberg said it’s “silly” to suggest that the paper’s Hillary coverage would be a wash if she decides not to mount a campaign.

“No matter what she decides, she is without question the biggest factor in the race right now, for both Democrats and Republicans,” he said. “She’s also a major figure outside the presidential contest and of intense interest to readers.”

Times reporter Amy Chozick has been covering Hillary Clinton and her famous family for just over a year now, which makes her the veteran of the H.R.C. beat team.

Times political editor and Washington bureau chief Carolyn Ryan told Capital, it would be “derelict” not to assign someone to Clinton.

“She is a formidable force in American politics and a part of an extraordinary political family,” Ryan said.

And yet not everyone who fits that description gets covered. Why Hillary?

Thomas Edsall, long-time Washington Post politics reporter who now teaches at Columbia University, considered the question.

“I think, but am not 100 percent sure, that the early assignment to full time coverage of H.R.C. before she has announced is unprecedented,” he said.

“If the gamble that she will be the nominee after facing little opposition proves true, one plus is that she will get a fairly complete examination by the press, a process that normally depends on opposition research by competitors for the nomination. She is, of course, already getting a thorough vetting by the R.N.C.”

But Edsall also saw two ways the strategy could, potentially, backfire on these outlets.

“A reporter in this situation needs to balance the need for ongoing access with the obligation to disclose negative findings,” he said. “This is true of any assignment, but particularly true in the case of coverage of one person and her entourage. Does this reporter pass on tips to colleagues or does the reporter do a negative story him or herself?”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Newsmax: "Clintons Support Brooklyn as Host of '16 Democratic Convention"

By John Blosser

August 8, 2014, 6:23 p.m. EDT

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio has picked up some heavy-hitter support in his drive to grab the 2016 Democratic National Convention for Brooklyn — former President Bill Clinton and current Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton.

The New York Times reports that insiders say the Clintons approve of Brooklyn for the major event. Onetime Clinton advisers, including Gabrielle Fialkoff, finance director for Hillary Clinton's 2000 Senate campaign, and other Clinton backers, like financier Alan Patricof, have gotten onboard with de Blasio in an attempt to sway the DNC to bring the convention to New York.

De Blasio termed it a "perfect scenario" for Brooklyn to host the nominating event, given that the former first lady was once a senator from New York, her husband accepted the Democratic nomination at Madison Square Garden in 1992, and, should Clinton score the nomination as many expect will happen, it would serve as a "homecoming," insiders told the Times.

Should Brooklyn win the convention, New York taxpayers would shell out $8.1 million and the city has plans to raise another $132 million in donations, according to a 49-page proposal de Blasio presented to the DNC.

The convention would be held at the Barclays Center, home of the Brooklyn Nets, and has won the support of another prominent New Yorker, Nets center Jason Collins, the first openly gay player in the NBA. who told Politico at an event Monday, "That'd be awesome," Collins told Politico at an event Monday. "I think it'd be a lot of fun to see the DNC there."

Not so fast, New York.

Philadelphia Mayor Michael Nutter wants the convention too, and told the Daily News, "There is only one city in this country where the Declaration of Independence was created. There is only one Liberty Bell. It's in Philadelphia. Those are just facts."

He's citing the ease of transportation and number of hotel rooms readily close to the Wells Fargo Center, where the convention could be held. Even de Blasio notes the difficulties of transporting delegates around New York, since a dearth of hotel rooms in Brooklyn would mean that most delegates would be housed in Manhattan and ferried to Barclay's.

Former Pennsylvania Gov. Edward Rendell told the Times, "How would you like to transport in the middle of rush hour thousands of delegates from midtown to Brooklyn?"

Along with Philadelphia, other cities in the running are Birmingham, Ala., and Columbus, Ohio. The Republicans have already chosen Cleveland as the site of their 2016 convention.

Columbus Mayor Michael Coleman raised issues he said work in favor of his city.

"The Republican Party grabbing the convention in Cleveland has the potential of leaving this state to the Republican side in 2016," Coleman told Politico.

The Times says the decision on the Democratic convention will be announced late this year or early next year.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

New York Magazine blog: Daily Intelligencer: "The Clintons Are Down to Party in Brooklyn for 2016"

By Joe Coscarelli

August 8, 2014, 4:12 p.m. EDT

Bill de Blasio's plan to bring the 2016 Democratic National Convention to Barclays Center has some very influential — and potentially relevant — backers. According to the New York Times, the mayor "made sure he had the Clintons' blessing" before throwing Brooklyn into the running (with this corny video). It's almost like they expect to be there or something.

Madison Square Garden hosted Bill Clinton's nomination in 1992, and one could get the sense that Hillary feels — what's the word? — inevitable. Both Clintons "are said to be encouraging Mayor Bill de Blasio's efforts to bring the convention back to New York City, this time to Brooklyn, that haven of liberal cool," the Times reports, with the caveat "that Brooklyn could come across to a national audience as a progressive parody." Really? Brooklyn?

De Blasio, a veteran of Hillary's campaign for Senate, has other Clinton insiders working with him on the borough's pitch, and reportedly said it would be a "perfect scenario" for Hillary to accept the nomination in New York, referring to it as a "homecoming." One of Brooklyn's main rivals for the convention? Former Pennsylvania Governor Ed Rendell, the Times says, another Clinton ally, of course.

"'I don't think Bill and Hillary Clinton could possibly be that politically naïve,' Mr. Rendell, who also served as Philadelphia's mayor, said in an interview. 'New York is a solidly blue state that never votes Republican. Pennsylvania is a swing state whose margins are closer and closer. Where would you go?'"

Either way, the Clintons win (... they assume).

New York Times: "Fear of 'Another Benghazi' Drove White House to Airstrikes in Iraq"

By Mark Landler, Alissa J. Rubin, Mark Mazzetti, and Helene Cooper

August 8, 2014

On Wednesday evening, moments after finishing a summit meeting with African leaders at the State Department, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff delivered a stark message to President Obama as they rode back to the White House in Mr. Obama's limousine.

The Kurdish capital, Erbil, once an island of pro-American tranquillity, was in the path of rampaging Sunni militants, the chairman, Gen. Martin E. Dempsey, told the president. And to the west, the militants had trapped thousands of members of Iraqi minority groups on a barren mountaintop, with dwindling supplies, raising concerns about a potential genocide.

With American diplomats and business people in Erbil suddenly at risk, at the American Consulate and elsewhere, Mr. Obama began a series of intensive deliberations that resulted, only a day later, in his authorizing airstrikes on the militants, as well as humanitarian airdrops of food and water to the besieged Iraqis.

Looming over that discussion, and the decision to return the United States to a war Mr. Obama had built his political career disparaging, was the specter of an earlier tragedy: the September 2012 attack on the diplomatic mission in Benghazi, Libya, which killed four Americans, including Ambassador J. Christopher Stevens, and has become a potent symbol of weakness for critics of the president.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As the tension mounted in Washington, a parallel drama was playing out in Erbil. Kurdish forces who had been fighting the militants in three nearby Christian villages abruptly fell back toward the gates of the city, fanning fears that the city might soon fall. By Thursday morning, people were thronging the airport, desperate for flights out of town.

“The situation near Erbil was becoming more dire than anyone expected,” said a senior administration official, speaking on the condition of anonymity to describe the White House’s internal deliberations. “We didn’t want another Benghazi.”

For weeks, intelligence officials had been watching the militant group, the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, gain in strength, replenishing its arsenals with weapons captured both in Syria and in Iraq. But interviews with multiple officials at the White House, the Pentagon, the State Department and other agencies paint a portrait of a president forced by the unexpectedly rapid deterioration of security in Iraq to abandon his longstanding reluctance to use military force.

Mr. Obama, in a speech late Thursday announcing his decision, insisted this was not a return to war — that Iraq’s fate still ultimately rested in the hands of its three main groups, the Shiites, Sunnis and Kurds. But he made clear that he would take action to protect Americans in Erbil and Baghdad.

“We have an embassy in Baghdad, we have a consulate in Erbil, and we have to make sure that they are not threatened,” Mr. Obama said in an interview on Friday with Thomas L. Friedman of The New York Times. “Part of the rationale for the announcement yesterday was an encroachment close enough to Erbil that it would justify us taking shots.”

Still, his decision to order F-18 fighter jets from the aircraft carrier George H. W. Bush to carry out bombing raids on militants dramatically raises the risks for Mr. Obama. Unlike other times when he has made the decision to commit American forces — the 2009 troop surge in Afghanistan, for example — Mr. Obama acted within hours.

With nearly 50 African leaders converging on Washington, the president was fully occupied with a week of diplomacy and salesmanship on behalf of American companies — not to mention a White House dinner featuring entertainment by Lionel Richie. On Saturday, he and his wife, Michelle, were to leave town for two weeks of vacation on Martha’s Vineyard.

While Mr. Obama discussed security and governance with the leaders, his national security aides were huddling in the Situation Room, getting increasingly dire briefings from embassy officials in Baghdad and the Pentagon’s Central Command, which oversees Iraq.

“Things reached a tipping point on Wednesday,” said a senior official. “We saw that on the mountain, the Iraqis were not able to resupply and provide food and water.”

Back at the White House that evening, Mr. Obama and General Dempsey continued talking in the Oval Office, joined by the chief of staff, Denis McDonough; the national security adviser, Susan E. Rice; and other officials. The discussion moved toward military action, one official said, though Mr. Obama had not yet decided on anything, beyond airdrops.

About 8 p.m., the meeting broke up and Mr. Obama again left the White House, an hour late, for a dinner date with his wife and a close confidante, Valerie Jarrett, at an Italian restaurant in Georgetown.

Six thousand miles away, in Erbil, Thursday morning broke with news that two towns just 27 miles west of the Kurdish capital, Mahmour and Gwer, had fallen to the militants, and that Kurdish fighters, known as pesh merga, had withdrawn. “That was a real problem,” said a former Kurdish official who closely tracks security issues.

In villages and small towns outside the city, even places well north of Erbil and farther from the militant forces, people were frantically piling into cars to flee. The pesh merga were helping to evacuate hundreds of people in large flatbed trucks. When people heard a gunshot, rumors would spread of an ISIS advance.

Americans officials on the ground said they feared that if Erbil emptied, the city would be vulnerable to a militant attack. And if it fell, they feared, not only would Americans be at risk, but it would be a second seismic event for the region — after the June 10 fall of Mosul, Iraq's second-largest city — with dangerous consequences for Turkey and a potential for enormous loss of life in Kurdistan.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As if that were not enough, the militants had seized a critical dam in Mosul, which controls water levels on the Tigris River as far south as Baghdad. The capture of the dam shook Kurdish officials and fueled the sense of crisis during Thursday's meetings, with officials worried that the militants could either blow it up or use it to cut off water supplies or as a bargaining chip in negotiating anything they wanted.

"That was one of the trip wires we looked at," said another senior official. "We look at that dam as a potential threat to our embassy in Baghdad."

At a 90-minute meeting in the Situation Room on Thursday morning, Mr. Obama was briefed again about the plight of the Iraqis stranded on Mount Sinjar. Members of an ancient religious sect known as Yazidi, they were branded as devil worshipers by the militants. The women were to be enslaved; the men were to be slaughtered.

Officials told Mr. Obama there was a real danger of genocide, under the legal definition of the term. "While we have faced difficult humanitarian challenges, this was in a different category," said an official. "That kind of shakes you up, gets your attention."

At 11:20 a.m., Mr. Obama left the meeting to travel to Fort Belvoir, Va., where he signed a bill expanding health care for veterans. He had all but made up his mind to authorize airstrikes, officials said, and while he was away, his team drafted specific military options.

When the president returned to the White House barely an hour later, he went back into meetings with his staff. By then, there were news reports of airdrops and possible strikes. But the White House "hunkered down," an official said, refusing to comment on the reports for fear of endangering a nighttime airdrop over Mount Sinjar.

Mr. Obama did not announce the operations until dawn had broken in Iraq, a delay of several hours that added to the panic in Erbil. Reports of explosions near the city at dusk on Thursday night sowed confusion after Kurdish officials said the United States had begun airstrikes on the militants. The Pentagon flatly denied the reports.

American officials said the United States was closely coordinating with the Iraqi Air Force, which has been carrying out its own strikes on the militants, though officials did not confirm that the explosions reported on Thursday evening were from Iraqi raids. On Friday, an administration official said there had been no airstrikes the previous evening.

Struggling to stanch the fear, keep the fighters at their posts and slow the exodus out of the city, Kurdish officials put out a series of brave-sounding but misleading statements.

The Kurdish prime minister, Necherven Barrzani, sent a letter to Kurdish citizens, posted on a government website, saying: "The pesh merga are going ahead and terrorists are being beaten. Don't be skeptical."

Also writing a letter to the Kurdish people was Kosrat Rassoul, deputy to President Massoud Barzani, who said: "There are rumors among the people, which make citizens feel skeptical. Here I want to reassure everyone we in Erbil are ready in the best way to defend the Kurdish territory."

What they did not say was that the pesh merga were demoralized, uncertain, underequipped and facing a formidable foe along several hundred miles of border between the Kurdistan region and Iraq's Nineveh and Kirkuk Provinces, where the militants are now the dominant force.

Several fighters who had fought ISIS said they were daunted when they discovered the militants were traveling in bulletproof vehicles that left the pesh merga's bullets doing little more than pockmarking the metal.

"It's our business to see the faces of the soldiers and know how they feel," said Halgurd Hekmat, the head of media for the pesh merga fighters. "I wouldn't say they were afraid, but they were a bit nervous," he admitted. Since the fall of Mosul, the pesh merga leadership had warned the Americans and the Iraqi government that they were ill equipped to hold the militants at the border separating Nineveh Province from Kurdistan.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"We told them: 'We cannot hold it for very long. We are not a country; we don't have an army; we don't have aircraft,' " said Lt. Gen. Jaber Yawer Manda, the secretary general of the pesh merga ministry. "I said: 'We are fighting in the front lines now. You have to help us.' "

On Thursday evening, after a long day in the West Wing, Mr. Obama had a message for Iraqis: "Today, America is coming to help."

State House News Service (M.A.): "Sen. Elizabeth Warren says she supports President Obama's decision to authorize airstrikes in Iraq"

By Andy Metzer

August 8, 2014, 3:41 p.m. EDT

Warning against a new U.S. war in Iraq, U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren on Friday stood by President Barack Obama's decision to authorize targeted airstrikes to help defend Americans in Erbil, Iraq, and provide aid to a religious minority taking refuge in the Sinjar mountains.

"It's a complicated situation right now in Iraq and the president has taken very targeted actions to provide humanitarian relief that the Iraqi government requested, and to protect American citizens," Warren told reporters. "But like the president I believe that any solution in Iraq is going to be a negotiated solution, not a military solution. We do not want to be pulled into another war in Iraq."

Renowned for its financing strategies and media savvy and feared for its brutality, a group of Sunni sectarian extremists that now calls itself The Islamic State has expanded out of war-torn Syria into Iraq, where it imposes taxes and kills people of other religions, according to news accounts.

On Thursday night, Obama announced he had authorized air strikes to protect American diplomats, civilians and military personnel in Erbil, and humanitarian air drops of food and water had already begun to assist Yezidis, a religious minority, who fled to the Sinjar mountains.

An American-led invasion of Iraq was launched in March 2003, starting a war that was divisive politically and costly. After Obama failed at reaching accord on a new status of force agreement with the Iraqi government, the U.S. stuck to an earlier timetable, withdrawing troops from the country by Dec. 31, 2011.

Warren said the actions announced by Obama will change the dynamic in the country, which has a Shi'ite led government and an independent Kurdish region in the north.

"It's a very complicated situation in Iraq. The president has now taken two very targeted actions, and those two actions will change the mix of what's happening in Iraq, and we'll have to just monitor it," Warren said.

Warren was in the State House for a closed-door meeting between state and federal officials and Jorge Carlos Fonseca, the president of Cape Verde.

Asked if she had a broader plan for dealing with the crisis in Iraq, Warren said, "Certainly these airstrikes are going to change the mix of what's going on, so we'll just have to monitor it literally day by day, hour by hour."

While calling for a negotiated solution, Warren said the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria is a terrorist organization and the U.S. does not negotiate with terrorists, while leaving open the possibility the U.S. could assist the Iraqi government negotiating with ISIS.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"The point is there has to be a negotiated solution in Iraq, but we don't negotiate with terrorists," Warren said. She said, "This is partially a question of whether the U.S. government negotiates or whether we have the Iraqi government doing these negotiations, and how we help support them as they try to maintain an integrated country, and a country that better represents all of the people who live there."

A champion of those squeezed by big banks who toppled Scott Brown in a 2012 election for the seat, Warren is a favorite among liberals, and regularly disavows any plans to seek the president.

Warren said her caution not to entangle the United States in another military conflict in Iraq is a viewpoint shared across the country.

"I am concerned that none of us want to be pulled into a war in Iraq. I think that's clear across this country, and I feel very strongly about that," Warren said.

Sioux City Journal (I.A.): "Iowa trip: Huckabee thinking about 2016 campaign"

By James Q. Lynch

August 8, 2014

CEDAR RAPIDS | Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee on Friday said he is actively considering a 2016 presidential campaign. He's scheduled to appear in Ames, Iowa, on Saturday.

"I would certainly start in a very different place if I were to run than I did when I came here in 2007 and first launched the campaign and nobody knew who I was and even fewer people cared," Huckabee said during a roundtable with reporters.

The winner of Iowa's 2008 first-in-the-nation precinct caucuses shied away from saying how certain he is that he'll run. He's maintaining a "delicate balance" because his radio and TV contracts preclude him from being a candidate, Huckabee said.

Those contracts don't prevent him from thinking about it.

"This is not some real remote likelihood. This is something I'm very seriously considering," Huckabee said.

Polls show that he's one of the top choices of Iowa Republicans for the 2016 campaign. He attributed his frontrunner status to Iowans' "good taste in politics."

"If the polls are showing that I'm leading in Iowa it's a clear indication and an affirmation of just how intelligent and insightful the people of Iowa really are," he said.

He'll see more Iowans Saturday when he addresses The Family Leadership Summit in Ames. Huckabee said that event and the "Pastors & Pews" program he was part of in Cedar Rapids are not part of a strategy to sew up support among the conservative Christian bloc of the Iowa GOP.

"I think there's great value in mobilizing people of faith who often sit at home during the elections and don't show up to vote," he said. "I think that's unfortunate."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He called reporting on his comments about impeachment unfortunate, too. Although he believes President Barack Obama has committed impeachable offenses, Huckabee said he's never called for impeachment. Impeachment "should be used in rare and most unusual circumstances," he said, and talk about impeaching Obama is a distraction.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· August 9 – Water Mill, NY: Sec. Clinton fundraises for the Clinton Foundation at the home of George and Joan Hornig (WSJ)

· August 13 – Martha's Vinyard, MA: Sec. Clinton signs books at Bunch of Grapes (HillaryClintonMemoir.com)

· August 16 – East Hampton, New York: Sec. Clinton signs books at Bookhampton East Hampton (HillaryClintonMemoir.com)

· August 28 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton keynotes Nexenta's OpenSDx Summit (BusinessWire)

· September 4 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton speaks at the National Clean Energy Summit (Solar Novis Today)

· October 2 – Miami Beach, FL: Sec. Clinton keynotes the CREW Network Convention & Marketplace (CREW Network)

· October 13 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton keynotes the UNLV Foundation Annual Dinner (UNLV)

· ~ October 13-16 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton keynotes salesforce.com Dreamforce conference (salesforce.com)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "German Marshall Fund" <tbudak@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 10/1/2015 5:38:53 AM
Subject: REMINDER: GMF Event: Europe 25 Years After German Unification: Crisis, Unity, and Opportunity

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here

G | M | F The German Marshall Fund of the United States
STRENGTHENING TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION

Our Organization | Our Work | Our Events | Our Experts | Support GMF

For the conclusion of its Legacy of '89 series, The German Marshall Fund of the United States is pleased to invite you to:

Invitation

Europe 25 Years After German Unification: Crisis, Unity, and Opportunity

Tuesday, October 6, 2015
12:00 - 1:30 pm

An RSVP is required, as space is limited. The conversation will be on-the-record.

Introduction
Dr. Karen Donfried, President, German Marshall Fund of the United States

Speakers
Ambassador Victoria Nuland, Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs, U.S. Department of State

Ivan Krastev, Bosch Public Policy Fellow, Transatlantic Academy
Chairman, Center for Liberal Strategies

Moderator
David Ignatius, Columnist, The Washington Post
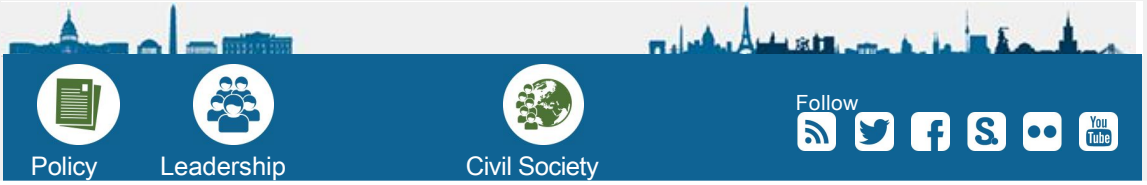
Member of the Board of Trustees, The German Marshall Fund of the United States

Location
The German Marshall Fund of the United States 1744 R Street NW, Washington, DC 20009

RSVP

If you have any questions, please contact Sam Leon at +1 202 683 2926 or fpintern@gmfus.org .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



To mark the 25th anniversary of German unification, the German Marshall Fund of the United States (GMF) is pleased to invite you to a conversation with Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs Victoria Nuland and Transatlantic Academy Bosch Public Policy Fellow Ivan Krastev, moderated by Washington Post columnist David Ignatius. The discussion will examine the legacy of German unification and the events of 1989 to 1991 which brought an end to the Cold War, the subsequent development of Europe's political and security architecture, the challenges which the Euro-Atlantic order faces today, and the future prospects for a Europe whole, free, and at peace.

Ambassador Victoria Nuland has been assistant secretary of state for European and Eurasian affairs since September 2013, where she is responsible for diplomatic relations with 50 countries in Europe and Eurasia, as well as with NATO, the European Union, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). Previously, Ambassador Nuland served as the U.S. Department of State spokesperson, as special envoy for conventional armed forces in Europe from 2010 to 2011, and served on the faculty of the National War College from 2008 to 2009. She was also the 18th United States permanent representative to NATO from 2005 to 2008. As a career foreign service officer, Ambassador Nuland was principal deputy national security advisor to the vice president from 2003 to 2005, U.S. deputy permanent Representative to NATO from 2000 until 2003, and chief of staff to the deputy secretary of state from 1993 to 1996. Earlier in her career, she covered Russian internal politics at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, served on the Soviet desk in Washington, helped to open the first U.S. Embassy in Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia, worked in the State Department's Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, and served in Guangzhou, China. She speaks Russian and French, and received a bachelor's from Brown University.

Ivan Krastev is a Bosch Public Policy fellow at the Transatlantic Academy and the chairman of the Centre for Liberal Strategies in Sofia. He is also a permanent fellow at the Institute for Human Sciences in Vienna. From 2013 to 2014 Krastev was a Richard von Weizsäcker fellow at the Robert Bosch Stiftung in Berlin. He is a founding board member of the European Council on Foreign Relations, a member of the advisory board of the ERSTE Foundation, and a member of the Advisory Council of the Center for European Policy Analysis (CEPA). He is also associate editor of Europe's World and a member of the editorial board of the Journal of Democracy and Transit – Europäische Revue. From 2004 to 2006 Krastev served as the executive director of the International Commission on the Balkans chaired by the former Italian Prime Minister Giuliano Amato. From 2005 to 2011 he was the Editor-in-Chief of the Bulgarian Edition of Foreign Policy and was a member of the Council of the International Institute for Strategic Studies, London. He has held fellowships at St. Antony's College in Oxford; the Woodrow Wilson Center for International Scholars in Washington, D.C.; the Collegium Budapest; the Wissenschaftskolleg in Berlin; the Institute of Federalism at the University of Fribourg in Switzerland; and the Remarque Institute at New York University.

David Ignatius is the author of a bi-weekly column on global politics, economics, and international affairs for The Washington Post. Ignatius joined the Post in 1986 as editor of its Sunday "Outlook" section. He became foreign editor in 1990, supervising the paper's Pulitzer Prize-winning coverage of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. In 1993 he became the assistant managing editor for business news. Prior to joining The Washington Post, Ignatius spent ten years as a reporter for the Wall Street Journal, where he covered the steel industry, the U.S. Justice Department, the Central Intelligence Agency, and the U.S. Senate, while simultaneously serving as Middle East chief diplomatic correspondent. In addition to reporting, Ignatius served as a Fisher Family Fellow to the Future of Diplomacy Project at Harvard Kennedy School in 2010 and was a visiting faculty member during the spring of 2012. He is currently a senior fellow for the Future of Diplomacy Project at the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs at Harvard University and a board member at The German Marshall Fund of the United States.

GMF's Legacy of '89 series marks 25 years since the fall of the Berlin Wall, the subsequent unification of Germany, and political transformations across Europe. Examining the cultural, political, social, and economic aspects of these watershed moments of the 20th century, The Legacy of '89 brings together intellectuals, former and current government officials, and members of the media for reflection, stocktaking, and innovative policy prescriptive conversations amongst the transatlantic and pan-European communities.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Strengthening Transatlantic Cooperation

Our Organization
About GMF
Career Opportunities
Press Room

Our Work
Leadership
Policy
Civil Society
Research & Analysis
Transatlantic Academy

Our Events
Major Conferences & Forums
Recent & Upcoming Events

Our Experts
Find an Expert

Manage preferences | Forward email | Unsubscribe | Subscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Tony Podesta" <podesta@podesta.com>
Date: 10/16/2015 11:19:24 PM
Subject: Fwd: CLIP | Yahoo: Hillary moneyman highlights new Saudi connection

---

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Sara Latham <slatham@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Friday, October 16, 2015
Subject: Fwd: CLIP | Yahoo: Hillary moneyman highlights new Saudi connection
To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Tyson Brody <tbrody@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Fri, Oct 16, 2015 at 4:13 PM
Subject: CLIP | Yahoo: Hillary moneyman highlights new Saudi connection
To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >

Hillary moneyman highlights new Saudi connection
Michael Isikoff

Hillary Clinton and Saudi Arabian Defense Minister Prince Salman bin Abdul-Aziz Al Saud prior to a State Department meeting in 2012. (Photo: Alex Wong/Getty Images)

The Saudi government, under increasing criticism over civilian casualties from its airstrikes in Yemen and a harsh crackdown on political dissidents at home, has just hired a powerhouse Washington, D.C., lobbying firm headed by a top Hillary Clinton fundraiser — an arrangement that critics charge raises fresh questions about the influence that foreign government lobbyists could have on her campaign.

The Saudi contract with the Podesta Group, owned by veteran Washington lobbyist and Clinton campaign bundler Tony Podesta, calls for the firm to provide “public relations” and other services on behalf of the royal court of King Salman.

It included an initial “project fee” payment of $200,000 last month and unspecified further sums over the course of the next year, according to documents recently filed with the Justice Department Foreign Agents Registration Act office.

The retention comes at a time the Saudis are being condemned by United Nations officials over reports that its bombings against Houthi strongholds in Yemen’s civil war has resulted in the deaths and injuries of hundreds of innocent civilians, including children.

Adding to the international pressure, the Saudis are also facing criticism from human rights groups over its continued refusal to allow basic rights to women (e.g. the freedom to drive cars). They are also being criticized for their hardline domestic suppression of political dissidents, with draconian punishments such as the sentence — by beheading — recently given to a 20-year-old Shiite political protester.

“They are very nervous about an American policy change, and so they are betting on the horse they think will win — Hillary Clinton,” said Ali Al-Ahmad, a Saudi analyst with the Institute for Gulf Affairs, and a frequent critic of the regime, about the hiring of the Podesta Group.

The Podesta Group is now on a roster of a half-dozen D.C. lobbying firms representing the Saudis, including the giant international law firm of DLA Piper and the firm of Hogan Lovells, whose principal on the Saudi account is former Minnesota Republican Sen. Norm Coleman, who chairs the Congressional Leadership Fund, a super-Pac that is a major source of House GOP campaign funds. (Former Texas congressman Tom Loeffler, a top bundler for Jeb Bush's presidential campaign, for years representedthe Saudis, but his current firm, Akin Gump, now lobbies for the United Arab Emirates, among other foreign clients.)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But the retention of the Podesta Group has gotten attention in Washington lobbying circles because of its unusually close ties to Hillary Clinton's campaign: Tony Podesta is the brother and former business partner of Clinton's campaign chairman, John Podesta. He is also a prolific Democratic Party fundraiser who is among 43 Washington lobbyists (many of whom also represent foreign governments) listed as Clinton campaign bundlers in reports filed by the campaign with the Federal Election Commission.

The reports disclose that Podesta had raised $140,175 for the Clinton campaign through Sept. 30. Two weeks ago, just days after filing its Saudi contract with the Justice Department, Podesta held a Clinton campaign fundraiser at his home that offered fine Italian food cooked by five gourmet chefs, including himself and his brother, the campaign chairman.

The Podesta Group point man on the Saudi account is David Adams, who previously served as assistant secretary of state for legislative affairs in 2011 and 2012, making him Clinton's chief Capitol Hill lobbyist for her last two years as secretary of state, according to Justice Department filings reviewed by Yahoo News.

But Tony Podesta, while calling himself "a proud Clinton bundler," vigorously denied that the Saudi contract had anything to do with his efforts to elect her president. "I've never had a conversation with Hillary Clinton or anybody in the campaign about the work of the firm," Podesta said, when reached by Yahoo News on his cell phone while he was dining at a restaurant in Sicily. "We represent a dozen foreign governments around the world — we do good work for them. And it has nothing to do with the Hillary Clinton campaign."

Asked for comment, Clinton campaign spokesman Josh Schwerin emailed: "Hillary Clinton has a strong record of standing up for human rights, and has spent her career fighting for women and girls around the world. She's proven that she cannot be intimidated — let alone influenced — to sacrifice these core principles. And so as president she will continue to stand up to countries like Saudi Arabia that don't allow women to have equality. … Make no mistake, when it comes to U.S. national security, she is guided only by the best interests of our country."

The Saudis have longstanding ties to the Clintons: The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia is among the largest donors to the Clinton Foundation, contributing between $10 million and $25 million, according to the foundation's website (which only discloses figures in broad categories, not precise sums.) Bill Clinton has also received hefty fees for speeches in Saudi Arabia, including $600,000 for two talks while Hillary Clinton was secretary of state. Last September 4, Bill Clinton met with King Salman for what was described by one source as a "brief courtesy visit" at the Four Seasons Hotel. Two weeks later, on Sept. 18, the Podesta Group filed papers with the Justice Department reporting that it had been retained by an entity called "the Center for Studies and Media Affairs at the Saudi Royal Court."

Tony Podesta speaking to Associated Press reporters in Philadelphia, September 2004. (Photo: Jacqueline Larma/AP)

Podesta said he was "unaware" of the Four Seasons hotel meeting between the King and the former president and that his negotiations to represent the Saudis had been going on for several months before that. He declined, however, to talk about precisely what his firm had been retained to do for the Saudis. "We don't speak on or off the record about what we do for our clients," he said.

Podesta is far from the only Clinton campaign bundler to be lobbying for foreign governments or their interests. A review of the Clinton campaign's bundler list by Yahoo News found lobbyists representing the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, South Korea, Morocco, Japan, and Hong Kong. (Bush, who among GOP candidates has the most entrenched ties to K Street, received bundled contributions from lobbyists with firms that represent the People's Republic of China, Turkey, and South Korea.)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Two of the Clinton lobbyist-bundlers, Richard Sullivan and David Jones, are principals in a firm that, until late last year, represented the Russia Direct Investment Fund, a sovereign wealth fund co-founded by Vladimir Putin when he was prime minister. Another Clinton campaign bundler, former New Jersey Sen. Robert Torricelli, is the lobbyist for the Paris-based National Council for Resistance in Iran, a controversial Iranian dissident group that for years had been on the State Department's terrorism list, but was "de-listed" three years ago.

In her campaign, Hillary Clinton has pledged to push for sweeping campaign finance reform that will "end the stranglehold that wealthy interests have over our political system" and "curb the outsized influence of big money in American politics." But the role of so many well-heeled foreign lobbyists in Clinton's campaign fundraising apparatus is "very troubling" and represents a substantial retreat from eight years ago, when then candidate Barack Obama refused to take campaign money at all from any registered lobbyists, said Craig Holman of Public Citizen, a public interest group that has long pushed for wholesale changes in the campaign-finance system.

"This is classic influence-peddling," said Holman

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Clean Water Action" <activist@cleanwater.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 3/14/2013 5:00:52 AM
Subject: Chesapeake Currents - Spring 2013

Clean Water Currents

Maryland

More Inside!

Clean Water Action and allies are now working with state lawmakers in Annapolis on:

- Creating a comprehensive database on Maryland pesticide use to make it easier to understand and regulate impacts on public health and water quality.
- Enacting a legislative moratorium on hydraulic fracturing extraction of natural gas (fracking) until appropriate studies are complete, and regulatory policies are in place to safeguard drinking water supplies, downstream water quality and quality of life.
- Advancing offshore wind generation to increase the percentage of Maryland's energy supply that is clean and renewable, reduce greenhouse gas emissions and create jobs. Read more

Delaware

Delaware's forthcoming plans for handling the decades-old pile of toxic coal ash stored on Burton Island in Indian River will face tough scrutiny from Clean Water Action.

"The state's long-term plan for the Burton Island coal ash landfill needs to include rapidly phasing out the use of coal as an energy source," says Clean Water Action's Andrew Fellows. "Coal's many impacts on our communities are devastating, and the Burton Island site is yet another example of this." Read more

Washington, DC

Momentum is building for improved standards to protect the Anacostia, Potomac and other rivers, streams and creeks from pollution that is washed off of streets and other paved surfaces. Proposed new "stormwater" regulations are a vast improvement over current policies.

The unusually strong oversight role played by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency means that the District's standards could end up creating a national model for controlling this serious pollution problem. Not surprisingly, big developers and others opposed to strong stormwater protections may attempt to delay the new rules. Clean Water Action and allies will be working throughout the summer to make sure District officials understand how strongly these new water protections are supported by DC residents. Read more

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Virginia

January 31, 2013 was the vote that never happened. Clean Water Action and allies won a critical battle in the fight to keep Virginia's current uranium mining ban in place. This was the date when the State Senate's environmental committee was scheduled to vote on Senate Bill 1353, a bill to regulate uranium mining at the Coles Hill site in Pittsylvania County. If passed, the bill would have effectively ended the state's thirty-one year ban on uranium mining, beginning what could have been a long, ferocious fight on the issue. Read More

Baltimore Office
711 West 40th St, Suite 209 | Baltimore, MD 21211 | 410.235.8808

National Office
1010 Vermont Ave | Suite 400 | Washington D.C. | 20005 | 202.895.0420

You are receiving this message because you or someone using your e-mail address, john.podesta@gmail.com, gave us permission to send it. Not interested anymore?
unsubscribe now .

empowered by salsa

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara DuBois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Sara Du Bois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 8/15/2008 1:42:32 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 8/15

08 Election Daily News Clips
August 15th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

8:15am BUSH: Remarks on Russia, Georgia in Washington, DC

TBA McCain: Private Meeting in Aspen, CO

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

McCain's Focus on Georgia Raises Question of Propriety (Washington Post 8/15/08)
By Dan Eggen and Robert Barnes; A16
By Robert Barnes
...With his Democratic opponent on vacation in Hawaii, the senator from Arizona has been doing all he can in recent days to look like President McCain, particularly when it comes to the ongoing international crisis in Georgia. Georgian President Mikheil Saakashvili says he talks to McCain, a personal friend, several times a day. McCain's top foreign policy adviser, Randy Scheunemann, was until recently a paid lobbyist for Georgia's government.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/14/AR2008081403332_pf.html
See WaPo blog's "McCain Rules Out Military Action Against Russia": http://voices.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/08/14/mccain_rules_out_military_acti.html

McCain Displays Credentials as Obama Relaxes (NYT 8/15/08)
By MICHAEL FALCONE
For the last several days, Senator Barack Obama has seemed to fade from the scene while on his secluded vacation here, as his opponent, Senator John McCain, has seized nearly every opportunity to display his foreign policy credentials on the dominant issue of the week: the conflict between Russia and Georgia.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/15/us/politics/15obama.html?_r=1&adxnnl=1&oref=slogin&adxnnlx=1218798805-CNZCCmSvwBeP6vlZUQsIUg

McCain's Son Sat on Troubled Bank's Board (WSJ 8/15/08)
By DAMIAN PALETTA, DAVID ENRICH and ELIZABETH HOLMES; Page A3
Silver State Bancorp Is Facing Big Losses, Regulatory Scrutiny
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121876461747243159.html

Explaining McCain's Complicated History with Lobbyists (CQ Politics blog 8/14/08)
By David Nather
One of the biggest mysteries about John McCain, the man who claims to be the enemy of powerful lobbyists and special interests, is why he has surrounded himself with lobbyists and former lobbyists on his campaign team. The latest adviser who's causing headaches for McCain is foreign policy adviser Randy Scheunemann, whose lobbying firm has represented the Georgian government, raising questions about how neutral a broker McCain can be in the crisis caused by Russia's invasion.
http://blogs.cqpolitics.com/beyond/2008/08/explaining-mccains-complicated.html

McCain running tighter, less rambling campaign (AP 8/15/08)
By Charles Babington

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For months, John McCain's presidential campaign was a near-constant swirl of free-ranging chats with voters, garrulous sessions with reporters and quips from the candidate that often had little to do with the day's planned message. No more. With a dozen weeks to go, McCain's campaign has notably limited his exposure to national reporters and even voters, devoting more time to private fundraisers, interviews with local journalists and events designed for TV cameras.
http://www.aspentimes.com/article/20080814/NEWS/934508259/1005&parentprofile=1058

John McCain and the POW church riot (Chicago Tribune 8/15/08)
By Jill Zuckman
They called it the church riot. Sen. John McCain, who is known for his reticence and even discomfort invoking faith on the campaign trail, was once dubbed a "Hell's Angel" for rioting against his captors in Vietnam in order to hold Sunday church services.
http://www.chicagotribune.com/news/nationworld/chi-mccain-faithaug15,0,575244.story

McCain's hints at Ridge inspire theories (Washington Times 8/15/08)
By Ralph Z. Hallow
Explanations were abounding Thursday on why Sen. John McCain mentioned Tom Ridge as a possible running mate - including a serious pick, a trial balloon for the right and an ecumenical gesture for the left.
http://washingtontimes.com/news/2008/aug/15/mccains-hints-at-ridge-inspire-theories/

John McCain, Barack Obama spar over 'celebrity' (LA Times 8/14/08)
By Tina Daunt
Politicians from both parties seek new and even more daring ways of connecting with mass audiences via entertainment.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-et-cause15-2008aug15,0,4423106.story

Leave It To Weaver (Texas Monthly 8/14/08*)
*Print Date: 9/1/08
by Paul Burka
What John McCain's former chief strategist thinks of his campaign. ...Only a few minutes into our conversation about the current presidential race, he said, "The Greek tragedy aspect of this election could turn out to be, George Bush defeats John McCain twice."
http://www.texasmonthly.com/2008-09-01/letterfromwashingtondc.php
See FirstRead's "McCain: Weaver continues to talk": http://firstread.msnbc.msn.com/archive/2008/08/14/1265371.aspx

Phil Gramm's Return Engagement, For Two Days Only (CBS blog 8/14/08)
By Ryan Corsaro:
Former McCain adviser Phil Gramm is in attendance at John McCain's event at the Aspen Institute this afternoon, which is about to get underway. Gramm stepped down from the campaign last month after he was criticized for saying the U.S. economy is in a "mental recession" and that the U.S. is a "nation of whiners." Gramm, who's seated in the front row for today's event, told CBS News that he's in Colorado to help McCain raise money and that he's there as a supporter, not as a campaign adviser.
http://www.cbsnews.com/blogs/2008/08/14/politics/fromtheroad/entry4351472.shtml
See WSJ blog's "Phil Gramm Attends McCain Campaign Briefing": http://feeds.wsjonline.com/%7Er/wsj/washwire/feed/%7E3/365117155/

New DNC Web video tries to link McCain to Abramoff scandal (CNN blog 8/15/08)
By Martina Stewart
The Democratic National Committee's is taking on John McCain in a new Web video calling into question his reputation as a campaign finance reformer and a maverick who stands outside the inner circles of political dealings in the nation's capital.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/08/15/new-dnc-web-video-tries-to-link-mccain-to-abramoff-scandal/
Link to video of ad ("Tainted"): http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jvXcY-u7MJM

DNC Releases New Web Ad Highlighting the Threat John McCain Poses to Social Security (MarketWatch 8/14/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Social Security's 73rd Birthday, FDR's Grandson Tells John McCain to "Keep Your Hands Off Our Social Security" http://www.marketwatch.com/news/story/dnc-releases-new-web-ad/story.aspx?guid=%7B074562D2-AEFA-4B16-9CF2-049D7DCA283B%7D&dist=hppr
Link to video of ad: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=L24eLUdT6bc
See FirstRead's "AFL-CIO HITS MCCAIN ON SOCIAL SECURITY ": http://firstread.msnbc.msn.com/archive/2008/08/14/1266333.aspx

Democrats: Happy anniversary Social Security, Don't privatize it John McCain (Miami Herald blog 8/14/08)
By Lesley Clark
Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz is join James Roosevelt, FDR's grandson, on a press conference call today to mark the 73rd anniversary of Social Security -- and bash John McCain for endorsing the concept of private indiviual accounts, which Democrats call a "risky investment scheme."
http://miamiherald.typepad.com/nakedpolitics/2008/08/democrats-happy.html

New Obama Olympic Ad Touts Middle-Class Economic Plan [includes video] (The Page 8/14/08)
The nationwide spot– "Three Bedroom Ranch"– begins Monday on broadcast and cable TV, and will run during the Olympics.
http://thepage.time.com/2008/08/14/new-obama-olympic-ad-promotes-his-economic-plan/
Link to script: http://thepage.time.com/script-of-obama-ad-three-bedroom-ranch/

NEW Obama ad Scorching McCain on DHL in Ohio (DailyKos 8/14/08)
Obama slams McCain Campaign and its lobbyist connections for causing job losses of 8,000 in Ohio.
http://www.dailykos.com/story/2008/8/14/165427/984
Link to video of ad: http://thepage.time.com/new-obama-dhl-ad/
Link to script: http://thepage.time.com/script-of-obama-ad-on-dhl/

McCain catches break on loan (Politico 8/14/08)
By: Kenneth P. Vogel
John McCain on Thursday got some welcome ammunition in his defense against Democratic charges that he violated campaign finance law. But he's not out of the woods yet. The Federal Election Commission released a draft opinion asserting that McCain... did not violate the provisions of the primary election public funding system.
http://dyn.politico.com/printstory.cfm?uuid=C286BE62-18FE-70B2-A8A82C67E8DBE69F
See CQ Politics's "McCain Gets a Bye from FEC Lawyers": http://www.cqpolitics.com/wmspage.cfm?docID=news-000002938164

Pastor: Not going to play 'gotcha' with McCain, Obama (CNN 8/14/08)
The Rev. Rick Warren said Thursday that his upcoming forum with Sens. John McCain and Barack Obama will be aimed at asking them tough "heartland questions." ..."I'm not going to play 'gotcha' with one candidate and not with the other. This way, it will be totally fair. You compare apples to apples," he added.
http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/08/14/warren.forum/index.html
See Brody Files's "Rick Warren Plans to Bring up Obama, McCain's Personal Life": http://www.cbn.com/CBNnews/428453.aspx

McCain alarms base with abortion comment (Politico 8/14/08)
By: Jonathan Martin
Top social conservative leaders in key battleground states are urging John McCain not to pick a running mate who supports abortion rights, warning of dire consequences from a Republican base already unenthused about their nominee.
http://dyn.politico.com/printstory.cfm?uuid=C3548602-18FE-70B2-A877A811E28B5D0E

Troops Deployed Abroad Give 6:1 to Obama (OpenSecrets.org 8/14/08)
By Luke Rosiak
...According to an analysis of campaign contributions by the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics, Democrat Barack Obama has received nearly six times as much money from troops deployed overseas at the time of their contributions than has Republican John McCain, and the fiercely anti-war Ron Paul, though he suspended his campaign for the Republican nomination months ago, has received more than four times McCain's haul.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.opensecrets.org/news/2008/08/troops-deployed-abroad-give-61.html
See WaPo blog's "Obama Tops in Donations from Troops": http://voices.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/08/14/obama_tops_in_donations_from_t.html
See Jon Soltz/HuffPo's "Deployed Troops Donate to Obama 6-1 Over McCain": http://www.huffingtonpost.com/jon-soltz/deployed-troops-donate-to_b_118987.html

GOP Loyalty Not a Given For Young Evangelicals (Washington Post 8/15/08)
By Krissah Williams Thompson; A01
...The Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life found that while a majority of young white evangelicals describe themselves as conservative on social issues, slightly more identified this year as either independents or Democrats than as Republicans.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/14/AR2008081403446_pf.html

Social Security and the Candidates (ThinkProgress 8/14/08)
By Matt Yglesias
One of John McCain's key demographic bases of support is old people, particular older working class Americans. These are much the same people who are likely to be strong supporters of Social Security. McCain, meanwhile, not only thinks that the very idea of a pay-as-you-go public pension system is a "disgrace" but was a firm defender of George W. Bush's unpopular plan to dismantle the program and replace it with a riskier, less progressive system of mandatory private investment accounts. Under the circumstances, a lot of people have been waiting around impatiently to see Social Security play a larger role in discussion of McCain and his agenda.
http://feeds.feedburner.com/%7Er/matthewyglesias/%7E3/364941072/social_security_and_the_candidates.php

Enter Edmund Burke (TIME blog 8/14/08)
by Joe Klein
Andrew Sullivan makes the case for why the neoconservative efforts to inflate the tragedy in Georgia into a new cold war stand outside the realm of traditional conservative thought. Again, Russia should be condemned for its aggression. But this Russia--oligarchic, oil-glutted, trying to recover some international face after the historic stupidity of having bought into communism--is not the Soviet Union. We have serious business to transact with the Russians. The most important is the reduction of nuclear arms forces, an effort left to lapse by the Bush Administration over the past eight years, as the Nunn-Lugar process was short-funded.
http://www.time-blog.com/swampland/2008/08/enter_burke.html
Link to Andrew Sullivan's "After The Cold War": http://andrewsullivan.theatlantic.com/the_daily_dish/2008/08/after-the-cold.html#more

McCain: Gitmo is 'one of the nicest places in the world to live in.' (ThinkProgress 8/14/08)
During a question-and-answer session with Walter Isaacson today, Sen. John McCain said Guantanamo Bay is "one of the nicest places in the world to live in." Later in the interview, McCain was asked about the Supreme Court's recent decision in Boumediene v. Bush declaring that Gitmo detainees have a right to challenge their detention in civilian court. McCain had previously derided that decision as "one of the worst decisions in the history of this country," but today stepped back from that comment:
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/08/14/mccain-gitmo-is-one-of-the-nicest-places-in-the-world-to-live-in/
Link to video: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HQZP7hrCS4I

Attack Ad Veteran Teams With Attack Book Author NPR blog 8/14/08)
Jerome Corsi may be getting all the attention right now for his anti-Obama attack book, but there's another veteran political operative who has been toiling away to take down the Democratic candidate with a Swift-Boat-style campaign. And now, the two are working together. Floyd Brown, whose most famous effort was the "Willie Horton ad" that damaged Democrat Michael Dukakis' presidential campaign in 1988, has been working on a viral campaign to send anti-Obama videos to millions of voters . His main organization, the National Campaign Fund, runs the Web site ExposeObama.com, which features videos linking Obama to gang violence and questioning Obama's assertion that he's never been a Muslim (below).
http://www.npr.org/blogs/secretmoney/2008/08/jerome_corsi_may_be_getting.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Alan Colmes Goes Off During Edwards Panel, Assails McCain's Infidelities (Huffington Post 8/14/08)
Andrew Sullivan has a post up on a clip from the August 12th iteration of Hannity and Colmes that seems likely to bring mad creatine to the progressive scene. In it, Sean Hannity merrily leads a panel through a prolonged excoriation of John Edwards, with Amanda Carpenter and some other flaky white dude chitty-chitty banging away. Then, about three minutes in, Alan Colmes suddenly starts breathing fire all over the place, loudly asking how fellow cheater John McCain can be trusted to run the country if infidelities are enough to exclude Edwards from consideration.
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/08/14/alan-colmes-goes-off-duri_n_119004.html
See Andrew Sullivan's "Edwards, McCain, Adultery": http://andrewsullivan.theatlantic.com/the_daily_dish/2008/08/edwards-mccain.html
Link to video: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=saDewF41rJI

McCain back in Aspen, this time standing tall (LA Times 8/15/08)
By Seema Mehta and Maeve Reston
The GOP candidate discusses Russia and ABBA at the event. Top advisors attend, fueling veep talk.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-mccain15-2008aug15,0,1186560.story

McCain says Georgia does not require military response (Denver Post 8/14/08)
Russian aggression toward the former Soviet Republic of Georgia is a "serious international crisis," but not one that demands a military response from the United States, Sen. John McCain told a gathering in Aspen Thursday afternoon. Rather, the presumptive Republican presidential nominee said he favors quick admission of Georgia, Ukraine and other former soviet countries to NATO.
http://www.denverpost.com/breakingnews/ci_10206048

McCain: Tough talk and quips (The Aspen Times 8/15/08)
By Scott Condon
Presidential candidate bashes Obama, keeps Aspen laughing http://www.aspentimes.com/article/20080815/NEWS/315426828/1058/SPORTS&parentprofile=-1
See 9News's "McCain visits Aspen, talks gas prices": http://www.9news.com/news/local/article.aspx?storyid=97666&catid=346

McCain talks politics with Bloomfield breakfast crowd (Detroit News 8/14/08)
Gordon Trowbridge
...Wrapping up a busy, Metro Detroit campaign visit that included several fundraisers, McCain --accompanied by his wife, Cindy, and Sen. Lindsay Graham, R-S.C., one of his closest supporters -- arrived at the Kerby's... McCain held a series of fundraisers Wednesday, and toured a local defense contractor. ...Among the diners who spoke to McCain was Jon Busch of West Bloomfield, who said he delivered a simple message to the candidate: "Give us something to get excited about." Busch said he's been underwhelmed so far by McCain and his Democratic opponent, Barack Obama.
http://www.detnews.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20080814/METRO/808140472/1361

Sports owners fund McCain, shun Obama (Politico 8/15/08)
By: Kenneth P. Vogel and Matthew Lindsey and Owners of professional sports teams overwhelmingly support McCain, who raised six times more from the owners of teams in Chicago.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0808/12548.html

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

Reformer McCain is long gone (Atlanta Journal-Constitution 8/15/08)
By David Donnelly
As Sen. John McCain makes daily statements about the conflict in the former Soviet republic of Georgia, his campaign is answering questions regarding how his top foreign policy adviser, lobbyist Randy Scheunemann, made a killing in lobbying fees from the Georgian government. But that's not McCain's only Georgia problem. Ralph Reed is fund-raising for the Arizona senator's Aug. 18 fund-raiser at the Marriott Marquis in downtown Atlanta, and that has made even the most ardent McCain backers scratch their heads.
http://www.ajc.com/printedition/content/printedition/2008/08/15/reeded.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

What counts as 'success' in Iraq? (Boston Globe 8/15/08)
By John Tirman
A VOLUBLE attempt to describe the Iraq war as a success is widely apparent, and will increase as the Republican National Convention nears. John McCain is staking his campaign on this assertion. There is little doubt that the level of violence in Iraq has subsided noticeably in the last 12 months. But is this "victory"?
http://www.boston.com/bostonglobe/editorial_opinion/oped/articles/2008/08/15/what_counts_as_success_in_iraq?mode=PF

Iraq May Be Stable, But the War Was a Mistake (WSJ 8/15/08)
By FRANCIS FUKUYAMA; Page A13
Sometime in May 2003, shortly after U.S. forces had taken Baghdad and President Bush landed on an aircraft carrier under the banner "Mission Accomplished," an old friend remarked that he thought the war was going pretty well so far. I shook my head and said I thought we were in for trouble.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121876047023242841.html?mod=rss_opinion_main

Too Eloquent and Idealistic (WSJ 8/14/08)
By JAMES TARANTO
With just 82 days until the presidential election, one of the major-party candidates is being accused by his opponents of offering eloquent rhetoric that is just too high-flown and idealistic. That man, of course, is John McCain.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121872697736340877.html?mod=rss_opinion_main

Presidential predictions (Washington Times 8/15/08)
By Bradley P. Jacob
Sen. Barack Obama's liberal base views the 2008 presidential election as historic and exciting. They are passionate and energized. Moderate-to-conservative voters, on the other hand, just don't seem to have much interest. Why should they care? Sen. John McCain, after all, is something of a political maverick, often a relatively liberal Republican. As president, he is unlikely to be a passionate leader for limited government, lower taxes, or border control, to name just a few issues that get conservatives excited.
http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2008/aug/15/presidential-predictions/

Betting on Bahrain (Washington Times 8/15/08)
By S. Rob Sobhani
When either John McCain or Barack Obama takes the oath of office to serve as America's 44th president, the small but strategic country of Bahrain in the oil-rich Persian Gulf should be a top foreign-policy priority. This island nation of 800,000 is home to the U.S. Navy's Fifth Fleet as well as being one of the leaders in the promotion of human rights, religious tolerance and democratic pluralism in the Middle East.
http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2008/aug/15/betting-on-bahrain/

Will 'Country First' Boost McCain to Victory? (Newsweek blog 8/14/08)
By Howard Fineman
The city is a faded monument to a certain kind of American life: 18th century English and German settlements, Pennsylvania long rifles, a wariness of outsiders, social change, and Big City. This made York the perfect place for John McCain and his team to lay out their core strategy in the race against Barack Obama. Their messages: I'm an American and he's not; I'm a patriot and he's not; I'm a tough son-of-a-gun willing to confront our foes, he's not. This cold-blooded, chest-beating theme will either give McCain a real chance to overcome long odds and win the White House — or it will consign him to the dust bin of history.
http://blog.newsweek.com/blogs/stumper/archive/2008/08/14/fineman-will-country-first-boost-mccain-to-victory.aspx

Par for Mr. Corsi (Washington Post 8/15/08)
An expert at misrepresentation takes on Barack Obama.... THERE'S A cottage industry in books about Barack Obama;... But few debut in the No. 1 spot on the New York Times bestseller list, as Jerome R. Corsi's "The Obama Nation" will do among nonfiction hardcover titles this week. Unfortunately but unsurprisingly, given his earlier hit job on the last Democratic nominee, Mr. Corsi's latest is rife with inaccuracies and innuendo.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/14/AR2008081403051_pf.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BUSH NEWS

Bush Defiant (The Page 8/15/08)

Speaking from the White House before leaving for Crawford, the President issues a stern warning to Russia. "Bullying and intimidation are not acceptable ways to conduct foreign policy in the 21st century." Also calls Georgia "a courageous democracy," and says: "The people of Georgia have cast their lot with the free world, and we will not cast them aside."
http://thepage.time.com/2008/08/15/bush-to-speak-on-georgian-conflict-at-815-am/

Bush Aides Say Russia Actions in Georgia Jeopardize Ties (NYT 8/15/08)

By STEVEN LEE MYERS and THOM SHANKER
Russia's military offensive into Georgia has jolted the Bush administration's relationship with Moscow, senior officials said Thursday, forcing a wholesale reassessment of American dealings with Russia and jeopardizing talks on everything from halting Iran's nuclear ambitions to reducing strategic arsenals to cooperation on missiles defenses.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/15/world/europe/15policy.html?pagewanted=print
See NYT's "Russia Vows to Support Two Enclaves, in Retort to Bush": http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/15/world/europe/15georgia.html?bl&ex=1218945600&en=3141da97ae5b8c75&ei=5087%0A

Bush signs consumer bill to cut lead in toys (Reuters 8/15/08)

By Georgina Coolidge
Legislation aimed at improving US consumer product safety after millions of Chinese-made toys were recalled last summer was signed into law by President Bush yesterday. The measure dramatically cuts the amount of lead that is allowed in toys and other children's products.
http://www.boston.com/news/nation/washington/articles/2008/08/15/bush_signs_consumer_bill_to_cut_lead_in_toys?mode=PF

Bush still raking in cash for Republicans (AP 8/15/08)

By DEB RIECHMANN
President Bush's popularity has tanked, but boy can he still bring in the cash. He's raked in close to a billion dollars, the political fundraiser in chief, during his White House tenure.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5hLojPiuJjjenSaKjtHM7BmFLUd-gD92IJJI80

OTHER TOP NEWS

Russian blockade continues in Gori (AP 8/15/08)

By CHRISTOPHER TORCHIA
Russian troops on Friday allowed some humanitarian supplies into the city of Gori but continued their blockade, raising doubts about Russia's intentions in the war-battered country. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice was headed to Georgia for talks with its president.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5gDNLWfQWKrQc48pITBUg9KT_6oVwD92IKAS80

Gorbachev: Georgia started conflict in S. Ossetia (CNN 8/14/08)

Georgian leaders may be blaming Russia for the conflict raging in South Ossetia, but former Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev said Thursday "there is no doubt" that Georgia provoked the clash.
http://www.cnn.com/2008/WORLD/europe/08/14/gorbachev/index.html

Iraqi elections official fears fair vote in jeopardy (USA TODAY 8/15/08)

By Charles Levinson and Ali A. Nabhan
Iraqi security forces loyal to the Shiite-led government are raiding voter registration centers and taking other steps to discourage participation in upcoming elections, says the head of Iraq's voting regulatory agency.
http://www.usatoday.com/news/world/iraq/2008-08-14-Iraq-voters_N.htm

Senators say report on oil prices is flawed (AP 8/15/08)

Democratic senators say a government report issued last month on oil prices was based on flawed information. They're asking for an investigation into the matter.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5hItGAAHmoZcxui_0erzQN7cuNeRQD92I8U4G4

Obama pushes back hard on Corsi book (Politico 8/15/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By: Jonathan Martin
Campaign releases 41-page doc to rebut author's accusations.
http://www.politico.com/blogs/jonathanmartin/0808/Obama_pushes_back_hard_on_Corsi_book.html

Book on Obama blasted for 'vicious innuendo' (CNN 8/14/08)
There's a new book out about Barack Obama that some say is riddled with pretty much every unsubstantiated rumor you've ever heard about the Illinois senator. It is called "Obama Nation: Leftist Politics and the Cult of Personality." The author, Jerome Corsi, also co-wrote the book "Unfit for Command," which started the swift boating of Sen. John Kerry in the 2004 presidential election. Corsi admits he's on a mission to take down Obama. He's been criticized for books that he's written before that have been discredited in many circles.
http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/08/14/corsi.book/index.html

Clinton's name to be put in nomination at convention (CNN 8/14/08)
Sen. Barack Obama's campaign has agreed to put former rival Sen. Hillary Clinton's name in nomination at the Democratic National Convention this month.
http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/08/14/clinton/index.html

Musharraf ally says talks could lead to exit (AP 8/15/08)
By NAHAL TOOSI
Talks are under way that could lead to the resignation of Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf or else reduce his role to that of a figurehead, an ally of the embattled leader said Friday.
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5iWe152N60O8rfHfthVTBaXBeBs3wD92IIMK00

Stevens Challenges Indictment (WSJ 8/15/08)
By BRENT KENDALL; Page A2
Lawyers for Sen. Ted Stevens filed a flurry of pretrial motions that challenged the government's public-corruption case against the Alaska Republican.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121876777843843391.html

--
Sara DuBois
Tracking / Communications Manager
ProgressiveAccountability.org
sara@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jeremy Bird, BarackObama.com" <info@barackobama.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 4/1/2010 3:35:21 AM
Subject: "Because of you"

Organizing for America

John --

"It's because of you."

That's what President Obama said before he took the stage in Iowa City right after health care reform passed. And I couldn't agree more.

We've put together a quick video that highlights the incredible work you did over the last year, to honor and thank you for the history you made.

Please watch the video, then celebrate by co-signing health care reform legislation with the President.

It's Because of You: Watch the Video

We're offering a personalized certificate to every co-signer to make sure we can all have a way to commemorate this victory with the President.

So check out the video, pass it along to your friends, and co-sign historic health reform with President Obama:

http://my.barackobama.com/ThisIsChange

Thanks for everything,

Jeremy

Jeremy Bird
Deputy Director
Organizing for America

P.S. -- Great news: In addition to health and student loan reform, there's even more change happening.

Thanks in large part to tax benefits in the Recovery Act, average tax refunds are up by almost 10 percent from last year.

And President Obama announced a new Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty with Russia, calling it "the most comprehensive arms control agreement in nearly two decades."

Keep checking your email, and we'll let you know about more great news as it comes in.

Paid for by Organizing for America, a project of the Democratic National Committee -- 430 South Capitol Street SE, Washington, D.C. 20003. This communication is not authorized by any candidate or candidate's committee.

This email was sent to: john.podesta@gmail.com

Update Address / Email | Unsubscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Ryan Duncan" <ryan@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Big Campaign" <bigcampaign@googlegroups.com>
Date: 10/31/2008 4:15:08 AM
Subject: [big campaign] TRACKING UPDATE: McCain Rally in Hanoverton, OH 10/31/08

McCain Rally: Hanoverton, OH 10/31/08
Big Highlights (via streaming video)

RUDY GIULIANI:

- Stick it out in Iraq. Not to run away and put up the white flag of surrender. John McCain was right. You have an opponent of John McCain telling you that this is a man you can trust, because as Sarah Palin has said, he's the only one on the ticket who has fought for you. Really fought for you. I admire him, and I believe America needs a president that all the young people around America can look up to. This man has earned the Presidency of the United States, by putting his life on the line for us. Cindy has been by his side all his life, fighting for us. Let's prove all the people in Hollywood and the media wrong.

JOHN MCCAIN:

- Big Highlights
    - A word about America's mayor, I'll never forget going to NYC and seeing the fires still burning and this man who never missed a funeral, who consoled the families and America. Thank you Rudy. We are grateful to you, thank you so much.
    - Could I say how proud I am to have Sarah Palin as my partner. She's been marvelous. I'm so proud of her. She represents reform, energy, the family, everything good and wonderful about America. So proud to have her as my runningmate.
    - I'm going to make sure we take care of the working people.
    - It's Halloween, every four years the dems go out and try to scare senior citizens by saying we are going to take away SS and Medicare. I'm going to protect them and not going to allow them to touch your savings.
    - It's not an accident that he's the most liberal senator in the US Senate. More liberal than a senator that used to call himself a socialist.
    - He said if he lost, he'll try again in four years. That sounds like a great idea to me.

The rest below, are notes taken of the entire event:

Thank you Rudy! Thank you United Golden Eagles, thank you for that vote of confidence. I'm grateful. Senator Lindsey Graham I know you didn't understand him very well, but he's still a great guy. He serves his country both in uniform and as a United States Senator. Our daughter Meghan McCain, the next First Lady Cindy McCain. A word about America's mayor, I'll never forget going to NYC and seeing the fires still burning and this man who never missed a funeral, who consoled the families and America. Thank you Rudy. We are grateful to you, thank you so much.

It's great to spend time here in the heartland of America. The enthusiasm that I feel here in Ohio is going to carry us to Victory. We're going to bring real change, and we need a new direction, and we have to fight for it. I've been fighting for the U.S. since I was 17 and I have the scars to prove it. Could I say how proud I am to have Sarah Palin as my partner. She's been marvelous. I'm so proud of her. She represents reform, energy, the family, everything good and wonderful about America. So proud to have her as my runningmate.

I'll fight to shake up Washington, take America in a new direction. Not afraid of the fight, I'm ready for the fight. I have a plan to hold the line on taxes, cut them, to make the US nmore competitive. Double child reduction, cut capitol gains, create jobs and keep American businesses in America. Raising taxes makes a bad economy much worse. If I'm elected president I won't spend nearly a trillion dollars more of your money and Obama will. Government will live on a budget just like you do. We'll freeze gov't spending on all gov't programs except basic necessities. I'll veto every single pork barrel bill that comes across my desk. You will know their names. There's corruption in Washington. We just had a senior member of the U.S. senate convicted. I will clean up this mess and make you proud again of people that serve in Washington. Not going to spend 715 billion of your money bailing out Wall Street. I'm going to make sure we take care of the working people. The crisis started in the Housing Market. We have a plan to fix the housing market, find a way to stay in their home, we fix the bad mortgage and give those a new one so you can stay in your home. That's the American dream and this administration is not doing enough.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WHEN I'm elected president, we're going to stop sending money to country's for oil who don't like us very much. Obama's very eloquent, listen to his words. He'll consider drilling offshore. We'll drill offshore and we'll drill now. [drill baby drill!] He says he's for nuclear power but doesn't want to store it or reprocess it. How do you get there? Thanks Veterans. We've sailed navy ships around the world with nuclear power on them, it's safe. Let's do it now.

We'll invest in clean coal technology. We sit on the world largetst coal reserves, we'll lower the cost of energy within months. We'll create millions of new jobs across America. We've learned more about Obama in the last two weeks thanks to Joe the Plumber and his question. Obama revealed he wants to spread the wealth around. He didn't ask to be famous or the political attacks from the Obama campaign. The attacks on him are attacks on small businesses all across this nation. We can't stand for it. We need to support them, taxing them kills jobs. Obama will tax 50 percent of small business income. That's 16 million jobs. He's running to be redistributionist in Chief. I'm running to be Commander in Chief. He's running to spread the wealth, I'm running to create more wealth. He's running to punish the successful. I'm running to make everyone successful. He's made a lot of promises, tax relief should only go to Middle Class, see where we're going. It's interesting how the Democrats definition of rich keeps going down. It won't be long till Obama is back to his vote that taxes those making just 45,000 a year. With Reid, Frank, and Pelosi, we know they're planning more taxes. They want to tax your 401k contributions. We need to protect people's retirements, not endanger it.

It's Halloween, every four years the dems go out and try to scare senior citizens by saying we are going to take away SS and Medicare. I'm going to protect them and not going to allow them to touch your savings. The answer to a slowing economy is not higher taxes. He's going to give a tax break to 95 percent of Americans, 40 percent don't pay. He's going to take money from one group and give it to another. This doesn't work, I will not allow it to happen. What could happen if dems have total control?

It's not an accident that he's the most liberal senator in the US Senate. More liberal than a senator that used to call himself a socialist. He thinks taxes have been too low, and I think that. I will bring our troops home in victory in honor and not in defeat. Our friend, Joe the Biden referred to Jack kennedy being tested during the Cuban Missile Crisis, I have some experience in that, I know how close we came to nuclear war. I do not need to be tested. I know our interests and I know our enemies and they know me. Obama won't have the right response to that test. We know this because of the surge, he said he would sit down unconditionally with the world's worst dictators. Obama should show restraint. He's been wrong on all of these. When I'm president our troops will not suffer defeat. They are the best in the world and the best of us.

The pundits have written us off, just as they have done before. But we're closing and we're going to win in Ohio. He's measuring the drapes. This week he settled on a chief of staff. We're a few points down, but we're coming back and we're coming back strong. He said if he lost, he'll try again in four years. That sounds like a great idea to me. Will we continue to lead the world's economy, will the dworld be safer or more dangerous, will the military be the strongest in the world, will we pass to our children a stronger safer country.

I am an American and I choose to fight. Don't give up hope. Fight! Fight!

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

E-mail lori@progressiveaccountability.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sarah Stephens" <sarah@democracyinamericas.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 8/21/2015 10:45:27 AM
Subject: Trump vs. Trump -- is there another way to think about doing business in Cuba?

Having trouble viewing this message? Click Here

August 21, 2015

Dear Friends,

Back in 1996, Pamela Falk gave us a glimpse of Donald Trump's vision of doing business with Cuba:

> "The people of Cuba are the greatest in the world. I'd like to help them rebuild the country and return it to its original splendor. And as soon as the law changes, I am ready to build the Taj Mahal in Havana."

Just three years later, in his op-ed published by the Miami Herald, Trump swore he'd rather lose millions than lose his self-respect doing business with a country he called "a maximum security prison."

Was Trump against the embargo before he was for it? Apparently. But, in assuming polar opposite positions -- crusading capitalist at one moment, self-sacrificing human rights advocate the next -- he was also ahead of his time.

In 2015, we can wake up and read an urgent summons like "Travel to Cuba Now Before it Becomes a Tourist Trap." Or, hear commentators cited in Esther Allen's essay for the New York Review of Books, "joyfully predicting that the re-inauguration of the U.S. Embassy will unleash an invasion of tourists and business dollars, bringing badly needed capitalism to a place they view as backward and isolated."

It all boils down, as Ms. Allen says, to the quintessentially American argument that only we in the United States can save Cuba, "or that, by our very presence, we will inevitably destroy all the things that make it appealing to us."

Thankfully, what is coming next in Cuba is not preordained, it cannot be known, and the choices are not just black or white. It's complicated.

But, first let's be clear: This cat has scampered out of the bag. The U.S. policy transition to a post-embargo world is underway, and the forces to make the new policy irreversible are getting stronger.

Years ago, the U.S. business community -- with some exceptions -- opted out of the debate on ending trade sanctions, leaving farmers and other agriculture interests to fight with Congress and the Bush Administration over their desire to sell food to the Cuban people. After the December 17th breakthrough, President Obama awakened the slumbering giant.

The President's travel, trade, and financial reforms set off a race among U.S. corporations to see who among their domestic competitors could make it through the door first and make their case to customers in Cuba's government. That race has become all the more urgent, as Forbes explained, with "exporters in Latin America, the EU, Russia and East Asia...descending on Cuba and making deals left and right."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Business is also more confident. It helps them a lot that people like former Commerce Secretary Carlos Gutierrez, a Cuban American who served in the Bush Administration and worked for tighter sanctions to bring down the Cuban government, are accompanying U.S. businesses on this journey.

The business awakening set off a political awakening in the U.S. Congress among centrists of both parties who now understand that "the embargo is slowing Cuba's transition to a freer, more open economy," as Bill LeoGrande wrote recently. Legislation like the Cuba Trade Act of 2015 -- introduced in the House and Senate by Republican and Democratic members working together -- reflects their growing realization that the old policy and the humanitarian interests of the Cuban people are simply incompatible.

This does not mean that full-on capitalism is right around the corner. To anyone expecting that a Trump Tower will soon replace the Russian Federation's Embassy as the ugliest building in Havana, or that Starbucks and McDonalds are about to mar the Malecón's milieu, we can only say: neither the U.S. nor Cuba is ready for that to happen.

Our sanctions are still an impediment. Yes, dozens of U.S. firms are hopping planes to come to Cuba. But, if they operate in sectors outside agriculture, health, or telecommunications they can only explore. Even if Cuba wants to do business with them, and many will go home empty handed, they cannot do a deal without a license from U.S. Treasury or Commerce making an exception to the embargo. Some will be granted, but ultimately companies that want to move faster will have to turn up the pressure on Congress to end the embargo (we urge them to do so).

Yes, some quick buck artists are flying in and out of Cuba, but many others are companies with long records of doing business in Latin America including joint ventures with state and corporate counterparts. To strike a meaningful relationship in Cuba that will ultimately produce profits and real gains for both sides will require them to adopt a long time horizon.

There are also structural brakes to prevent foreign investment from spinning out of control in Cuba. In his compelling article, What You Might Not Know about the Cuban Economy, Professor Jorge Dominguez lays out Cuba's multiple challenges - its demographic problems, limited employment options for Cubans, and more - militating against a sudden shift to Cancun capitalism.

Although he praises Cuba's "really, really well-educated and cheap workforce, as well as substantial evidence of entrepreneurial potential," Dominguez says U.S. restrictions on investment and the complicated context facing the island's political leaders are the biggest barriers to Cuba's potential to boom.

How complicated? Michael Bustamante writes in Foreign Affairs about opponents within the Cuban state standing against Google's offer to install a national mobile WIFI network on the island. He quotes Second Vice President José Ramón Machado Ventura who said, "There are some people who want to give [the Internet] to us for free...to penetrate us and do ideological work for a new conquest."

Bustamante points out the irony that revolutionary loyalists in Havana are actually in alignment with "anti-Cuban government holdouts in Miami," as opponents to closer commercial relations between Cuba and the United States. Although we suspect that irony will be lost on the fellow whose essay "When Helping 'the Cuban people' Means Bankrolling the Castros" graced the pages of the Wall Street Journal in June.

Cuba and the U.S. are two countries with extremely different systems of government that suffer from the same dilemma. No one has designed a political system that can settle these problems without disorder and delay. The business of reconciling a relationship broken for five decades is really complicated.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Even Trump admits that. After President Obama announced the breakthrough with Cuba last December, Trump didn't oppose it. He just said he would've gotten a better deal.

This week in Cuba News...

U.S.-Cuba Relations
- Reports indicate U.S. eager to boost travel to Cuba in 2015
- After the Flag-Raising: A Renewed Focus on Diplomacy, and Cubans Who Could Scarcely Believe their Eyes
- Additional medical supplies will soon head to Cuba
- U.S. and Cuban chemists look forward to increased collaboration

In Cuba
- Number of Cubans traveling abroad rises
- Tagged Mako shark connects to Cuban and U.S. scientists by satellite
- How will tourism impact Cuba's environment?
- Update: Drought conditions in Cuba

Cuba's Foreign Relations
- Presidents of Cuba and Venezuela meet on the day Secretary Kerry visits Cuba

Recommended Reading
- The Meaning of a U.S. Embassy in Havana , Yoani Sanchez, The Atlantic
- What they're saying about the U.S. Embassy in Havana , David Gomez, #CubaNow
- What you might not know about the Cuban economy , Jorge Dominguez, Harvard Business Review
- Stop punishing Cuba's people , William LeoGrande, Newsday
- Even After the Cuba Deal, Latin America Is Still Leery of Obama , Rohan Chatterjee, Upside Down World
- Castro, Cuba and Catholicism: A tangled trinity, Michelle Gonzalez , Al Jazeera
- Afro-Cuban Twin Sisters Talk About Race Through A New Cigar Line , Carmen Sesin, NBC News
- Cuba: We Never Left, Esther Allen , NYRDaily
- Relevant reads: Three novels about Cuba , Kerri Miller, MPR News
- CDA Summer Book Recommendations

Recommended Viewing
- Secy. Gutierrez: Cuba is changing , Andrea Mitchell, MSNBC
- U.S. Raises Flag in Cuba After 54 Years, Prisoner Exchanges and "Stork Diplomacy"; Embargo Remains, Juan González, Democracy Now!
- Travel to Cuba Takes Flight: The Top Reasons to Visit, Scarlet Fu and Betty Liu , Bloomberg Business
- Photographer Roberto Salas Had 'Privileged' Access to Fidel Castro , Lester Holt, NBC News
- Looking Into the Eyes of Cuba's Elderly, on the Verge of Change , Alexa Keefe, National Geographic

U.S.-Cuba Relations

Reports indicate U.S. eager to boost travel to Cuba in 2015

This week, ABC News reported that the Obama administration plans to further ease travel restrictions to Cuba by the end of the year, possibly including new rules to allow U.S. travelers to go to the island individually, rather than having to be part of a group, so long as they abide by regulatory requirements of people-to-people travel.

Labelling the prospective change "tourism," Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen issued a statement saying "Any effort to increase tourism travel to the island is illegal but the Obama administration, once again, has decided to change the law when it is up to Congress to do so."

As ABC News and the Wall Street Journal report, however, the administration enjoys the required regulatory authority to allow travel to Cuba for individuals so long as they abide by the requirements that apply to participants in people-to-people programs organized by groups. The rules are administered at the U.S. Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Writing on behalf of the Center for Democracy in the Americas (CDA), Sarah Stephens urged Treasury Secretary Jacob Lew to provide for individual travel saying "This change would expand the flow of U.S. visitors to Cuba, broaden contacts between Cubans and the people of our country, and increase the amount of transactions taking place directly between U.S. visitors and Cuban entrepreneurs."

CDA publishes the Cuba Central Newsblast.

The Wall Street Journal also reported that the two countries have exchanged proposals for an updated Air Transport Agreement that would enable airlines to reestablish regularly-scheduled commercial flights between U.S. and Cuba by year's end. The two countries last inked a pact to facilitate civil aviation in 1953 .

As Reuters reported, the State Department indicated there is no official timeline for the resumption of commercial air travel to Cuba, but they "have commenced initial discussions with Cuban counterparts regarding an arrangement on this issue." In a statement, the State Department explained, "We remain in contact with the Cuban government regarding the establishment of scheduled air service, which U.S. airlines say they are eager to offer to authorized travelers," as Reuters reported.

Since President Obama entered office, his administration has steadily eased restrictions on travel to Cuba. In 2009, the administration lifted all limits on family visits and remittances. In 2011, the President restored 12 categories of so-called "purposeful travel," allowing non-tourist trips for educational, religious, and cultural purposes among others, and increased the number of airports in the U.S. permitted to serve the Cuban market. Following the diplomatic breakthrough with Cuba last year, the administration began issuing general licenses rather than specific licenses for Americans traveling to Cuba under one of 12 categories .

With U.S. travel to Cuba up 54% from January to July over the same period in 2014, this year, airlines like American Airlines and JetBlue are increasingly interested in the Cuban market. American Airlines, which recently announced its plans to operate a charter flight between Los Angeles and Havana, will launch 1,200 charter flights to Cuba this year. In July, Jet Blue started offering weekly charter service to Cuba from New York's John F. Kennedy Airport, while CheapAir became the first site to sell tickets to Cuba online.

The ban on travel to Cuba for tourism can only be lifted by an Act of Congress. Bipartisan bills have been offered in the House and Senate to restore the freedom to travel to Cuba, and an amendment to end the travel ban was approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee in July, as we previously reported .

After the Flag-Raising: A Renewed Focus on Diplomacy, and Cubans Who Could Scarcely Believe their Eyes

Although we provided up-to-the-minute coverage of the flag-raising at the U.S. Embassy in Havana last week , we cover additional reports on the status of U.S.-Cuba diplomacy and the impact of ceremony on people in both countries and world-wide here.

Following the embassy event, Secretary Kerry was joined by Cuba's Foreign Minister Bruno Rodriguez at the Hotel Nacional where they met with reporters . In his remarks, Foreign Minister Rodriguez said he "reiterated to Secretary Kerry that our government is willing to normalize relations with the United States on the basis of respect and equality without any prejudice to the independence and sovereignty of Cuba, and without any interference in our internal affairs."

Kerry announced U.S.-Cuba talks will begin in mid-September to discuss "full normalization" of ties, AP reports . Three areas of focus for these negotiations will be

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

1) naval cooperation, climate change, and environment, 2) direct airline flights and U.S. telecommunications, 3) embargo, human rights, and political fugitives. Kerry also reiterated that the U.S. does not currently have plans to change U.S. immigration rules, namely the Cuban Adjustment Act of 1966, which forms the basis of the "wet-foot, dry-foot policy," as we have reported .

In response to Secretary Kerry's comments earlier in the day, "We remain convinced the people of Cuba would be best served by a genuine democracy," Mr. Rodriguez told reporters that Cuba has "gender and racial equality, free education and healthcare, and [doesn't] suffer from the flaws of America's cash-fueled electoral system," the Los Angeles Times reported.

He went on to say, "Cuba is not a place where you can see police brutality ... We do not practice torture," a presumed reference to the U.S. military base at Guantanamo, and that "Cuba is proud of its performance on human rights."

After concluding his appearance with Minister Rodriguez, and taking a walk around Old Havana's historic Plaza de San Francisco with City Historian Eusebio Leal , Secretary Kerry drove to the residence of U.S. Ambassador Jeffrey DeLaurentis. There, he gave remarks to an audience that included Cuban-Americans, U.S. and foreign diplomats.

The reception at the Ambassador's residence was attended by several prominent Cuban dissidents including Jose Daniel Ferrer, Miriam Leiva, and Yoani Sanchez, according to AP. But, several others turned down their invitations to the private reception where they could have spoken to the Secretary of State, Fox News Latino reports . In an interview with TV Martí , Berta Soler, leaders of Damas de Blanco (Ladies in White), said "We're working hard, fighting 17 Sundays of repression and resistance; we don't have time for ceremonies."

According to numerous sources, the embassy ceremony had a big impact in Cuba and elsewhere. Reuters reported that some Cubans could scarcely believe that Kerry's speech with its criticism of Cuba's government had been carried on state television.

Retired Cuban diplomat Carlos Alzugaray told the Associated Press said Friday's events "had a great impact on people, who became enthused and started talking much more easily about those themes" of democracy and liberty. The Guardian also reported that "Cubans said they welcomed Kerry's call, openly discussing their desire for more democracy without the requests for anonymity or slow measuring of words that once were nearly universal."

After returning to Vermont having witnessed the flag-raising in Havana, Senator Patrick Leahy (VT) told home state reporters , "I'll admit that I had a couple of tears flowing, after all these years to see this."

The editorial board of the Wall Street Journal shed no tears, but complained that political control over Cuba by its revolution government hadn't "changed a whit since President Obama decided to recognize the Cuban regime in December." This was too much for Daniel Larison who, writing for The American Conservative , said "There are many bad and weak objections to restoring diplomatic relations with Cuba, but this is one of the silliest."

Additional medical supplies will soon head to Cuba

Heart to Heart International , a Kansas-based nonprofit group that supplies medical equipment in times of disaster, plans to travel to Cuba soon with a 40-foot-long container full of medical supplies, according to the Kansas City Star . Pending approval from Cuban authorities, the organization plans to board a ship to Cuba and personally deliver essential medical supplies such as catheters, syringes, rubber gloves, diapers, thermometers, and antibiotics to a pediatric hospital, Hospital Pediátrico William Soler, in Havana.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Heart to Heart's relationship with Cuba began in 2013 when founder Gary Morsch visited Cuba with the Nazarene Church. Cuba has approximately 69,000 doctors, or 6.7 physicians for every 1,000 citizens according to the World Bank ; however, medical supplies are hard to come by, due largely to U.S. laws which sharply restrict the licensing needed for U.S. firms to sell medicines and medical equipment in Cuba.

Robert Prescott, a coordinator for the Nazarene Church, explains that "Cuba has a great shortage of medicine...Even people traveling to Cuba [are] encourage[d] to bring medicines...because they have such a shortage." Heart to Heart CEO Jim Mitchum notes, "It is an interesting contrast...Cuba is a major medical educator for the entire South American and Central American set of countries. Their medical education is perceived in Latin America as the best."

Journeys like this have been taking place for nearly twenty-five years; Pastors for Peace, for example, organized its trademarked Cuba Friendship Caravans in 1992, which provided 15 tons of humanitarian aid. Catholic Relief Services with Caritas Cubana started its relationship with Cuba the following year.

Importantly, this is not a one-way street. As many physicians in the U.S. have argued , increasing medical cooperation would benefit both Cuba and the U.S. U.S. researchers are interested in Cuban medicines like CimaVax, a vaccine which targets a protein that cancer cells attract and use to multiply. The vaccine has been available in Cuba since 2011. As we previously reported , Roswell Park Cancer Institute in Buffalo signed an agreement with the Center for Molecular Immunology in Havana that will enable clinical trials for Cimavax, a therapy to stop the growth of cancerous tumors, to start in the U.S.

U.S. and Cuban chemists look forward to increased collaboration

This past week, Cuban and American chemists met at the American Chemical Society's (ACS) 250th conference in Boston. Both Cuban and American chemists are eager for increased scientific collaboration and hope that opportunities to work together will grow as relations between the two countries continue to normalize.

ACS has six members in Cuba, but, as recently as March, its Cuban membership often had trouble getting to international chemistry conferences due to visa issues. Travel restrictions and the U.S. embargo have posed big hurdles for collaboration, according to Brad Miller, ACS's chief international officer. Miller explains that there are more than 230 research centers in Cuba, and in the past 30 years more than 160,000 Cubans have received Chemistry degrees.

Daniel García Rivera, a chemistry professor at the University of Havana, Cuba's only university with a doctoral program in Chemistry, suggested that U.S. and Cuban scientists could benefit from collaboration in areas like chemical ecology, catalysis and chemical education. Cuban and U.S. researchers in fields as diverse as medicine and botany are already successfully pursuing closer collaborations, as we previously reported .

International cooperation was responsible for 75 percent of chemistry publications emerging from the University of Havana this past year, leading Rivera and his American colleagues to confirm that international exchanges could be beneficial for both communities.

In Cuba

Number of Cubans traveling abroad rises

Cubans' trips abroad rose 23.7% over the previous year, reported Cuba's state media and Fox News Latino . Cubans made over 355,000 trips in 2014; a year after President Raúl Castro made migration reforms that eliminated the need for exit permits and "letter[s] of invitation" in an effort to "modernize" the island's policies. While Cuba's government also increased the length of time Cubans can spend abroad from 11 months to 24 months, travel is still limited for certain groups of professionals and athletes considered 'vital' to the country's interests.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Tagged Mako Shark Connects to Cuban and U.S. Scientists by Satellite

Forty years after Jaws, when a man-eating mechanical shark made millions of moviegoers think twice about getting back into the water, at least one Mako shark is using satellite technology to ping Cuban and U.S. researchers who are tracking its movements for science.

"The shark was tagged on February 14 offshore of Cojimar in northern Cuba," Science Daily reported and, in just five months swam nearly 5,500 miles, on a journey that passed by Florida and the Bahamas, Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula, and the coasts of New Jersey and Virginia near Washington, D.C.

Understanding the "maximum likelihood track" of sharks is interesting to marine researchers who work on shark conservation. According to Dr. Robert Hueter, Director of the Center for Shark Research at Mote, "There is a ton known about shortfin makos and almost nothing known about the longfin, which wasn't described until 1966 by the Cuban ichthyologist Dr. Dario Guitart Manday."

The experiment worked according to plan; in July, Science Daily said, "the long-fin mako's tag separated from its tether to the shark, as it was programmed to do, floated to the surface and began sending its archived data to Mote scientists via satellite."

The project brought together marine research experts from Cuba and the U.S. including the Center for Shark Research at Mote Marine Laboratory (located in Sarasota, Florida), Cuba's Center for Coastal Ecosystems Research, the University of Havana, and other Cuban institutions. The Environmental Defense Fund , which has worked with Cuban counterparts, on shark conservation since 2010.

The satellite tagging project was the subject of an hour-long documentary presented by the Discovery Channel, the Japan Times reported.

Scientists are debating whether the locations, the length and depth of the shark's swim, were indicative of feeding, mating, or "just passing through."

But, as one researcher said somewhat ominously, "Clearly there's something in that location [referring to the Chesapeake Bay area near Washington, D.C.] that's attracting mature males in the summer."

How will tourism impact Cuba's environment?

Cuba's marine environment is renowned for its pristine beds of sea grass, mangrove forests, and coral reef with precious Elkhorn coral. While reestablished U.S.-Cuba relations is allowing critical coral reef restoration partnerships and new research collaboration as we've previously reported , some observers worry about the effect of increased tourism on the environment, the Orlando Sentinel reports .

"Most Cubans I know want to be more like a Costa Rica than a Cancun," explains Dan Whittle, Environmental Defense Fund's director of marine and coastal conservation. While Cuba already has environmental protection laws and preservation areas, extensive testing and funding are concerns moving forward. The question of how fully the country will pursue development will likely be a topic at the seventh Congress of the Cuban Communist Party in 2016, Dan Whittle told the NYT .

Update: Drought conditions in Cuba

As we reported last week , Cuba is currently experiencing a year-long drought. Paired with record heat and water leakages, the drought is having a significant impact on Cubans and the island's economy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Reuters reports that the drought is damaging crops - "From Cuba's famous cigars to sugar, vegetables, rice, coffee and beans" - which poses risks to Cubans' food security, setbacks for its ability to earn foreign exchange through exports, and its plan for reducing the costs of importing food to feed the country, a fundamental problem for the national economy.

As the BBC reported , "The drought started two years ago, and reservoirs are now down to a fifth of their normal levels." One in ten residents is currently relying on government tank trucks for water, Reuters said .

On Tuesday, the Cuban News Agency said 242 dams operated by Cuba's National Water Institute were at 35% of their total capacity, rainfall for July was down by one-third, and Cuban provinces from Granma and Santiago de Cuba to the East to Pinar Del Rio in the West were acutely feeling the effects of the drought.

On Monday, Cuba put its civil defense system on alert, according to Reuters .

Cuba's Foreign Relations

Presidents of Cuba and Venezuela meet on the day Secretary Kerry visits Cuba

Secretary Kerry's visit to Cuba coincided with a meeting between Cuba's President Raúl Castro and the President of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Nicolás Maduro,Granma, the state newspaper, reports . Venezuela's First Lady, Cilia Flores, referred to "by the more ideologically resonant title 'first combatant,'" and Cuba's Foreign Minister, Bruno Rodríguez also attended the meeting.

Two days earlier, Secretary Kerry told Andres Oppenheimer, a columnist for the Miami Herald, that the United States and Cuba have discussed Venezuela's political and economic crisis during U.S.-Cuba talks to normalize ties. "We talked very specifically about America's desire to have a relationship with the Venezuelan people that raises the ability of the people of Venezuela to be able to be protected, respected, represented and actually see their lives improve," he said, clarifying that "they (the Cubans) did not make any promises. But, hopefully, they will represent (to Venezuela) that what we are doing with them now is beneficial, so why shouldn't Venezuela also go the same road?"

Recommended Reading

The Meaning of a U.S. Embassy in Havana , Yoani Sanchez, The Atlantic
Cuban blogger Yoani Sanchez writes about a conflict of eras unfolding in Cuba, where the U.S. is no longer "enemy," and "the beginning of the stage of absorbing who we are, and recognizing why we have only made it this far."

What they're saying about the U.S. Embassy in Havana , David Gomez, #CubaNow
#CubaNow compiled the most comprehensive summary of reactions of Cubans and Cuban-Americans to newspaper editorials to Members of Congress.

What you might not know about the Cuban economy , Jorge Dominguez, Harvard Business Review
Harvard University's Professor Dominguez writes, "Cuba has a really, really well-educated and cheap workforce, as well as substantial evidence of entrepreneurial potential. If its political leaders can manage to lift constraints on investment, create the right incentives, and reform its tax code, the country could really boom. But that's a lot of change to expect for the insular government of an island nation that's otherwise stuck in time."

Stop punishing Cuba's people , William LeoGrande, Newsday

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

William LeoGrande makes the case for ending the U.S. embargo on Cuba, citing the practical and moral dimensions of its punitive consequences for the Cuban people.

Even After the Cuba Deal, Latin America Is Still Leery of Obama , Rohan Chatterjee, Upside Down World

Castro, Cuba and Catholicism: A tangled trinity , Michelle Gonzalez, Al Jazeera
As the papal visit in September 2015 approaches, this article outlines the history of Cuba's relationship with the Catholic Church.

Afro-Cuban Twin Sisters Talk About Race Through A New Cigar Line , Carmen Sesin, NBC News
Two Afro-Cuban sisters who grew up in Miami are Cigar entrepreneurs. They discuss race and identity.

Cuba: We Never Left , Esther Allen, NYRDaily
Esther Allen confronts the two versions of our simplified understanding of the Republic of Cuba.

Relevant reads: Three novels about Cuba , Kerri Miller, MPR News

To cap off your summer reading, we recommend:
Everyone Leaves, Wendy Guerra
Havana Nocturne, T.J. English
Days of Awe, Achy Obejas
Waiting for Snow in Havana, Carlos Eire

Recommended Viewing

Secy. Gutierrez: Cuba is changing , Andrea Mitchell, MSNBC
Former Commerce Secretary under George W. Bush, Carlos Gutierrez, returns to Cuba after fleeing with family in 1960 and describes his emotional homecoming.

U.S. Raises Flag in Cuba After 54 Years, Prisoner Exchanges and "Stork Diplomacy"; Embargo Remains, Juan González, Democracy Now!
Former Cuban diplomat Carlos Alzugaray and U.S. Cuba expert Peter Kornbluh discuss the developments that led up to the diplomatic breakthrough between the U.S. and Cuba on the day the flag was raised at the U.S. Embassy in Havana.

Travel to Cuba Takes Flight: The Top Reasons to Visit , Scarlet Fu and Betty Liu, Bloomberg Business
Cheapair.com CEO Jeff Klee discusses his predictions for Cuban air travel and tourism

Photographer Roberto Salas Had 'Privileged' Access to Fidel Castro , Lester Holt, NBC News
Photographer Roberto Salas chronicled the life of Fidel Castro in pictures, beginning in 1955.

Looking Into the Eyes of Cuba's Elderly, on the Verge of Change , Alexa Keefe, National Geographic Israeli photographer Oded Wagenstein documents his experiences with Cuba's elderly over the course of several visits to the island.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Until next time,

The Cuba Central Team

DONATE NOW THROUGH Network for Good

Like our work? Consider a monthly donation!

The Cuba Central Newsblast is produced by the Center for Democracy in the Americas (CDA). CDA is devoted to changing U.S. policy toward Cuba and the other countries of the Americas by basing our relations on mutual respect, fostering dialogue with those governments and movements with which U.S. policy is at odds, and recognizing positive trends in democracy and governance. For more information, check out the CDA website . You can also like us on Facebook or follow us on Twitter .

© 2015 Center for Democracy in the Americas. All rights reserved.

Forward email

SafeUnsubscribe

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com by sarah@democracyinamericas.org |
Update Profile/Email Address | Rapid removal with SafeUnsubscribe ™ | About our service provider.

Trusted Email from Constant Contact FREE
Try it FREE today.

Center for Democracy in the Americas | PO Box 53106 NW | Washington | DC | 20009

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jeff Harris" <jeff@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: "Jeff Harris" <jeff@progressiveaccountability.org>
Date: 10/30/2008 12:42:13 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 10/30

08 Election Daily News Clips
October 30th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

7:00am Palin: interview airs on ABC's "Good Morning America"

10:00am McCain: holds a "Road to Victory" rally at a junior high school in Defiance, Ohio

10:00am BUSH: makes remarks at a graduation ceremony for the Federal Bureau of Investigation Special Agents at the academy in Quantico, Virginia

10:30am Palin: holds a "Road to Victory" rally in Cape Girardeau, Missouri

11:40 BUSH: visits a Marine Helicopter Squadron One Hangarin Quantico, Virginia

1:45pm McCain: makes a "Town Square Stop" at Washington Park in Sandusky, Ohio

2:30pm Palin: holds a national security roundtable in Erie, Pennsylvania

3:10pm McCain: makes a "Town Square Stop" at the campus of Lorain County Community College in Elyria, Ohio

4:15pm Palin: holds a "Road to Victory" rally at the Bayfront Convention Center in Erie, Pennsylvania

6:00pm McCain: holds a "Road to Victory" rally in Mentor, Ohio

7:30pm Palin: holds a "Road to Victory" rally at Bowman Field in Williamsport, Pennsylvania

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

McCain, GOP gain ground on Obama ads in key states (AP 10/30/08)
By JIM KUHNHENN
WASHINGTON -- After weeks of being out-advertised by Barack Obama, Republican presidential candidate John McCain and the Republican Party are nearly matching the Democratic nominee ad for ad in key battleground markets.
Ad spending and ad placement data obtained from Democratic and Republican operatives show that in the closing days of the campaign the Republican voice has grown louder in states such as Florida, Ohio, North Carolina, Virginia and Pennsylvania.
http://www.miamiherald.com/news/politics/AP/story/747828.html

McCain Warns Of Iran Nukes During Tampa Visit (Tampa Tribune 10/30/08)
By WILLIAM MARCH
TAMPA - Sen. John McCain said Wednesday that if Sen. Barack Obama is elected president, Iran may succeed in acquiring nuclear weapons.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Because he is untested, Barack Obama would only invite an international crisis," he said. "And we know well what one of those crises could be: the success of the Iranian regime in its program of acquiring nuclear weapons."
McCain held a round table on national security issues at the University of Tampa, followed by a short speech delivered to a crowd of invited supporters and local Republican notables. The event was closed to the public and most of the press, and McCain didn't take any questions.
http://www2.tbo.com/content/2008/oct/30/na-mccain-visits-tampa-for-closed-event/

In Tampa, McCain focuses on security (Orlando Sentinel 10/30/08)
TAMPA - With his campaign days numbered, Republican presidential nominee John McCain on Wednesday sought to shift attention from the economy back to what many view as the most powerful argument for his candidacy: national security…McCain spent Wednesday campaigning for Florida's 27 electoral votes, a key to his ability to muster the 270 needed to win. But some faculty members and students at the University of Tampa, where the Arizona senator met behind closed doors with former military officers and national-security advisers to discuss national security, said the weakening economy and education are bigger priorities.
http://www.orlandosentinel.com/news/local/state/orl-mccain3008oct30,0,7144721.story

McCain Tries to Shift Focus to Security (WSJ 10/30/08)
By LAURA MECKLER and CHRISTOPHER COOPER
TAMPA, Fla. -- Sen. John McCain on Wednesday sought to steer the presidential-campaign conversation to national security, saying rival Sen. Barack Obama had given voters "no reason" to believe he could protect the nation from grave threats.
Sen. McCain's brief national-security speech was a departure in an election season dominated by the economy. The Republican presidential nominee reminded his audience that world threats will be present after the current financial crisis is resolved.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122532308235682149.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

McCain Embraces a G.O.P. Theme: No More Taxes (NYT 10/30/08)
By ELISABETH BUMILLER
MIAMI — In these waning days of Senator John McCain's quest for the White House, he has returned in his speeches to a time-honored Republican attack line against Democrats: the evils of taxes. Or, as he summed it up while pummeling Senator Barack Obama in a lumberyard here on Wednesday, "This is the fundamental difference between Senator Obama and me: He thinks taxes are too low, and I think that spending is too high."
The line was the central theme of the final version of Mr. McCain's evolving stump speech and reflected what his advisers calculate is his last, best argument against Mr. Obama. Higher taxes, they say, strike fear in voters already threatened by the precarious economy, as do Mr. McCain's charges that Mr. Obama would effectively be a socialist.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/30/us/politics/30mccain.html?pagewanted=print

McCain hits Obama on experience and economy (Reuters 10/29/08)
By Jeff Mason
MIAMI (Reuters) - Republican John McCain questioned Democratic rival Barack Obama's readiness for the White House and Obama planned a prime-time television appeal on Wednesday as a bruising presidential battle hit the final stretch.
McCain kicked off a tour of the must-win state of Florida with a warning that Democratic control of the White House and Congress would be bad news for small businesses and American workers. "The answer to a slowing economy is not higher taxes, but that is exactly what is going to happen when the Democrats have total control of Washington. We can't let that happen," McCain told supporters at a rally in Miami, Florida, six days before Tuesday's vote.
http://www.reuters.com/article/topNews/idUSTRE4998X420081029?feedType=RSS&feedName=topNews

McCain Attacks Los Angeles Times Over Its Refusal to Release '03 Obama Video (NYT 10/30/08)
By RICHARD PÉREZ-PEÑA
Alleging media bias in favor of Democrats, Senator John McCain and Gov. Sarah Palin seized Wednesday on The Los Angeles Times's refusal to release a five-year-old videotape of Barack Obama at a dinner honoring a Palestinian rights advocate.
The video shows a gathering in Chicago for Rashid Khalidi, a teacher, writer and Obama friend who is critical of

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Israel. Mr. Obama spoke at the dinner, where other speakers likened Israel and Israelis to terrorists. The McCain campaign said the tape could show how Mr. Obama reacted to anti-Israel remarks.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/30/us/politics/30campaign.html?pagewanted=print

McCain Again Points to Obama's Associates (WaPo 10/30/08)
By Michael D. Shear
MIAMI, Oct. 29 -- Sen. John McCain compared the director of Columbia University's Middle East Institute to a "neo-Nazi" and called on the Los Angeles Times to release a video of a 2003 banquet at which Sen. Barack Obama talked about the professor, Rashid Khalidi, a leading Palestinian American scholar and friend of Obama's from Chicago…McCain also alleged that Vietnam War-era radical William Ayers had been at the banquet -- something that has not been reported by the Times -- adding to a growing flap over the release of the videotape, which the Times said had been provided by a source on the condition that the paper not air it.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/29/AR2008102904037.html

McCain faults paper for not releasing Khalidi tape (AP 10/29/08)
By BETH FOUHY
BOWLING GREEN, Ohio (AP) -- Republicans John McCain and Sarah Palin accused the Los Angeles Times on Wednesday of protecting Barack Obama by withholding a videotape of the Democrat attending a 2003 party for a Palestinian-American professor and critic of Israel. The paper said it had written about the event in April and would not release the tape because of a promise to the source who provided it…McCain also has ties to Khalidi through a group Khalidi helped found 15 years ago. The Center for Palestine Research and Studies received at least $448,000 from an organization McCain chairs.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/M/MCCAIN_PALIN_KHALIDI?SITE=MAFAL&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

McCain Chief Loyalist Has New Role (WaPo 10/30/08)
By Michael Leahy
Mark Salter -- who has served Sen. John McCain for 19 years in roles including speechwriter and biographer, chief of staff and gatekeeper -- is commonly referred to as the boss's "alter ego." This means chief loyalist. It means someone so close to McCain that the candidate has said he regards him as a brother of sorts. But these days the 53-year-old Salter is an angry man, even angrier than he was that day last spring in his office, when McCain had already captured the Republican presidential nomination and Barack Obama was still fighting his way through the Democratic primaries.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/29/AR2008102904035.html

McCain denies racism will determine election's outcome (CNN blog 10/29/08)
(CNN) — Presidential candidate John McCain denied Wednesday that race will determine the outcome of next week's election pitting him against Barack Obama, who hopes to become the country's first black president.
"Look, there's racism in America — we all know that," the Republican hopeful told CNN's "Larry King Live" in a taped interview set to air Wednesday evening.
"But I am totally convinced that 99 and forty-four-one-hundredths percent of Americans are going to make the decision based on who is best to lead this country," he continued.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/29/mccain-denies-racism-will-determine-elections-outcome/

Out of bounds! McCain's wrong on World Series delay (McClatchy 10/29/08)
By David Lightman
Throw the flag against: John McCain. Call: Unsportsmanlike conduct.
What happened: "No one will delay the World Series game with an infomercial when I'm president," the Republican presidential nominee told a crowd Tuesday in Hershey, Pa…Why that's wrong: It's not unusual for World Series games to start after 8:30 p.m., and according to the Web site Politico, the Fox executive who's responsible for the Obama ad purchase said the infomercial was replacing only the pre-game show… McCain himself was responsible for shifting the time of the National Football League's 2008 opening game. NBC moved the Washington Redskins-New York Giants game up at least an hour, to 7 p.m. EDT, so that McCain's Republican convention speech could be broadcast around 10 p.m. on Sept. 4.
Penalty: 15 yards for misleading the public about Obama and the World Series.

John McCain could still win — if everything broke his way (McClatchy 10/29/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Steven Thomma
WASHINGTON — John McCain still could win.
It would take what one analyst calls a "perfect storm" of events breaking his way in the campaign's final days, but he could come from behind, overtake Barack Obama and pull off the greatest upset in 60 years.
He'd have to squeeze out more support from independents, score higher with his "Joe the Plumber" warning about Obama's tax and economic polices, and hope that enough undecided voters swing his way to help him sweep almost all the states that now are considered tossups.
Difficult? Yes. Impossible? No.
http://www.mcclatchydc.com/election2008/story/54972.html

PALIN NEWS

Palin revs up Chillicothe (Columbus Dispatch 10/30/08)
By Jonathan Riskind
CHILLICOTHE, Ohio -- Republican Sarah Palin roused a crowd yesterday in this key swing city by attacking Democrat Barack Obama's current economic plans and past associations, including with a critic of Israel.
During a 30-minute speech in front of the Ross County Courthouse, the GOP vice presidential nominee concluded a three-city swing through Ohio with the charge that "Sen. Obama has an ideological commitment to higher taxes. Barack Obama is for bigger government and higher taxes."
http://www.dispatch.com/live/content/local_news/stories/2008/10/30/PALIN30_story.ART_ART_10-30-08_A3_6OBOAM0.html?sid=101

Palin blasts Obama for ties to Palestinian professor (CNN blog 10/29/08)
By Peter Hamby
BOWLING GREEN, Ohio (CNN) – Sarah Palin thrust Barack Obama's relationship with a Palestinian academic into the national spotlight on Wednesday at a rally in Ohio — a tactic reminiscent of her repeated attempts to tie Obama to former radical William Ayers.
Palin kicked off her rally in Bowling Green by stressing, as she always does, that "it is not negative campaigning to call someone out on their record." In recent weeks Palin has used that line to open up an attack on Obama's tax plans. On Wednesday, she tried something different.
"It seems that there is yet another radical professor from the neighborhood who spent a lot of time with Barack Obama going back several years," Palin said. "This is important because his associate, Rashid Khalidi, he, in addition to being a political ally of Barack Obama, he's a former spokesperson for the Paliestinian Liberation Organization."
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/29/palin-blasts-obama-for-ties-to-palestinian-professor/

Palin faces new ethics complaint over kids' travel (AP 10/29/08)
By RACHEL D'ORO
ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) -- A new ethics complaint has been filed against Sarah Palin, accusing the Alaska governor of abusing her power by charging the state when her children traveled with her.
The complaint alleges that the Republican vice presidential nominee used her official position as governor for personal gain, violating a statute of the Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act. It follows a report by The Associated Press last week that Palin charged the state more than $21,000 for her three daughters' commercial flights, including events where they weren't invited, and later ordered their expense forms amended to specify official state business.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/P/PALIN_ETHICS_COMPLAINT?SITE=RIPAW&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

No Dissension in the McCain Campaign Ranks, Palin Says (WSJ 10/30/08)
By ELIZABETH HOLMES
TOLEDO, Ohio -- Republican vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin tried to tamp down reports about internal dissent in the McCain campaign, telling the Wall Street Journal Tuesday: "I laugh at 'em." "I have nothing but praise for those involved in this campaign," she said in the brief interview aboard her plane.
With just six days left until the general election, the onetime popular pick has, after a series of blunders, increasingly been accused of being a drag on presidential candidate Sen. John McCain. Gov. Palin has also been the subject of criticism, via the media, from Republicans and unnamed campaign staffers, that she has gone "rogue" and refused orders from her handlers in an attempt to salvage her own political future should the ticket lose the election.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122530113083680845.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

Republican VP nominee Palin eyeing 2012: report (AP 10/29/08)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Joanne Allen
WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Whether or not Republican presidential candidate John McCain is elected next week, his running mate, Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin, plans to remain on the U.S. national political scene, ABC News reported on Wednesday.
Asked about 2012, whether she was discouraged by daily attacks on the campaign trail and whether she would return home to Alaska, the Republican vice presidential nominee signaled that she expects to be a player in the next presidential election cycle.
http://www.reuters.com/article/topNews/idUSTRE49S99J20081029?feedType=RSS&feedName=topNews

Palin suggests she's now GOP political fixture (AP 10/29/08)
By BETH FOUHY
TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) -- Facing the unhappy prospect of defeat, Republican vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin indicated Wednesday that she will not disappear from the national political scene if the GOP ticket loses on Tuesday.
"Absolutely not. I think that, if I were to give up and wave a white flag of surrender against some of the political shots that we've taken, that ... that would ... bring this whole ... I'm not doing this for naught," Palin said in an interview with ABC News, according to excerpts of a transcript released by the television network.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/P/PALIN?SITE=MAFAL&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

Sarah Palin: 'Not Doing This For Naught' (ABC News 10/29/08)
By RUSSELL GOLDMAN
Down in the polls but certainly not out, Gov. Sarah Palin remains in the fight as the campaign enters its final week.
In an interview with ABC News' Elizabeth Vargas, the Republican vice-presidential nominee was asked about 2012, whether she was discouraged by the daily attacks on the campaign trail, and would instead pack it in and return to her home state of Alaska.
"I think that, if I were to give up and wave a white flag of surrender against some of the political shots that we've taken, that would bring this whole & I'm not doing this for naught," Palin said.
http://abcnews.go.com/print?id=6141033

With Palin Away, Lt. Gov. Parnell Takes On Expanded Role in Alaska (WSJ 10/30/08)
By JIM CARLTON
Gov. Palin handles some state business from the campaign trail, such as making appointments and ordering flags lowered at half staff. But Lt. Gov. Parnell has served as the face of state government, filling in for the governor at events such as an Oct. 8 reception he co-hosted in Anchorage for foreign defense attachés representing 32 countries. And as the partisan fights marking the presidential race nationally have seeped into Alaska, the mild-mannered lieutenant governor -- once known for helping cut deals across party lines -- has taken on a new role: hard-edged political fighter.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122528843986080115.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

Sarah Palin: 2009 Calendar Girl (WSJ blog 10/29/08)
By Susan Davis
Win or lose next Tuesday, admirers of Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin can gaze at her all year round with the release of the 2009 Sarah Palin calendar, filled with original photos from Anchorage-based photographer and friend-of-Palin Judy Patrick.
The 13-month calendar–the first of its kind–includes dozens of original portraits and candid shots of the Alaska governor on the job and with her family. July's pictorial, for instance, features Palin wrapped in the American flag, with a sidebar of pictures of her and her children.
"This flag photo was taken just days after the terrorist attacks on 9/11 in 2001. Sarah, like the rest of the nation, was trying to cope with the attacks on American soil and demonstrating her patriotism," the caption reads.
Patrick said her inspiration for the calendar was a simple one–she needs money. She and her husband are in the process of selling their Wasilla home to purchase a $250,000 condo in Anchorage that is somewhat out of their price range. They are looking to close on their new home Dec. 1.
http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2008/10/29/sarah-palin-2009-calendar-girl/

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

Bush's booby traps for Obama (LA Times 10/30/08)
By Rosa Brooks
Ever since Joe Biden suggested that the world would "test" Barack Obama if he becomes president, the McCain campaign has been hoping to make political hay out of the remark. "We don't want a president who invites testing from the world," John McCain warned voters.
But every new president is "tested" by national security crises, some predictable, some not. And I'm a lot less worried about the tests "the world" may offer Obama than about the national security booby traps the Bush administration is leaving behind for him…Some booby traps left by departing administrations are harmless. Clinton pranksters allegedly removed all the "W" keys from White House computer keyboards in January 2001, and outbound Bush 41 staffers reportedly left drawers full of pencils cut down to inch-long stubs. But no one got hurt.

If we can someday say the same about the booby traps this Bush administration is leaving behind, we'll be very lucky.
http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-oe-brooks30-2008oct30,0,1403867.column

An Acorn Whistleblower Testifies in Court: The group's ties to Obama are extensive. (WSJ 10/30/08)
By JOHN FUND
The Obama campaign denies it "has any ties" to Acorn, but Mr. Obama's ties are extensive. In 1992 he headed a registration effort for Project Vote, an Acorn partner at the time. He did so well that he was made a top trainer for Acorn's Chicago conferences. In 1995, he represented Acorn in a key case upholding the constitutionality of the new Motor Voter Act -- the first law passed by the Clinton administration -- which created the mandated, nationwide postcard voter registration system that Acorn workers are using to flood election offices with bogus registrations.
Ms. MonCrief testified that in November 2007 Project Vote development director Karyn Gillette told her she had direct contact with the Obama campaign and had obtained their donor lists. Ms. MonCrief also testified she was given a spreadsheet to use in cultivating Obama donors who had maxed out on donations to the candidate, but who could contribute to voter registration efforts. Project Vote calls the allegation "absolutely false."
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122533169940482893.html?mod=rss_opinion_main

Taxing the Dolphins:Another NFL team faces Obama's tax rush. (WSJ 10/30/08)
Don't think tax rates matter to business decisions? Ask H. Wayne Huizenga, the owner of the Miami Dolphins, who declared earlier this week that he intends to sell up to half his ownership in the NFL franchise before next year. Why? Because as he told a Florida newspaper, Barack Obama "wants to double the capital gains tax, or almost double it. I'd rather give it to charity than to him."
Mr. Obama is in fact proposing to raise the capital gains tax to 20% from 15% -- which would be an increase of 33%, but Mr. Huizenga is close enough for IRS work. His office confirmed to us that he stands by that statement, though he prefers not to elaborate on it. Mr. Huizenga also has NFL company. In July, we wrote about the Rooney family's musings about selling part of the Pittsburgh Steelers to avoid the 45% death tax rate.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122533091992582863.html?mod=rss_opinion_main

What We've Learned About McCain (WaPo 10/30/08)
By David S. Broder
From beginning to end, the campaign that followed has been plagued by internal feuds and McCain's inability to resolve them.
The shortcoming was intellectual as well as bureaucratic. Like Jimmy Carter, the only Naval Academy graduate to reach the Oval Office, McCain had an engineer's approach to policymaking. He had no large principles that he could apply to specific problems; each fresh question set off a search for a "practical" solution. He instinctively looked back to Theodore Roosevelt and the Progressive era, with its high-mindedness and disdain for the politics of doling out favors to interest groups. But those instincts coexisted uneasily with his adherence to traditional, Reagan-era conservatism -- a muscular foreign policy, a penchant for tax-cutting and a fondness for business.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/29/AR2008102903201.html?nav=rss_opinion/columns

Call Him John the Careless (WaPo 10/30/08)
By George F. Will
From the invasion of Iraq to the selection of Sarah Palin, carelessness has characterized recent episodes of faux conservatism. Tuesday's probable repudiation of the Republican Party will punish characteristics displayed in the campaign's closing days.
Some polls show that Palin has become an even heavier weight in John McCain's saddle than his association with George W. Bush. Did McCain, who seems to think that Palin's never having attended a "Georgetown cocktail party" is sufficient qualification for the vice presidency, lift an eyebrow when she said that vice presidents "are in charge of the United States Senate"?
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/29/AR2008102903199.html?nav=rss_opinion/columns

What? Me Biased? (NYT 10/30/08)
By NICHOLAS D. KRISTOF
For the last year and a half, a team of psychology professors has been conducting remarkable experiments on how Americans view Barack Obama through the prism of race…They found that research subjects — particularly when primed to think of Mr. Obama as a black candidate — subconsciously considered him less American than either Hillary Clinton or John McCain.
Indeed, the study found that the research subjects — Californian college students, many of them Democrats supportive of Mr. Obama — unconsciously perceived him as less American even than the former British Prime Minister Tony Blair.
It's not that any of them actually believed Mr. Obama to be foreign. But the implicit association test measured the way the unconscious mind works, and in following instructions to sort images rapidly, the mind balked at accepting a black candidate as fully American. This result mattered: The more difficulty a person had in classifying Mr. Obama as American, the less likely that person was to support Mr. Obama.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/30/opinion/30kristof.html?pagewanted=print

American Stories (NYT 10/30/08)
By ROGER COHEN
Of the countless words Barack Obama has uttered since he opened his campaign for president on an icy Illinois morning in February 2007, a handful have kept reverberating in my mind: "For as long as I live, I will never forget that in no other country on earth is my story even possible."…
Nowhere else could a 47-year-old man, born, as he has written, of a father "black as pitch" and a mother "white as milk," a generation distant from the mud shacks of western Kenya, raised for a time as Barry Soetoro (his stepfather's family name) in Muslim Indonesia, then entrusted to his grandparents in Hawaii — nowhere else could this Barack Hussein Obama rise so far and so fast.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/30/opinion/30Cohen.html?pagewanted=print

'Blah, blah, blah': McCain's remarks on nuclear waste storage show his contempt for Nevada (Las Vegas Sun 10/30/08)
Editorial
Republican presidential candidate John McCain has said he would support the use of Yucca Mountain, 90 miles northwest of Las Vegas, as the dump site for the nation's high-level nuclear waste. That is one of many reasons why Nevadans should vote for Democratic opponent Barack Obama, who has said he would kill the repository plan.
At a campaign stop Sunday in Cedar Falls, Iowa, 1,300 miles away from Southern Nevada, McCain continued to show that he doesn't care about Nevada. He did so by mocking Obama's concerns about how to safely store spent nuclear fuel, something McCain brought up during their last debate.
"We talked about nuclear power," McCain said. "Well, it has to be safe environment(ally), blah, blah, blah." That dismissive response, which drew cheers and applause from Iowans at this McCain rally, showed just how out of touch McCain is with the majority of Nevadans, who steadfastly oppose the dump. If the federal government had instead planned for the dump to be in Arizona, McCain's home state, do you think he would have taken Obama's remarks so lightly?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.lasvegassun.com/news/2008/oct/30/blah-blah-blah/

The Success of Early Voting (NYT 10/30/08)
Editorial
A lot is going wrong in this election, from malfunctioning electronic voting machines to voters being purged mistakenly from the rolls. But one thing is going very right: early voting. In the more than 30 states that allow early or no-excuse absentee voting, voters have been casting ballots in record numbers. Early voting has many advantages. The main one is that it makes it likely that more eligible voters will participate in democracy. Election Day has traditionally been held on a single day — a Tuesday. Congress scheduled federal elections on Tuesdays because they worked well for farmers and Sabbath observers. But in the 21st century, having one day to vote is an antiquated relic. Voters have to fit in a visit to the polls with their work, family and other responsibilities. Many cannot find the time, particularly when lines are as long as they have been in recent times. http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/30/opinion/30thu1.html?pagewanted=print

BUSH NEWS

Bush to Highlight Success in War Against Terrorism (WSJ blog 10/29/08)

By John D. McKinnon
President George W. Bush, riding low in the polls, isn't doing any out-and-out campaigning for Republicans this week. But he's still hoping to score a few points with voters on the national-security front.
In a speech scheduled for Thursday, Bush plans to highlight his administration's success in preventing another terrorist attack in the U.S., making perhaps his strongest claim for credit yet.
"More than seven years have passed without another attack on our soil. This is not an accident," Bush plans to say, according to an advance text of the speech released by the White House. "Since 9/11, we have gone on the offense against the terrorists abroad – so we do not have to face them here at home. And we are standing with young democracies in Afghanistan, Iraq, and beyond as they seek to replace the hateful ideology of the extremists with an alternative vision of liberty and hope."
http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2008/10/29/bush-to-highlight-success-in-war-against-terrorism/

Bush Administration to Talk With Taliban? (ABC News 10/29/08)

By JONATHAN KARL and LUIS MARTINEZ
As the Bush administration reviews its strategy in Afghanistan, there is an emerging consensus that the way forward should include reaching out to supporters of the Taliban, and possibly even elements of the Taliban itself.
Several U.S. officials confirmed a report today in the Wall Street Journal that the White House is actively considering taking part in talks with tribal leaders in Afghanistan and Pakistan who are associated with the Taliban.
Officials said, however, that these talks would be led by either Afghanistan or Pakistan, or both. The United States would play a secondary, supportive role, the officials said.
http://abcnews.go.com/print?id=6132704

White House Orders Banks to Resume Lending Now (AP 10/29/08)

WASHINGTON — An impatient White House prodded banks and other financial companies Tuesday to quit hoarding billions of dollars flowing into their vaults from Washington and start making more loans. Wall Street soared nearly 900 points on bargain-hunting and hopes of a hefty interest rate cut by the Federal Reserve.
The stock market's amazing climb, with its second-largest point gain ever, was a welcome burst of good news for a nation suffering big job losses and seemingly tumbling into a painful recession.
http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,444509,00.html

OTHER NEWS

Dow and S&P 500 fall on profit worry, GE outlook report (Reuters 10/29/08)

By Kristina Cooke
NEW YORK (Reuters) - U.S. stocks fell on Wednesday as a big rally faltered in the last minutes of trading on worry about the weakening corporate profit picture after a news report raised questions about General Electric's earnings outlook.
In a move that has been the trademark of the market's volatility ever since Lehman Brothers' bankruptcy filing in mid-September, the Dow plunged more than 300 points in the last 12 minutes, dashing prospects for the first back-to-back gains in a month.
http://www.reuters.com/article/topNews/idUSTRE49B3PW20081030?feedType=RSS&feedName=topNews

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Global stocks, euro rally on emerging market gains (Reuters 10/30/08)
By Carolyn Cohn
LONDON (Reuters) - World stocks and the euro rallied on Thursday, driven by bargain-hunting and sweeping gains in emerging markets after the Federal Reserve cut interest rates and opened swap lines to four developing economies.
Investors saw a return to risk appetite and the carry trade and renewed weakness in the dollar after the Fed chopped half a point off the fed funds rate to 1.0 percent and left the door open to further cuts.
http://www.reuters.com/article/topNews/idUSTRE49S8PI20081030?feedType=RSS&feedName=topNews

House to introduce second stimulus bill next month (Reuters 10/29/08)
By Lisa Lambert
WASHINGTON (Reuters) - U.S. state leaders, trade groups and economists descended on the House of Representatives on Wednesday to help work out a second economic stimulus bill that one influential Congressional member said would be introduced on November 17.
Representative Jim Oberstar, the Minnesota Democrat who chairs the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, told a hearing on jump-starting the stalled economy that Congressional staff would be meeting throughout the month and a stimulus bill would be introduced when Congress reconvenes next month.
http://www.reuters.com/article/topNews/idUSTRE49S7KZ20081029?feedType=RSS&feedName=topNews

New ACORN ad: Tell McCain, the GOP 'not this time' (CNN blog 10/29/08)
By Jonathan Helman
The new ad, entitled "Not This Time," is shot in black-and-white and features an African-American man who ages before viewers' eyes. "It happened to him in 1960, 1965, and again in 2000. He was intimidated so he wouldn't vote," an announcer says as a traditional Southern hymn plays. "Tell John McCain: not this time," the announcer says as the ad ends, and the phone number of McCain's Capitol Hill Senate office appears on screen.
"Senator McCain needs to instruct his operatives and supporters to cease and desist. Nothing is more important to the fabric of our democracy than protecting the rights of American voters," said Steve Kest, ACORN's executive director, at a Wednesday press conference where the ad was released.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/29/new-acorn-ad-tell-mccain-the-gop-not-this-time/

Brunner seeks probe of GOP calls (Columbus Dispatch 10/30/08)
By Josh Jarman
Secretary of State Jennifer Brunner asked the state attorney general's office yesterday to investigate get-out-the-vote telephone calls made on behalf of the Ohio Republican Party in at least 19 Ohio counties.
The calls encouraged people to return absentee ballots they had requested. Some voters who already had mailed their ballots, however, thought the calls were coming from their county boards of election to inform them that their ballots had not been received.
http://www.dispatch.com/live/content/local_news/stories/2008/10/30/Votercalls.ART_ART_10-30-08_A8_6OBO9LN.html?sid=101

Rising Tide of Suits Filed in Search of Political Edge (WSJ 10/30/08)
By JUNE KRONHOLZ
The number of lawsuits challenging election procedures could hit an all-time high this year as political parties and their followers, expecting a tight outcome Tuesday, angle for an edge that could help their candidate.
In the past few days, voters and the Republican Party have filed lawsuits challenging the way elections are being run in Colorado, Pennsylvania, New Mexico and Virginia.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122532888316282651.html?mod=rss_Politics_And_Policy

Early Voters Breaking Records (WaPo 10/30/08)
By Jon Cohen and Kyle Dropp
For at least 16 million voters, the 2008 election is already over. Across the more than 30 states that allow no-excuse absentee or early voting, votes have been pouring in at a record pace, and the data show Barack Obama as the clear beneficiary.
In the Washington Post-ABC News tracking poll, 59 percent of those who said they had already voted backed Obama, and 40 percent indicated that they supported John McCain. So far, the numbers are a near-mirror image of the past two elections.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/29/AR2008102904036.html

The Decided Go in Droves to Vote Early (NYT 10/30/08)
By JENNIFER STEINHAUER
HENDERSON, Nev. — At grocery stores across Las Vegas, voters are casting their ballots, and then shopping for bananas or hitting the slot machines a few feet away.
About 100 people have voted from the windows of their cars, A.T.M. style, in Orange County, Calif. Several busloads of voters pulled up to the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections in Cleveland on Sunday, did what they came to do, and then repaired to a church across the street for some fried chicken.
In all its forms, early voting has been an election year hit. Enormous lines in Florida led Gov. Charlie Crist to issue an executive order extending early voting hours statewide from eight hours a day to 12, while in Georgia an elderly woman in Cobb County stood in the sun so long to vote that she collapsed.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/30/us/politics/30early.html?_r=1&oref=slogin&pagewanted=print

Democrats dominate early voting in key states (AP 10/29/08)
By STEPHEN OHLEMACHER
Democrats outnumber Republicans among early voters in Iowa, North Carolina, Florida, Colorado, New Mexico and Nevada, according to statistics from election and party officials in those states. Bush won all six in 2004, and McCain needs to win most of them to claim the White House this year.
Georgia, another red state, doesn't track early voters by party, but it does by race. About 1.4 million Georgians have already cast ballots, and blacks are voting in disproportionate numbers. Black voters overwhelmingly support Democrat Barack Obama, who is bidding to become the nation's first black president.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/E/EARLY_VOTING?
SITE=MAFAL&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

Partial early ballots: Dem voters outnumber GOP (CNN 10/29/08)
By Thom Patterson
(CNN) -- Democratic early voters outnumber Republicans in key states, according to incomplete election statistics, suggesting a surprising break from traditional trends, said analysts.
Just a week before a historic Election Day, registered Democrats in North Carolina are out-voting Republicans by a nearly 2-to-1 margin, according to official election statistics.
http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/10/29/early.voting/index.html?eref=rss_politics

Vote watchdogs warn of troubles on election day (LA Times 10/30/08)
By Carol J. Williams and Noam N. Levey
Counting down to an election day expected to draw a record-shattering turnout, voting-rights watchdogs are sounding the alarm that a repeat of the Florida fiasco of 2000 could occur in any of a dozen battleground states. Lawsuits are already flying in many of these states.
Voting rights advocates in Colorado, to take just one example, told a federal judge Wednesday that the names of nearly 30,000 voters were recently purged from the state registry in violation of federal law and ought to be restored by election day. In a compromise, those voters will be allowed to cast provisional ballots.
Across the battleground states, where Democrats had a 2-1 advantage in new registrations, voting-rights groups contend the eleventh-hour verifications demanded by Republican officials are attempts to disenfranchise the new voters.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-voting30-2008oct30,0,1814361.story

Democrats appear to have won voter-registration battle in Ohio (Dayton Daily News 10/30/08)
By Ken McCall
Of the 822,804 newly registered voters in the state, almost six in 10 — more than 475,000 — are in the 16 counties that went Democratic in 2004 presidential election, a Dayton Daily News analysis of statewide voter registration data has found. The 72 remaining counties that went for President Bush in 2004 recorded some 347,000 voters… The analysis found that almost 452,000 or 55 percent of the newly registered voters are under 30 years old. And more than a quarter, or 227,852, are 20 or younger. The latest Dayton Daily News/Ohio Newspaper Poll found that likely voters 29 and under favored Obama over McCain by 62 percent to 38 percent.
http://www.daytondailynews.com/n/content/oh/story/news/local/2008/10/30/ddn103008voters.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In Ohio, Wary Eyes On Election Process (WaPo 10/30/08)
By Mary Pat Flaherty
CLEVELAND -- With Ohio still up for grabs in next week's presidential election, the conversation here has expanded from who will carry the state to how -- the nitty-gritty of registration lists, voting machines, court challenges and whether it all will play out fairly… Political parties and elected officials for weeks have been trading sharp accusations and litigation over voting issues here, often for political advantage. But now, among the people whose ballots are at stake, the question of whether their votes will count has become deeply personal.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/29/AR2008102904545.html

A win for purged voters (The Denver Post 10/30/08)
By Felisa Cardona
Ballots cast by voters who have been canceled from the state's voter rolls since mid-May will get extra oversight to make sure their votes are counted, under an agreement reached late Wednesday in U.S. District Court. Common Cause of Colorado, Mi Familia Vota Education Fund and the Service Employees International Union sued Colorado Secretary of State Mike Coffman, alleging that his office had violated the National Voter Registration Act by illegally purging about 31,000 eligible voters from the rolls 90 days before the election. The state insists the actual number is smaller.
http://www.denverpost.com/breakingnews/ci_10851260

Judge: PA must have paper ballots ready if half of machines fail (CNN blog 10/29/08)
By Adam Levine
WASHINGTON (CNN) – Pennsylvania must have paper ballots available for its voters if half the machines at a polling place break down, a federal judge ruled Wednesday. The state wanted paper ballots mandatory only if all the machines in a polling place failed.
"Emergency back-up paper ballots shall be used thereafter until the county board of elections is able to make the necessary repairs to the machine(s) or is able to place into operation," Judge Harvey Bartle ruled. The state will not appeal the decision. In a statement, Secretary of the Commonwealth Pedro Cortes said the state will work with counties to ensure emergency ballots are used consistently, and that there is a sufficient supply.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/29/judge-pa-must-have-paper-ballots-ready-if-half-of-machines-fail/

An Obama-propelled increase in African-American turnout, already apparent in early voting, may put more Democrats in Congress. (Salon 10/30/08)
By Alex Koppelman
By Salon's count, the black vote could swing as many as 17 House seats currently held by Republicans who are running in competitive elections. It could also play a role in three campaigns for Republican Senate seats and in one gubernatorial battle. With that in mind, the potential rise in African-American turnout could be devastating to Republican hopes.
http://www.salon.com/news/feature/2008/10/30/black_vote/index.html

New Registrations Give Georgia Blacks More Power at the Polls (NYT 10/30/08)
By CARL HULSE
In Georgia, where Mr. Obama's organization worked hard to register new voters but did not mount a full-blown campaign because the state seems beyond his reach, black voters in Atlanta and the surrounding areas have been standing in line for hours. Many are among the tens of thousands of newly registered voters.
New registrations of black voters ran more than 25 percent higher this year than four years ago, with especially high registration among black women.
Nearly 1.4 million Georgians have voted, according to the Georgia Secretary of State's Office, and more than a third were black. (Blacks make up just over 29 percent of registered voters in the state, which keeps track of racial data under civil rights laws.) Early voting began Sept. 22, and this week the state opened extra polling stations and extended their hours.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/30/us/politics/30chambliss.html?pagewanted=print

Obama, seeing hope in early voting, bolsters Georgia push (McClatchy 10/29/08)
By Halimah Abdullah
WASHINGTON — Just more than a month ago, Democratic presidential hopeful Barack Obama's campaign

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

pulled a number of field staffers out of Georgia and sent them to such emerging battleground states as North Carolina.
That was before Georgia's early voting showed record-high Democratic turnout, however, especially among African Americans, and polls found a narrowing margin between the major presidential candidates.
That was also before Republican Sen. Saxby Chambliss found himself fighting for his political life against Democratic challenger and former state Rep. Jim Martin, who's benefited from the Obama campaign's voter-registration and get-out-the-vote efforts and from increased funding from the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.
http://www.mcclatchydc.com/election2008/story/54982.html

Mail ballot backlog poses problems for L.A. County voters (LA Times 10/30/08)
By Jennifer Oldham and Ruben Vives
Thousands of Los Angeles County voters may not receive their mail-in ballots in time to actually mail them in, county officials said Wednesday.
Clerks were racing to process about 13,000 last-minute vote-by-mail applications while also handling 55,000 remaining voter registrations, said Los Angeles County Registrar Dean Logan.
The 11th-hour backlog could lead to election day confusion, and officials are advising voters who are unsure of their registration or mail-in-ballot status to check the registrar's website at www.lavote.net . Although 220 phone operators are on duty, some callers said they have had difficulty getting through.
"We are getting 18,000 phone calls coming in a day," Logan said. "The phone vendors we deal with compared it to what happens when there's an earthquake and the phone lines get jammed."
http://www.latimes.com/news/local/la-me-vote30-2008oct30,0,506897.story

Little Hope in a Little Town (WaPo 10/30/08)
By Eli Saslow
WEST PLAINS, Mo. -- The billboard towers on private land above Route 63, but it essentially acts as the public welcome sign for this city of about 10,000 nestled in the Ozarks. Raised on a hill that guards the town's main entrance, it depicts a cartoonlike drawing of Barack Obama wearing a turban above a message that has shaped many visitors' impressions of West Plains. "Barack 'Hussein' Obama equals more abortions, same sex marriages, taxes, gun regulations."
Since it was erected by a local conservative about a month ago, the billboard has been criticized by political Web sites, media outlets and travelers passing through West Plains as racist, factually inaccurate and small-minded. More telling, though, has been the reaction -- or lack of it -- in the town itself.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/10/29/AR2008102904059.html

Shays takes swipe at McCain (CNN blog 10/29/08)
By Alexander Mooney
(CNN) – New England's lone House Republican appears to have publicly broken with his party's standard-bearer, saying John McCain has not run a clean campaign and is likely to lose his bid for the presidency.
"I just don't see how [McCain] can win," Connecticut Rep. Chris Shays told the Yale Daily News earlier this week. "He has lost his brand as a maverick; he did not live up to his pledge to fight a clean campaign." Shays, who in 2006 became the only Republican congressman from New England, perennially finds himself in a heated re-election race.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/29/shays-takes-swipe-at-mccain/

Analysis: Obama on his way toward election win (AP 10/29/08)
By LIZ SIDOTI
WASHINGTON (AP) -- Barack Obama has pulled ahead in enough states to win the 270 electoral votes he needs to gain the White House - and with states to spare - according to an Associated Press analysis that shows he is now moving beyond typical Democratic territory to challenge John McCain on historically GOP turf.
Even if McCain sweeps the six states that are too close to call, he still seemingly won't have enough votes to prevail, according to the analysis, which is based on polls, the candidates' TV spending patterns and interviews with Democratic and Republican strategists. McCain does have a path to victory but it's a steep climb: He needs a sudden shift in voter sentiment that gives him all six toss-up states plus one or two others that now lean toward Obama.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/R/ROAD_TO_270?SITE=RIPAW&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

D.C. think tank poised to ride Obama's coattails (AP 10/29/08)
By Charles Babington
A Washington think tank with close ties to Obama and former president Clinton is about to publish a 50-chapter book on how to run a new Democratic administration.
The Center for American Progress already has produced a 26-page document, widely distributed among Obama aides, describing what the last five presidents did on each day of his transition. And if Obama wins the presidency Tuesday, the group stands ready to fill top federal positions with some of its staffers, many of whom worked for Clinton.
The Center for American Progress, formed five years ago to counteract conservative think tanks, could become one of Washington's most influential policy advocacy groups. And it could give Obama a valuable head start in staffing agencies and drafting priorities for his administration, a daunting task for any president-elect with 11 weeks between the election and inauguration.
http://www.boston.com/news/politics/2008/articles/2008/10/29/dc_think_tank_poised_to_ride_obamas_coattails/?rss_id=Boston.com+--+Top+political+stories

POLLS

Poll: Obama surges in Colorado, makes gains on Electoral Map (CNN blog 10/29/08)
By Paul Steinhauser
In a new survey — one of five new CNN/Time/Opinion Research Corporation state polls released Wednesday — 53 percent of likely Colorado voters questioned say that Obama is their choice for president, with 45 percent backing McCain. That 8 point lead for Obama is double the 4 point advantage he held in our last poll, taken two weeks ago.
http://politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com/2008/10/29/poll-obama-surges-in-colorado-makes-gains-on-electoral-map/

AP Poll: Obama leads or tied in 8 crucial states (AP 10/29/08)
BY RON FOURNIER and TREVOR TOMPSON
Less than a week before Election Day, the AP-GfK polls show Obama winning among early voters, favored on almost every issue, benefiting from the country's sour mood and widely viewed as the winning candidate by voters in eight crucial states - Colorado, Florida, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Virginia.
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/A/AP_POLL_BATTLEGROUNDS?SITE=MAFAL&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

Gap Narrows in Florida and Ohio, Not Pennsylvania (WSJ 10/30/08)
By SARA MURRAY
New polling suggests the presidential race is tightening in the battleground states of Ohio and Florida, though not in Pennsylvania, where Sen. John McCain is fighting to flip a big swing state into his column.
Sen. McCain now is within striking distance in Florida, where Sen. Barack Obama leads 47% to 45%, a new poll by the Quinnipiac University Polling Institute finds. Less than a week ago, Sen. Obama led by five percentage points there. (See the Qunnipiac poll.)
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB122529638479280635.html

New polls: Pennsylvania's sewed up; Ohio, Florida close (McClatchy 10/29/08)
By Mark Seibel
Barack Obama is holding on to leads in the three major battleground states — Florida, Ohio and Pennsylvania — though Florida is too close to call and the other two have tightened, Qunnipiac University's new polling data report Wednesday.
http://www.mcclatchydc.com/election2008/story/54950.html

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail lori@progressiveaccountability.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Fariba Yassaee" <fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com>
To: danielsilverberg@yahoo.com
"Anne Hall" <Anne.Hall@APORTER.COM>
"Bill Antholis" <wantholis@brookings.edu>
bill.danvers@gmail.com
"Brian Katulis" <bkatulis@americanprogress.org>
"Bruce Riedel" <briedel@brookings.edu>
"Caitlin McDonnell" <cmcdonnell@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Carol Browner" <cmbrowner@me.com>
"Carole Hall" <chall@brookings.edu>
"Catherine Whitney" <Catherine.Whitney@skadden.com>
"Chris Roberts" <croberts@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Dan Benjamin" <dbenjam61@hotmail.com>
"Daniel Silverberg <DanielSilverberg" <danielsilverberg@yahoo.com>
"Denis?? McDonough" <denis.mcdonough@gmail.com>
"Derek Chollet" <dhchollet@gmail.com>
"Don Gips \(don.gips@gmail.com\)" <don.gips@gmail.com>
donkerrick <donkerrick@comcast.net>
"Eryn Sanders" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
"Fariba Yassaee" <fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Greg Craig" <gcraig@skadden.com>
"Jamie?? Rubin" <JamesPRubin1960@gmail.com>
"Jan Stewart" <jstewart@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Jeff Smith" <jeffrey_smith@aporter.com>
"Jeremy Bash" <jeremybash@gmail.com>
"Jessica Lewis" <lewisje03@yahoo.com>
"Jim?? Miller - Department of Defense \(james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com \)" <james.n.miller.jr@gmail.com>
"Jim O'Brien" <jobrien@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Joanna Nicoletti \(info@forwardengagement.org\)" <info@forwardengagement.org>
"Joe Cirincione" <jcirincione@ploughshares.org>
"John Norris" <jnorris@americanprogress.org>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Julianne Smith" <julsmi@gmail.com>
"Ken Lieberthal" <klieberthal@brookings.edu>
"Kurt Campbell" <kurtmcampbell@yahoo.com>
"Laura?? Huber" <lhuber@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Leon Fuerth" <hdpf@msn.com>
"Maida?? Stadtler" <mstadtler@apcoworldwide.com>
"Marcel Lettre" <mlettre@verizon.net>
"Mariah Sixkiller \(mariah6@gmail.com\)" <mariah6@gmail.com>
"Martin Indyk" <mindyk@brookings.edu>
"Michael Morell" <michaelbuckeye24@gmail.com>
"Michele?? Flournoy" <micheleflournoy3@gmail.com>
"Pat Griffin" <pgriffin@pmj-dc.com>
"Rich Verma" <rverma@steptoe.com>
"Rob Malley" <rmalley555@gmail.com>
"Samuel?? Berger" <sberger@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Sharon Burke" <burkese@comcast.net>
"Steve Ricchetti" <sricchetti@cox.net>
"Strobe Talbott" <stalbott@brookings.edu>
"Susan Rice" <ricesusane@aol.com>
"Suzy George" <suzygeorge8@gmail.com>
"Tamara Wittes \(twittes@brookings.edu\)" <twittes@brookings.edu>
"Tara Sonenshine" <tsonenshine@earthlink.net>
"Theodore Waddelow" <twaddelow@albrightstonebridge.com>
"Tim Roemer" <tjroemer@gmail.com>
"Tom Daschle" <tom.daschle@dlapiper.com>
"Tom Donilon" <tdonilon@gmail.com>
"Tom Downey" <tdowney@dmggroup.com>
"Tommy Ross" <trossjr@gmail.com>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Toni Verstandig" <tonigverstandig@gmail.com>
"Tony?? Blinken" <ablinken@aol.com>
"Veronica Pollack" <Veronica.Pollock@dlapiper.com>
"Vikram Singh" <vsingh@americanprogress.org>
"Wendy Sherman" <wendyrsherman@gmail.com>
Date: 9/27/2014 4:38:42 PM
Subject: Nick Burns, Passage to India

Fariba Yassaee | Vice President
Albright Stonebridge Group LLC
1101 New York Avenue, NW | Suite 900 |Washington, DC 20005
T +1.202.842.7222 | D +1.202.370.3584 | Skype: fariba.yassaee
fyassaee@albrightstonebridge.com

From: Nicholas Burns <nicholasburns@belfercenter.hks.harvard.edu>
Sent: Friday, September 26, 2014 12:32:12 PM
To: Fariba Yassaee
Subject: Passage to India

In advance of Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's inaugural visit to the U.S. next week, I wanted to share with you my article in the current edition of Foreign Affairs—Passage to India: What Washington Can Do to Revive Relations with New Delhi.

I see India as one of the most important global partners for the U.S. for the next half century. The Obama Administration has an opportunity to make India a much greater strategic partner than it has been during the past few years when the relationship has been diminished for a number of reasons. While sometimes problematic and unreliable in its work with the United States, India is still a significant and growing U.S. political and military partner in Asia, on global commons issues such as Climate Change and on bilateral trade and investment. In addition, given the major and successful effort President George W. Bush made to elevate our relationship with New Delhi, there is clear bipartisan support for a revival starting with next week's visit.

The temptation in government is sometimes to focus on short term fires to the detriment of long-term opportunities. While coping with a burning Middle East, Putin's machinations in Ukraine and a newly assertive China are all obvious priorities, the U.S. should also make the time and effort to build our relations with India for the future.

I start the Foreign Affairs article by stating, "In the century ahead, U.S. strategic interests will align more closely with India's than they will with those of any other continental power in Asia." I am confident of that judgment.

As always, I would welcome your comments and suggestions.

Passage to India

BY NICHOLAS BURNS | FOREIGN AFFAIRS | SEPT/OCT 2014

In the century ahead, U.S. strategic interests will align more closely with India's than they will

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

with those of any other continental power in Asia. The United States and India both seek to spread democracy, expand trade and investment, counter terrorism, and, above all, keep the region peaceful by balancing China's growing military power. As Washington expands its presence in Asia as part of the so-called pivot, New Delhi will be a critical partner. In the Asia-Pacific region, especially, India joins Australia, Japan, South Korea, and others in a U.S.-led coalition of democratic allies. And as the most powerful state in South Asia, India will exert a positive influence on a troubled Afghanistan, as well as on Bangladesh, Nepal, and Sri Lanka.

The Obama administration should therefore use its remaining two years to make India a greater priority, especially since the country has not yet figured prominently in the rebalancing of U.S. attention and resources to Asia. In President Barack Obama's first term, many Indians complain, the United States devoted less attention to India than to its rivals China and Pakistan, pursuing economic links with the former and counterterrorism ties with the latter. That appearance of neglect, however fair or unfair, has rankled Indian officials and eroded some of their trust in Washington.

With the election of a new government in New Delhi, the Obama administration has a chance to repair the relationship. In May, Indians voted into office Narendra Modi, a Hindu nationalist from the western state of Gujarat who has signaled that he wants to build a more ambitious partnership with the United States. That will happen only if Obama pushes India to the top of his foreign policy agenda and Modi implements a series of reforms to enable stronger economic and political ties between the two governments. The leaders are scheduled to hold their first meeting in Washington this September, and before they do, both should begin thinking about rebuilding the U.S.-Indian relationship in five key ways: by expanding bilateral trade, strengthening military cooperation, collaborating to combat threats to homeland security, stabilizing a post-American Afghanistan, and, especially, finding greater common ground on transnational challenges such as climate change. It is an ambitious agenda, but pursuing it would put India where it belongs: at the center of U.S. strategy in the region.

FALLING OUT

Many Indian officials look back on the presidency of George W. Bush as a special moment in U.S.-Indian relations. From his first days in office, Bush made India a priority, arguing that its flourishing market economy, entrepreneurial drive, democratic system, and growing young population were crucial to U.S. aims in the region. He saw that the two countries, far from being strategic rivals, shared many of the same views on how power should be balanced in the twenty-first century. He believed that the United States had a clear interest in supporting India's rise as a global power.

The results of his emphasis were dramatic. The volume of trade in goods and services between the United States and India has more than tripled since 2004. Also since then, the two governments have dramatically strengthened their military ties and launched new cooperative projects on space, science and technology, education, and democratic governance.

Bush also engineered one of the most important initiatives in the history of the U.S.-Indian relationship: the civil nuclear agreement, which for the first time permitted U.S. firms to invest in India's civil nuclear power sector. (I served as the lead American negotiator for the deal.) This agreement helped end India's nuclear isolation, allowing New Delhi to trade in civil nuclear technology even though it is not a party to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. In return, India opened up its civil nuclear industry for the first time to sustained international inspection. The agreement's real import, though, lay in its message to the Indian people: the United States took their country seriously and wanted to leave behind the previous decades of cool relations. More broadly, it was a signal of U.S. support for India's emerging global role.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

When Obama took office, he followed Bush's lead. After all, Bush's India policy had enjoyed rare and strong support from Democrats -- including then U.S. Senators Joseph Biden, Hillary Clinton, and Obama himself -- throughout his second term. In 2009, Obama hosted then Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and his wife as the administration's first official state visitors. During his own successful state visit to New Delhi in 2010, Obama became the first U.S. president to endorse India's bid to become a permanent member of the UN Security Council.

Yet despite this promising start, Obama's India policy never hit full stride. Although Clinton, as secretary of state, collaborated with New Delhi on development and women's issues, the administration was understandably preoccupied with the more urgent short-term crises it had inherited on taking office: the global financial meltdown, the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, and the threat of a nuclear Iran. It was a classic Washington story of near-term crises crowding out long-term ambitions. As Obama's first term ended, India slid down Washington's priority list, and Indian officials complained privately about what they saw as a lack of attention from their American counterparts.

To be fair to Obama, however, the Indian government played an even greater role in the relationship's decline. In 2010, the Indian Parliament passed an ill-advised nuclear liability law that placed excessive responsibility on suppliers for accidents at nuclear power plants. The legislation, which gained support after the 25th anniversary of a horrific chemical spill at an American-owned plant in Bhopal, shattered investor confidence. By deterring U.S. and other firms from entering the Indian market, the law made implementation of the civil nuclear agreement impossible, undermining what should have been the centerpiece of the two countries' relationship. Washington and New Delhi haven't managed to resolve the impasse.

The relationship suffered further when Indian economic growth slowed markedly in 2012 and 2013, depressing foreign investment, as the government, led by the Indian National Congress, was rocked by corruption allegations and failed to implement promised reforms in retail, insurance, energy, and infrastructure. New Delhi unwisely imposed discriminatory taxes on foreign investors and enacted protectionist measures that impeded trade. A series of bitterly fought U.S.-Indian trade disputes took center stage, overshadowing the political and military ties that had been the glue of the growing partnership and preventing the two countries from being able to strike any major new economic agreements.

Then came two severe diplomatic tempests. Over the course of 2013, as Modi emerged as a front-runner in the upcoming election, the Indian press revived the story of Washington's earlier decision to bar Modi from entering the United States on the grounds that he had failed to suppress deadly anti-Muslim riots in 2002, when he was chief minister of Gujarat. Bush administration officials, including me, believed this to be the right decision at the time, but many Modi supporters charged that the visa ban was yet another example of American disregard for Indian dignity.

Then, in December 2013, U.S. federal agents arrested Devyani Khobragade, India's deputy consul general in New York, for lying on her housekeeper's visa application, infuriating the Indian press and public. It was a perfect but avoidable storm. The United States should have handled the visa issue at the core of the dispute in private to avoid inflaming India's bruised ego, and the Indian government, which made matters worse by downgrading security at the U.S. embassy in New Delhi and refusing to renew teachers' visas at the American Embassy School, should have reacted more calmly. Instead, both governments fanned the flames, and anti-American furor dominated the news in India for weeks.

By early 2014, the collapse in confidence was all too visible, and this is what Obama and Modi must begin working to repair when they meet. At the same time, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry, Secretary of Defense Chuck Hagel, and Secretary of the Treasury Jack Lew must act, in effect, as project managers, steering the relationship past the inevitable obstacles, just as then Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice did so capably in Bush's second term. Top-down government leadership is essential to motivate the vast U.S. bureaucracy to put India back at the center of Washington's attention.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama, meanwhile, will find a willing partner in Modi. Remarkably, the prime minister has exhibited no public signs of resentment over the visa issue and, in a show of good faith, decided in May that he would visit Washington instead of insisting that Obama first visit New Delhi. Modi has already demonstrated himself to be an unusually strong Indian leader, who will use his executive authority in a more hands-on fashion than did his predecessors. His clear intent to jump-start New Delhi's relationship with Washington has created a unique opportunity for Obama to reciprocate.

IT'S THE ECONOMY, STUPID

Obama should focus first on Modi's main priority: reviving the Indian economy. Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party won a landslide victory in the spring in large part because voters had grown frustrated by India's slow growth, crumbling infrastructure, and pervasive government corruption. Through Modi's landslide win, the Indian people sent a compelling message about the need for dramatic economic reform, and Modi promised to deliver.

But in the past two years, U.S.-Indian trade disputes have hampered economic cooperation. The United States has made legitimate complaints about Indian protectionism, and the two governments have filed World Trade Organization cases against each other involving such goods as solar panels, steel, and agricultural products. Invoking safety concerns, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has also banned imports from more than a dozen Indian plants, mostly in the pharmaceutical industry.

The United States and India have long antagonized each other in global trade talks. Their fight over agricultural protectionism ultimately caused the Doha Round of international trade negotiations to collapse in 2008. Since then, the two countries have been unable to bridge their ideological divide. The estrangement is so great that India has been excluded from one of Obama's most ambitious trade initiatives in Asia: the Trans-Pacific Partnership. Washington and New Delhi must now prevent the inevitable trade disputes from overwhelming the political and military cooperation that binds the two countries together.

Obama and Modi will have no choice but to rebuild their economic ties brick by brick. When they meet in Washington, they should focus first on setting a 2015 deadline for completing the two countries' bilateral investment treaty, which the United States and India have been negotiating for more than a decade. Obama should also encourage Modi to undertake the necessary trade and financial liberalization that would help India gain acceptance into the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum, a regional trade group that has denied New Delhi membership for over two decades because the member states consider Indian trade policies to be too protectionist. Support from the United States could help Modi distance his new government from the statist policies of his predecessors.

To encourage Modi to further boost confidence in India's economy, Obama should counsel Modi to enact clearer regulations governing taxation and foreign investment. The two leaders could also announce a high-priority effort to resurrect the moribund civil nuclear deal. Modi would need to exercise his considerable political muscle to push a revision of the law through a reluctant Indian Parliament, but doing so would address a major American complaint: that after the Bush administration's Herculean effort to lift nuclear sanctions on India, New Delhi never reciprocated by actually implementing the agreement and opening up its market to U.S. firms.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

GANG OF TWO

As a second step, the United States and India should continue to strengthen their defense and political coordination in the Asia-Pacific region. India's greatest national security concern is its competition with China for regional military dominance: when U.S. officials visit Indian government offices these days, their counterparts invariably rank China as a greater long-term concern than Pakistan. Modi has already begun to build a close relationship with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. The United States should welcome stronger Indian-Japanese defense coordination, since it would further the U.S. goal of strengthening its regional security network of Asian democracies as China expands its own power base.

More broadly, Washington and New Delhi should enhance their already robust collaboration on defense. The United States has conducted more military exercises with India than with any other nation in recent years, but the two can do even more to fortify their growing air and naval cooperation. For instance, Obama could make India a more prominent part of the pivot to Asia by including its forces in all the military training and exercises the United States conducts in the region. The United States should also continue its trilateral security talks with India and Japan, and the three countries should work through the East Asia Summit to align their counter-terrorism and maritime security policies more closely. Above all, the United States and India must agree on a clear strategic plan to cement their military and political cooperation in Asia.

Even as the United States and India tighten their military ties, Obama and Modi must be careful to avoid creating the appearance of an anti-China coalition; looking for common ground on other issues with Beijing would help this cause. Washington and New Delhi could, for example, advance joint programs with Beijing to combat piracy, drugs, and crime, as Clinton suggested in 2011. When it comes to China, Obama and Modi must achieve a delicate balance between cooperation and competition, and they should do what they can to reassure Beijing. But they should also recognize that the most effective way to keep the peace in Asia is to maintain their countries' military strength in the region.

As a third priority, Obama should strengthen U.S. cooperation with India on counterterrorism and homeland security -- areas in which U.S. and Indian interests align particularly closely, especially due to the insidious growth in the last decade of terrorist groups based in Pakistan, such as Lashkar-e-Taiba. The United States should support India's determined efforts to combat the Naxalite insurgency, a violent Maoist movement active in more than half of India's states. The two governments will also want to collaborate even more closely on cyber-and missile defense. Given that India is home to one of the world's largest Muslim populations, the Modi government wants to consult more closely with the United States on the rise of extremism in Syria and Iraq and the potential danger to India's large population of workers in the Middle East.

Fourth, Obama and Modi should work together to promote stability in India's South Asian neighborhood, an area the prime minister has already signaled is a priority. Obama should support Modi's efforts to push the Sri Lankan government on its lamentable human rights situation, guard against Islamic extremism in Bangladesh, and promote greater political stability in Nepal.

Their most important regional project, however, should be Afghanistan. India is currently the fifth-largest provider of economic assistance to Afghanistan, and Indian firms have been active in rebuilding the country's infrastructure. In the past, the Bush and Obama administrations tried to limit India's involvement in Afghanistan out of deference to Pakistani opposition. But with the bulk of U.S. forces set to withdraw from Afghanistan by the end of 2016, the United States should encourage India to become a leading partner of the newly elected Afghan government, including taking on an active role in training the Afghan army.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington should also reach out to Indian officials to include them more actively in its long-term planning to stabilize a shaky Afghanistan.

Stability in South Asia will continue to depend, first and foremost, on the always troubled Indian-Pakistani relationship. Obama should support efforts by the Indian and Pakistani governments to commit to greater cross-border trade. India will continue to resist, unfortunately, any overt attempt by the United States or others to mediate between India and Pakistan over Kashmir.

The Obama team should also reaffirm Rice's policy of "dehyphenating" the U.S. relationship with India and Pakistan. For decades, successive U.S. administrations treated India and Pakistan policy as a single unit. But Rice did away with that in 2005 by pursuing independent and quite different policies with the two countries. That permitted the Bush administration to initiate the civil nuclear agreement, for example, without feeling obligated to negotiate an identical deal with Pakistan. (That would have been impossible, of course, given Pakistan's disastrous record on proliferation of its nuclear materials.) Although the United States needs to maintain an effective relationship with Pakistan, building a more durable partnership with India will bring much greater strategic benefit in the long term.

Finally, the United States and India must find a way to work together more effectively on leading global political challenges. U.S. officials have long felt frustrated by the fact that although the two countries have a close bilateral friendship, they are more often than not sparring partners at the United Nations and in other multilateral bodies. Obama and Modi can change that dynamic by looking for common ground this year on two big challenges: climate change and Iran, two issues on which India has been a historically weak partner to the United States. This will not be quick or easy. For nearly its entire existence as an independent country, India has been a proud and insistent advocate of nonalignment and of resisting what its diplomats often view as overbearing pressure to conform to U.S. policies. It is not even clear that the pragmatic Modi, with everything else on his plate, will want to take on the Indian bureaucracy to revise decades of Indian foreign policy. But the two governments ought to be able to work more effectively to curb climate change and pressure Iran over its nuclear program.

THE PATH AHEAD

As Washington and New Delhi work more closely together, each will have its own hurdle to overcome. Indian leaders, for their part, must meet the United States halfway on trade. If India continues to oppose meaningful global trade liberalization, the two countries will remain fundamentally at odds. Indian officials should understand that U.S. trade complaints against New Delhi are not part of a politically driven campaign to weaken their country, as they sometimes allege. Obama can point to the vigorous trade wars between the United States and Canada and between the United States and the European Union as evidence that Washington aggressively contests the trade policies of even its strongest allies.

The United States will have its own challenge in learning to work effectively with India, and that is to recognize the unique nature of this great-power relationship. The United States has no other partnership quite like it. India is too big and too proud to become a formal treaty ally of the United States, as Germany and Japan are. India will insist, for instance, on retaining its strong military ties to Russia and continuing its trade with Iran. The United States is accustomed to calling the shots with its allies in Europe and East Asia. That won't work with India, which will insist on equal standing with United States. To be effective in dealing with New Delhi, American diplomats must therefore pay special attention to Indian sensitivities, maintaining a realistic sense of what is and what is not possible with modern India.

This enhanced partnership will not be warmly welcomed in Pakistan or China. But the United

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

States can manage whatever resentment results: India will likely be a more reliable and trusting partner than Pakistan has ever been, and a stronger military link to India will also send a useful and important message to Beijing -- that the democratic countries of the region will remain strong and united.

Luckily, Washington's renewed emphasis on India should not be a hard sell in the United States. Obama can count on enthusiastic backing from the growing and highly successful Indian American community. The American and Indian publics consistently support the relationship in opinion polls. Most important, perhaps, Obama can also rely on one advantage he does not enjoy on nearly any other major foreign policy issue: bipartisan support. Bill Clinton, Bush, and Obama have co-authored the rise of U.S.-Indian ties over the last 15 years. This rare Democratic-Republican consensus that the United States ought to pivot its attention to New Delhi should allow India to remain at the forefront of U.S. strategy in Asia for decades to come.

If you wish to repost this article in full, please contact Courtney Doggart at the Council on Foreign Relations.

Follow me on Twitter | Future of Diplomacy Project | Middle East Initiative
79 JFK Street, Cambridge, MA 02138 | Phone: 617-495-1400 | Unsubscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: sewallconroy@comcast.net
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 10/31/2008 7:38:30 PM
Subject: Agency Leads

John,

We'd like your feedback on two leadership roles in Agency teams.

1) A replacement (if any) for Sam Nunn on DOD. John Hamre was one of the names we'd discussed before in considering a more senior face to put on the DOD team as you desired. Do you want us to ask him or to develop other candidates, or have Bill Lynn and Michele Flournoy stay as co-leads?

2) James Loy cannot serve (conflict of interest) as co-lead of DHS with Randy Beers. Randy has proposed two candidates: John Gannon and John Gordon. While Susan and I would be fine with either, we do not know if either would do it.

John Gannon was to have led the pre-Nov 4 Intel/DHS transition but had a conflict of interest and time that led him to step away from the lead. John Gordon's business interests may similarly impede him from playing a role. We'd like your guidance regarding whether to proceed with seeking a co-lead for Randy and if so whether you have preferences.

An alternative model would be to have Randy lead and appoint a deputy -- perhaps Clark Kent Ervin (african american, former DHS counsel) or Ron Lee from NSA since he'd rather be on DHS. Please let us know your thoughts.

Thanks. -Sarah

John Gordon

Gordon was at the WH as HS Advisor til 2004. He is highly respected for his professionalism. Gordon will do it for the country as a committed career officer.

> General John A. Gordon earned a B.S. degree from the University of Missouri in 1968, an M.S. degree at the U.S. Naval Postgraduate School in 1970, and an M.A. degree from Highlands University in 1972.
>
> General Gordon served in the White House as the President's Homeland Security Advisor from June 2003 until June 2004 and as the Deputy National Security Advisor for Counter Terrorism and the National Director for Counter Terrorism from June 2002 to June 2003. Prior to joining the White House team, General Gordon was the first administrator of the National Nuclear Security Administration and Under Secretary of Energy, responsible for the entirety of the nation's nuclear weapons program, serving from June 2000 until June 2002. As an Air Force four-star general, he was the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence from October 1997 until June 2000. General Gordon's 32-year Air Force career included significant concentration on research and development, strategic planning, missile and space operations, intergovernmental operations, and international negotiations.
>
> General Gordon is now a private consultant and serves on the boards of several corporations and nonprofit organizations.
>
> John Gannon

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BAE Systems has named Dr. John Gannon as vice president for Global Analysis, a new line of business formed within BAE Systems Information Technology.

Gannon joins BAE Systems after serving as Staff Director of the House Homeland Security Committee, the first new committee established by Congress in more than thirty years. In 2002-2003, he was a team leader in the White House's Transitional Planning Office for the Department of Homeland Security. He served previously in the senior-most analytic positions in the Intelligence Community, including CIA's Director of European Analysis, Deputy Director for Intelligence, Chairman of the National Intelligence Council, and Assistant Director of Central Intelligence for Analysis and Production. In the private sector, he developed the analytic workforce for Intellibridge Corporation, a web-based provider of outsourced analysis for government and corporate clients.

Gannon served as a naval officer in Southeast Asia and later in several Naval Reserve commands; retiring as a Captain. He was also elected to the Falls Church, Va., City Council and was subsequently appointed to the city's Planning Commission and later to the city's Economic Development Commission and Charter Review Commission.

Gannon holds a bachelor's degree from Holy Cross College in Worcester, Mass., and master's and doctorate degrees from Washington University in St. Louis. He is an adjunct professor in the National Security Studies Program at Georgetown University.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jonathan Garthwaite" <THeditor@TownHallmail.com>
To: Friend <JohnPodesta@gmail.com>
Date: 3/17/2016 7:53:48 AM
Subject: Is the GOP Falling Apart?

Townhall.com
CELEBRATING 20 YEARS

Having trouble viewing this email? View it in your browser

Fresh, Conservative, Intelligent Reporting | Facebook
Twitter

Columnists | Tipsheet | News | Cartoons | Videos

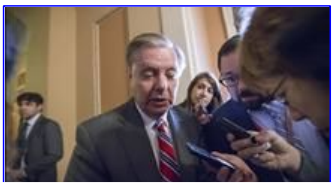
TRENDING: U.S. Dollar Losing Ground... 2016 Collapse Imminent?
Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016...
Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

Must Reads

Cruz v. McConnell Tension Complicating GOP Unity?

Cortney O'Brien

Last Thursday's presidential debate on CNN may have been the last of this election season for the remaining GOP field.
[Keep Reading]



Earnest Suggests Nothing Will Change on Ground After 'Genocide' Label, But We Will 'Investigate'

Cortney O'Brien

Lindsey Graham Now Supporting Ted Cruz

Christine Rousselle

State Department Declares ISIS is Committing Genocide Against Christians in Iraq and Syria

Katie Pavlich

Secretary of State John Kerry has determined ISIS is committing genocide against Christians in Iraq and Syria and will make an official announcement and declaration of genocide later today.
[Keep Reading]

Video: Hillary Clinton's Gaffe Spree

Guy Benson

Please enjoy this mash-up of Hillary Clinton's hapless week of campaign rhetoric, even as she fails upward into prohibitive frontrunner status.
[Keep Reading]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ICE Director Shirks Responsibility: Woman's Death At Hands of Illegal Immigrant Was 'After the Fact'

Cortney O'Brien

Romanian MP Jailed After Bribing Voters With Fried Chicken

Christine Rousselle

Gowdy: New Rules Needed Because Dems Are Threatening to Leak Benghazi Documents

Cortney O'Brien

US Ballistic Submarine Program Under Fire

Justin Holcomb

TRENDING:

U.S. Dollar Losing Ground... 2016 Collapse Imminent?

Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016

Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

Israeli Ambassador to US Fact Checks Unflattering NYT Editorial About Netanyahu

Cortney O'Brien

Ron Dermer, Israeli Ambassador to the U.S., gets right to the point in his new editorial published in The New York Times on Wednesday.

[Keep Reading]

TRENDING:

U.S. Dollar Losing Ground... 2016 Collapse Imminent?

Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016

Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

Columnists & Tipsheet

Voters Deliver Subtle Message: Die Donor Scum
Ann Coulter

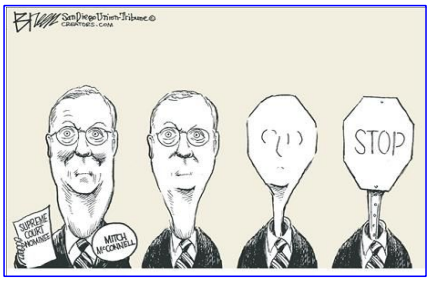
Education, the Great Equalizer
Allen West

Giant Texas Cross Sparks A theist Lawsuit (and you won't believe why)
Todd Starnes

The Buck Never Stops Here
Victor Davis Hanson

What A Waste
Derek Hunter

Trump Asked to Denounce David Duke -- But Not Farrakhan
Larry Elder



Iran's Missiles and the Nuclear Deal
Cal Thomas

More than Halfway There
Jackie Gingrich Cushman

Political Cartoons

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

RNC Rule Maker Says "The Media Has Created Perception That Voters Will Decide the Nomination"

Justin Holcomb

A disconnect with the American people.
[Keep Reading]

Nikki Haley Now Backing Ted Cruz

Christine Rousselle

Now that Rubio has suspended his campaign, Haley has switched up who she's supporting: she's now backing Texas Sen. Ted Cruz.
[Keep Reading]

Trump Takes Another Swing at Wall Street Journal

On Thursday, Donald Trump called out the Wall Street Journal for publishing actual voting results showing that Trump is getting fewer voters on the Republican side than Clinton is on the Democractic side.
[Keep Reading]

SeaWorld Ends Orca Breeding

SeaWorld will end orca breeding and will no longer be replacing killer whales at its parks, the park announced.
[Keep Reading]

Apple-DOJ Faceoff gets Testier

Apple says the U.S. founding fathers "would be appalled" by the Justice Department's request to unlock an encrypted iPhone.
[Keep Reading]

Bearing Arms

What the Heck Is a "Merrick Garland," Anyway? | Bob Owens

Social Media Robbery Attempt Thwarted By Armed Victim | Bob Owens

St. Paul Woman Stops Violent Attack on Husband by Drawing Her Gun | Jenn Jacques

Former Police Chief Who Falsely Claimed He Was Attacked By Gun Rights Advocates Pleads Guilty | Bob Owens

Attempted ATM Robber Withdraws Lead Instead Of Gold | Bob Owens

Political News

APNewsBreak: Google details federal fix for self-driving car | AP News

Syria's Kurds declare de-facto federal region in north | AP News

State considers revising song to remove antebellum sentiment | AP News

APNewsBreak: Gas line explosions bring new safety proposal | AP News

Morocco resumes contact with European authorities | AP News

Obamacare in Full Effect
Plus: 2014 Senate Races

TRENDING: U.S. Dollar Losing Ground... 2016 Collapse Imminent?
Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016...
Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

Connect with Us

Facebook
Twitter

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

_____SUBSCRIPTION INFO_____

This newsletter is never sent unsolicited. It was sent to you because you signed up to receive this newsletter on the Townhall.com network OR a friend forwarded it to you. We respect and value your time and privacy. If this newsletter no longer meets your needs we will be happy to remove your address immediately.

You can unsubscribe from the Townhall Daily by clicking here .

Or Send postal mail to:
Townhall Daily Unsubscribe
1735 N. Lynn St - Suite 510, Arlington, VA 22209

* Copyright Townhall and its Content Providers.
All rights reserved.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 8/14/2014 2:32:27 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Thursday August 14, 2014 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Thursday August 14, 2014 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

The Advocate opinion: Allida Black: "Hillary Is Ready for Us"

"Hillary has always stood with me, Judy, and the entire LGBT community. And she always will."

CNN: "Clinton dances between loyalty and self-interest"

"Correct the Record, an outside rapid response and communications group, began tweeting and writing about Clinton's accomplishments on a daily basis."

Politico: "Open Mike: Inside Ready for Hillary"

"From this week's Open Mike with Mitch Stewart, the Obama for America campaign veteran who's now a senior adviser to Ready for Hillary, the super PAC formed to encourage Clinton to run for president."

Politico: "Media Matters' David Brock expands empire"

"David Brock is taking over a leading watchdog group, Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington Post blog: Post Politics: "Hillary Clinton's day on Martha's Vineyard: signing books, promises of hugs"

"At Clinton's first stop, the Bunch of Grapes Bookstore, hundreds lined up outside for hours in the rain to meet the former Secretary of State"

Politico: "'Hug summit' for Obama, Clinton"

"President Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton mingled amiably at a party on the elite vacation enclave of Martha's Vineyard, a day after the former secretary of state called the president to make clear she meant no ill will in a complex interview about foreign policy with The Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg that was published over the weekend."

Bloomberg: "Clinton-Obama Tension Rises as Political Interests Shift"

"Asked today whether it was a tough decision to call Obama after her comments set off a media firestorm, she said: 'No.'"

The Atlantic: "How Money Warps U.S. Foreign Policy"

"Given these results, why do most commentators think Hillary's hawkishness is politically wise? Because over the last year or so—as a result of the conflict in Ukraine and the rise of ISIS in Syria and Iraq—elite opinion has grown more hawkish even though public opinion at large hasn't."

The Hill: "Former Hillary aide sought to 'neutralize' greens on Keystone"

"A former spokeswoman to Hillary Clinton worked for the Canadian province of Alberta to 'neutralize the environmentalist arguments' against the Keystone XL pipeline, new filings with the Justice Department reveal."

New York Times column: Gail Collins: "What's Next With Hillary?"

"Now that she's brought up actual issues, the party's rank-and-file deserves some more information."

The New Yorker: John Cassidy: "Can Hillary Play This Game?"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"In short, Hillary remains a very formidable political figure, and she's still the strong favorite to be the next President."

Vox: "Obama's critics are suddenly sure Hillary Clinton is great"

"When it comes to looking back on the disappointments of Barack Obama's presidency, the 'other thing,' particularly this week, is elect Hillary Clinton."

The Hill blog: Lanny Davis: "The cure for punditry hyperventilation on Hillary Clinton — Try the facts"

"… If Clinton chooses to run for president, I know there will be other candidates for the nomination and I hope there is a vigorous debate on the issues and solutions to the nation's most important problems."

Articles:

The Advocate opinion: Allida Black: "Hillary Is Ready for Us"

By Allida Black

August 14, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] The Hillary this writer met while she was still first lady has always stood by LGBT people.

I was holding hands with Judy, about to walk into the White House, where we had been invited to an event as a couple — a lesbian couple — by the first lady of the United States. It was 1993.

You see, back then, even the general notion of homosexuality was still completely foreign to a lot of people — including my sweet parents, who like a lot of people hadn't accepted us yet for who we were. For my mother in particular, having the first lady accept Judy and me made it easier to eventually do so herself.

As the saying goes, actions speak louder than words, and there was no bolder action at the time than for the first lady of the United States, Hillary Clinton, to recognize me and my partner as a couple and welcome us into the White House. And Hillary's actions over the next three decades would further establish her as one of the country's most visible and heartfelt supporters of the LGBT community.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In the Senate, Hillary fought to expand gay rights and protect us from abuse and discrimination. She advocated for lifting the restrictions that block gay and lesbian couples from adopting children, a position that remains controversial today among many right-wing politicians, who for reasons I'll probably never understand still don't think we are capable of providing children a loving home. She repeatedly cosponsored the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, which would have banned discrimination based on sexual orientation, and she cosponsored the Matthew Shepard Local Law Enforcement Hate Crimes Prevention Act to include LGBT individuals in federal hate crimes statutes.

When Hillary became Secretary of State, she took her fight for gay rights across the globe. She made history as the first secretary of state to make promoting LGBT rights part of official U.S. government policy. She took groundbreaking steps to work with foreign leaders to change policies criminalizing homosexuality and to protect international LGBT groups combatting such laws.

Within her first few months as Secretary of State, Hillary profoundly expanded the rights of the State Department's LGBT employees by changing policies that denied same-sex diplomatic spouses the same rights and benefits as all other spouses. This had huge repercussions for employees working overseas. Before Hillary's action, for example, diplomats working in a country that had become too dangerous would be evacuated, while their partner or spouse — if of the same sex — could be left behind to fend for themselves.

Hillary announced the State Department's new policy offering equal benefits and protections to LGBT diplomatic spouses in a memo in which she wrote, "Like all families, our Foreign Service families come in different configurations; all are part of the common fabric of our post communities abroad ... the department will provide these benefits for both opposite-sex and same-sex partners because it is the right thing to do."

Doing something because it's the right thing to do? We could use more of that in America.

While Hillary's actions have always demonstrated her commitment to gay rights, her words have been powerful as well.

Hillary's historic 1995 speech in Beijing, where she declared that "women's rights are human rights," marked a significant turn in the women's rights movement. In 2011, at a speech at the U.N. Human Rights Council's headquarters in Geneva, Hillary made history once again with the following words:

"Like being a woman, like being a racial, religious, tribal, or ethnic minority, being LGBT does not make you less human. And that is why gay rights are human rights and human rights are gay rights."

Gay rights are human rights.

This simple statement is the principle underlying Hillary Clinton's actions on behalf of the LGBT community — past, present, and future. It was the impetus behind another powerful action, announcing her full support for gay marriage, using more of her powerful words:

"LGBT Americans are our colleagues, our teachers, our soldiers, our friends, our loved ones…And they are full and equal citizens and deserve the rights of citizenship. That includes marriage."

Twenty years after Hillary welcomed us as a couple into the White House, Judy and I got married just a few minutes away at the National Mall. When we got home from our reception, we had a letter from Hillary congratulating us on our marriage. I'll never forget the first few words written on her letter: "at long last."

Hillary has always stood with me, Judy, and the entire LGBT community. And she always will.

CNN: "Clinton dances between loyalty and self-interest"

By Dan Merica

August 13, 2014, 7:52 p.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton finds herself in an impossible position.

She's seriously considering what some believe is an inevitable second run for the presidency. But the four years she spent as Barack Obama's secretary of state look a lot different today than when she left the administration more than a year ago.

The surprise reset of Russian relations went awry over Ukraine and the promise of the Arab Spring collapsed amid worsening civil war in Syria and the brutal advances of the Islamic State in Iraq. Baghdad lapsed into political chaos, violence flared anew in Libya, Benghazi remains under scrutiny, and the perennially tense situation between Israel and Hamas exploded in violence again in Gaza.

Much of this reached crisis stage after she left the State Department, but Clinton is on the hook for a lot of Obama's foreign policy legacy. And many experts say she needs to distance herself from it before launching any campaign for the White House.

But the strategy for that is complex and risky.

The primary problem: Clinton recently published "Hard Choices," a 656-page volume about her experiences as America's top diplomat that is noticeably thin on disagreements with Obama.

Yes, Clinton writes about conflicting opinions over arming Syrian rebels and some smaller differences on drones. But she largely balked at her chance in the book to break with Obama. It was a perfect opportunity to do so.

If anything, Clinton's aides and outside supporters responded to Republican criticism of her record at the State Department and drew her closer to her boss's foreign policy.

Correct the Record, an outside rapid response and communications group, began tweeting and writing about

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton's accomplishments on a daily basis.

It touted her book as a success, highlighted her work in the Middle East and heralded Clinton's "pivot to Asia."

At the same time, Clinton and her advisers retooled her promotional bio and worked out an answer for the question, "What did you accomplish as secretary of state?"

The world blew up during the book tour

Instead of stumbling on the question -- something Clinton did more than once during the book tour -- she began to breeze through it. She highlighted a checklist of accomplishments and victories shared with Obama.

"Thanks in large measure to Hillary's leadership, people were finally able to say: 'America's back,'" reads her new promotional bio.

But a cascading series of world events that seemed to coincide with the book tour or the buzz around it challenged America's interests abroad in a big way and tested its influence. New and more difficult questions emerged. Obama's foreign policy was under fire on a number of fronts.

Acutely aware of the changing narrative, Clinton has been trying to selectively distance herself from some of the messy foreign developments.

But this week, she put it into clearer political context.

In an interview with The Atlantic, Clinton trashed the Obama mantra that reflects his cautious approach to foreign policy: "Don't do stupid stuff."

She said that was "not an organizing principle" and labeled the President's decisions in Syria, with which she has long disagreed, a "failure."

This all appeared to cause more harm than good.

David Axelord, Obama's former top adviser who now acts as his biggest defender outside the White House, took her to task with a tweet, referencing her 2002 vote in favor of the Iraq War. And liberals in her party spoke up about the quickness with which she broke with Obama in favor of hawkish rhetoric.

Clinton reached out to Obama this week to assure him that her comments did not represent an attack on his policies or his leadership.

People close to Clinton argue she used the interview to only articulate what she wrote in the book about Syria.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On the festering civil war, Clinton writes that "the President's inclination was to stay the present course and not take the significant further step of arming rebels," while hers was to arm the rebels.

"No one likes to lose a debate, including me. But this was the President's call and I respected his deliberations and decision," she writes.

As secretary of state, though, Clinton publicly expressed doubt with arming the rebels.

"What are we going to arm them with and against what," Clinton told CBS in February 2012. "You are not going to bring tanks over the borders of Turkey, Lebanon and Jordan — that's not going to happen. So maybe at the best you can smuggle in, you know, automatic weapons."

Few hints of disagreement

But there was little indication that she disagreed with Obama on other big issues during her time in his Cabinet, including the pivot to Asia, a cease-fire between Israel and Gaza the last time around, and working to curb Iran's nuclear ambitions.

One former Clinton aide said what Clinton told The Atlantic reflected what she wrote in the book and that there's no indication she's being a "Monday morning quarterback."

"I think it is wrong to assume that the fact things are going to sh abroad, that is why she is coming out so forcefully against him," said a former Clinton campaign aide. "The timing of this book, the timing of these interviews is coincidental."

Republicans see Clinton distancing herself from Obama as a boon for them. Not only might it reinforce their anti-Obama efforts, but it enables them to amplify their claims that Clinton's just expedient.

"She is cold and calculating and a hyper-positioning politician," said Kevin Madden, a Republican strategist.

He was excited about the prospect of the GOP exploiting Clinton's "voluminous" and "overwhelming" record of working with Obama.

The Republican National Committee also sees an opening.

"Hillary Clinton spent four years executing Barack Obama's foreign policy and in year five of Obama's term, it's ridiculous for Hillary to try to swindle voters into thinking what's happening around the world isn't a product of Obama-Hillary diplomacy," said Kirsten Kurkowski, spokeswoman for the RNC.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Politico: "Open Mike: Inside Ready for Hillary"

By Mike Allen

August 13, 2014, 10:39 p.m. EDT

From this week's Open Mike with Mitch Stewart, the Obama for America campaign veteran who's now a senior adviser to Ready for Hillary, the super PAC formed to encourage Clinton to run for president.

ALLEN: Lightning strikes and Secretary Clinton decides not to run. What happens to ready for Hillary?

STEWART: If she were to decide not to run, I think that a lot of that work would be transferable to whomever the nominee is. So I think it is to say that it is still additive to Democratic politics as a whole.

ALLEN: What do we already know is going to be different from 2016 from 2012?

STEWART: If you just look at the census right now and follow, if you want to say a linear path, in 2016 it will probably be 30 or 31 percent non-white. So number one the electorate will be way more diverse. And second is, its harder and harder to communicate with voters. You know the disparate view or opportunities to gather information is continuing to expand. So you can't just focus on TV, you can't just focus on print, you can't just focus on online, you can't just focus on off-line. You're going to have to be much more creative in actually engaging people.

ALLEN: There is a huge potential for an enthusiasm cap getting people as excited for Hillary Clinton as they were for Barack Obama. That's going to be a job.

STEWART: That's what people said about 2012 and 2008. Actually, if you want to look, we had about 1.2 million volunteers in 2008. We had 2.2 million volunteers in 2012.

Politico: "Media Matters' David Brock expands empire"

By Kenneth P. Vogel

August 13, 2014, 9:26 p.m. EDT

In a major power play that aligns liberal muscle more fully behind the Democratic Party — and Hillary Clinton — the self-described right-wing hitman-turned-Clinton enforcer David Brock is taking over a leading watchdog group, Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington.

Brock was elected chairman of the group's board last week after laying out a multifaceted expansion intended to turn the group into a more muscular — and likely partisan — attack dog, according to sources familiar with the move.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The ambitious plans, which began being implemented this week, also seem to cement Brock's role as among the leading big money operatives in all of American politics.

Brock confirmed the basics of the shakeup in an interview. The reconfigured CREW, which is searching for a new executive director, will add a more politically oriented arm, expand its focus into state politics and donor targeting and will operate in close coordination with Brock's growing fleet of aggressive Democrat-backing nonprofits and super PACs — Media Matters, American Bridge and the American Independent Institute.

"CREW gives us some potentially powerful tools in the tool box," said Brock, who founded his flagship organization Media Matters in 2004. "We have been in the accountability for 10 years very successfully. It is kind of a one-stop-shop now."

And Brock's army will be supplemented still further by the formation of a new overtly partisan watchdog group called The American Democracy Legal Fund, which is already preparing complaints against high-profile Republicans, including Michigan GOP Senate candidate Terry Lynn Land. That group will be run by Brad Woodhouse, the president of American Bridge, and will be registered under section 527 of the Tax Code — allowing it to engage in more political activity than CREW's traditional portfolio. CREW has operated as a nonprofit registered under a section of the Tax Code — 501(c)3 — that prohibits partisan activity; under Brock's leadership it will add a new more politically oriented arm registered under section 501(c)4.

CREW was founded in 2003 by former federal prosecutor Melanie Sloan and white-collar lawyer Norm Eisen, who went on to serve as President Barack Obama's chief ethics lawyer and is now his ambassador to the Czech Republic. It carved out a reputation as a leading watchdog by relentlessly pursuing litigation and ethics complaints against primarily — though not exclusively — Republican public officials. It had its heyday during the Bush administration, when its complaints and investigations played major roles in the Jack Abramoff scandal and the downfalls of powerful GOP Reps. Tom Delay and Bob Ney.

But under the stewardship of Sloan, who serves as CREW's executive director, the group went out of its way to demonstrate that it would not pull punches when it came to Democratic corruption. It boasts in a mission statement on its website, "we work to ensure government officials — regardless of party affiliation — act with honesty and integrity and merit the public trust," and it also pursued broader good-government initiatives.

CREW wins media attention each year with its annual "Most Corrupt Members of Congress" report, which it started in 2005 and which has included 25 Democrats among its 88 featured members. It called for the resignations of embattled New York Democratic Reps. Anthony Weiner and Charlie Rangel, and has pending requests for investigations into the Obama administration, including its use of private emails to conduct government affairs.

Its unwillingness to toe the party line miffed some Democrats, including, sources say, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, whose members occasionally found themselves in CREW's cross hairs.

That bipartisan focus gave CREW credibility in the watchdog community and made Sloan a go-to quote for reporters, leading Ms. Magazine to ask in 2007 whether she was "The Most Feared Woman on Capitol Hill." But the take-no-prisoners approach may have complicated efforts to raise money from wealthy Democratic donors. And, in February 2012, the group was demoted from the top tier of recipient organizations recommended by the Democracy Alliance rich liberal donor club during a reshuffling seen as boosting super PACs and other groups closely aligned with Democrats. On the other hand, Brock seems to have a golden touch with rich Democrats, including billionaire financier George Soros.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Brock's personal evolution is a compelling selling point with the monied class. He began his career as a leading conservative attack journalist in the 1990s, penning stories and books strafing Anita Hill and the Clintons, among other conservative targets, before publicly renouncing the conservative movement and embracing the left. His groups now are at the leading edge of several Democratic causes celebre — declaring war on Fox News and the conservative billionaire industrialists Charles and David Koch, while defending Hillary Clinton against mounting Republican attacks as she prepares for a possible 2016 presidential run.

Brock's groups have the cash to support such a wide portfolio. They have a combined budget of about $25 million a year and 170 employees, compared with CREW's $2.7 million 2014 budget and 15 staffers, almost all of whom will be able to stay on, Brock suggested.

Neither CREW nor most of Brock's groups disclose their donors — something that led to charges of hypocrisy against CREW and other liberal-leaning watchdogs. But anecdotal evidence suggests that there's a bit of overlap between the donor pools, since Brock's groups have found great success raising money from Democracy Alliance members. In the CREW shakeup, two donors close to Brock — San Francisco investor Wayne Jordan and Washington-based consultant David Mercer — also joined CREW's board.

The Huffington Post in its Wednesday afternoon newsletter reported that Media Matters was "acquiring" CREW and quipped "Will It Survive DOJ Antitrust?" but didn't offer any details on the moves.

Brock deflected when asked if CREW, under his leadership, would continue pursuing complaints against Democrats.

"No party has a monopoly on corruption and at this early juncture, we are not making categorical statements about anything that we will and won't do," he said. "Having said that, our experience has been that the vast amount of violations of the public trust can be found on the conservative side of the aisle."

Brock also had high praise for Sloan, who resigned from CREW's board and announced her intention to step down as executive director when Brock names a replacement.

"Under Melanie's leadership, CREW emerged as an effective voice for the kind of honesty and integrity we deserve in our public officials," he said, promising to "build on her record of success, expanding the portfolio to scrutinize more activity in states, and political organizations that wield just as much influence over our policies as our politicians do, if not more."

Sloan, who aborted plans to leave CREW in 2011, declined to discuss why she was leaving, but predicted that CREW would fit well into Brock World.

"Given David's track record of building high-impact sustainable institutions, I am confident that CREW will continue to thrive under this new governance," she said in a statement released by CREW.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington Post blog: Post Politics: “Hillary Clinton’s day on Martha’s Vineyard: signing books, promises of hugs”

By Katie Zezima

August 13, 2014, 7:54 p.m. EDT

VINEYARD HAVEN, Mass. - Hillary Clinton swept onto Martha's Vineyard Wednesday amid drenching downpours -- and a flood of speculation ahead of her first meeting with President Obama after her criticism of his foreign policy earlier this week.

And if the skies hadn't exactly cleared over the island, both the Clinton and Obama camps insisted the storm clouds that seemed to loom over her relationship with the president after she disparaged his foreign policy philosophy in an interview with The Atlantic had parted.

At Clinton's first stop, the Bunch of Grapes Bookstore, hundreds lined up outside for hours in the rain to meet the former Secretary of State. They were treated to a brief explanation of her interview comments -- and a personal confirmation that she would, as her spokesman had promised, "hug it out" with Obama at a party here tonight.

"Absolutely," Clinton said, when asked about the much-anticipated embrace. "Yeah. Looking forward to it. Going to be there tonight."

Clinton said the decision to call Obama after the interview and apologize wasn't a difficult one.

"We agree," she said. "We are committed to the values and the interests of the security of our country together. We have disagreements as any partners and friends, as we are, might very well have."

Obama has articulated his foreign policy as such: don't do stupid stuff. Clinton said in the Atlantic interview that it wasn't enough.

“Great nations need organizing principles — and ‘Don’t do stupid stuff’ is not an organizing principle," Clinton said in her Atlantic interview.

Asked at the bookstore Wednesday if she disagrees with Obama's policy on Iraq, Clinton decided to answer a different question entirely.

"I'm excited about signing books," she said.

That would seem to be a prerequisite for an event like this one: The bookstore said it had ordered 1,000 copies of "Hard Choices," the number Clinton's people have said she can sign in two hours. Clinton, sporting a dusty rose-colored textured jacket, greeted people who shuffled by the table where she was signing. As each person -- many of them sporting ponchos or soaking wet hair -- filed by, an aide slid a copy of "Hard Choices" to Clinton, the front cover open.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I'll be voting for you," a woman said to Clinton.

"Bless your heart," she replied.

Clinton made small talk about Martha's Vineyard, telling one attendee that she is "not here long enough," and trying to get a high-five out of six-year-old Audrey Lamb-Wilson when the girl wouldn't take a photo with her. Audrey obliged.

"Thank you for coming, staying out in the rain," Clinton said to the crowd, some of whom were sporting "Ready for Hillary" stickers.

"The potential to meet the first woman president of the United States!" Audrey's mother, Alycia Lamb of Seattle, said. "It's pretty monumental."

Quentin Heyward of Philadelphia shuffled toward the exit after meeting Clinton, who he said had "re-energized" him.

"She is the Merkel of the Americas," Heyward said. "She's cutting edge, she's respected, she's trusted."

There was little mention of the other major political figure on the island: President Obama, here for a two-week vacation.

Over the days since Clinton's initial comments, speculation in Washington has run rampant: How would Obama respond? Would it affect their relationship? Are they friends, or enemies -- or a bit of both? And exactly how awkward would their first post-comment meeting, and the promised Hug of Reconciliation, really be?

"Pool reporter better get in there with a tape measure to determine official hug distance," tweeted Democratic strategist Donna Brazile mockingly in the hours before the event. "We have a right to know. Agree? #huganalysis"

The frenzy over the Clinton comments, and looming embrace, reached fever pitch at the White House press briefing Wednesday, where reporters pressed deputy White House press secretary Eric Schultz over the state of the Obama-Clinton relationship -- and pushed for access to the pair's formal rapprochement.

"They have a close and resilient relationship," insisted Schultz, who added that Obama had "appreciated" Clinton's call. "...I'm not sure anyone in this room would contest that [not] doing stupid stuff is a good idea, but I also don't think anyone at the White House would assert that that is the -- how we would describe our approach to foreign policy."

Schultz did concede that Obama and Clinton have disagreed on several fronts, including the question of whether and when to arm Syrian rebels -- but he downplayed the distance between them. "They continue to agree on a broad majority of issues confronting our country, even if they have the occasional policy difference," Schultz said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As to the hugs: No big deal, he insisted -- the two have been there before.

"I believe the president and Secretary Clinton have had many hugs over the past few years," Schultz said, informing reporters that the latest embrace would go undocumented. "I suspect many of them have been caught on camera."

Politico: "'Hug summit' for Obama, Clinton"

By Maggie Haberman and Carrie Budoff Brown

August 14, 2014, 12:27 a.m. EDT

The "hug summit" finally took place Wednesday night.

President Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton mingled amiably at a party on the elite vacation enclave of Martha's Vineyard, a day after the former secretary of state called the president to make clear she meant no ill will in a complex interview about foreign policy with The Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg that was published over the weekend.

The two saw each other at a party thrown by longtime Clinton friend Vernon Jordan and his wife, Ann, on Martha's Vineyard, where Clinton held a book-signing for her memoir "Hard Choices," and where Obama and his family are vacationing.

According to a read-out from White House officials, the party was a birthday celebration for Ann Jordan at the Farm Neck Golf Club with about 150 guests, including Bill and Hillary Clinton. President Obama gave the first toast, followed by Hillary Clinton and Vernon Jordan.

It was unclear if the two actually hugged, as a statement from Clinton press aide Nick Merrill had joked they would. But they certainly made clear that they were moving past a controversy that both sides described as overblown by the media.

"The president and first lady also were happy to have the chance to spend time with Secretary Clinton and former President Clinton," said a White House spokesman.

The dinner took place amid a somber backdrop nationally, as riot police in Ferguson, Missouri, the site of a police shooting of an unarmed black man over the weekend, used tear gas to hold protesters at bay. Obama put out a statement on the shooting Tuesday, and on Wednesday night, a White House official said Obama was briefed on the ongoing situation by senior adviser Valerie Jarrett and Attorney General Eric Holder.

In Obama's toast, he joked that he met Vernon before he met his wife but that he liked Ann more, and "a good time was had by all," the spokesman said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

According to POLITICO's Mike Allen, attendees included Holder, Jarrett, National Security Adviser Susan Rice, Ambassador to Japan Caroline Kennedy and American Express head Ken Chenault. The Obamas danced to nearly every song. So did the Clintons.

Hillary Clinton and Obama sat on either side of Ann Jordan.

Earlier in the day, as she signed books at the Bunch of Grapes bookstore in Vineyard Haven, Clinton made clear that she had in no way intended her criticisms related to policy toward Syria, the president's overall approach to global affairs — "Don't do stupid stuff," as his aides have said — or her view of the role of Hamas in the Gaza conflict as an attack on the president. A White House spokesman said the president "appreciated Secretary Clinton's call, as he does every opportunity to chat with the former secretary of state," in an earlier briefing with reporters.

"They have a close and resilient relationship."

At the book signing, Clinton began by briefly addressing the issue of the flap over foreign policy, saying the decision to call Obama on Tuesday was not "a hard choice."

"We agree," she said. "We are committed to the values and the interests of the security of our country together. We have disagreements as any partners and friends, as we are, might very well have."

Asked about Obama's current approach to Iraq, which includes surgical airstrikes, she replied, ""I'm excited about signing books."

Bloomberg: "Clinton-Obama Tension Rises as Political Interests Shift"

By Jonathan Allen and Angela Greiling Keane

August 13, 2014, 10:47 p.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama are caught in a rift-and-repair cycle.

Their political camps spar. Then make up. It's a recurring sequence that won't end until he leaves the White House or her presidential aspirations come to an end, political experts say.

At the moment, the two are in the making-up stage. Clinton, at a book-signing on Martha's Vineyard, said she was "looking forward" to seeing him at a party tonight -- three days after her criticism of Obama's "don't do stupid stuff" foreign policy mantra was published in The Atlantic.

White House Deputy Press Secretary Eric Schultz told reporters on the island earlier today that Obama and

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton, his former secretary of State, have a “close and resilient” relationship. Schultz wouldn’t say how the president reacted to her remarks; Clinton later called Obama to smooth things over.

The two sat at the same table at the dinner tonight at a golf club on Martha’s Vineyard where they celebrated the 80th birthday of Ann Jordan, who with her husband Vernon Jordan, is a Democratic donor.

“The president and first lady also were happy to have the chance to spend time with Secretary Clinton and former President Clinton,” the White House said in a statement after the party with about 150 attendees.

Shotgun Wedding

From the time of their shotgun wedding after the 2008 campaign -- Obama vowing to keep his primary adversary close and Clinton promising to serve him loyally as head of his State Department -- they’ve kept the partnership of the two most powerful brands in Democratic politics from tearing asunder.

That will increasingly be a challenge, given their differences in approach and policy and the shifting of their interests from mutual to distinct, as Obama works to burnish his legacy while Clinton lays the groundwork for her political future.

Asked today whether it was a tough decision to call Obama after her comments set off a media firestorm, she said: “No.”

“We agree. We are committed to the values and interests of the security of our country together,” she said. “We have disagreements, as any partners and friends might very well have. But I’m proud that I served with him and for him and I’m looking forward to tonight.”

‘Natural’ Tension

Julian Zelizer, a Princeton University professor of history and public affairs, said that “by putting herself physically in the same place, she obviously amplifies the story of difference but also might be sending a reminder to her party, including the left, that she and Obama are still on the same team or, in this case, on the same island.”

The tension is “natural when a two-term president is coming to an end and a potential candidate needs to distinguish themselves from a predecessor,” Zelizer said.

Similar dynamics were on display when former Vice President Al Gore put distance between his 2000 presidential campaign and his former boss, President Bill Clinton, and they date back in the country’s history.

The great friendship between Republican presidents Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft frayed so badly during Taft’s first term in office that Roosevelt, who had been commander in chief from 1901 to 1909, tried to wrest the party’s nomination away in 1912.

Personal Invective

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Roosevelt, who formed the Bull-Moose party after losing the nomination, said Taft had veered away from progressivism and toward the “forces of reaction and political crookedness.” Nothing Obama or Clinton has said about the other since their primary campaign in 2008 approaches that level of personal invective.

The genesis of the Obama-Clinton conflict is twofold: his poor poll ratings and her interest in the presidency. He’s been upside down, with more Americans disapproving than approving of the job he’s doing, for more than a year in Gallup’s daily tracking polls. In surveys taken from Aug. 9 through Aug. 11, he rated a 41 percent approval level, with 55 percent disapproving of his handling of the presidency.

Clinton must show distance from a flagging president while making sure not to alienate the Democratic base that picked him over her in 2008. Her two-months-and-counting book tour, which produced the latest round of recriminations and reconciliation, isn’t helping matters.

Clinton Book

In her memoir, published in June, Clinton writes glowingly of Obama, while making clear exactly how and how often she disagreed with him on foreign policy issues when she was his chief diplomat from 2009 through early 2013.

In one instance, she recounts how Obama overruled her and others in his administration who advocated arming moderate rebels in Syria. While she publicly stood by the president’s decision not to do that, she has said since leaving the State Department that the “failure” to intervene gave space for the Islamic State to rise in Syria and Iraq.

It was a question from Jeffrey Goldberg of The Atlantic about foreign policy that led to Clinton saying “don’t do stupid stuff” is not an “organizing principle” and touching off the back-and-forth with the White House.

Obama’s longtime political adviser, David Axelrod, responded with a Twitter message that alluded to Clinton’s vote to authorize the Iraq War.

The exchanges highlight how a divide in the Democratic Party serves neither Obama nor Clinton.

His poll numbers are propped up by nearly unified support from his partisan allies. Her chances of winning the presidency rely on the goodwill of Obama donors and voters who grew to accept her because she served him loyally.

Neil Levesque, director of the New Hampshire Institute of Politics at St. Anselm College, said “it’s definitely going to get worse” between Clinton and Obama.

“It’s hard to say there’s risk when her numbers are so much better than his,” Levesque said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Atlantic: "How Money Warps U.S. Foreign Policy"

By Peter Beinart

August 13, 2014, 4:53 p.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] The key divide on America's role in the world is no longer between Democrats and Republicans. It's between elites and everyone else.

On Sunday, when Hillary Clinton used an interview with Jeffrey Goldberg to take pointedly more hawkish stances than President Obama on Syria, Iran, and Gaza, observers chalked it up to her presidential ambitions. As one Democratic operative told Politico, Clinton's advisors are "good poll readers." On Tuesday, when Rand Paul declined to oppose U.S. airstrikes in Iraq, commentators interpreted it the same way.

The assumption that hawkishness is politically smart is deeply ingrained in the media's coverage of the 2016 presidential race. But it's bizarre. Because in both parties, the polling data is overwhelming: Americans think U.S. foreign policy is too hawkish already. Foreign policy has always been more elite-driven, and more insulated from public opinion, than domestic policy. But today's elite-mass gap is the largest in decades. And regardless of your foreign-policy perspective, that's a problem for American democracy.

Think about the issues on which Hillary put distance between herself and Obama. She was particularly sharp in her criticism of the president's reluctance to arm Syria's rebels. But this supposedly shrewd political maneuver puts Hillary in the company of a mere 20 percent of the population. The last time the Pew Research Center asked Americans whether they support military aid to Syria's rebels, 20 percent said yes and a whopping 70 percent said no. When respondents were asked in the same poll to evaluate a series of statements about Syria, the most popular was the "U.S. military is already too overcommitted."

Hillary also took a harder line than Obama on Iran's right to enrich uranium—a harder line that would make it harder to reach a final nuclear deal with Tehran. As with Syria, many commentators considered Hillary's more hawkish stance to be politically astute. But again, the public is actually closer to Obama. According to a University of Maryland poll in July, 61 percent of Americans support a deal that would limit—but not prohibit—Iranian enrichment, while only 35 percent support increasing sanctions in an effort to eliminate Tehran's enriched uranium altogether.

In general, Hillary made it clear that she supports a more interventionist foreign policy. Unlike Obama, she rarely talks about the financial burden of America's foreign wars, and the need to balance America's overseas commitments with its domestic resources. But, here again, the public is on Obama's side. A Pew poll last year found that 51 percent of Americans believe their government is doing too much overseas, while only 17 percent say it is doing too little. This doesn't mean Americans want to retreat from the world entirely. A full two-thirds, according to that same Pew poll, support greater American involvement in the global economy. Americans aren't isolationists; they just don't want to police the world. According to Pew, only 12 percent of Americans want the U.S. to be the "single world leader," while 52 percent would prefer the U.S. share global leadership with other countries and be only "as active as others."

Given these results, why do most commentators think Hillary's hawkishness is politically wise? Because over the last year or so—as a result of the conflict in Ukraine and the rise of ISIS in Syria and Iraq—elite opinion has grown more hawkish even though public opinion at large hasn't. When it comes to foreign policy, in fact, the key divide is no longer between Democrats and Republicans. It's between the elites of both parties and their rank and file. When asked about arming Syria's rebels, an Iran deal that allows some uranium enrichment, and whether America should do more or less in the world, both Democrats and Republicans overwhelmingly take the more dovish view. On each question, the partisan divide is five percentage points or less.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The real gap emerges when you compare ordinary Americans to elites. According to Pew, for instance, rank-and-file Republicans are 34 percentage points more likely to want America to do less overseas. Rank-and-file Democrats are 31 points more likely to want America to do less. Members of the prestigious, bipartisan Council on Foreign Relations, by contrast, are 20 points more likely to say America should do more.

This helps explain why Rand Paul is shifting in a more hawkish direction as well. In recent weeks, Paul has substantially toughened his line against Russia, ruled out containing a nuclear Iran (a position with which he had previously flirted), pledged support for U.S. aid to Israel (another flip-flop), and remained open to bombing Iraq. He's also hired one of John McCain's foreign-policy advisors.

Paul is not staking out these positions to win over actual voters. Given that ordinary Republicans oppose arming the rebels in Syria, want a negotiated deal on Iran, and want America to refrain more from intervening militarily overseas, Paul would probably gain greater public support by sticking with a more dovish line and thus distinguishing himself in a multi-candidate field. What's motivating him is not the New Hampshire primary but the invisible primary. Paul has been ardently wooing GOP donors, who tend to be far more hawkish than Republicans as a whole, and who have threatened to mobilize against his candidacy. And according to Politico, he's told several of them that his foreign-policy views are "evolving."

Hillary Clinton's hawkishness is more sincere. She's been on the hawkish end of the Democratic spectrum since entering electoral politics a decade and a half ago. Still, were it not for the influence that moneyed elites wield over the presidential process, it would be much harder for her to take views so at odds with most Democratic voters. Clinton lost in 2008, after all, in large measure because she had backed the war in Iraq while Obama had not. If a credible progressive challenger in 2016 tied Hillary's current interventionism to her past interventionism under the rubric "she still doesn't get it," they'd find a receptive audience, especially in Iowa, where Democratic caucus-goers are particularly dovish.

Yet there's little evidence that any serious challenger is considering taking this approach. That's partly because Democratic primary voters, while overwhelmingly dovish, are not focused on foreign policy in the way they were during the Iraq War. And it's partly because even progressive Democrats like Elizabeth Warren are influenced by the more hawkish perspective common among party donors. That's especially true on the Middle East. Polling shows that rank-and-file Democrats are fairly critical of Israel's recent war in Gaza, for instance. But last month, even progressive firebrands like Warren supported a Senate resolution so hawkish that it did not even acknowledge that any Palestinians in Gaza had died.

It's worth analyzing the current moment in historical perspective. For a century, Americans have responded to disillusioning wars by demanding a less interventionist foreign policy. It happened after World War 1, after Korea, after Vietnam, and it's happening again in the wake of Afghanistan and Iraq. The difference between this moment and past ones is the role of money in politics. As on so many issues, politicians' need to raise vast sums from the super-rich makes them ultra-responsive to one, distinct sliver of the population and less responsive to everyone else. The way campaign finance warps the political debate over financial regulation is well known. What we're witnessing this year is a case study in the way it warps the foreign-policy debate as well.

In 2008, Obama was elected president in part because he had deviated from a hawkish, largely bipartisan, elite foreign-policy perspective that facilitated the war in Iraq. Six years later, Obama is still deviating, and so are the American people. Yet the elite consensus is stronger than ever, and in the run-up to 2016, that consensus—more than public opinion—is driving the presidential debate. No wonder Americans are cynical.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Hill: “Former Hillary aide sought to ‘neutralize’ greens on Keystone”

By Megan R. Wilson

August 13, 2014, 4:13 p.m. EDT

A former spokeswoman to Hillary Clinton worked for the Canadian province of Alberta to “neutralize the environmentalist arguments” against the Keystone XL pipeline, new filings with the Justice Department reveal.

Hilary Lefebvre, who served as the director of broadcast media for Clinton’s 2008 presidential bid, was paid $53,725 during the 10-week contract, according to the documents.

The contract was officially signed with FeverPress, a PR firm Lefebvre co-founded with David Press, though disclosure documents say it was Lefebvre who worked on the account.

Lefebvre, who spent seven years in broadcast journalism working for CNN and ABC's “Nightline,” reached out to print, radio and TV journalists who could provide "top-tier features with cable news amplification" about Keystone, according to the contract.

“We recommend recasting the debate so that it is no longer perceived as environmentalists vs. Canada, good vs. bad," one contract document said. “In fact, it is important to reframe this as an American issue so that it starts to take on more positive currency in the media.”

The efforts were specifically aimed at drumming up publicity for former Alberta Premier Alison Redford during one of her many visits to the United States last year to rally support for the multibillion-dollar project. The PR firm was hired specifically to book media interviews during a trip in April 2013.

One memo obtained separately by Republic Report detailed efforts to land interviews with Charlie Rose, Andrea Mitchell and news programs such as “Morning Joe” on MSNBC, “The Lead with Jake Tapper” on CNN and “NewsHour with Jim Lehrer” on PBS.

The PR campaign is likely to raise eyebrows among environmental advocates, who have pushed Clinton to take a stand against the pipeline, which would carry oil sands from Canada to Gulf Coast refineries.

Clinton has repeatedly declined to weigh in on Keystone, saying it would be inappropriate for her to comment since she was involved in reviewing the project as secretary of State.

That stance risks alienating green advocates, who are generous backers of the Democratic Party and would be allies should Clinton run for the White House in 2016.

Lefebvre isn’t the only former Clinton aide with ties to the controversial pipeline. Paul Elliott, a lobbyist for project developer TransCanada, also worked on Clinton’s 2008 campaign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Aside from Lefebvre's ties to Clinton, the timing of the contract disclosure could draw scrutiny.

Any person or firm that performs PR, advocacy or consulting work for a foreign government, state-owned corporation or international business is required to file paperwork to DOJ within 10 days of signing a contract.

The contract with the Canadian government was signed on March 15, 2013, and lasted until June 2013 but appeared in a Justice Department database for the first time on Tuesday.

FeverPress did not respond to a request for comment about the DOJ filing.

The Justice Department, which rarely prosecutes violations of the Foreign Agent Registration Act (FARA), did not respond to an inquiry about whether it urged the disclosure from FeverPress.

The contract documents, some of which are marked "PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL" and "NOT FOR DISTRIBUTION," provide a revealing glimpse into the messaging and political difficulties facing Keystone supporters.

"The challenge is that President Obama has championed his commitment to the environment early on in his second term and is beholden to the environmental constituency for their support in the last election. The current debate gives the president little political cover to support the pipeline without looking like he is turning his back on his pro-environment agenda," one contract document says.

"We do not have to win the environmental argument; we just need to add context and complexity to it so that we can blunt the current arguments against the Pipeline," the document says. "Again, winning the war here is providing enough political cover for the U.S. government to greenlight the project — not winning over the environmentalists."

The existence of the PR contract was first reported by Republic Report, which in May obtained the separate documents from the Canadian government.

Those documents included a memo that the PR firm sent to the Alberta government officials warning that media interest in Keystone might waning due to Congress's focus on the economy, gun control and immigration reform in the spring session.

"We therefore recommend a slight change in our strategy to secure the interest of our bigger targets (e.g. Charlie Rose, Piers Morgan, etc.), which have expressed initial interest but have expressed some hesitations," it said.

NPR and Politico appear to be the only news outlets that interviewed Redford that April, according to the DOJ filing.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

New York Times column: Gail Collins: “What’s Next With Hillary?”

By Gail Collins

August 13, 2014

Well, let’s hope that’s over.

President Obama was in Martha’s Vineyard, playing golf. Hillary Clinton arrived, ready to sign books. They were headed for the same birthday party where, a Clinton aide said, they intended to “hug it out.” Peace was declared. Extraordinary! You would think they were both professional politicians.

As the whole world now knows, Clinton gave an interview to The Atlantic last week in which she took issue with President Obama’s “don’t do stupid stuff” foreign policy mantra, pushed a harder line than the White House on Iran, and disagreed with Obama’s refusal to arm the rebels in Syria.

The Clinton camp insists she had no intention of breaking with the president. But if that’s the case, then the former secretary of state had trouble saying precisely what she wanted to say about foreign policy. That just doesn’t sound like Hillary Clinton, who is a great conversationalist off the record, yet has an absolute genius way of saying nothing exciting whatsoever when the tape recorder is running.

Some people think that after years on the diplomacy trail, she may have lost her edge. “I don’t know if her political instincts are in top shape,” said a Friend of Obama. But then, you know, F.O.B.

Given all the options, I’d prefer to think it was a minor betrayal. Loyalty may be an overrated virtue in high-level politics. Really, nobody cares if a president back-bites a former colleague or dumps a best friend. Just keep the country running and we’re good.

Anyway, he forgives her! Hugs scheduled for the birthday party for Vernon Jordan’s wife.

It’s only been six years since Obama and Clinton ran against each other, but, wow, does it feel longer. Watching Obama, I remembered a time during the 2008 campaign when he told a story about a woman who’d “seen some years,” adding: “She’s maybe close to 60.” Some of the middle-aged women in the crowd started to hiss.

Now, the president himself looks as though he’s seen some years. He’s long since gotten his first AARP mailings. And Clinton has been heir apparent — forever. Democrats have gotten so used to thinking of her as the next president that they’ve stopped seriously evaluating her as a candidate for their nomination.

The Atlantic interview sort of bounced everything back into perspective. Liberals with dovish leanings raced to Google to see whether any high-ranking Democrats have been sighted at the Iowa State Fair. What does Maryland Governor Martin O’Malley think about uranium enrichment negotiations with Iran? (We always describe him as “Maryland governor” because nobody outside of his home state knows who Martin O’Malley is.) Has Elizabeth Warren totally ruled out running? (Yes.)

Hillary’s still got the virtues her base has always admired: intelligence, experience, remarkable ability to take a punch and keep on running. Everybody loves the woman who showed up on “The Colbert Report” the other night, having a name-dropping contest with the host. Everybody remembers her determination to lift up women’s rights in Asia and Africa, her unflagging energy as secretary of state (956,733 miles traveled; total travel time, 2,084 hours).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But now that she’s brought up actual issues, the party’s rank-and-file deserves some more information.

Back in the 2008 primaries, Obama was arguing that with the right leadership in the White House, America could get rid of the old brain-dead partisanship of the past and reach a new era of bipartisan cooperation. Hillary, working off long experience, said the real world was tougher and more complicated than that. After the election, as Washington ground to a hopeless, vicious, zombified halt, she was proved right.

In foreign affairs, too, Clinton reflected what she’d learned when her husband was president. Airstrikes worked in Kosovo. Bill Clinton brought Israel and the Palestinians right to the edge of a peace deal, but the Palestinians backed away. The president failed to intervene in Rwanda, and regretted it forever. The bad guys only understood a firm hand. During the debates, she refused to say that during her first year in office she’d be open to meeting with leaders of countries like Cuba or North Korea. If the Iranians declared nuclear war on Israel, she told an interviewer, as president she would “totally obliterate” them.

This is the Hillary who popped back up this week. She was probably being neither politically calculating nor blundering in the Atlantic interview, but simply being unusually clear about what she believes. And we need to hear more, not less. Does she really think the Syrian disaster could have been averted if the United States had helped the rebels? In The Atlantic, she was a little oblique on that point. Maybe a debate with Joe Biden. ...

“I’m excited about signing my books,” Clinton said Wednesday night, when a reporter asked how she feels about Obama’s Iraq policy. It’s August, everybody’s friends, and we may not hear another serious conversation on these matters until 2015.

The New Yorker: John Cassidy: “Can Hillary Play This Game?”

By John Cassidy

August 13, 2014

In the past few months, as Hillary Clinton has embarked on what has often looked like a soft launch of her 2016 Presidential campaign under the guise of publishing a memoir about her four years as Secretary of State, she’s demonstrated some of the attributes that would make her a formidable candidate. She’s racked up more endorsements from prominent Democrats, her poll ratings have remained favorable, her fund-raising ability has been highlighted, and she has demonstrated an uncanny knack for dominating the headlines.

That last ability has proved double-edged, however. Several days after The Atlantic‘s Jeffrey Goldberg delivered a lengthy interview with Clinton to an unsuspecting public, the aftershocks are still being felt. At one point in the interview, Clinton appeared to criticize President Obama’s cautious approach to foreign policy, sharply dismissing the phrase “Don’t do stupid stuff,” which is often attributed to him. On Tuesday, Clinton called the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

President to explain to him that, in the words of her spokesman, “nothing she said was an attempt to attack him, his policies, or his leadership. … Like any two friends who have to deal with the public eye, she looks forward to hugging it out when they see each other tomorrow night.”

Evidently, the “hugging it out” will take place on a golf course on Martha’s Vineyard, where, on Wednesday evening, Clinton and Obama will both be attending party organized by Vernon Jordan, the venerable Friend of Bill. As I’m writing this, it’s not clear whether any reporters will be allowed to witness this coming together. In the meantime, though, the media jackals—by all accounts, that’s pretty much how Hillary views journalists—are happily feasting on the meat that she and Goldberg kindly provided.

Writing in Wednesday’s Times, Maureen Dowd noted that the former First Lady had demonstrated “the diplomatic finesse of a wrecking ball.” That was about the nicest thing Dowd had to say. Suggesting that Clinton was deliberately seeking to distance herself from an unpopular President, a suggestion that other commentators have also put forward, she concluded, “Obama is learning the truth of another unofficial slogan in politics. ‘The Clintons will be there when they need you.’ ”

Dowd is a longtime antagonist of the Clintons, as is the neoconservative Weekly Standard, which, as Dowd noted, reprinted some of Hillary’s comments from the interview with Goldberg, billing them as a “guest editorial.” But it isn’t just the Clinton bashers in the media who are piling on. On his Twitter account, David Axelrod, one of President Obama’s top advisers, wrote, “Just to clarify, ‘Don’t do stupid stuff’ means stuff like occupying Iraq in the first place.” (Just in case you’ve forgotten, Clinton voted for the war.) Indeed, this is a flap that has captivated much of the political world. One of several Politico articles devoted to the interview was headlined “Cocktail chatter with Barack and Hillary.” The Washington Post and the Times had plenty more.

Even in today’s hyperactive, always-on media world, that’s pretty good going—especially for mid-August. Most likely, things will die down once Clinton and the President make up, which is surely what will happen. But, even though the immediate storm will blow over, it has raised anew a nagging question that has been lingering over Clinton since her rough book launch, and, indeed, since the defeat that she suffered in 2008—a campaign in which she started out as the front-runner: Can she play this game at this level?

As I intimated up top, the obvious answer is yes, of course she can. While running for the Senate in 2000 and 2006, she oversaw faultless campaigns, and racked up big victories both times, albeit not over the strongest of opponents. As a globetrotting Secretary of State, she was a very popular figure; even today, her aura and reputation are such that she has scared off any serious opposition for the Democratic nomination. Thanks to her unique set of experiences, she also has other advantages. The Clinton political operation remains a formidable one, with vast reservoirs of money and talent that it can call on, including her husband, whose mere presence is a significant plus. (According to a new statistical study by the political scientist Jordan Ragusa, every time that Bill Clinton’s approval rating goes up a point, Hillary’s goes up half a point.)

In short, Hillary remains a very formidable political figure, and she’s still the strong favorite to be the next President. (At the British betting sites, the odds on her winning in 2016 are about 5-4.) All that said, though, she has some issues to address going forward.

One goes to the substance of her chat with Goldberg, in which she struck a tone that was hawkish, interventionist, and fiercely pro-Israel. The reactions to what she said have been interesting, and it’s not clear whether they are what the Clintonites hoped for. The editors of the Weekly Standard loved the interview, and David Brooks also approved. James Fallows and Kevin Drum expressed serious reservations; so did I. If Clinton’s intention was to extend her political reach and attract the support of conservatives, she succeeded. If she was seeking to present a foreign-policy vision attractive to progressives and centrists, she might need to think again.

The second, and more immediate, issue is Clinton’s tendency to make verbal gaffes. When, in June, she told

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Diane Sawyer that she and Bill had emerged from the White House “dead broke,” how did she think it would be taken? In December, 1999, the Web site Politifact pointed out, the Clintons paid $1.7 million for a house in Westchester. The following year, they bought another house, in Washington, for $2.4 million. Yes, they had mortgages and big legal bills incurred while fending off G.O.P.-inspired investigations, but they also had enormous earning power. By 2004, according to her public disclosures, Clinton was worth between ten million dollars and fifty million dollars.

Clinton’s public dismissal of the phrase “Don’t do stupid stuff” was similarly ill-advised. In the full transcript of the interview, to be sure, she makes clear that she doesn’t believe this phrase is a fair or complete characterization of Obama’s approach to foreign policy. At one point, she even talks about it favorably, or semi-favorably, remarking, “That’s a good lesson, but it’s more complicated than that.” However, rather than leaving things there and expounding on her own views in isolation from those of the President, she brings up the phrase again, of her own volition, stating, “Great nations need organizing principles, and ‘Don’t do stupid stuff’ is not an organizing principle.”

For a professional politician, these are rookie errors. For a politician who has been under intense scrutiny for more than twenty years, they were almost inexplicable.

The benign explanation is that, since leaving the State Department, Clinton’s gotten a bit rusty, and that’s why she went out on book tour: to sharpen up and get her errors in early. As anybody who has seen her perform in public can testify, she is knowledgeable, brimming with energy, personable, and even, on occasion, funny. Once she regains her sea legs, the optimistic argument goes, these attributes will come across to the public at large, and she’ll be fine.

That may well happen. But she’s been “out there” for quite a while now, and this was another self-inflicted blow. Does she still have the self-discipline and determination that it takes to stay on-message twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, for an entire Presidential campaign? The answer isn’t immediately obvious.

In an appearance at George Washington University back in June, Lissa Muscatine, one of Clinton’s former speechwriters, suggested that, these days, she appeared to be willing to speak her mind. That was true, Clinton acknowledged. Maybe it was because of the “wonderful wealth of experience” that she’d accumulated, she said, and, “Maybe it’s because I am totally done with, you know, being really careful about what to say because somebody might think this instead of that. It just gets too exhausting and frustrating. And it just seems a whole lot easier to just put it out there and hope people will get used to it. Whether you agree with it or not, you know exactly where I come from, what I think, what I feel.”

Coming from an author—or practically anybody else, for that matter—these would be admirable sentiments. We all say that we want people, especially politicians, to be honest and forthright. But Presidential candidates inhabit a world in which it’s essential to balance forthrightness with the likelihood—nay, the certainty—that every word they utter will be scrutinized and, if possible, used against them. As a candidate, you should be honest, but you also have to make darn sure that your words can’t be misrepresented—or, worse, accurately represented—to your disadvantage. If you “just put it out there” without any self-editing or consideration of the consequences, disaster frequently ensues. Joe Biden discovered that in 1987, when he used a speech plagiarized from one by Neil Kinnock, the leader of the British Labour Party; Mitt Romney discovered it in 2012, when he made his unguarded comments about the “forty-seven per cent” at a Republican fund-raiser.

The depressing truth is this: modern political campaigns are wars of attrition, and the victor is often the one who makes the fewest mistakes. As a veteran of many such battles, Hillary Clinton knows this all too well. Assuming that she sets her mind to it and makes the transition from likely runner to an officially declared candidate, she will almost certainly suppress her qualms about the campaign process and follow its restrictive rules. For now, though, she still seems a bit out of step.

Vox: “Obama’s critics are suddenly sure Hillary Clinton is great”

By Ezra Klein

August 13, 2014, 3:30 p.m. EDT

In 1988, the BC show "Yes, Minister" outlined Politician's Logic. It goes like this:

1. We must do something.

2. This is something.

3. We must do this!

There is, however, a reverse of Politician's Logic, which might be called Pundit's Logic. It goes like this:

1. Something was done.

2. The problem isn't fixed.

3. We should have done the other thing!

When it comes to looking back on the disappointments of Barack Obama's presidency, the "other thing," particularly this week, is elect Hillary Clinton.

For instance, Megan McArdle writes that "when Obama beat Hillary, we all lost." The basic argument is that if Hillary Clinton had won in 2008, "at the very least, she would not be facing the same level of vehement opposition in Congress." This is because, McArdle says, the emotional engine of the Tea Party was Obamacare, and Hillary Clinton would have spied the intensity of Republican opposition to health reform and turned back.

"So there's my counterfactual for the summer," McArdle concludes. "If Hillary Clinton had won, Obamacare wouldn't have happened, and Democrats — and the country — would be better off." (Curiously, there is no mention of the millions of people who gained or will gain insurance through Obamacare, most of whom would presumably be much, much worse off in this counterfactual.)

Is McArdle right? Maybe! But it's a perfect reversal of the argument Clinton's supporters made on her behalf in 2008. Back then, the case for Clinton was that she understood full well that doing big things would mean fighting — and winning — an all-out partisan war, and that the problem with Obama was his naive insistence on bipartisanship ensured he would turn back when the partisan fury began to singe. "Anyone who thinks that the next president can achieve real change without bitter confrontation is living in a fantasy world," wrote Paul Krugman in a 2007 column criticizing Obama.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Meanwhile, the argument for Obama was precisely that Republicans hated him less than Clinton, and so a vote for Obama was a vote for a less partisan future. "Clinton will always be, in the minds of so many, the young woman who gave the commencement address at Wellesley, who sat in on the Nixon implosion and who once disdained baking cookies. For some, her husband will always be the draft dodger who smoked pot and wouldn't admit it. And however hard she tries, there is nothing Hillary Clinton can do about it," wrote Andrew Sullivan in an essay endorsing Obama. Sullivan went on to note that "polling reveals Obama to be the favored Democrat among Republicans."

All of which is to say it is very easy to imagine a world where Hillary Clinton won the election, party polarization is as bad or worse than it is today, and pundits are looking back to 2008 and wishing Obama had won.

The same is true for the argument between Clinton and Obama on Syria. There, the issue is that Syria continues to be an absolute human disaster: more than 160,000 have died in the country's civil war, and the radical, brutal group ISIS fought through the chaos and built a powerful statelet that they used as a base of operations to expand into Iraq. So the question is: could America have done more?

Inside the administration, Clinton was an advocate of doing more, and doing it earlier. In particular, she wanted to try and identify, train and arm more moderate factions of the opposition. She lost that argument, and it's a loss that she and her supporters emphasize today. The idea is that if Clinton had won — if Obama had feared the risks of inaction more than the risks of action — then Assad might have been ousted by now and ISIS might never have gotten their foothold. The conservative Weekly Standard found this so self-evident that their editorial this week is nothing but edited excerpts of Clinton laying out her foreign policy differences with Obama.

There's a part of Clinton's comments on Syria that they leave out, however. "I can't sit here today and say that if we had done what I recommended, and what [Ambassador] Robert Ford recommended, that we'd be in a demonstrably different place," she told the Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg (the aggression of Clinton's criticisms of Obama has been wildly played-up by the media). And then there's the possibility that we would be in a different place — a worse one.

America does not have a very successful record arming insurgent groups. As political scientist Marc Lynch concludes in a review of the relevant literature:

“In general, external support for rebels almost always make wars longer, bloodier and harder to resolve (for more on this, see the proceedings of this Project on Middle East Political Science symposium in the free PDF download). Worse, as the University of Maryland's David Cunningham has shown, Syria had most of the characteristics of the type of civil war in which external support for rebels is least effective.”

The reality in Syria is horrible, and so regret is mounting that we didn't do the other thing we considered doing. But it's entirely possible that if we had done the other thing that the reality in Syria would be even worse (and much, much worse for America).

Pundits have no choice but to consider counterfactuals; there's no other way to think about the world and the choices America makes within it. The problem is when the counterfactual is used less to evaluate reality than to lament it.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The fact that something turned out badly often means that it's a hard, and sometimes impossible, problem to solve. George W. Bush ran as a uniter and Barack Obama ran as a post-partisan and each sincerely hoped to heal the widening divisions in American political life, but those divisions are widening because of powerful structural factors that easily overpowered, and ultimately co-opted, both men's presidencies. Syria is a hellish problem that America very likely can't solve.

Sometimes the problem really is that we should have done the other thing. But sometimes the problem is that we don't know how to solve the problem.

The Hill blog: Lanny Davis: "The cure for punditry hyperventilation on Hillary Clinton — Try the facts"

By Lanny Davis

August 13, 2014, 3:16 p.m. EDT

I have read a slew of comments by pundits, columnists and self-described "progressive" organizations criticizing former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton for her comments in The Atlantic to reporter Jeffrey Goldberg about (a) her disagreement with President Obama on the issue of early aid to moderate opposition elements in Syria to the Assad regime; and (b) her comment that "don't do stupid stuff" does not a foreign policy make.

It's one thing for writers on the liberal side of the spectrum, or organizations that describe themselves that way, to disagree with Clinton on her point of view and debate the facts and differing opinions based on those facts, on substantive or policy grounds. But that is not what happened. Instead, what we have seen is a series of ad hominem attacks, mostly going to Clinton's real "motives" or the use of labels — labels like "hawkish" or "anti-interventionist" — devoid of facts and, as Shakespeare once wrote, "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."

Let's look at three facts to put to rest this pseudo flare-up over Clinton's interview during the slow news month of August.

1. The characterization that Clinton's comments show that she is truly a "hawk" who is defying the "anti-interventionist" Democratic liberal (a label used by a spokesperson for MoveOn.org, a self-described progressive organization) is inaccurate. Since Clinton's early years in politics when she supported and worked for the most anti-Vietnam War candidate for president, Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.), who went on to become the Democratic Party's nominee for president in 1972, she has been a skeptic of overreliance on American military power, especially unilateral military intervention. Clinton's record as senator and as secretary of State shows that she remains so to this day.

Her remark to Mr. Goldberg critical of the "avoid the stupid stuff" concept meant that she prefers an affirmative, forward-looking policy — not just one that avoids making mistakes. She spells out that affirmative and proactive concept in detail in her book Hard Choices and its specific application during her four years as secretary of State. She called it using "smart power": a combination of "soft power," using economic, cultural, trade, educational and other human rights assistance and communicating better America's democratic and humane values, and tougher measures such as economic sanctions and the option of military power as a last resort, but seriously taken.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Her approach to Iran's threatened development of The Bomb is a good example of this proactive policy of smart power. Secretary Clinton was a key player in orchestrating and implementing the tough economic sanctions on Iran that many would say brought it to the negotiating table. But like Obama, she won't take the military option off the table. (Regarding President Obama: he, too, strongly supported using this "smart power" combination. He also supported military intervention in Afghanistan during his 2008 presidential campaign and since. Yet I don't recall anyone from MoveOn.org accusing him for that reason of defying the "anti-interventionist" Democratic Party base.

2. One of Obama's former senior White House officials and political advisers tweeted that "stupid stuff" was "occupying" Iraq under former President George W. Bush. He allegedly was referring to Clinton's vote supporting the resolution authorizing intervention in Iraq. But the tweeter omitted at least two facts: first, that the Iraq War resolution was supported by 28 other Democratic senators, including then-Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and current Vice President of the United States Joe Biden; and second, that Secretary Clinton has described that vote as a mistake.

(Personal footnote: I don't read too much into this tweeter's quick shot at Clinton in response to the Goldberg interview. I know I have regretted many times some of my own impulsive tweets, with limited letters available. I happen to admire this tweeter very much. I know he also likes and appreciates Clinton for her loyal service to Obama during her four years as secretary and that, to his credit, Obama always encouraged disagreement and debate on various issues he faced during his presidency.)

3. Finally, the notion that Clinton can be challenged from the left because of a "vacuum" regarding her positions on the issues is simply contradicted by the facts. Her progressive positions on issues and her voting record in the U.S. Senate over eight years are indisputable: pro-choice, pro-gay marriage, pro-civil rights and human rights, pro-gun control, pro-Affordable Care Act, pro-increasing the minimum wage, pro-Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (having praised Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren many times for this regulatory body in the wake of the abuses that caused the 2008 Near Great Depression), etc. etc. This hardly suggests there is a "vacuum" on her left in the Democratic Party. See the latest proof of this from Nate Silver at FiveThirtyEight.

Indeed, every poll shows Clinton has overwhelming support from liberal Democrats. There are some in the Democratic Party, however, who mistake substance for a willingness to work with members of the other party to get things done — which is why Clinton was described by many Senate Republicans in such positive terms, or as, as the late Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W.Va.) put it, "a work horse, not a show horse."

So despite the pundits looking to create a contest in the Democratic Party between the "left" and the "center" or some such labeling to get the juices going to make for a bitter, divisive and therefore entertaining Democratic contest for the nomination in 2016, if Clinton chooses to run for president, I know there will be other candidates for the nomination and I hope there is a vigorous debate on the issues and solutions to the nation’s most important problems. We need that debate as Democrats. What we don't need are invented differences based on innuendo and labels, rather than facts and substance.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

· August 16 – East Hampton, New York: Sec. Clinton signs books at Bookhampton East Hampton (HillaryClintonMemoir.com)

· August 28 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton keynotes Nexenta's OpenSDx Summit (BusinessWire)

· September 4 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton speaks at the National Clean Energy Summit (Solar Novis Today)

· October 2 – Miami Beach, FL: Sec. Clinton keynotes the CREW Network Convention & Marketplace (CREW Network)

· October 13 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton keynotes the UNLV Foundation Annual Dinner (UNLV)

· ~ October 13-16 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton keynotes salesforce.com Dreamforce conference (salesforce.com)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Evan Whitbeck" <ewhitbeck@progressivemediausa.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com lsaunders@afscme.org erome@afscme.org
Date: 5/12/2008 9:11:00 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 05/12/08

Main Topics: McCain's Environment Speech, Carly Fiorina Interview, McSame or McDifferent, GI Bill, McCain's Myanmar Ties

Summary of Shift: As close as Marlboro, MD weather continues to disrupt and destroy lives across the globe tonight. Pundits take a look at the proposal that McCain and Obama conduct town halls together, generally concluding it would be a bad move for Obama. The most-played clip from McCain's climate change speech was where he condemned the Bush White House for eight years of 'failed diplomacy.' Barack Obama's statement about John McCain's free pass also made several appearances. Toward the end of the night Dan Abrams reports that Congress wants Karl Rove to testify on the prosecution of former democratic governor, Don Siegelman.

Highlights:

1. The networks' response to McCain's climate change speech
   a. McCain is a maverick
   b. Situation Room panel debates McCain's environmental track record
   c. Fox News outlines his environmental policy
   d. McCain's environmental credentials questioned on CNN
2. Fiorina Interviewed on This Week, tries to distance McCain from Bush
3. Senior McCain adviser praises McCain's stance on environment, calls attacks on his GI bill "pandering"
4. McMedia bias
   a. Reliable Sources wonders whether the press has been fair with McCain
   b. Panel on Road to the White House treats Obama claim skeptically
   c. Moyers suggests the McCain camp wants to sway the referees
   d. McCain adviser, Donatelli says media complain more about attackson Democrats than Republicans
5. Response to McCain's criticisms of the Webb GI Bill
6. McBush and McDifferent
   a. Roy Blunt: McCain in the White House is a third Bush term and that is a good thing
   b. Cillizza: McCain cannot allow himself to be painted as a third Bush White House if he is to win
   c. Sen. Reid: McCain has gone from being his own man in 2000 to a "clone of Bush"
7. Lieberman's interview with Wolf Blitzer
   a. Lieberman: Our enemies need to fear McCain
   b. Lieberman is a hatchet man for McCain
8. Bush scandals
   a. Pentagon pundits
   b. Iran lies
9. McCain's Myanmar junta ties
   a. McLobbyist, Goodyear gets second worst person in the world
   b. CNN reports on McCain aides' resignations
10. McCain's fundraising troubles
11. David Schuster calls McCain's speech 'stunning' [no clip]

Clips:

Highlight #1
Smerconish: McCain is a Maverick Extending Olive Branches (MSNBC
MICHAEL SMERCONISH: What's red and blue and green all over? Today it's John McCain out on the stump, courting votes from moderates, independents and—don't forget—evangelical Christians by talking about global warming.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[Cut to segment of John McCain's energy speech.]

SMERCONISH: Catch the reference, of course, to those eight long years. He [is] making reference to the sitting president. This is John McCain, the maverick trying to extend a couple of olive branches in quarters where he's not supposed to win.

DAVID GREGORY: Interesting. Talking about the environment in a way that Republicans don't. Talking about the environment in a way that Republicans don't in Oregon, which he'd like to put in the battleground column.

SMERCONISH: No doubt about it. I think that, as I say, it's being interpreted as a pitch for the moderates, but keep your eye on the evangelical Christians, David because that's a community that has moved in this direction on that particular issue.

McCain's Maverick Credentials on the Environment Questioned (CNN 05/12/08 4:54pm)
WOLF BLITZER: Ok, he's talking about global warming, which is a very important issue . . . what do you make of this?

JOHN FEEHERY: Well, it's . . . the number one issue for about 4%. The number one issue is the economy, gas prices, so as McCain does this, which I think is smart, it shows that he's different than Bush, which he really needs to do. But on the same token, he's got to swing back and get those Reagan Democrats, he's gotta talk about gas prices, he's gotta talk about the economy.

BLITZER: So global warming is not enough. It's not enough. It's certainly not enough. It's good for the small percent of voters who can afford higher gas prices . . .

PAUL BEGALA: I do think McCain runs a big risk here. He's trying to position himself as a moderate as well as a maverick. Well, I don't even think he's either. But this is going to undermine his whole reputation for straight talk because the truth is it's just hot air. When he talks about global warming, it's hot air from John McCain. He is somebody who does not actually have the sort of record that he holds himself out. I saw today in the Washington Post, the League of Conservation Voters pointed out that his rating is something like 26 . . . as opposed to Hillary and Barack who have 86 . . . the League of Conservation Voters says John McCain is not as green as he holds himself out to be.

WOLF BLITZER: But he's different, Donna, than George Bush on this whole issue.

DONNA BRAZILE: He is I mean not only is his rhetoric different, his record's not much different but Sen. McCain said that this is going to be an issue because he believes that he can solve this problem. He will put it on his agenda if he's elected president. The truth is that he's trying to reach out to independents. And he knows that he cannot win, especially out west, unless independents come on board.

BLITZER: But if the Republicans were looking for a dream candidate who could reach out to independents . . . a lot of Republicans say they really got luck in that John McCain effectively got this nomination.

FEEHERY: McCain's the best. He's been the best on the environment. A lot of Republicans don't like that record. And he has been a stalwart on the environment. He's been strong on global warming. He's been talking about it for a long time. So I would disagree. He's also kind of threaded the needle. He's the kind of guy who can talk about the environment but also talk about the real important issue for most Americans which is the economy.

Carl Cameron Outlines McCain's Environmental Policies (FNC 05/12/08 6:07pm)
BRITT HUME: Republican John McCain has spent the last few weeks outlining his position on such issues as lower taxes, winning in Iraq and strict constructionist judges; all appealing to conservatives. But today McCain was talking about an issue near and dear to independents and Democrats, proposals to deal with global warming . . . Carl Cameron has the details.

CARL CAMERON: Staking out the greenest political position of any Republican candidate in decades, John McCain visited a wind turbine maker in Oregon and put his money where his mouth is with a new Oregon ad signaling a new direction on the environment for the GOP. [ad plays] McCain's climate change ad highlights his courtship of independents and moderates by criticizing the far left for overreacting and the far right for being too dismissive. [ad continues] The Republican Party's fall standard-bearer announced the debate within his party for the existence of global warming over.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

JOHN MCCAIN: We know that greenhouse gases are heavily implicated as a cause of climate change. And we know that among all greenhouse gases, the worst by far is the carbon dioxide that results from fossil fuel combustion.

CAMERON: McCain's approach relies on a combination of regulation and free market principles to curb pollution. He laid out some specific goals for a cap and trade system . . .

MCCAIN: By the year 2012, we will seek a return to 2005 levels . . . by 2020, a return to 1990 levels and so on until we have achieved a reduction of at least 60% below 1990 levels by the year 2050.

CAMERON: Democrat Barack Obama has set a more aggressive emissions goal for 2050 of 80% below 1990 levels. McCain also plans to tackle international climate change treaties and tweaked Presidents Bill Clinton and George W. Bush for failing to get an international agreement inked.

MCCAIN: I will not shirk the mantle of leadership that the United States bears. I will not permit 8 long years to pass without serious action on serious challenges.

CAMERON: That's a reference to the 1997 Kyoto agreement that the United States did not sign on to. Principally because India and China were not required to meet its compliance regulations. McCain says that has to change. But even if China and India don't go along, the United States still has an obligation to lead and he will . . .

McCain's Environmental Credentials Questioned (CNN 05/12/08 6:29pm)
WOLF BLITZER: John McCain is campaigning right now in Oregon, he's trying to disprove the claim that he's like President Bush . . . CNN's Dana Bash is in Portland . . .

DANA BASH: . . . Democrats, as you can imagine are calling this idea that he's talking about, climate change, a masquerade, but John McCain's campaign really thinks that by him talking about this, this will be one of his best issues. Because it allows him to distance himself from President Bush and it also pushes the idea that could be counterintuitive. A 71 year-old candidate pushing the idea of change. Republican candidates don't often come to the Pacific Northwest to decry the effects of global warming. Precisely the reason that John McCain did.

JOHN MCCAIN: We need to deal with the central facts of . . . all the endless troubles that global warming will bring.

BASH: He rebuked President Bush whose administration has been skeptical of science showing global warming.

MCCAIN: . . . I will not permit 8 long years to pass without serious action on serious challenges.

BASH: McCain promised to abandoned what he called "dead-end diplomacy" and push for a new global treaty . . . he proposes a cap and trade solution . . .

MCCAIN: As never before, the market would reward any person or company that seeks to invent, improve or acquire alternatives to carbon based energy.

BASH: Portraying himself as a rare species, a green Republican, is a regular part of McCain's stump speeches.

MCCAIN: ANWR, I believe, is a pristine place . . .

BASH: But coming to Oregon to highlight his environmental proposals is all about the fight with Barack Obama for independent voters. In 2004, one third of Oregon voters were independents. It's why McCain is using one of his most precious resources, campaign cash, for this new TV ad here. [ad plays] Democrats and several left-leaning environmental groups blasted McCain today for what they called hypocrisy. Pointing out for example that he praised renewable energy here . . . but he voted against tax credits that would help that kind of renewable energy. The McCain campaign responded . . . by insisting that that kind of legislation and others were things that had excess spending . . .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WOLF BLITZER: . . . let's talk about this and more . . . in a lot of states there are more registered independents than there are Republicans or Democrats and McCain sees an opening here on this issue of global warming.

JACK CAFFERTY: Yeah, he's going to be the next Al Gore, right? I don't think so. It's an interesting tactic but if you look at his record and his absence on what was it? Fifty votes on various environmental related pieces of legislation in the last year. I think he got one of the lowest ratings . . . of any member of congress . . . it's trying to be all things to all people but I don't know if it's going to fit so well . . .

BLITZER: Does he have an opening here Gloria?

GLORIA BORGER: I think he does have an opening. You know, all during the primaries John McCain has been talking about global warming. I think it's a way for him, believe it or not, not only for him to attract independent voters. But maybe even, even, some younger voters . . .

BLITZER: He makes it clear he believes there is this problem, Jeffery, called global warming, in marked contrast to a lot of other Republicans . . .

JEFFERY TOOBIN: You know this story illustrates just how low the bar is for Republicans on the environment. You know, the fact that he acknowledges global warming is seen as a big advantage for him but it's like acknowledging gravity. . . the real issue is not whether it exists, the question is what to do with it. And in that area, he's not as far to the right as Bush is but he's pretty close. You know, the substance is a little weak, but I think it's a smart political move for McCain. . .

BORGER: And he's signaling that he could work with the Democratic congress on this issue if he had to . .

CAFFERTY: Oh, he'll have to.

Highlight #2
Fiorina Pushes the McDifferent Line (ABC 05/11/08 10:20am)
GEORGE STEPHANOPOLOUS: We're now going to get the Republican perspective, the McCain perspective from Carly Fiorina . . . well you heard Sen. Reid right there, he says the case against John McCain is that he's wrong on all of the big issues: the war, the economy.

CARLY FIORINA: Well, I've heard a lot that John McCain is a third Bush term. Nothing could be further from the truth. It was John McCain after all who spoke loudly for four long years saying that Don Rumsfeld wasthe worst Secretary of Defense in history, that the prosecution of the war in Iraq was going badly and that we needed a new strategy and we are now executing a new strategy because of John McCain. John McCain has differed with George Bush on global warming, on climate change on how we should deal with igh fuel prices right now, saying that we should stop the fill of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: President Bush isn't very enthusiastic about the gas tax holiday.

FIORINA: No . . . there are clearer places where John McCain and George Bush differ . . . John McCain will run on his own record, his own character, his own integrity.

